BIOGRAPHICAL

JUDGE DEAN BLANCHARD. While Judge Dean Blanchard has traveled life's journey for more than seventy-nine years he is still an active factor in the world's work, superintending his invested interests which are many and important. His title indicates the professional service to which he formerly gave his attention, but after long connection with the bar, in which he won distinction, he retired to devote his time to his landed interests and other business affairs in the northwest. The width of the continent separates him from his birthplace, which was Madison, Maine, his natal day being December 20, 1832. His father, Merrill Blanchard, was born in Abington, Massachusetts, July 18, 1806, and is descended from Huguenot ancestry who settled near London after leaving France and in 1629 came to the new world. The grandfather of Merrill Blanchard, Captain Thomas Blanchard, born in 1720, died on the 14th of November, 1803. Merrill Blanchard conducted a hotel in early life and later devoted his energies to farming. In the early period of development in the northwest he came to Oregon but returned to the east in 1856, spending the ensuing twenty years in that part of the country. In 1876 he once more came to the northwest and here lived a retired life. In early manhood he wedded Eunice Weston, who was born in Madison, Maine, in 1804, and died in 1841. He long survived his wife, passing away May 3, 1889. She was a daughter of Benjamin and Anna (Powers) Weston. The Powers family had held landed rights in England since 1222 and the family date their residence there from the time of William the Conqueror. Benjamin Weston was a son of Judge Weston, of Lincoln, Massachusetts, who married Eunice Farnsworth, a daughter of Aaron and Hannah (Barrows) Farnsworth and the granddaughter of Benjamin and Mary (Prescott) Farnsworth. In the family of Merrill Blanchard were eight children: Nathan W., living at Santa Paula, California; Dean; Ann, the widow of Henry Russell and now a resident of St. Johns, New Brunswick; Sarah W., who is the widow of John Dibblee and a resident of Rainier; William E., conducting the Arlington Hotel in Boston, Massachusetts; Mary, the deceased wife of John Leary, of Seattle; and two who died in early childhood.

Judge Dean Blanchard acquired his education in the Houlton Academy at Houlton, Maine. His identification with the northwest dates from the days when Oregon was still under territorial rule. He served as clerk of the United States district courts and also as county auditor of Columbia county before Oregon was admitted to the Union. Following its admission he was the first county clerk of that county, serving for one term, and in 1874 was elected county judge. His service on the bench was most commendable but after he had filled that position for eight years he refused to continue longer in office. His friends and admirers, however, would not consent to his retirement and when he was away from home nominated him again and once more he was shown to be the choice of the people at the polls so that he remained in office four years longer. His decisions were strictly fair and impartial and were based upon the law and equity in the case. He was regarded as one of the most prominent and able jurists of the state during the period when he sat upon the bench. For fifty-seven years he has been a resident of Oregon and Rainier since 1864. About that time he purchased an interest in an old saw-mill which he repaired and he later bought out his partner. In 1882 he tore down the old mill, erecting a new one, which he operated successfully until 1907, when he sold out. From time to time he has been interested in other business enterprises. When the lumber business became somewhat dull he took up contracting and building, employing a tow boat, and to utilize the product of his mill took contracts to build along the river. He also operated a salmon cannery at Astoria which he sold a year later. He has built more than half of the docks along the Columbia river from its mouth to Rainier and at different times has invested in property, owning as high as one thousand acres of timber land in Oregon. In recent years, however, he has been selling his property, the rise in realty values bringing him a good return upon his investment. At one time he was the owner of the town site of Rainier. He still has considerable property, including lots in Portland and elsewhere. He has employed many men, often having fifty or more in his service, and through his payroll he has contributed much to the development of the early, successful money man who was for the pioneering of this section of the state.

When he first came to the northwest the pioneers were very numerous in this section of the country and he learned to speak the Indian language. In politics he is a man with independent tendencies and always keeps well informed upon the questions and issues of the day. He is prominent in Masonry, having attained the Knight Templar degree of the York Rite, the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. He has held one of the offices in his lodge and throughout his life has been an exemplary representative of the craft. He has ever favored progress along various avenues of advancement and his sympathy with the churches is indicated by the fact that he has given sites for the buildings of all of the churches except the Catholic church, which was erected here after he had disposed of his lots. The town of Rainier and Columbia county are indebted to him for his active cooperation in all that has tended to promote their welfare. He enjoys the regard and confidence of his fellow-men to an unusual degree and his life record is indeed a commendable one.

CAPTAIN JOHN C. AINSWORTH. Among the builders of the great northwest Captain John C. Ainsworth was prominent, taking an active part in the development of the material resources of the country and the promotion of commercial and financial interests. His initiative spirit and notable ability carried him into important relations and the breadth and scope of his activities were such that his labors constituted an important feature in the history of Portland and of the Pacific coast. For more than four decades he was identified with this section of the country, coming to the west soon after the discovery of gold in California.

He was at that time a young man of twenty-eight years, his birth having occurred at Springboro, Warren county, Ohio, on the 6th of June, 1822. He was only seven or eight years of age when he lost his father, George Ainsworth, and at an early age began providing for his own support, being employed on the Mississippi river when yet in his teens. His ability and faithfulness won him rapid promotion until he became pilot and subsequently master on a passenger steamer sailing between St. Louis and up-river points. He was thus engaged at the time of the discovery of gold in California, and recognizing the possibilities for labor and capital in that state he arranged his plans to make a trip to the coast, whither he journeyed in company with William C. Ralston, who became one of the distinguished bankers and financiers of the great west. The friendship between the two men continued throughout their remaining days. Mr. Ralston, however, remained in San Francisco where he figured as one of the pioneer bankers of the city, while Mr. Ainsworth went to Oregon to take command of the Lot Willcomb the first steamer that ran on the Willamette and Columbia rivers. He remained for many years thereafter a center figure in marine interests in this section of the country, developing his business in proportion to the rapid growth and settlement of the northwest. To his thorough and practical knowledge of the business in all its details was due the marvelous success achieved by the great transportation company in which he was President and the leading spirit from the time of its inception until the Oregon Steamship & Navigation Company was merged with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. Of the latter, Captain Ainsworth continued as president until 1881, when it was sold to the Willard Syndicate for five million dollars. Realizing that transportation facilities must ever constitute the foundation for growth and development in a new country, he was instrumental in building the Missouri Pacific Railroad from California to the south, getting the first train through to Puget Sound twenty-four hours before the exploration of a valuable land subsidy. The means for this undertaking he personally furnished.

His sound business judgment was seldom if ever at fault in any transaction and his keen insight into business propositions enabled him to look beyond the exigencies of the moment to the possibilities of the future, so that he labored not alone for his own generation but for those who follow after. His activities touched many lines all of which profited by the stimulus of his effort and business discernment. In 1881 he erected the Ainsworth building in Portland, at the corner of Oak and Third streets and about the same time established the Central Bank of Oakland, California, of which he remained the president until his death. In 1883 he organized the Ainsworth National Bank of Portland. He financed many projects which have constituted important elements in the upbuilding of the northwest, and his activity and enterprise enabled him to carry forward to successful completion whatever he undertook. He came to be known as a prominent figure in American finance, his ability being recognized in financial circles in the east as well as in the west. He always maintained a liberal policy with his employes, giving to them always a fair compensation for their labor, and it was one of the well known axioms of his business policy "give the boys good salaries."

Following his retirement from business life The Dalles Inland Empire said of him editorially: "He has been at all times a gentlemanly public servant and faithful custodian of the interests of his fellow stockholders and a most equitable and merciful employer. In fine, he has been a good friend to friends and a semi-foe to enemies. His broad sense of justice has made him the object of an almost filial degree of affection from his employes and to his sagacity in making three volunteer reductions of freight rates without compulsion in five years time, the growth and expansion of the western empire are largely attributable.

Captain Ainsworth was a large investor in Tacoma real estate and was prominently identified with the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company between the Columbia river and Puget Sound. Following his removal to California in 1880, he was largely interested in local banking and in the initiation and promotion of other business enterprises in that state. He financed the project, making Redondo Beach what it is today—one of the finest seaside resorts on the Pacific coast, expending nearly three million dollars in this undertaking and later sold it to H. E. Huntington. His plans were always wisely formulated and carefully executed and he displayed a notable mastery of detail that enabled him to use each point of the business to its best advantage.

Captain Ainsworth was married three times; his first wife died in six months after their marriage. His second wife was Jane White, a daughter of Judge S. S. White, a pioneer of 1845, who settled in Oregon City. To this marriage was born George J. Ainsworth, who is later spoken of in this work. Mrs. Ainsworth died in 1863. He was then married in San Francisco to Miss Fanny Babbitt, a daughter of General Edwin Babbitt of the United States Army. Unto this marriage were born six children: J. C. Ainsworth, of Portland; H. B. Ainsworth, of Los Angeles, California; Laura Ainsworth, deceased, the wife of John S. Baker, of Tacoma, Washington; Daisy Ainsworth, wife of Percy T. Morgan, of San Francisco, California; Maud Ainsworth of Portland; and Belle Ainsworth, wife of Ralph Jenkins, of Portland.

The death of Captain Ainsworth occurred December 30, 1893, at his home near Oakland, California. He was for years a prominent Mason and Ainsworth Chapter of Rose Croix is named in his honor. He was the first grand master from this state and was for years captain and inspector general of the supreme council of the southern jurisdiction in the state of Oregon, the highest post of honor possible of attainment in the state. The honorary thirty-third degree was also conferred upon him. While he attained prominence and eminent success in business, his own advancement was never at the sacrifice of other interests and he retained, as few men have done, the friendship and good-will of his business associates and colleagues. Moreover, those who knew him socially, entertained for him the warmest regard. In his life he embodied the principles of upright manhood and citizenship, and his labors were ever of a character that contributed not alone to individual success but also to the general welfare and prosperity. His name is written high on the roll of the honored dead who were among the builders and promoters of the great northwest.

J. G. HOUSER. Modern agriculture requires for its development an efficiency and a thorough knowledge which amounts almost to a science. It is becoming recognized as an occupation in which practical methods result in a high degree of prosperity. J. G. Houser in the cultivation of forty acres of land on the middle fork of the Coquille river, Coos county, Oregon, exemplifies the truth of this statement. He was born in North Carolina in 1871 and is the son of Evander and Sarah (Potter) Houser, both natives of South Carolina. They moved to the state in which their son was born at an early date and their marriage occurred there. They made North Carolina their place of residence until they came to Oregon in 1879, settling on the site where the village of Bridge now stands. Their original location was made on the middle fork of the Coquille river and here the father proved up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres and was successful in the cultivation and improvement of the soil for six years. He later moved to Coos county, where he spent twelve years in ranching, subsequently re-purchasing his old farm at Bridge and bringing it to a high state of cultivation before he disposed of his property. He bought the Jinkins ranch in the same vicinity and this is still his home. His wife died in 1910. The elder Mr. Houser is one of the representative and flourishing agriculturists of Coos county and carries on his farming along modern and progressive principles. He became the father of nine children: Mrs. Mary Machado, of Myrtle Point; J. G., the subject of this review; Maggie, who is deceased; Mrs. Florence Warner of Myrtle Creek, Oregon; Laura, the widow of Thomas Rookard of Myrtle Creek; Finas and Inez, twins, the latter of whom resides in Bridge, Oregon; Edna, who has passed away; and Josie, who lives at home.

Mr. Houser received his education in Coos county and remained at home until his marriage, at the age of twenty-four years. At that time he obtained employment in a logging camp and worked at lumbering until 1910. During this time he invested in Coos county farm lands, buying forty acres upon the middle fork of the Coquille river near Bridge. He has now abandoned all connection with the logging industry and is giving his entire attention to his farm and is one of the representative and enterprising agriculturists of Coos county.

Mr. Houser's marriage occurred on the 27th of April, 1895, when he wedded Miss Josie Pierce. Her father was one of the early settlers of Oregon, living practically all his life on Coos bay, where he died in 1906. He was survived by his wife until 1912, when her death occurred. They were the parents of eight children: Eva, who is married and lives in Portland, Oregon; Frank, now residing on his father's homestead in Coos county; Emmett, who makes his home in Marshfield, Oregon; Josie, the wife of our subject; Mrs. Edna Duckett, who lives on the north fork of the Coos river; Mrs. Bertha Parks, of California; and Katie and Cleve, deceased. Mrs. Houser is a member of the Christian church. She is the mother of six children: Harry, whose birth occurred in 1898; Edith, born in 1900; Archie, who passed away when he was four years of age; Ollis, who died when he was three years old; Virgie, whose birth occurred in 1904; and Clara, who died in infancy.

In his political affiliations Mr. Houser is a consistent republican and always votes the party ticket. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, holding membership in the lodge at Marshfield, Oregon. He was one of the organizers of the Myrtle Point Lodge of Woodmen but has transferred his membership. He is one of the many farmers in Coos county who are carrying on agriculture along practical lines and has met with fair success.

W. H. H. MORGAN, residing in Portland and engaged in the live-stock business, was born December 8, 1840, in Ohio, a son of Edward and Mary (Shirley) Morgan. The father was born in London and the mother, a native of Virginia, was of German descent. They were among the early settlers of Ohio and in his native land Edward Morgan learned and followed the shoemaker's trade. He was married in that country and with his wife and three children came to the United States when about thirty years of age. Subsequently he lost his first wife and wedded Mary Shirley. In Ohio he followed the occupation of farming and thus provided for his family, which numbered altogether twenty-two children, born of the two marriages.

After living in the Buckeye state Edward Morgan removed to Iowa, where he resided for two years. In 1845 he started across the plains with ox teams to the far west, traveling with a large wagon train which slowly wended its way toward the Pacific coast, six months elapsing before the end of the journey. Mr. Morgan at length reached Linnton, Oregon, which lies just across the river from St. Johns and within a few miles of Portland. There was only one log cabin on the present site of Portland at that time. Mr. Morgan located in the center of Sauvie's island, where he took up six hundred and forty acres of land as a donation claim. Later, however, he sold that property and in 1850 removed to the farm which is now owned by his son, W. H. H. Morgan. At that time he secured six hundred and forty acres of land, for which he paid one hundred dollars. This place is fourteen miles north of Portland. At that time there were comparatively few white men in this section and most of them had squaw wives. Mr. Morgan built a house of hewed cottonwood logs. In the family at that time there were the parents and seven children. They had two yoke of cattle and one cow. The log cabin remained the home of the family for about eight years, after which Edward Morgan built a frame dwelling, purchasing the lumber from Mr. Wells at Wilwankee. Later his son, whose name introduces this review, erected a fine residence upon the farm. The father died in 1872 at the ripe old age of eighty-four years, and the mother passed away in 1875 at the age of sixty-six years. In politics he was a very strong abolitionist in antebellum days and when the republican party was formed to prevent the further extension of slavery into the north he joined its ranks. However, he would never consent to hold office but in other ways did all he could to promote the success of his party and secure the adoption of its principles. He was a life-long and devoted member of the Baptist church and always lived in consistent harmony with his professions. He always followed farming after coming to Oregon but at length sold his place about fourteen miles from Portland and removed to Clackamas county, while later he became a resident of Washington county. A daughter of the family, Mrs. Julia Ann Freeman, is now living in Portland, while another daughter, Mrs. Katherine Dunn, lives on Sauvie's island and still another one, Mrs. Lucinda Boynton, is living in the Willamette valley. A son, George, makes his home in Washington county and Edward in Roseburg, Oregon, while still another daughter, Mrs. Sarah Ott, is living near Fort Madison, Iowa, at the very advanced age of eighty-nine years.

W. H. H. Morgan, brought to Oregon in 1845, was reared amid the wild scenes and environment of pioneer life. The river courses of the state made their way between banks upon which great pine forests grew and through the forests the Indians roamed at will, far outnumbering the white settlers who had ventured into the western wilderness to plant the seeds of civilization here. The unsettled and undeveloped condition of the country was such that Mr. Morgan had practically no school privileges. The homes of the settlers were too far distant from each other to permit of public schools being maintained and the education which Mr. Morgan has acquired has come to him through his reading, observation and broadening experience. He has always followed farming and stock-raising and in the fall of 1864 he purchased one-half of his father's farm and later bought the other half of his brother-in-law, so that he is now the owner of the old homestead property.

It was on the 30th of April, 1864, at Vancouver, Washington, that Mr. Morgan was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Orchard, a daughter of Jesse C. and Minerva Ann (Medford) Orchard. She was born in Texas and in 1852 came over the plains with her parents to Oregon, the journey being made with ox teams. Her father had followed farming in Texas and on reaching this state settled in Polk county, where he resided until 1862, when he came to Multnomah county. Here he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he cultivated for a time, but later sold that property and removed to eastern Oregon, his death occurring in that part of the state. His wife passed away in Washington. Of their children Mrs. America Ann Thomas lives in Portland, while James A. and Jasper are residents of Washington and two sons, John O. and Oscar, are in California. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan was blessed with eleven children: Charles C., who died in childhood; Elmina, the wife of David Kurtz, of Portland, and the mother of two children, Roy and Alma; Nellie B., at home; Nettie, the wife of Vernon Jeffcott, of Portland, by whom she has one son, Morgan; Daisy, the wife of Albert H. Demke of Chicago; Luella, the wife of W. S. Copeland, of Sauvie's island; Alba, of Portland, who married Madge Kay and has one son, William K.; Laura, the wife of Omar C. Spencer, of Portland, and the mother of two children, Helen E. and John Alfred; Newton, of Portland, who married Bessie Monroe; and two who died in infancy.

In his political views Mr. Morgan has always been a republican but the honors and emoluments of office have had no attraction for him. He lives a busy and useful life upon the farm which he still owns and which has been in possession of the family for sixty years. At length he retired from farming in 1897 and took up his abode in Portland. Previous to this time he would spend the summer months upon the farm and the winter seasons in Portland in order to give his children the benefit of educational advantages here offered. In 1906 he erected a fine residence on Hawthorne avenue, where he now resides. Few have longer been residents of Oregon than Mr. Morgan, who since 1845 has lived within the borders of the state, which, however, was under territorial government at the time of his coming and included the state of Washington. At that day wild beasts and birds dwelt unmolested in the forest and the white man had disputed with the Indian to only a slight extent concerning the ownership of the land. The great, vast regions of the state were unclaimed and Portland, the beautiful Rose City of the present, had then but a single house—a log cabin. Mr. Morgan has therefore been a witness of the entire development of the city and along agricultural lines has contributed to the upbuilding and progress of this section. He is indeed an honored resident of the northwest.

GRAND BANKS CALDWELL. For eighty-five years Grand Banks Caldwell has traveled life's journey and during sixty-six years of this period he has been a resident of Oregon. In appearance and interests he seems a much younger man, possessing the vigor and energy of one twenty years his junior and at all times keeping in close touch with the trend of events and with topics of general interest. His mind is stored with many interesting incidents of the early days and forms a connecting link between the primitive past, with its hardships and privations of pioneer life, and the present, with its progress and prosperity. He was born at Newcastle, Virginia, February 18, 1827, his parents being Bartley and Margaret (Fayer) Caldwell, both of whom were natives of Virginia, the former coming, however, of Irish parentage, while the latter was of German descent. In 1840 they removed with their family to Missouri, settling in Lafayette county, whence two years later they went to Jackson county, the family there living until they crossed the plains in 1846 to Jefferson, Marion county, Oregon. The long journey was made with ox teams. They left their old home on the 15th of April and on Christmas day had arrived in Polk county. A few days later they established their home in Jefferson. The father had died in Missouri in 1844 and the mother, with her eight children, had made the long trip from the Mississippi valley to the Pacific coast save that a daughter, Mary, died while on the way. The mother continued to reside in Marion county until her death, which occurred in 1860, when she was more than eighty years of age. Most of her children settled in the vicinity of Salem and the family is now a very numerous one in that part of the state. Times were very hard in the early days, privations being many and comforts few. The family, too, had but limited financial resources and it was necessary for G. B. Caldwell to earn a living in order to assist in providing for the younger members of the household. He was the third in order of birth in a family that numbered altogether nine children. Arthur, the eldest, served under General John C. Fremont in southern California during the Mexican war and spent the remainder of his life at San Juan in that state. Calohill, who was also a soldier with Fremont, died at Burns, Oregon. Bartley, the fourth member of the family, has followed mining during the greater part of his life and now lives in Stockton, California. Mrs. Lorella Jane Ramsdell and Mrs. Leona Agnes Holt were twins and both died in Oregon. The former had thirteen children and the latter twelve. Mary, who was the seventh member of the family, died in Oregon in 1846, when nine years of age. Maybery G. is a resident of Jefferson, Oregon. Almeda Conrad, the youngest, is deceased.

G. B. Caldwell, whose name introduces this record, was a lad of thirteen years when his parents removed to Missouri. Soon afterward he entered a furniture factory and continued at that kind of work for some time, but in the spring of 1846, when a youth of nineteen, he started with the family for Oregon. Their teams were drawn by ten oxen and they joined an emigrant train of one hundred and twenty-five wagons. His two elder brothers had previously joined Fremont's army in the west and because of the death of the father the duties of the head of the household devolved upon G. B. Caldwell. From an interview with him of a recent date a local writer has given the following description of the westward trip:

"The most serious Indian trouble occurred when the party had reached Goose lake, in eastern Oregon. The original party which left Lexington consisted of one hundred and twenty-five wagons but this immense train separated into bands of twenty-five wagons each after a few days, as it was found impossible for all to travel together and make more than ten miles a day. When the Indians mounted on ponies one morning at daybreak, at the time the night guards were changed, swept over the hills in Lake county they captured all the oxen and cattle that the entire caravan of twenty-five families possessed. The loss was soon discovered and chase was given. However, when the Indians saw that they would lose their booty they began shooting arrows into the oxen and quite a number were lost. This seriously crippled the travelers and as a result a number of families were forced to bury their heavier baggage near the present city of Lakeview, Oregon.

The party crossed the mountains and entered the Rogue River valley near Ashland and started north. When near Grants Pass the entire stock of flour and meal became exhausted. The emigrants were successful in securing a quantity of smoked salmon and some meat from Indians that sustained life.

"When the party arrived where the present city of Eugene stands there was only one house, a new one, but uninhabited. The first family living in a house was where Corvallis now stands. Where the party forded Rogue river was about two miles above the present location of Grants Pass, now known to old settlers as Brown's ford."

The year following their arrival G. B. Caldwell went to San Francisco, then an old Spanish town largely composed of adobe buildings covered with tile, there being only one frame structure—a hotel—in the place. His eldest brother and his brother-in-law were whipsawing in the redwoods of California and he entered their employ at a salary of twenty-five dollars per month and board, which was the largest wages that he had ever earned up to that time. He assisted in getting out the lumber to build their homes at San Juan and afterward established a little furniture shop there, which he conducted until 1848, when he went to the quicksilver mines, there working at the carpenter's trade for two dollars and a half per day. Following the discovery of gold in 1848 he refused a wage of five dollars a day at his trade and went with all the white men of the district to the gold fields on the American river, near Sacramento. He reached that point within six weeks after the discovery of gold and was planning to engage in prospecting when one day he made his way to the water's edge in order to get water to be used in cooking. There on the river bank he discovered plenty of gold dust. He worked several weeks, after which he returned to Jefferson and took his two brothers-in-law and a sister, Mrs. Ramsdell, back with him to California in the spring of 1849, the trip being made by water. At that time Mr. Caldwell began panning while his relatives worked in the mines. He made five thousand dollars in that way on two trips from Stockton to the mines, a distance of eighty miles. His labors brought him substantial success and for a period he enjoyed a high degree of prosperity, but he lost what he had made in speculation in city property in San Jose. When he had returned to Oregon for his relatives in 1848 he took back with him one hundred ounces of gold. This was the first gold brought from the mines into this state and he sold it to Dr. McLoughlin, of Oregon City, for eleven dollars per ounce. This gold created great excitement there and caused a stampede of the settlers of that region to the gold fields.

In 1852 Mr. Caldwell was married, after which he engaged in the lumber business and in other occupations in California, at one time conducting a furniture factory. In 1858, however, he returned to this state, becoming a permanent resident here. For a year he resided at Jefferson, where he conducted a cabinet shop, and in 1859 he removed to Josephine county, settling on Williams creek, where he opened a cabinet shop and engaged in the manufacture of furniture for about twenty years. During five winter seasons he engaged in mining. By steamer he went down the Klamath river and set up a mill there. His turning lathes, saws and other machinery were all brought from San Francisco and for many years he made most of the furniture used by the settlers of southern Oregon. While Mr. Caldwell was at Klamath the family removed to Grants Pass. He later engaged in carpentering here for five years and then returned to Williams creek, where he carried on farming and also worked at his trade. About four years ago, or in 1908, he returned to Grants Pass, where he is now living retired, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Dixon.

It was in 1852 that Mr. Caldwell was married to Mrs. Martha Williamson Wallace, the widow of Robert Wallace. She was born in Virginia, June 23, 1827, and was first married in that state. Her husband worked in the mines until he became ill with typhoid fever and passed away. Mrs. Wallace came across the plains in 1851 and cared for her husband in his illness. She had previously studied medicine and gave a large part of her time to practice in pioneer days. She made long trips on horseback to care for those who were ill and would often stay for weeks at a time among those who were sick. She was particularly skilful in her treatment of children's diseases and she practiced until within a short time before her death. She had a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who deeply deplored her loss when, on the 30th of September, 1907, she was called to the home beyond. By her first marriage she had three children, the eldest of whom passed away when two years of age. The other two, Mrs. Mary Jane Rice, now deceased, and Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Howe, the wife of John Howe, of Grants Pass, were twins. There were seven children of the second marriage but the first born died in infancy. The others are: Eva, the wife of John Newcomb, of Washington; Maggie, the wife of C. O. Bigelow, of Williamson, Oregon; Laura, the wife of C. F. Dixon, of Grants Pass, whose father was the first white child born in Benton county, Oregon, and is now a resident of Portland; G. M., living at Grants Pass; Nettie, the deceased wife of Thomas Mahan; and Ella, the widow of Fred Everton, of Stockton, California.

G. B. Caldwell was reared in the faith of the whig party but after attaining his majority joined the ranks of the democratic party, with which he was connected until recent years but is now a socialist. He served for two terms in the state legislature, in 1878 and again in 1880. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church South and has ever led an upright, honorable life, his earnest toil bringing him success and his integrity gaining him the high regard of all with whom he has been brought in contact. His life history if written in detail would present a clear and interesting picture of pioneer experiences in the northwest. In fact, he is not only acquainted with the history of Oregon but also with California and on one occasion, in the fall of 1849, when he was returning to California on board the brig Henry, the ship was caught in a gale and blown three hundred miles north of the Columbia river, barely escaping shipwreck. The various experiences of pioneer life are familiar to Mr. Caldwell and through his industry and enterprise he has contributed to the substantial development and progress of the sections in which he has lived. He can remember when many of the now well cultivated farms were covered with a dense growth of forest trees and when great stretches of land that are now thickly populated presented no indication of civilization. He has made good use of his time and in old age can look back over the past without regret and forward to the future without fear.

JAMES P. FELLER, a native of Marion county, was born June 25, 1867, on the old William Whitney donation claim, near the present site of Donald. His parents were Francis and Rheunah (Whitney) Feller, the father a native of Lorraine, Germany, and the mother of Oregon. The mother's people were of English descent and came from Indiana to Oregon in 1842, being among the first white settlers in the state. They crossed the plains and toiled through the mountain passes with ox teams, arriving at their journey's end to find themselves in a country of great natural resources. When sixteen years of age the father, accompanied by his parents, left Lorraine, Germany, and came to America, settling in Illinois. He remained with them for two years, and then he removed to Butteville, Oregon, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Subsequently he was employed by the month for five years, thereafter going to Idaho, where he made quite a large sum of money in the mines. Returning to Oregon, he bought a ranch near the place where he now lives, but selling out at the end of twelve years, he purchased the William Whitney land claim and a portion of the Pettee donation land claim. The mother died in 1892. At present the father resides retired in Woodburn, where he has chosen to make his home in his advanced age. James P. Feller, of this review, was the eldest child of his parents. The others are: William F., who resides on the old home place; Alfred E., who operates a farm of one hundred and sixty acres near Donald, Oregon; Mary E., who is the wife of C. A. Barienger, of Portland; Nellie R., the wife of A. C. Scheurer, an automobile dealer of Aurora, Oregon; Hattie, who is the wife of J. C. Barkman, of Portland; Charles E., of Donald, Oregon; Anna May, the wife of William Grover, who is in the employ of the National Cash Register Company, at Portland, Oregon; and Ida, the wife of A. H. Krause. Mr. Francis Feller was married four years after the death of his first wife to Miss Ida Garrett and two children have been born of this union: Iva, born in 1899; and Kenneth, born in 1905.

At the age of twenty-one James P. Feller started out in life on his own accord, renting a farm of one hundred and forty acres which he operated for five years, after which he bought the home where he now resides. This is a part of the William and Amanda Reese donation land claim and originally consisted of two hundred and forty-five acres. He sold a part of this land, which was used as the town site of Donald, and subsequent to the sale purchased an additional tract of forty-five acres. He has laid out the Feller first and second additions to Donald, which homeseekers are now buying. The village is a thriving and growing one, and will soon be incorporated. The Oregon Electric line runs through the town and has greatly enhanced the value of Mr. Feller's farm. He has one hundred and sixty-three acres of land under a high state of cultivation and is engaged in raising stock, grain and hops, having thirty-five acres of the latter, which yielded last year over twenty-eight thousand pounds of hops, eighteen thousand pounds of which were sold at forty-one cents per pound. He has a very beautiful home, handsomely furnished, and has installed his own water system and electric lights.

Mr. Feller married Miss Ellen Garrett, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Garrett and a native of Oregon, born in 1869. She is one of a family of fourteen children, four of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Feller have become the parents of one child, Ernest R., born July 4, 1892, who, having completed a college course at Newberg, Oregon, lives at home on the farm and has proved himself to be an efficient assistant to his father.

In politics Mr. Feller is a republican but always gives due attention to the man who is to be put in office. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Masons. He has always been greatly interested in public affairs and was instrumental in securing for Donald new roads and good schools, and he has been on the election board for a number of years. He is one of the most substantial business men of his community and is widely known and highly honored as a self-made man and one who has attained his success through honest effort and indefatigable industry.

ROMAIN W. WILCOX, who since 1908 has served as postmaster of Cleone, in Multnomah county, was born in Wisconsin, December 4, 1850. His parents were Daniel and Eliza Ann Wilcox, both of whom were natives of the state of New York and resided there until after their marriage in 1847. They then moved to Wisconsin, where they lived until the father's death, in 1893. Later the mother removed to the state of Washington and resided with the subject of this sketch until her death, in 1899. In their family were five children, two of whom died in infancy. Those who are living are: Mrs. Martha Jacks, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Romain W.; and Mrs. Emma Seifkenn, of Pilger, Nebraska.

Romain W. Wilcox grew to manhood in his native state and obtained a common-school education, the greater part of which he acquired in a night school. He remained at home until he was thirty-three years of age, when he started farming for himself in Wisconsin. Soon after he moved to the state of Washington, where he again took up farming, and in 1903 came to Oregon, settling in Multnomah county, where he worked for two years for W. W. Cotton in the creamery business. For the following two years he was engaged in the meat business, and on April 30, 1908, he was appointed postmaster of Cleone, in which capacity he is now so ably serving.

In 1873 Mr. Wilcox married Miss Anna Lucas, who was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of James and Jennima Lucas, both of whom were natives of England. The parents both emigrated to Canada and were married there, later moving to Wisconsin, where they continued to make their home. The father died there in 1903 and the mother is still living in that state. In their family were seven children: Mary; Anna, who is now Mr. Wilcox; Margaret and Cora, of Wisconsin; John, of Canada; Frank, of Michigan; and Charles, of Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox have become the parents of four children. Daisy B., the eldest, who was born in 1877, has a high-school education and is now the wife of E. L. Wilkinson, of Portland, Oregon, who is in the employ of a railroad. Claire C. was born in 1879 and is now a physician at Vancouver, Washington. Harold is deceased. Alta M., who completes the family, was born in 1893, has a high-school education, and is also a graduate in music, which subject she has been teaching. She is now at home.

In his political views Mr. Wilcox is a republican, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are of the Apostolic faith, being members of the Christian church. Mr. Wilcox is a progressive, energetic and highly-honored citizen of Cleone. In all his business and social relations he has ever been upright and since entering upon his work as postmaster his efforts have been crowned with success.

HENRY ZORN, who is one of the large land owners in Marion county and who resides a quarter of a mile north of Champoege, was born in Portland in 1880, his parents being Adam and Christina (Sohler) Zorn, the former a native of Hesse, Germany, and the latter of Green Bay, Wisconsin. The mother's birth occurred in 1852 and her father was a native of Prussia. Adam Zorn, whose birth occurred in 1841, came to America with his father in 1853. Immediately upon their arrival in New York they set out for Wisconsin, and located at Baraboo. The father lived a more or less retired life. Adam Zorn was one of five children, the others being: Henry, who is married and makes his home in Hesse, Germany; Casper and Mrs. Annie Hoefer, both deceased; and Mrs. Catherine Hirsching, who resides at Baraboo, Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Adam Zorn three children were born: Henry, the subject of this review; Clara, the wife of Isaac Van Dandague, of St. Paul, Oregon; and Adam, deceased. Adam Zorn, the father of our subject, was engaged in farming until the family removed to Oregon, making the trip via the Isthmus of Panama and going directly to Portland. His brother Casper and sister Annie had preceded him to Oregon, settling at Champoege, where the sister's husband, John Hoefer, was a carpenter. Casper Zorn worked as a farm hand and his father, the grandfather of our subject, made his home with him until the time of his death, which occurred in 1878. Adam Zorn, the father, was married in 1875 and at that time removed to Portland, where he conducted a restaurant until the death of his wife ten years later. Subsequently he continued his residence in that city until his death in January, 1909.

Casper Zorn and John Hoefer purchased a farm in Champoege but the former sold out and removed to Idaho, where he opened and operated a hotel at the Oraine mines in partnership with C. W. King, of Ols. Worthman & King, of Portland. They continued in this business until the mining excitement subsided. They had made considerable money and after selling out Casper Zorn returned to Champoege, where in 1862 he purchased a mill in partnership with his brother-in-law, John Hoefer, on Mission creek, near Champoege. For eighteen years they were engaged in operating this mill and during that time Mr. Zorn also engaged in the real-estate and loan business. Afterward they became interested in farming and until their deaths they shared equally in the profits of their various enterprises. The house which they built upon their farm was at that time the finest in this part of the country and is still considered one of the most substantial and best built residences in Marion county. Mr. Hoefer's death occurred in 1909 and his property was left to thirty-three heirs, and Casper Zorn's death occurred in March of the following year, his property being left to four heirs.

Henry Zorn received one thousand acres from his uncle, upon which he is now residing, and the value of his holdings amounts to nearly one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. Four hundred of the six hundred and thirty acres upon which he resides is in a high state of cultivation, being devoted to grain and hop raising, and he also raises cattle, specializing in Jersey cows and fine hogs. He has at times given special attention to breeding fine horses. The place is fully equipped with water works and a lighting system, and has modern and commodious barns and a comfortable dwelling house.

On the 28th of November, 1898, in Oregon City, Mr. Zorn was married to Miss Alfrida Meyer, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Frederick) Meyer, of Oregon City, both of whom were natives of Hamburg, Germany. Upon their arrival in New York they left immediately for Oregon, where Mr. Meyer was employed in the woolen mills in Oregon City. He retired from active business in 1899 and his death occurred in 1911, the mother having died one year previously. Mrs. Zorn, whose birth occurred in 1880, was one of four children: Martha, who is residing in Oregon

CASPER ZORN

City; one who died in infancy; and Augusta, also residing in Oregon City. To Mr. and Mrs. Zorn three children have been born: Alfreda Marie, who passed away in infancy; Marie, whose birth occurred July 5, 1908; and Catherine, who was born February 8, 1910.

In politics Mr. Zorn has always been very active and gives his support to the republican party, but since holding the office of justice of the peace for one term has not sought further offices. He holds membership in the Roman Catholic church. He is public-spirited and takes an interest in all that pertains to the welfare of his community and does what he can to further the progress of those movements which he thinks will do most to raise the social, moral and intellectual standards of the district.

G. M. CALDWELL is not only well known in connection with industrial interests at Grants Pass in connection with a wagon shop for manufacturing and repair work but is also a leader in political circles here and has manifested the independent spirit which has dared to break off from the old party allegiance and become allied with the socialist movement that is seeking for equalization in those things which affect the great majority. He is today a member of the city council, to which office he was elected on the socialist ticket. He has always resided upon the Pacific coast and, like the majority of pioneers, early learned to value people and conditions at their true worth. Mr. Caldwell is one of Oregon's native sons. He was born on Williams creek in Josephine county, May 22, 1863, his parents being G. B. and Martha (Williamson) Caldwell, both of whom were natives of Virginia. The father crossed the plains in 1846 and the mother became a resident of California a few years later. She had been previously married to Robert Wallace and it was after her arrival on the Pacific coast that she became the wife of G. B. Caldwell. Later they settled on Applegate creek in Oregon and afterward took up their abode on Williams creek. Mr. Caldwell had gone to California in 1848 following the discovery of gold in that state and while there he divided his time between mining and work at the trades of carpentering and cabinet-making. For twenty-eight years he conducted a cabinet shop on Williams creek, manufacturing all kinds of household furniture, the work being done by hand until railroads were built through this section of the state, bringing with them the machine-made furniture of the east. Mr. Caldwell then retired from that line of business and afterward carried on farming for several years. At length, however, he put aside business cares altogether and is now enjoying a well earned rest at his home in Grants Pass. His wife died here in 1907, at the age of eighty years. She had ten children, three of whom were born of her first marriage, and seven of her second marriage. Of these G. M. Caldwell is the only son and the fourth in order of birth. In his youthful days he remained with his parents and worked with his father until twenty-five years of age. He was then married in 1888 to Miss Lulu Day, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1867, a daughter of F. G. Day, at one time a member of the Oregon state legislature. Mrs. Caldwell went with her father to California and thence came with him to Oregon.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Caldwell started out in business on his own account. He worked at cabinet-making for eighteen months at Williams and later operated a ranch for eight years on Williams creek and Applegate creek. The year 1903 witnessed his arrival at Grants Pass, at which time he established his present business, opening a shop for the manufacture and repair of wagons. His patronage has increased until the business has now reached profitable and gratifying proportions.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell have been born seven children: Leila, now the wife of J. A. Pilgrim, a resident of Hilts, California; Laura Myrle, at home; W. H.; Doris; Fay; Robin, who died at the age of three years; and Norman. Mr. Caldwell owns a pleasant home and also four lots on West C street. As previously stated, he is a socialist and at the present time he is serving as a member of the city council, to which he was elected in December, 1911, he and Ernest Everton being the first representatives of that party chosen to office here by popular suffrage. He has also held some school offices and the cause of education finds in him a warm friend. Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell and all the members of their family except the youngest are members of the Baptist church, Fay joining at the age of eight years, at that time being the youngest member of the church. Mr. Caldwell's fraternal relations are with the Modern Woodmen of America. There have been no particularly unusual chapters in his life history but his record is characterized by progress owing to the fact that each day he has faithfully performed the tasks that have devolved upon him and in this way has found strength and inspiration for the duties of the ensuing day.

PATSY T. TOOSEY, who is conducting a blacksmith business at Banks and has the patronage of a large surrounding territory, was born in Italy, on the 1st of September, 1886. His parents were Paul and Angel (Lenza) Toosey, who are still living in sunny Italy, where the father has followed blacksmithing throughout his entire life. Unto him and his wife were born six children: Urlando, who died in Italy at the age of four years; Sante, who passed away in Italy when twenty-one years of age; Nicholina, who died in Italy at the age of fourteen years; Loneta, the wife of Patsy Sipoletti, still living in Italy; Patsy T., of this review; and Mary, who is with her parents. The father was born in 1851 and the mother in 1848, and they are still residents of the land of their nativity.

Patsy T. Toosey, of this review, is the only member of the family who came to America. He arrived in the new world in 1902, leaving Italy on the 1st of January and landing at Boston, Massachusetts, where he remained for a brief period. He afterward went to Clinton, Massachusetts, and there resided three years, during which period he worked at the blacksmith's trade. Later he became a resident of Philadelphia and secured employment in the Meadville steel shops, where he spent three years. Still his ambition was not satisfied for he believed that better opportunities could be secured elsewhere and accordingly he sought the advantages of the west, making his way to Portland, Oregon, where he entered the employ of the Tongue Point Lumber Company as a blacksmith. There he worked for eight months, after which he went to Vancouver, Washington, where he joined the Porter Brothers Railroad Construction force engaged in building the North Bank railroad. Six months thus passed, after which he came to Banks, Washington county, and purchased a blacksmith shop in which he is still carrying on business. He owns the shop and is accorded a large patronage, having many patrons who come to him from over a wide territory. He is an efficient, capable workman and does all in his power to satisfy his patrons.

Since becoming a naturalized American citizen Mr. Toosey has advocated the principles of the republican party yet is liberal in his thoughts and does not hesitate to vote as his judgment dictates even though it should be contrary to his usual party affiliations. He holds membership with the order of Macabees at Greenville. His religious faith is that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared. He has never had cause to regret his determination to seek a home in the new world, for he here found the opportunities which he sought and in their improvement has made gradual and substantial progress, being now at the head of a growing business which returns to him a satisfactory annual income.

ADELBERT BROOKS, who has made for himself a creditable position in business circles as a nurseryman of Carlton, was born on the 27th of February, 1869, in Pennsylvania, his parents being John and Delilah (Kelly) Brooks who were also natives of the Keystone state, where they were reared and married. They resided for some time at Corry, Pennsylvania, but in 1884 came with their family to Oregon, settling first near Portland, where they lived for three years. They afterward spent a similar period in this city at the end of which time the father purchased land near Carlton and embarked in the nursery business and in the raising of fruit in which he continued until his death in 1909. He is still survived by his wife, at the age of seventy-six years, and she now makes her home in La Fayette, Oregon. At the time of his demise John Brooks was the owner of his home place of one hundred and sixty acres, another tract of ninety acres in Yamhill county and one hundred and seventy acres in Pennsylvania. Unto him and his wife were born eleven children of whom eight are still living: Rose, of Montavilla, Oregon; Jay and Allie, both of La Fayette; Adelbert and Frank, who are partners in business; Bert, of La Fayette; Edith, of Portland; and Minnie also of La Fayette.

The youthful days of Adelbert Brooks were quietly passed, that time being given to the attainment of an education in the public schools and to the tasks which were assigned him by his father in connection with the conduct of the nursery business. In 1891 he joined his father and brothers in that business, with which he was connected until 1898, when he went to Pennsylvania where he conducted a lumber business until 1904. He then returned to Oregon and came into possession of what is now known as the Carlton Nursery in partnership with his brother Frank. They are exclusive owners of the original nursery which was formerly carried on under the firm style of Brooks & Sons and which was established in 1891. In addition to this they own one hundred and twenty-seven acres of finely improved farming land near Carlton. Their nursery is also located in that vicinity, is the third in size in the Willamette valley and ranks with the best in the state.

On the 5th of March, 1898, occurred the marriage of Adelbert Brooks and Miss Elizabeth Bryan, who was born in Oregon and is a daughter of James and Sarah (Ramsey) Bryan, the father crossing the plains to the Pacific in the early '50s. He was then but three years old and his parents established the family home in Lane county. He spent his remaining days in this state and always followed farming and stock-raising until his last years, when he retired from the farm, sold his property and took up his abode in Carlton where he enjoyed a well earned rest until called to his final home in September, 1911. His widow still survives at the age of sixty-four years. In their family were nine children: Louise, residing in Dundee, Oregon; Lydia, who makes her home in Newberg, Oregon; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Brooks; Pleasant and Mary, who are also of Newberg; Minnie, living in Portland; Myron, of Carlton; Dot, of Aberdeen, Idaho; and Hugh W. of Carlton.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have been born six children: Essie V., born in 1899; Mabel D., in 1901; Lyle D., in 1902; Reta E. in 1904; Lynn in 1906; and Minnie, in 1908. The family residence is one of the finest in Carlton and is indicative of the active and successful business career of Mr. Brooks whose life has been well spent and whose energy and careful management in business have been the source of the substantial prosperity which has crowned his labors. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he has many friends in this part of the state where much of his life has been passed.

FRANK BROOKS, who is a partner of Adelbert Brooks in the nursery business, was born August 28, 1871, and the experiences of his early life were largely like those of his brother. In 1891 they embarked in the nursery business with their father and brothers the enterprise being thus continued under the partnership relations for thirteen years, but the business is now owned by Adelbert and Frank Brooks and is conducted under the style of the Carlton Nursery. It comprises one hundred acres and is considered one of the finest nurseries of its size in western Oregon. It is pleasantly located near the city limits of Carlton and their shipments include a very large amount of nursery stock each year. They also own one hundred and twenty-seven acres of fine land near Carlton and each has a fine residence in the town in addition to a large packing house for their nursery stock.

On the 31st of May, 1907, Frank Brooks was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hutchings, who was born in Oregon, March 4, 1876, a daughter of Davis and Amanda Hutchings the former of California and the latter of Oregon although since their marriage they have practically spent their time in the latter state where the father has followed farming. He still lives at Tillamook but his wife died in 1909. In their family were six children of whom Mrs. Brooks is the eldest, the others being Cash, Bern, James, Roy and one who died in infancy. Mr. Brooks belongs to the Masonic lodge and to the Artisans and in politics is independent voting as his judgment dictates without regard to party ties. Both he and his brother are recognized as men of excellent business ability and of marked enterprise, and the years are bringing to them substantial success in the management of their affairs.

HENRY VANDEHEY belongs to that class of men who sturdily persevere in anything they undertake and are usually numbered among the substantial citizens of their respective communities. He is now well established on a farm three miles south of Banks, Washington county, and the neat appearance of his place is evidence of the careful attention he gives to his business. He was born in Wisconsin February 6, 1854, a son of John and Ardena Vandehey. The parents were natives of Holland and were married in the old country. They emigrated to America in 1851 and settled in Wisconsin where they lived for twenty-two years. At the end of the time named Mr. Vandehey moved with his family to Nebraska and six years later came to Washington county, Oregon, locating on a farm of forty acres. He died a year after his arrival and his widow made her home with her children until her death, which occurred in 1900. In their family were thirteen children, ten of whom survive, namely: John, Martin, Adrien, Henry, Nellie, George, Theodore, Mary, Antone, and Annie. Peter died at the age of fifty years, Harriet at the age of twenty-six and one of the children was called away in infancy.

Henry Vandehey grew to manhood in Wisconsin and in the public schools of his native state secured his early education. At the age of nineteen he began learning the wagon-maker's trade, to which he faithfully applied himself for nine years. He then engaged in farming, a pursuit which he followed for five years in Wisconsin. In 1879 he came to Washington county, Oregon, and engaged in farming for six years. He then went to Nebraska and farmed for a year, also taking up a homestead in that state. A year later he sold out and returned to Oregon where he has since resided. He now owns a well improved farm of seventy-five acres from which he receives handsome annual returns. He and his family occupy an attractive home and as each year witnesses a gratifying increase in his prosperity, he has just reason to congratulate himself on locating permanently under the favorable conditions that prevail in Washington county.

On September 13, 1875, Mr. Vandehey was married to Miss Elizabeth Vangreensven, who was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of Henry and Nellie (Coonen) Vangreensven. The parents were born in Holland and came to America with their parents in childhood. They were married in Wisconsin and lived in that state until 1879, when the family migrated to Washington county, Oregon. Mr. Vangreensven engaged successfully in farming in this county. He died at the age of fifty-three but his wife survived for a number of years, being called away at the age of seventy-eight. To them eleven children were born: Anna; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Henry Vandehey; John; Mary; Theodore; Nellie, who is deceased; Hattie; Dora; William; Mary Ann; and Delia, who died at the age of two years. Mr. and Mrs. Vandehey are the parents of twelve children, as follows: Nellie, who was born September 12, 1876, and is the wife of Frank Vandonelen, of Washington county; Harriet, who was born November 1, 1877, and resides at home; Bertha, who was born December 19, 1879, and is the wife of Harry Bryans, of Salem; Anna, born March 9, 1882, who married John Herb; Mary, who was born February 17, 1884, and is now the wife of Henry Vandonelen, of Washington county; William, who was born February 5, 1888, and resides at home; Clara, born June 21, 1891; Lawrence, who was born November 12, 1895, and is also at home; Raymond, born November 24, 1897; Julius, born March 11, 1900; and two daughters who were named Julia, deceased.

Mr. Vandehey is a stanch advocate of the democratic party and casts his ballot in support of its candidates and principles. He was reared in the Catholic faith and he and his family belong to that denomination. Energy, perseverance and thrift are recognized the world over as the foundation of material prosperity and these three qualities are possessed by Mr. Vandehey. He enjoys the esteem of many friends and fully deserves the honor that is accorded the fortunate individual who has fought and won in the great battle of life.

DR. MERRITT E. REITZEL, of Dayton, who has come to be recognized as one of the capable and successful practitioners of Yamhill county, was born in Chicago, Illinois, January 10, 1870. His parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Klugh) Reitzel, were natives of Mountville, Pennsylvania, where they were reared and married, subsequently removing to Chicago about 1879. After two years' residence in that city they returned to Mountville, where they still make their home, and during his connection with active business affairs the father was a building contractor. At length his labor brought to him a substantial competence which supplies him with all of the necessities and many of the comforts of life now that he has retired from business.

Dr. Reitzel spent his youthful days in Mountville and after mastering the elementary branches of learning in the public schools attended the academy at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and also the State Normal School at Millersville, Pennsylvania, where he spent one term. In 1889 he left home and after traveling for a considerable period in the northwestern states passed ten years largely in southern Oregon. In 1899 he took up the study of medicine, reading under the direction of Dr. Houck, of Roseburg, this state. This brought him his initial acquaintance with the science that has since engaged his attention. The following fall he entered the medical department of the State University of Oregon but was not graduated until the spring of 1905. He then located in La Fayette, Yamhill county, where he engaged in active practice for four years, and in 1909 he came to Dayton, where he has since made his home. Here his ability has won him recognition as an able member of the medical profession. He is a member of the Polk-Yamhill Medical Society, the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and of the first named is the vice president. Anything which tends to bring to man the key to the complex mystery which we call life is of interest to him and his reading and investigation have brought him comprehensive knowledge of the science of medicine and the laws of health so that in his practice his work has been very efficacious in checking the ravages of disease.

In 1898 Dr. Reitzel was married to Miss Jessie Bell, of Hampshire, Illinois, who was at that time on a visit in Oregon. Unto them has been born a daughter, Clare Elizabeth. Dr. Reitzel holds membership in La Fayette Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F.; La Fayette Lodge, A. O. U. W.; Dayton Camp of the Woodmen of the World; and La Fayette Lodge of United Artisans. In these organizations he is widely and favorably known and in professional circles has gained an extended acquaintance, his close conformity to a high standard of professional ethics having gained for him the warm regard of those who are also practitioners of medicine and surgery. His practice has constantly developed in extent and importance and he is now well established in his chosen life work.

CAPTAIN GEORGE GANS. The enduring gratitude of all lovers of liberty is due such soldiers as have upheld the stars and stripes at the time the union of the states was threatened, and by their sacrifices and sufferings the men who served in the Civil war not only set free three million slaves but they established the American republic on a safe and enduring foundation so it is today the greatest nation over which the sun shines. Among the men who fought and suffered in the Civil war may be named Captain George Gans, who, in his earlier years, was called upon to endure the troubles and trials of the hard laborer but who at last has established himself in comfortable circumstances and in a pleasant home. He was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, on the 3d of August, 1840, a son of Joseph and Phebe (Rogers) Gans. The father was a tanner by trade and operated a tannery in Fayette county where he resided until early in the '40s. At that time he removed to Green county, Wisconsin, where he farmed and in the '80s he came to Shenandoah, Iowa, where his death occurred when he was eighty years of age.

George Gans remained under the parental roof until he enlisted for service in the Civil war. He was educated in the public schools of Fayette county and assisted his father in the latter's business undertakings, but when President Lincoln needed volunteers to assist those already in the field Mr. Gans, then almost twenty-one years of age, enlisted in Company C, Third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. On the 24th of April, 1861, leaving his coat and plow in the field he set out to give his services for the Union cause. He served in the Army of the Potomac, and was wounded in the leg at Cedar Mountain on the 9th of August, 1862, and was discharged. When he recovered he reenlisted in Company D, Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. At the time of his second enlistment he was made sergeant of his company. After the battle of the Wilderness the first lieutenant had lost his voice, the second lieutenant had recently died of typhoid fever and the captain had become ill, and Mr. Gans was placed in command of the company. From that time until he suffered the loss of a hand in front of Petersburg in June, 1864, he commanded the company. After this accident he was sent to the Camden Street Hospital at Baltimore and then to Annapolis for six weeks. In the battle of Cold Harbor he sustained two injuries, one in the shoulder and one in the head. Upon leaving the hospital he was sent to Madison, Wisconsin, where he was given command of four hundred men and where he remained until hostilities ceased. He was discharged on the 22d of June, 1865, and immediately afterward returned home where he engaged in the mercantile business in Juda, Wisconsin. In 1876 he left Wisconsin for Nebraska and five years later went to New Mexico where he was connected with the Mesalero Apache Indian Agency. His position was that of issue clerk and he retained it for five years before accepting the position of assistant live-stock agent for the Santa Fe railroad. After remaining with that company for three years, with headquarters at Las Cruces, he discontinued clerical positions. In 1892 he came to Oregon and located in Salem where he has since resided. Two years later he was given the position of bailiff of the circuit court and is still occupying that office.

Late in the '60s Captain Gans was married to Miss Anna Llewellyn of Tabor, Iowa. To their union six children were born, five of whom survive, namely: George G., who is a bookkeeper in San Francisco, California; Hope, who is married to Fred Lockley, manager of the Pacific monthly of Portland; D., a daughter who was a student in Willamette University for seven years and is married to Dr. Arthur Gale, a prominent physician of Madras, Oregon; Bonnie, who is living at home, and was stenographer in the weather bureau at Washington but was compelled to resign on account of ill health; and Reba, who is a graduate of the Normal department of Willamette University and now the wife of Thomas Mountain, an implement dealer of Walla Walla, Washington. The three daughters were teachers in the Salem schools.

In politics Captain Gans is a warm supporter of the republican party. He was commander of the Nebraska Post of the Grand Army of the Republic. In religious faith he is affiliated with the Episcopal church. He holds membership in the Chemeketa Lodge, No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined the same in January, 1866. By his genial disposition and public spirit Captain Gans has attracted many friends who hold him in high esteem as a worthy worker in the cause of humanity.

EARL C. BRONAUGH, JR., has for more than two decades been a representative of the Portland bar and to an understanding of uncommon acuteness and vigor he added a thorough and conscientious preparatory training. While in recent years he has largely concentrated his efforts upon corporation law, he is constantly inspired by an innate inflexible love of justice and a delicate sense of personal honor which controls him in all his personal relations. He enjoys in large measure the confidence and respect of his fellow practitioners and that he has the trust of the general public is indicated in the extensive clientage accorded him.

Mr. Bronaugh has always resided west of the Mississippi and during the greater part of his life upon the Pacific coast. He was born in Cross county, Arkansas, February 26, 1866, and was only two years old when brought to Oregon by his father, Earl C. Bronaugh, Sr., of whom extended mention is made elsewhere in this work. Reared amid a home atmosphere of intellect and morality, Earl C. Bronaugh came to young manhood well equipped to become the worthy successor of an honored father. After mastering the elementary branches of learning in the public schools of Portland, he attended the University of the Pacific at San Jose, California, and on his graduation therefrom received the Bachelor of Arts degree. Three years later his alma mater conferred upon him the Master of Arts degree. His preliminary law studies had been pursued in the office of Whalley, Bronaugh & Northup and his preparation for the profession was completed as a law student in the University of Oregon, where he won his Bachelor of Law degree in 1890. In June of that year, he was admitted to the bar and entered upon practice as the fourth member of the firm of Bronaugh, McArthur, Fenton & Bronaugh. Following the death of Judge McArthur in 1897 and the retirement of his father the firm style became Fenton, Bronaugh & Muir, and upon the dissolution of that partnership in February, 1900, Earl C. Bronaugh was joined by his cousin, Jerry Bronaugh, in organizing the law firm of Bronaugh & Bronaugh, which existed until Earl C. Bronaugh was appointed to the circuit bench in December, 1907, by governor Chamberlain, to succeed Judge Arthur L. Frazer, deceased. He was reelected to the office in June, 1908, and during the last year of his service on the circuit bench he also occupied the position as judge of the juvenile court. As circuit court judge he rendered decisions that were strictly fair and impartial, his opinions being sustained in the great majority of cases which were appealed. Moreover, comparatively few appeals were taken and he was recognized as one of the ablest members who have presided over the circuit court. As judge of the juvenile court he also did excellent work, instituting a service that stands for a higher civilization in his recognition of the good in each individual and the possibilities for redemption of the young offenders. He had many important cases come before him during his service as judge, and altogether his was a strenuous work that included the trial of five homicide cases in the first year, in which he was obliged to pronounce the death sentence four times. In June, 1910, he resigned to reenter upon the active practice of law.

On his retirement from the bench the Multnomah County Bar Association held a banquet in his honor, on which occasion he was presented with a loving cup, and in the presentation of speech Charles J. Schnabel, president of the Association, said: "It is a remarkable fact and perhaps rightfully appreciated that the highest honor that can be paid to Judge Bronaugh is to recall that in the history of Oregon's judiciary, notwithstanding the multitude of judges that have come and gone in that interval, this is the second occasion when by unanimous and spontaneous consent a testimonial of this character has been paid to a retiring judge. Certainly the highest eulogium of a judge's success in the administration of his exalted and powerful office is not the plaudits of the multitude but the respect and standing accorded him by the lawyers. Men at times who are elevated from the ranks to a position of power and influence degenerate into tyrants but in Judge Bronaugh's case no man living and having experience with him would think of such an aspersion to his judicial career. He not only loved a square deal but was himself a square dealer."

Since leaving the bench Judge Bronaugh has given his attention especially to the law of real property and is regarded as authority upon this subject in Portland. Few men are better informed not only concerning the law of property but also concerning realty values and the possibilities for real-estate development here. He is now vice president and general council of the Title & Trust Company of Portland and for many years has been local counsel for the states of Oregon and Washington for the Alliance Trust Company, Ltd., of Dundee, Scotland. Investors Mortgage & Security Company, Ltd., and for the Western and Hawaiian Investment Company, both of Edinburgh, Scotland. He was a director of the Portland Trust Company of Oregon until he became circuit judge.

On the 14th of June, 1888, Mr. Bronaugh was married in San Jose, California, to Miss Grace L. Huggins, a daughter of Asa G. Huggins, of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Bronaugh were classmates in college. Their marriage has been blessed with four children: Elizabeth, twenty-three years of age, who is married to Joseph E. Hall, Jr., of Hood River; Lewis J., twenty-one years of age; Earl C., eighteen; and Polly, fourteen years of age. The family home is at Homewood, their residence near Oak Grove on the Willamette river. Mr. Bronaugh is connected with a number of the leading associations of Portland. He is a member of the State Bar Association and of the Multnomah County Bar Association. He was elected a member of the city council from the seventh ward in 1900 and during his two years service was chairman of the committee on streets, health and police and a member of the judiciary committee. In 1901 he received legislative appointment as a member of the charter board and served as chairman of the committee on executive department and a member of the committee on the legislative department. In 1911 he was chosen chairman of the commission appointed to draft a charter providing a commission for government for the city of Portland. His knowledge of the law, combined with practical ideas and progressive and patriotic public spirit, have well qualified him for the important work that he has done in Portland's behalf. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, in which he is a ruling elder, and in various departments of the church work is helpfully interested, acting on its board of trustees and serving for a long period as Sunday-school superintendent. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association and no good work in the name of charity or religion seeks his aid in vain, if he can find opportunity to render assistance thereto.

His social nature finds expression in his membership in the Arlington and Commercial Clubs and he belongs also to the Phi Kappa Psi and Phi Delta Phi. While a university student he became one of the organizers of Chase Chapter of Legal Fraternity, Phi Delta Phi, of the University of Oregon. He belongs to the Mazamas, the Mountaineering Society of the northwest of which he has been an enthusiastic member for fourteen years. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, having attained the Royal Arch degree and also belongs to the Royal Arcanum. His interests touch the various activities which constitute important courses in life and as is seen he is associated with those social, fraternal and church interests which constitute an even balance to professional and business life. His is a well rounded nature and in the development of strong and honorable manhood has commanded the respect, confidence and honor of his fellowmen.

NIELS SIMMONSEN. Among the prominent and respected inhabitants of Portland who are of Danish nativity, is Niels Simonsen, a retired farmer and realty operator, who has lived on American soil since 1872. His father was Simon Larsmussen, and both parents died in Denmark. In their family were five children, the subject of this review being the youngest in order of birth.

Niels Simonsen received a common-school education in his native land and in 1872 he emigrated to America, settling in Portland. During the first year of his residence in the new world Mr. Simonsen was employed on a dairy farm and for the next three years he worked as a farm laborer. He then bought thirteen acres of heavy timber land, situated where East Portland now stands and all being within the city limits. This tract is at Fifty-eighth street. Mr. Simonsen cleared this land and lived on it for several years, farming and gardening, and selling it off in separate subdivisions at about six hundred dollars an acre. In 1886 he again purchased land, this time securing four acres of what was known as Belmont Park, now known as the Westdale addition to Portland. It is located between Sixtieth and Salmore streets. Mr. Simonsen owns a fine home and has in addition five improved lots now valued at about twenty-five thousand dollars.

In 1875 Mr. Simonsen was married to Miss Karey Larsmussen, a native of Denmark, who came to America in 1873. Her parents both died in the old country. Mr. and Mrs. Simonsen are the parents of one son, Charles, who was born in 1876. He was married on December 21, 1905, to Cora Ellsworth, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Ellsworth, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania. The parents were married in that state and lived there for several years, later moving to Nebraska and from there to South Dakota, where the mother died in 1901. The father subsequently drove across the plains to Oregon and settled at Portland, where he still lives. He was twice married, his second union being with Mrs. Jennie Burt, widow of Harry Burt. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Simonsen are the parents of three children: Walter, born September 8, 1906; Geneva, born December 3, 1907; and Karey, born June 16, 1909.

Politically Mr. Simonsen of this review is a republican, but has never sought office. Both he and his family are members of the Scandinavian Lutheran church. By his foresight in grasping the opportunities at hand and by his industry, economy and thrift, Mr. Simonsen has come to be one of the substantial, well known and respected citizens of Portland. Faithful and consistent in his church life, living quietly in the home circle, he is enjoying the rest and comfort to which his earlier labors and activities so fully entitled him.

ARA W. McLAUGHLIN is one of the proprietors of the large furniture store of the Flint-McLaughlin Company, the oldest establishment of this character in Eugene. The store has had a continuous existence of about a quarter of a century. Mr. McLaughlin has been one of the partners for the past four years and has brought to its conduct a spirit of enterprise and progressiveness which is manifest in the growth and development of the business to this period. He was born in Nodaway county, Missouri, in 1873, and is a son of Richard S. and Wilhelmina (Chambers) McLaughlin. The father is a native of Galesburg, Illinois, and was between eighteen and twenty years of age when he went to Missouri, where he was married. He engaged in farming in that state until 1877, when he removed westward to Oregon, establishing his home in Milwaukie, where he is still living on a ranch. He cleared and improved the ninety acres which he owns and is thereon engaged in general farming. He was born in 1848 and has now passed the sixty-fourth milestone on life's journey.

Ara W. McLaughlin was a lad of but about three years when brought to the northwest. After acquiring his preliminary education in the public schools he entered the normal department of Portland University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897, having taught two years prior to the last year of his course. He then served one year as principal of the Mount Pleasant school and put aside all business and personal considerations at the time of the Spanish-American war in order that he might enlist in defense of his country's flag. He joined Company I of the Second Oregon Regiment, was sent to the Philippines, where he remained until his command was returned to this country, and was mustered out in August, 1899. He then again resumed the profession of teaching, which he followed for three years as principal of the Milwaukie school, the last two of which he was on the Clackamas county board of examiners. After this he received his initial business training in the furniture line in six years of experience with the Powers Furniture Company, which firm he entered as janitor and from which he retired as auditor. In 1908 he formed his present partnership with Laurence R. Flint, becoming one of the proprietors of Eugene's oldest furniture establishment, now conducted under the firm name of Flint-McLaughlin Company. Although this is the oldest furniture store in the city it is thoroughly modern in its equipment and line of house furnishings handled. They keep on hand a large stock, the output of the best factories of the country, and a liberal patronage is accorded them in recognition of their straightforward business dealings and their progressive methods.

On November 28, 1907, Mr. McLaughlin was united in marriage to Miss Josie Hale Bush.

of Bay Center, Washington, a daughter of the Hon. A. S. and Mrs. Ellen (Knight) Bush. The father, a veteran of the Civil war, was a pioneer of Pacific county, Washington, and one of the makers of that part of the country in which he lived. He was honored by his fellow citizens with election to the office of county judge and also served satisfactorily in the legislature of that state for three consecutive terms. Mrs. McLaughlin was for several years a teacher and for the last two years, prior to her marriage, served as superintendent of schools of Pacific county. On February 9, 1909, Mrs. McLaughlin and infant son, Ara Bush McLaughlin, passed away. In the short time here spent in her new home she had made many friends, all of whom loved her for her noble character.

Mr. McLaughlin is well known in various connections. He has been a member of the Oregon Historical Society since 1897 and himself has been a resident of the state for thirty-five years, witnessing much of its growth and development. He is the president of the Merchants Protective Association of Eugene and is deeply interested in everything pertaining to the welfare and improvement of the city. Fraternally he is connected with Spencer Butte Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F.; Wima-whala Encampment, No. 6; and Canton Hovey, No. 4, having thus taken the various degrees of Odd Fellowship. He is also helpfully interested in the moral progress of the community, holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is a steward, is one of the directors of the Young Men's Christian Association and is chairman of its committee on religious work. In a word, he takes an active interest in everything that pertains to the material, intellectual and moral development of Eugene and the state at large. In his business career he has been actuated by a spirit of progress that has led him forward, step by step, until he now occupies an enviable position in the commercial circles of the city.

JOSEPH ADAMS HILL, the present vice principal and actual head of the Hill Military Academy, was born in Portland, August 19, 1880. He is the eldest son of Dr. Joseph Wood Hill of Westport, Connecticut, Yale '78, former principal and lessee of the Bishop Scott Academy and present principal of the Hill Military Academy, and his wife, Jessie Katharine Adams, of Westport, Connecticut. His one surviving brother, Benjamin Wood Hill, is of the class of 1912, Sheffield Scientific School.

Mr. Hill received his preparatory school education at the Bishop Scott Academy. Upon his graduation in 1899 he entered the biological course at Sheffield Scientific School with intention of preparing for a medical career. During his senior year the sudden death of his mother completely changed his plans and he gave up the study of medicine for a commercial career. After his graduation in 1902 he entered the employ of the American Steel & Wire Company. He became a salesman in their Boston office and a year later was transferred to their electrical and wire rope department at Worcester, Massachusetts. In 1904 he accepted a position as salesman with the Lake Erie Nail & Supply Company of Cleveland, Ohio, and later was appointed traveling sales manager of the Clifton Nail & Supply Company of St. Louis, Missouri, and the Grant Nail & Supply Company of Boston, Massachusetts, as well as the Lake Erie Nail & Supply Company.

The Lewis & Clark Exposition in 1905 caused him to resign his position and to return to Portland, where he entered the service of the United States geological survey, who were then investigating the black sands of the Columbia river under the direction of David I. Day, the noted geologist, and assisted in the operation of the electrical furnace used in smelting the iron ores found in the black sands.

Subsequently he accepted a position with the Tualatin Mill & Lumber Company and then entered into the corporation of the East Side Slab Wood Company. He filled the position of secretary-treasurer of this corporation for a number of years and then sold out his interest and departed for the Nevada gold fields. Here he visited the camps of Goldfield, Tonopah, Wonder, Fairview, Goldbanks, Dixie and Hike and became actively engaged in mining. Later on he visited the camps of Florence, Dyke, Veryville, New Goldfield, Rebel Creek and Fortuna in the northern part of Nevada, and in 1908 returned to Portland in order to accept the position of vice principal of the Hill Military Academy. He soon assumed the actual management of the institution and his progressive spirit united with the broader experiences of his father was largely instrumental in making the academy one of the strongest and most thorough preparatory schools in the Pacific northwest, an accomplished fact proven in the well established reputation of the school and in the liberal patronage accorded it. Mr. Hill is an active republican and a member of the University Club and the Multnomah Amateur Athletic Club.

GEORGE W. TAMIESIE, M. D. With broad college training and hospital experience to qualify him for the practice of medicine, Dr. George W. Tamiesie entered upon the active work of his profession in Portland in 1902, and has since made continuous progress. He was born in Linn county, Iowa, May 9, 1875, his parents being John Batiste and Phillipine (Goffette) Tamiesie. As the name indicates, he is descended from an old French family, the original spelling of the family name being Tamiesier. A representative of this family has been immortalized in one of the works of Victor Hugo. The grandfather was one of the French colonists, who established the salt works in Onondaga county, New York, and in early life John Batiste Tamiesie, who was born in Syracuse, New York, became connected with the salt industry but afterward turned his attention to general agricultural pursuits. After leaving the Empire state when a young man, he removed westward to Iowa and after residing in that state for a considerable period of time came to Oregon in 1879. At Oswego he took up contracting but after seven years purchased a tract of land in Washington county, which he carefully and successfully cultivated to the time of his death, which occurred in 1910. His wife was of French parentage, although her birth occurred across the border in Belgium. By her marriage she became the mother of ten children, eight of whom are yet living: John Henry, a mechanical engineer of Portland; James P., who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Marie; Victor J., living in Oregon; Augustus E., who is first assistant physician in the insane asylum at Salem; George W., of this review; Katherine, the wife of William Reiling, of Hillsboro; and Joseph, a dentist, practicing in Portland.

Dr. Tamiesie was only four years of age when brought by his parents to Oregon and was a lad of eleven years when the family removed from Oswego to what has since been known as the old homestead farm near Hillsboro. In pursuing his education he attended the high school of the latter place and afterward took up the profession of teaching, which he followed in the public schools for five years. He regarded this work however, merely as an initial step to other professional labor for it was his desire to enter upon the study of medicine, and while teaching he began reading with that end in view. Later he entered the medical department of the University of Oregon and was graduated therefrom April 1, 1902. During his last year there, he was an interne in the county hospital. Since his graduation he has practiced at his present location, maintaining an office at 519½ Williams avenue in Portland. Success has attended him from the outset and his practice has gradually grown as his worth and ability have become recognized. The elemental strength of his character was shown in the fact that he provided for his own education and his industry and ambition enabled him to pursue his college course and qualify for his chosen life work. He is a lover of his profession, deeply interested in its scientific and humanitarian phases. He has an office splendidly equipped with modern instruments and appliances and he puts forth every effort to make his labors effective in restoring health and checking the ravages of disease. Three of the seven sons of his father's family adopted the profession of medicine and a fourth became a dentist and has an office adjoining that of our subject. The record made by these brothers is commendable, for all hold to high professional ideals.

In 1902 Dr. Tamiesie was married to Miss Theresa Reiling, a daughter of Martin Reiling, who came to Oregon in 1876 and is now living at Roy, this state. Dr. and Mrs. Tamiesie have two children, Sylvester Lawrence and Lenore Beatrice. The parents are members of the Roman Catholic church and are well known socially. He is a gentleman of cordial and genial manner, sympathetic, courteous and kindly, and all who know him speak of him in terms of admiration and high regard. He is devoted to his family and his profession and stands as a high type of American manhood and chivalry.

ORVIL DODGE was born at Gerard, Crawford county, Pennsylvania, January 5, 1839, and now resides at Myrtle Point, Coos county Oregon. His father's name was Norman Dodge, who was born at Oneida county, New York, in 1810, and was married to Deborah Press, of Gowanda, that state in 1835.

When the subject of this sketch was two years old his parents moved to Loraine county, Ohio, where the mother died in 1843. When the boy was eleven years old he was sent to Cattaraugus county, New York, where he was placed in school. When he was thirteen years old he was sent to the high school at LaGrange, Indiana, by an uncle. In 1857 he drifted to DeKalb county, Illinois, and in the following year he was married to Alice Walrod at Sycamore, Illinois. In 1860 he with his wife and child, named Lydia Jane, crossed the plains, arriving in California in October of that year. He soon engaged in the sawmill industry on Antelope creek, twenty-five miles from the Sacramento river. After three months of successful milling, the Indians crept down in the night time and set fire to the mill, completely destroying the same with a large amount of lumber, leaving him penniless. In September, 1861, he moved to Jackson county, Oregon, and after mining in that vicinity a short time he answered the call of his county and enlisted in the First Oregon Cavalry on the 27th of December, in that year at Camp Baker. In March, 1862, Norman Ovando was born to him, thus making two issues by his first marriage. After serving thirteen months against the hostile Indians he was discharged on account of injury received at or near Fort Walla Walla when in pursuit of the Indians. While in the service he acted as hospital steward most of the time. After leaving the army he took up the occupation of photography, and traveled quite extensively, visiting new mining camps in eastern and southern Oregon, but finally in 1866, settled in Coos county. Here he was again married, his second union being with Miss Louisa A. Schroeder, in April, 1867. There are six children of that marriage, namely: Henry Orvil Augustus, Dora Belle, Edgar Allen, Alta Estella, Daisy Dell and Norman Orvil.

Mr. Dodge resided at Coos Bay four years, being engaged in the drug and general merchandise business, but in 1871 moved to the Coquille valley, forty miles southeast of Coos Bay, and has since lived at or near Myrtle Point, Oregon, except when serving as receiver of public moneys in the general land office, at Washington, D. C., from 1899 to February 1903, when he resigned. He served as United States commissioner at Myrtle Point, Oregon, for a period of twelve years. During his residence in Coos county, he established and published two newspapers, namely: The West Oregonian and the Coquilla Valley Sentinel, the latter being the official paper of Coos county. In 1898 he compiled and published the history of Coos and Curry counties, which was endorsed by the Pioneer Association. He is now engaged in mining, being secretary and manager of the Salmon Mountain Coarse Gold Mining Company.

Mr. Dodge is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church at Myrtle Point, Oregon.

He was initiated into Washington Centennial Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., March 25, 1901, passed May 9, 1901 raised June 19, 1901, and is a member of LaFayette Chapter, Orient Commandery No. 5, K. T. and Almas Temple, all of Washington, D. C.

JOHN ANDREW BUCHANAN has been engaged in the general practice of law in Roseburg since 1898 and is meeting with a success which is the natural result of his ability, training and efficiency. In association with Ora H. Porter he has offices in the Perkins building and has built up in fourteen years a gratifying and still increasing clientele. He was born in Drakesville, Iowa, October 2, 1863, a son of Amos and Luvinia (Jones) Buchanan. He came to Oregon with his parents in 1874 and lived for one year in Monmouth, after which the family removed to Moscow, Idaho.

There John A. Buchanan lived upon a ranch and attended the rural schools until 1884, when he returned to Oregon and entered the Oregon State Normal School at Monmouth, graduating from that institution in 1887. After this he taught school for ten years, holding the position of principal in the public schools at Amity, North Yamhill, McMinnville and Dallas. While engaged in that line of occupation he studied law under O. H. Irvine, of McMinnville, and was admitted to the bar in 1896. In 1898 he removed to Roseburg and has secured a steadily increasing practice since that time. He is a strong and able practitioner, well versed in the many details of his profession and with the ability to make his knowledge effective. His practice has grown continuously and during the fourteen years of his residence in Roseburg he has been identified with many important legal cases, in all of which he served his clients ably and zealously and with constant consideration for their interests.

On January 16, 1901, Mr. Buchanan was united in marriage to Mrs. Madge (Bond) Ragsdale, a daughter of P. J. and Mary (McClain) Bond, who came from Missouri about 1892 and settled in Roseburg, where for some time the father was prominent in the jewelry business. He is now, however, living retired. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan have two children: Maurine, who was born December 20, 1903, and Louise, born August 4, 1906.

Mr. Buchanan is one of the most prominent and important figures in local politics and is serving as a member of the lower house of the state assembly. To this office he was elected in 1908 from the sixth district, which comprises Jackson and Douglas counties. He served for two years with efficiency and ability, was reelected in 1910 and still continues to serve. He is interested in educational matters and for eight years has been a member of the Roseburg board. Fraternally he belongs to Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F.; Woodmen of the World and the United Artisans and is prominent in the Masonic order, holding membership in Laurel Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M. For the past nine years he has been an active member of the Oregon National Guards and is first lieutenant in the Fourth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, at Roseburg. He is president of the Douglas Creditors Association. Mr. Buchanan is one of the successful lawyers of Roseburg and has gained substantial success by reason of his energy and ability. The zeal with which he has devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard which he manifests for the interests of his clients and his assiduous attention to the details of his cases have brought him a large practice and made him very successful in its conduct.

CYRUS EDWIN HOSKINS. Probably no one citizen of Oregon contributed more largely to promoting the development of the fruit industry in the state than the late Cyrus Edwin Hoskins, who was not only a business man of rare judgment and sagacity, but a horticulturist of far more than local reputation. His most notable contribution to the science of horticulture was unquestionably the cherry that bears his name, but in all probability he will be longer remembered as the man who shipped the first consignment of dried prunes from Oregon.

He was the eldest son born of the marriage of Joseph and Sarah Ann (Hodson) Hoskins, his birth occurring in the vicinity of Vienna, Clinton county, Ohio, on the 3d of July, 1842. His entire life was spent on a farm, his youthful energies being early directed along agricultural lines, the duties of which increased as his strength developed with the passing years. He pursued his education in the district schools in the vicinity of his home, the standard of which was about in common with those prevailing at that period. Being of a studious nature, however, he keenly observed what was going on in the great world of nature about him, where he picked up many valuable lessons not taught in school rooms nor to be found in text-books, that later proved invaluable to him. He laid a good foundation by his thorough mastery of the fundamentals, that he supplemented all through life by careful and wide reading on general subjects, and was always considered to be a well informed man whose opinion on all current topics was well worthy of expression. His schooling was terminated by the breaking out of the Civil war, and the patriotism and love of country that were always two of his most pronounced characteristics were then manifested by his laying aside his text books in order to take up the musket. He enlisted during the very early days of the conflict and remained at the front until the surrender at Appomattox. During that period he saw much active service, participating in a number of notable battles, but was never wounded.

Soon after receiving his discharge he was married and immediately following he and his bride located on a farm, in Rush county, Indiana, which he operated until 1877. He had always been desirous of coming to the west and in the later year together with his wife and family he came to Oregon. Upon his arrival here he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land in Yamhill county, at what is now known as Springbrook, near Newberg, and here he spent the remainder of his life. Mr. Hoskins was a progressive man, but not a theorist, being thoroughly practical in all of his methods, and he readily realized that conditions in this section of the country were very different from those which he had been accustomed to encounter in farming in the middle states. He made a careful study of his soil, its needs and requirements, as well as the climatic conditions, and governed his undertakings accordingly. He experimented extensively, particularly with fruits, early recognizing that this in time was going to become one of the greatest fruit sections not only in the United States but in the world. In his orchard was to be found an almost unlimited variety of cherry trees, that he grafted and experimented with until he obtained the cherry that is now bearing his name. The introduction of this fruit established his reputation as a horticulturist and he soon became recognized not only in this immediate locality but throughout the northwest as one of the leading fruit growers. Later he increased the scope of his activities by adding prunes and apples and other varieties of fruit to his orchard. He introduced the prune industry in the state, placing upon the market the first car load of Oregon dried prunes. He applied himself painstakingly and intelligently to whatever he undertook, and was always striving to improve the standard of each and all of his products. That his efforts were rewarded by success is manifested by the fact that his dried prunes received the first prize at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893, while the Hoskin cherry was awarded the silver cup at Salem, Oregon. He became one of the widely known and affluent orchardists of the state, and his death on the 15th of August, 1908, meant a loss not only to the community, where he was so well known and highly regarded, but to the state at large. He had always led an active life, the dominant interests of which had been of a nature to help not only himself but all who were engaged in similar enterprises, and he fulfilled his mission by his many contributions to the vocation he followed.

On the 30th of November, 1863, Mr. Hoskins was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Hadley, a daughter of Thomas and Lucinda Hadley, natives of Indiana, in which state Mrs. Hoskins was also born and reared. Mr. and Mrs. Hadley removed to Oregon in 1882, and here they both passed away. They were the parents of nine children. Unto

CYRUS E. HOSKINS AND FAMILY

Mr. and Mrs. Hoskins there were born two daughters: Ellis M., who died at the age of two years; and Joyce, the wife of E. Lemon, who passed away at her home in Jackson county, Oregon, on the 22d of December, 1903. Mrs. Hoskins still lives on the ranch where she has resided for so many years at Springbrook, but since the death of her husband she has sold all but fifty acres of her place. The land she has retained is practically all planted in cherry and prune trees, that annually net her a handsome income. This ranch is one of the show places of Yamhill county, not only because of what its former owner achieved, but owing to its many attractive features and the fact that it is supplied with every convenience needed in the equipment of a commercial orchard, that is operated in accordance with modern ideas.

Faternally Mr. Hoskins was identified with the Masonic order, having been initiated in Carthage Lodge, No. 169, of the grand jurisdiction of Indiana in 1867, and at the time of his death he was past master of Newberg Lodge, No. 104. In early life he voted the republican ticket, but during his latter years he gave his support to the prohibition party. He took much interest in all public affairs, but never actively participated in political matters, preferring to concentrate his powers upon the development and promotion of the fruit culture, through which he contributed his full quota as a citizen toward the advancement of his community. He was of strong personality, possessing high standards, that governed all of his relations in life, sound principles and the determination of purpose, that never accepted defeat. His ideas of right and wrong were strongly marked, yet he was charitable in his criticisms and lenient in his judgments, never condemning any unheard. He was a man who would have been an acquisition to any community; his irreproachable character not less than his achievements giving him a commanding position, and compelling his recognition as one destined to lead in anything he undertook.

JOSEPH ANDREW HETTINGER makes his home in Bonanza and in former years was closely identified with business interests of the town. His investments are now largely represented by his ranch interests, having one hundred and twenty acres of land devoted to the raising of potatoes and other vegetables. He was born in Warren county, Iowa, October 14, 1872, and is a son of Jacob and Margaret (Ripplebarger) Hettinger, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Germany. They were married in Iowa, in which state they were pioneer settlers, and there they remained until called to their final rest, the father devoting his time and energies to the occupation of farming.

Joseph A. Hettinger, who was the sixth in a family of seven children, continued a resident of Iowa throughout the period of his boyhood and youth, acquired his education in the schools there and in 1897, when twenty-five years of age, came to the northwest. He spent two years in Curry county and since then has lived in Klamath county. Throughout his life he has owned and operated a ranch and at one time was proprietor of a saloon, a store and meat market at Bonanza, where he continued in business for eight years. He was the owner of the best building in the town and the best hall in the county, but the building was destroyed by fire in 1910. Since then he has not resumed business along that line, but has important and profitable ranch interests, owning one hundred and twenty acres of land in the Yonna valley, where he raises potatoes and vegetables. In 1911 his potato crop from twenty-three acres was twenty-three hundred sacks. In the year 1912 he has forty acres planted to potatoes and he also has a large acreage given to the cultivation of other vegetables. His business in this direction is proving profitable. He owns a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres near Bly and he also has town property in Bonanza.

Mr. Hettinger is a republican in politics but office holding has little or no attraction for him, as he prefers to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs and the interests of his home. He was married June 21, 1908, to Miss Maude Bechdolt, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Fred C. Bechdolt.

DR. WALTER S. JOHNSON is engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery at Bonanza and is also connected with commercial interests as one of the partners of the Bonanza Drug Company. He was born in Monroe county, Tennessee, April 20, 1862, and is a son of Jacob K. and Susan Delilah (Swaggerty) Johnson, who were natives of eastern Tennessee, the former born in Knox county and the latter in Cooke county. Their entire lives were spent in that state. He was a son of Jeremiah Johnson, who spent the greater part of his life in Tennessee. Mrs. Johnson's father owned a plantation which embraced several thousand acres. She had several brothers who served as soldiers of the Confederate army and one was a soldier of the Mexican war. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Johnson were twelve children, seven of whom reached adult age and are now living.

Dr. Johnson's people belonged to the aristocracy of the south and his youth was spent on one of the old-time plantations, with the usual experiences and environment of such a life. After mastering the elementary branches of learning in the country schools he attended Carson College, at Jefferson City, Tennessee, an old Baptist institution now known as the Carson and Newman College. The building in which school convened was practically shot to pieces during the Civil war. After laying the foundation for later success in a good literary education Dr. Johnson entered the University of Louisville as a student in the medical department and won his degree by graduation from that institution with the class of 1884. He practiced for a few months in the south and then came to the northwest, spending two years in the Territory of Washington. On the expiration of that period he made his way to the Willamette valley of Oregon and for a year was located at Lake View. He afterward followed his profession in Polk county until 1895, and later spent a year in Indian service in Oklahoma. He was then transferred to the Chemawa Indian school near Salem, where he remained for a year, and later spent four years on the Klamath reservation. In 1901 he came to Bonanza to engage in general practice, and in 1911 he took the state board examination for pharmacist and opened a drug store in connection with Dr. E. D. Hitchcock, under the name of the Bonanza Drug Company. Both continue in the active practice of medicine as well as conduct the store which is now liberally patronized. In addition Dr. Johnson owns a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres and a timber tract of equal size.

In 1885 occurred the marriage of Dr. Johnson and Miss Hannah H. Hubbard, who was born near Dallas, Polk county, Oregon, a daughter of Goalman and Nancy J. Hubbard, both of whom were well known pioneer settlers of this city. The mother was born in Pike county, Missouri, and the father was born in Kentucky, March 24, 1830, and in 1836 he removed to Illinois with his parents. In 1847 he started across the plains with ox teams for Oregon and in 1849 he went to California, attracted by the discovery of gold in that state. He did not meet with the success he anticipated, however, in searching for the precious metal, and the following year he returned to Oregon, after which he was engaged in farming near Dallas until 1890. He then went to Whitman county, Washington, and located on the farm where his death occurred in 1909, but prior to that time he saw active service in the Cayuse war as captain of a company raised in the vicinity of his home in the Willamette valley. He was married, September 9, 1858, to Miss Nancy Smith. She was four years of age when, in 1845, she was brought across the plains by her parents, who made the journey with ox teams. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard had ten sons and five daughters, and with one exception all are yet living. Mrs. Johnson had an uncle, Dick Smith, who came to Oregon in 1836 over the Santa Fe trail. Mrs. Johnson was the fifth in her father's family of fifteen children.

Both Dr. Johnson and his wife are members of the Baptist church, in which he is serving as deacon, and he is also prominent in the local Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges. His wife is identified with the ladies auxiliaries of both organizations, her membership in the Eastern Star being in Chadwick Chapter at Salem. In Masonry Dr. Johnson has attained the Royal Arch degree. He belongs to the Grange, of which he was one of the organizers, and for a time served as overseer. He also belongs to the Commercial Club and his interests are wide and varied but his attention chiefly centers upon his professional duties and he keeps in close touch with the advance work of the profession through his membership in the Southern Oregon Medical Society, the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

JOHN M. A. LAUE. The town of Soldin, Germany, was the birthplace of John M. A. Laue and his natal day was March 5, 1862. His father, Adolph G. Laue, also a native of Soldin, was a miller by trade and in 1862 came to America with his family, locating at Saginaw, Michigan, where he engaged in milling until his death in December, 1877, when fifty-four years of age. His wife, Henrietta Buchholz, died in 1906 at the age of eighty-two years. In their family were nine children, of whom John M. A. Laue was the eighth in order of birth. He and one brother and sister came west but the brother, Adolph G. Laue, Jr., died here in 1903. The sister, Mrs. Anna Strohecker, is a resident of Portland.

John M. A. Laue pursued his education at Saginaw, Michigan, but left school in 1876, at the age of fourteen years, and went to Passaic, New Jersey, where he worked in a drug store. Entering the New York College of Pharmacy, he was graduated therefrom in 1881, at the age of nineteen years, being one of the youngest to complete the course in those days. He moved westward in the fall of 1883, becoming a resident of Denver, Colorado, and in the spring of 1884 he came to Portland, where he has since resided. He was employed as a drug clerk in this city until 1886, when laudable ambition prompted him to engage in business on his own account and he established a drug store which he has since conducted, having now one of the oldest established business enterprises of this character in the city. He was the first in Portland to give instruction in pharmacy and many years ago, when the Willamette University established a department of Pharmacy, he became one of the instructors therein. However, this was soon discontinued and pharmacy was not taught here again until September, 1903, when he started quiz classes, preparing drug clerks to pass the examinations of the state board of pharmacy, for which task he was well qualified because of twenty years' connection with that board. Shortly after other schools of pharmacy were established in Portland but his classes still continue and are well extended. He recognized the fact that many drug clerks of long and practical experience sometimes failed to pass the required board examination because they do not know how to study or what course to pursue. Mr. Laue's connection with the Oregon board of pharmacy enabled him to judge where candidates are the weakest and so in his classes he has made it his purpose to teach young men how to answer questions in a straightforward, businesslike manner, without confusion or embarrassment. His course of study is comprehensive, including a knowledge of those branches of science necessary in the conduct of a drug business as well as mercantile methods of store management and sales. Mr. Laue has taken an active interest in everything in the state pertaining to pharmacy and to upholding the high standard that he believes should prevail among pharmacists and for many years he has been a member of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical Association, which he has served as president. He has done much for the upbuilding of this association and in the year 1909 offered a prize of fifty dollars to the person who brought in the largest number of members to the association, while in the present year he is offering a prize of twenty-five dollars to the one who brings the largest number of clerks as members of the association, his object being to stimulate an interest in the business and the association. To further promote the thorough and efficient study of pharmacy he has donated to the department of pharmacy of the Oregon Agricultural College an annual prize of fifty dollars, known as the Laue prize, to be given to the student receiving the highest class mark in pharmacy. Mr. Laue has served for four terms, covering nearly twenty years, on the Oregon board of pharmacy and has held all of its offices.

On the 6th of September, 1887, Mr. Laue was married at Ilwaco, Washington, to Miss Nora A. Tapley, a daughter of J. J. Tapley, of Claybank, Michigan. They had two children: Otto K., twenty-two years of age, a student in the department of pharmacy in the Oregon Agricultural College; and Nora May, who died September 14, 1908, at the age of eighteen years. The family residence is at 766 Hancock street, Irvington.

Mr. Laue and his family belong to the Taylor Street Methodist Episcopal church, in which he takes an active and helpful interest. He is also a member of Willamette Lodge, No. 2, A. F. & A. M., and of United Artisans, the Woodmen of the World and other fraternities. His political support is given the republican party and he belongs to the Commercial Club and the Chamber of Commerce, preferring that his activities in behalf of the city and its upbuilding should be put forth in connection with those organizations rather than in the field of politics. His business activity has ever balanced up with the principles of truth and honor and in all of his work he has never sacrificed the high standards which he has set up for himself.

JAMES ANDREW HATCHER, SR. The usefulness and value of the life of James Andrew Hatcher is readily discernible in the attractive appearance of the farm of twenty-five acres which in its present highly developed state gives little hint of its raw and unimproved condition at the time when Mr. Hatcher became its owner. He has cleared every square foot of the soil, has developed the land along modern lines and now has one of the finest orchard farms in Coos county. He was born in 1862, in Harrison county, Iowa, and is a son of John R. and Emily J. (Smith) Hatcher. The father was a native of Indiana and died in Coos county in 1887. The mother was born in Tennessee and passed away in Kansas on January 9, 1877. They were the parents of nine children: William A., of Arago, Oregon; Delaney, of Curry county, this state; Simon K., whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; James A., of this review; Mybulda C., who married James A. Cotton, of Gravelford, Oregon; Robert O., of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Perry C., who is also a resident of Myrtle Point; Rebecca L., who married Eli Clayton, of Gravelford; and Perry who died in infancy.

James A. Hatcher remained at home until he was seventeen years of age and at that time started to gain his own livelihood. He worked for wages upon neighboring farms and was identified with the lumber business as an employe in the logging camps of Oregon for three years. He spent one year as a stage driver and after his marriage in 1883 worked in the interest of his father-in-law for a short time. In September, 1885, he moved on a portion of the old homestead. His father presented him with this tract of land, then in a raw and unimproved condition. It was covered with timber and entirely uncultivated. Mr. Hatcher applied himself earnestly to its development, cleared the trees, broke the soil and soon made his property one of the attractive farms in the neighborhood. He has twenty-five acres under cultivation and is the owner of one of the largest orchards in the county. He has eight hundred Grovenstein apple trees which annually yield a large harvest. He understands their care and cultivation and his orchard yields a valuable addition to his income. He has the remaining acres of his farm planted to grains and does farming along all lines.

Mr. Hatcher was married on October 11, 1883, to Miss Alice Darnielle, a native of Jackson county, Oregon, and a daughter of Oscar and Ellen (Conner) Darnielle, the mother a native of Oregon and the father of Indiana. Mrs. Hatcher's father came to Oregon when he was sixteen years of age, making the journey across the plains with ox teams. He became the father of twelve children: Sarab, the wife of John Abbott, of California; Mrs. Hatcher; Josephine, who married Charles Love, of Oregon; Christina, now Mrs. Ditmar, of Lane county, Oregon; Melvina, the widow of Joseph Haskins, of Medford, Oregon; Mary who married Samuel Johnson, of California; Jasper, who also resides in that state; Avil, of Oregon; Samantha, who resides in Nevada; Isaac, who makes his home in California; and two children who are deceased. Mrs. Hatcher is attractive and hospitable and well known in religious circles as a devout member of the Dunkard church. Mr. and Mrs. Hatcher are the parents of the following children: Everett, born August 10, 1884, head sawyer of the Coquille Valley Mill Company, who is married and has one child, Violet Vivian; Laura May, deceased; Clara Dell, the wife of E. W. Gregg, a building contractor of Coquille, Oregon, by whom she has one child, James Lloyd; James A., Jr., of Coquille, Oregon, who is married and has one son, James S.; Ada Pearl, who married William Arthur Alexander, of Roseburg; Millie L., at home; Vernie E., born March 27, 1898; Zelma Alice and Carl Adolphus, who attend school; and Lena L., an infant. In politics Mr. Hatcher is a democrat and has served his fellow citizens as a member of the school board for eight years. He is interested in education and eager to promote its expansion but aside from this phase of public life has never been a political office seeker. He belongs to the Dunkard church. He is entirely responsible for his own success and has a tangible result to show for his intelligent agricultural methods. He has gained that prominence and prosperity which are the direct result of constructive labor.

HENRY NICE, who is living retired at Waldport, having accumulated a competency by many years of energetic and well directed application, is a native of St. John, New Brunswick, born February 10, 1837. He comes of a family of fishermen on the paternal side and has spent many years in that vocation. The grandfather was the most prosperous fisherman of his time in New Brunswick and shipped extensively to the West Indies. Cornelius Nice, father of our subject, was a native of New Brunswick and owned a number of vessels, being engaged in the fishing business during his entire active life. He and his father were staunch loyalists. The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Ann Betts. She was a native of New Brunswick and her father was a captain in the English army against the Colonies during the Revolutionary war. Her grandfather, Dr. Isor Betts, was a Mason of high degree in New York city and was known to be friendly to the British cause. He was taken prisoner but was released by order of General Washington and took refuge in New Brunswick. He was the owner of large land grants in Nova Scotia. The great-grandfather was one of the early settlers of Nova Scotia and his descendants were all loyal to Great Britain at the time of the war for independence.

At the age of eighteen Henry Nice began to learn the shipbuilding trade which he followed for three years, having previously possessed advantages of attendance in the grammar schools of New Brunswick. After becoming well acquainted with his trade he built a boat of his own and entered the fishing business in which he continued for a number of years. In 1869 he migrated to the Pacific coast and worked at his trade as shipbuilder in San Francisco for ten months. He then came north to Portland and went down the Columbia river to Oak Point where he associated with Thomas Hogkins in building a fishing trap. The fish were very plentiful and for six weeks they took out as many as one thousand salmon a day. In 1873 he went to Rainier and was assisted by his cousin, Nehemiah Nice, in building a new sort of fishing trap which proved very successful, as they took out twelve to fifteen hundred salmon a day. The fish were so plentiful that prices were low and they received only a moderate recompense for their labor. After spending six years on the Columbia river Mr. Nice, in 1876, went to the Fraser river, in British Columbia, and entered into partnership with Augustus Wright in the management of the King cannery. He sold out at the close of a year and spent the next two years fishing on the Nass river, in British Columbia. After a year on Rogue river, Oregon, he was appointed superintendent of jettys at Yaquina bay, a position which he occupied to the satisfaction of the officials at Washington for six years. In 1888 he took up his residence at Alsea bay where there was at that time a small settlement with a store and a postoffice. Here he built a cannery which he operated successfully for sixteen years, the business growing from very small dimensions until it yielded a large annual income. He was one of the best informed men in the northwest as to salmon fishing and also as to all matters pertaining to the preparation of fish for the market. While engaged with his cannery he also invested in land, acquiring twenty-five hundred acres around the bay. In 1904 he disposed of his canning interests and retired. He has also sold most of the land but still owns about four hundred acres and is a large holder of real estate at Newport.

In 1892 Mr. Nice was married to Miss Jessie Livingston Alexander, who was born in London, England, and came to America with her parents when she was six years old. They have two children: Jessie L., who is now eighteen years of age and is living at home; and Henrietta, aged nine years. Politically Mr. Nice has voted the republican ticket ever since he became a citizen of the United States. He has never sought public office as his interest has been mainly centered on his business affairs. His religious belief is indicated by membership in the Episcopal church. He has for many years been identified with the Masonic order and is a member of both the York and Scottish Rites and also of the Shrine at Portland. He belongs to the Elks lodge at Albany. Having early learned the great lesson of self-reliance and gained confidence in his ability to win an honorable name among his fellow-men, he bravely set forth from the land of his birth and his ambition is now realized. He ranks among the leaders in the section in which he makes his home.

WEBSTER LOCKWOOD KINCAID, only child of Harrison R. and Augusta A. Kincaid, was born September 16, 1883, in the house built by his father more than fifty years ago on a six acre tract owned by him since 1854, then at the south end of Olive street, now almost in the center of Eugene.

At the age of nine years this boy, who was passionately fond of outdoor exercise and did not like the routine and confinement of the school room, gained considerable notoriety for extraordinary physical endurance by riding a bicycle from Salem to Wilhoit Springs and return, on one of the warmest days in the summer, at a speed that caused some of the men in the party to become completely exhausted.

At the age of about ten years, while at Newport, Oregon, with his parents, who frequently took him to the coast there or to the beach in Washington north of the mouth of the Columbia river, he wrote an account of a "Rough Sea Voyage," which was published in some of the papers and caused much amusement and favorable comments on account of the spelling and the quaint description of sea-sickness of several prominent people whose names were mentioned. A steamer lying in the harbor took a party of excursionists out on the ocean to fish. The boy went along and described the peculiar sayings and doing of the passengers in a style that made Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad" dull and dreary reading by comparison.

At the age of eleven years in company with his parents he visited San Francisco and other principal cities in California.

When about twelve years old in company with his parents he went on an excursion to the state of Washington and British Columbia, and visited Tacoma, Seattle, Port Townsend, Victoria and other places along Puget Sound. He wrote an account of a "Trip to Victoria," which was published in several newspapers and caused much favorable comment as being a splendid description of the events and scenes witnessed. He received letters of commendation from distinguished men.

At the age of about thirteen years he accompanied his father while secretary of state when he went to Union in eastern Oregon along with Governor Lord and State Treasurer Metschan to select the site for a building on the six hundred and forty acres of land that had been purchased for a branch asylum. The purchase of the land was afterward declared unconstitutional by the supreme court and the building was not commenced on the site which they then selected. Under later laws land has been purchased near Pendleton and a branch asylum is being built there.

When about fourteen years old along with his parents he visited Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane, Helena, Livingston and Yellowstone National Park. At later dates he has visited the principal cities of California with his parents, and with his father visited the Puget Sound cities and went over the Canadian Pacific Railway east about five hundred miles to Banff, the Canadian National Park, passing nearly all the way through the most mountainous country and the wildest scenery on the face of the earth, and returning by rail to the Columbia and then down that river by steam-boat about one hundred miles through Arrow Head lakes to Nelson and thence by rail to Spokane, Walla Walla and Portland. He has traveled much in Oregon, California, Washington, Idaho, Montana and British Columbia and has at various times from early childhood visited many of the most interesting places on the Pacific coast, including the Klamath Falls section of southeastern Oregon.

He is a graduate of the Eugene high school and of the University of Oregon in the class of 1908. Since arriving at the age of manhood he has been unusually active and prominent in business affairs and is regarded by his numerous acquaintances all over the state as one of the brightest and most promising young men in Oregon. He is a valuable assistant and adviser of his father in all his purchases and sales of lands and in his plans to attract settlers and develop and increase the prosperity of Oregon to the extent that its climate and natural resources amply justify. In every effort to promote the public good he has taken an active and a leading part. He is a member of the Masonic order of the Thirty-second degree. Not only as the son of a pioneer family who have taken a prominent and valuable part in the settlement, upbuilding and development of the territory and state of Oregon from a wilderness to a splendid land of gardens, farms, orchards, villages and cities, he is, as a native Oregonian, on account of superior ability and honorable achievement entitled to special notice in the history of Oregon.

He was married at the residence of his father and mother, 85 East Ninth street, Eugene, Oregon, January 22, 1909, to Miss Dorothy Catherine Hills of Portland. She is a granddaughter of the late Cornelius Hills, one of the earliest and best known of the pioneers of Oregon. He was shipwrecked somewhere on the coast of southwestern Oregon, if we are not mistaken in the date, in 1847, and made his way in a famishing condition on foot, over logs and through thick underbrush, into the nearest settlement in the upper Willamette valley, which then consisted of Eugene Skinned where the city of Eugene now is, Elijah Bristow, and perhaps Felix Scott and John Diamond and one or two others south of Salem. Mr. Hills settled on the north bank of the Willamette river in the mountains a few miles east of Eugene, where he owned a large tract of land, raised a large family and resided until he passed away a few years ago.

To Webster L. Kincaid and wife a son was born, April 5, 1910. He was named for his grandfather Harrison Rettenhouse Kincaid, and is about two years old. A picture with his father, grandfather and great grandfather the latter then almost ninety-five years old and now almost ninety-six, was taken when he was just one year old. On account of his extreme activity and determination to get out of doors and stay out all the time, the boy bids fair to be a true representative of his pioneer ancestors who like the Arabs were at home on the plains, in the valleys, on the mountains or wherever they happened to be, without a house and with or without a tent.

DR. CHARLES A. MACRUM, one of the oldest and best known homeopathic physicians of Portland, devoting his attention to general practice, was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, December 28, 1861. He is the eldest of six children, all of whom are living, whose parents are I. A. and Westana (Grubbs) Macrum. The father, a native of Pennsylvania, came to Portland in 1871, spending three years in Oregon City, after which he located in Portland in 1874. He practiced his profession for about ten years as a member of the firm of Johnson, McCown & Macrum, one of the most prominent law firms of the city in its day. Then with others he organized the Merchants National Bank, of which he was the manager for ten years. He afterward resigned to become railroad commissioner, filling the office for six years. His death occurred in 1902, when he was sixty years of age. He was one of the best known men of the state, prominent and active in the development of Oregon, advancing many ideas the practical worth of which was proven in their adoption and utilization. His wife, who is still living in Portland at the age of sixty-nine years, was a daughter of William Grubbs, who came to this state from Pennsylvania in 1870.

Dr. Macrum was a lad of about ten years when the family arrived in Portland, and in the pursuit of his education he completed the high-school course with the class of 1879, when seventeen years of age. Five years later he took up the study of medicine and was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1889 with the M. D. degree. Returning to Portland, he has since followed his profession in this city as a general practitioner and is one of the oldest and best known homeopathic physicians here. He has always made his professional duties his first consideration, being most thorough and conscientious in the performance of the work that devolves upon him in this connection.

Dr. Macrum belongs to the Oregon State Homeopathic Society, the American Institute of Homeopathy, the Oregon State Medical Association, the Multnomah County Medical Society, the Portland Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is identified with the building of the new hospital now nearing completion and is well known in other professional connections. He has been assistant surgeon and surgeon of the First Regiment of the Oregon National Guard for about five years, having previously been a private of Company K for two years.

Dr. Macrum, moreover, is a prominent representative of what is developing into one of the most important lines of business of the state—the production of apples. He has one of the largest apple orchards in the Mosier district of the Hood River valley, owning an extensive farm adjoining the town of Mosier, and is a life member of the Oregon State Horticultural Society. He also belongs to the Mosier Fruit Growers Association, has taken a keen interest in horticulture for many years and has been active in the advancement of horticultural interests in this state, being one of the first to adopt and promote modern ideas in fruit-raising.

Dr. Macrum married Miss Stella D. Dorris, a daughter of George B. Dorris, a pioneer lawyer of Eugene, Oregon, and for the past sixteen years they have resided at the Portland Hotel. Dr. Macrum is well known in Masonic circles as a member of Willamette Lodge and of the Scottish Rite and his religious faith is evidenced by his membership in the First Congregational church. Prominent as is his position, it is but the merited outcome of his ability and skill resulting from close investigation and research and from reading and the correct application of his knowledge to the needs of those who come under his professional care. His courtesy, his engaging personality and his genuine worth assure him social prestige and Portland's most prominent citizens are glad to call him friend.

WALTER FRAZAR BURRELL has been recognized throughout the years of his manhood as a stalwart and enthusiastic supporter of every movement and project instituted for the benefit and upbuilding of the city of Portland. His business associations have brought him into active connection with its wholesale and manufacturing trade and at the same time he has been a factor in the agricultural progress of the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. His judgment is sound, his discrimination keen and penetrating. He seems to see from the circumference to the very center of things and so coordinates forces that unified and harmonious results are achieved and the utmost possible for the attainment of success seems to have been reached. His days have been unmarked by events of special importance, save such as come to those reared on the western frontier, in a district where a spirit of enterprise is rife and where nothing seems to deter successful accomplishment.

His father, Martin S. Burrell, was a man of conspicuous business ability, who came to Portland in the year 1855, and it was in this city that Walter F. Burrell, entered upon life's journey on the 13th of February, 1863. His education was acquired in the schools of Portland and Oberlin and when his school days were over he entered the business house of Knapp, Burrell & Company, of which his father was the head and applied himself to mastering the details of a business that included the handling of vehicles, agricultural implements and sawmill machinery, and was the largest of its kind in the northwest.

The trade grew to very extensive proportions, but the father's interest in the business was sold immediately after his death in 1885, and Walter F. Burrell, who was then but twenty-two years of age, took charge of the management and development of the other properties that were features of his father's estate and included large tracts of untilled land in Whitman county, Washington, all of which the son brought under cultivation in the production of splendid crops. While he has given much attention to raising wheat and other crops of grain, Mr. Burrell has also engaged in the extensive growing of apples and pears, not only in Oregon but also in the states of Washington and Idaho.

In 1895 Mr. Burrell was married to Miss Constance Montgomery, a daughter of James B. Montgomery, a prominent citizen of Portland, and they are now the parents of five children: Alden Frazar, Louise, Douglas Montgomery, Robert Montgomery and Virginia. Mr. Burrell is a republican in his political belief. He belongs to the Arlington, Commercial and Multnomah Clubs, and served under Mayor H. S. Rowe on the board of public works of the city of Portland, but has had no ambition for office, preferring to devote his efforts to furthering the interests of Portland through its commercial bodies, and also to managing the extensive business interests belonging to himself and associates, in the control of which he displays marked ability and energy, regarding no detail as too unimportant to receive his attention and at the same time controlling the larger factors in his interests with notable assurance and power.

HON. JOSEPH SIMON. With post-graduate experience in the school of politics, manifesting at all times a statesman's grasp of vital questions and issues of the day. Hon. Joseph Simon has so conducted the political interests entrusted to him that while his course has awakened the opposition of those who hold radically different political views, his work on the whole has accomplished tangible and beneficial results that receive wide commendation throughout the state.

Mr. Simon was born February 7, 1851, and was quite a small boy when he was brought to Portland, Oregon, by his father in 1857. The city schools afforded him his educational privileges, and in his twentieth year he became a law student in the office of John H. Mitchell and Joseph N. Dolph both of whom were subsequently elected United States senators for Oregon. For two years he closely applied himself to the mastery of Kent, Blackstone and other commentaries, and was then admitted to practice in the courts of the state. Appreciation of his personal worth and recognition of his developing ability, were manifest when J. N. Dolph, one of his former preceptors, invited him to become a member of the law firm he formed February 1, 1873. Accepting such invitation, he entered actively upon the practice of law and is still associated with the firm then formed, and with C. A. Dolph, who entered the firm at the same time Mr. Simon did and who has since become the senior partner of the firm which is styled Dolph, Mallory, Simon & Gearin. As a lawyer Mr. Simon has ever been careful and systematic in the preparation of his cases, reviewing all the evidences bearing upon the cause and correctly applying the principles of law to the points in litigation. He is today widely recognized as one of Portland's able lawyers and is as well one of the foremost republican leaders of the state.

Interested from early manhood in the political questions and issues which have engaged the attention of the country, Mr. Simon was first called to office when elected a member of the city council in 1877. He filled that position until 1880, in which year higher political honors were conferred upon him in his election to the state senate. He was continued a member of the upper house of the general assembly for twelve years by reason of two successive reelections, and when the legislature convened in January, 1889, he was chosen president of the senate and in 1891 was again elected as its presiding officer. He retired in 1892, but in 1894 was again elected to represent Multnomah county in the state senate for another four years' term and when the legislature convened on the 14th of January, 1895, he was once more elected president of the senate and again in 1897. At the June election in 1898, Mr. Simon was elected state senator from Multnomah county for the fifth time—1898 until 1902. On the 26th of September, 1898, the governor convened the general assembly in special session, and Mr. Simon again was honored by election to the presidency of the Oregon senate. His service as state senator embraced five elections, each for a four years' term, and during that period, he was five times elected president of the senate. His record is that of one of the most fair and impartial presiding officers that has ever conducted the affairs of the upper house, and he enjoyed in fullest measure the esteem and personal regard of his political opponents as well as his political adherents. It was during the special session on the 8th of October, 1898, that Mr. Simon was chosen United States senator for a term of six years, beginning March 4, 1897, the legislature of 1897 having failed to elect a senator, and the state having been without one senator for over a year. At the joint session at which he was elected, he received the unanimous support of the sixty-six republican members of his party.

To few men is political leadership so long accorded as to Hon. Joseph Simon. To occupy high office for any length of time is to invite attack and criticism of those holding opposing views, and yet through the course of his public service Mr. Simon has held to the policy which he has marked out—a policy dictated by his judgment, his public spirit and his patriotism. His aid is recognized as a tangible and effective force in promoting republican successes. He was chairman of the republican state central committee during the biennial campaign of 1880, 1884, 1886, and in 1892 was chosen a delegate to the republican national convention held at Minneapolis in June of that year, on which occasion he gave his support to William McKinley instead of to Benjamin Harrison, who ultimately received the nomination. He was also a delegate to the republican national convention at Philadelphia in 1902. During the five sessions of the Oregon legislature of which he was president of the senate he in numerous ways distinguished himself for dispatch of business and ability to preserve order and untangle difficult questions of parliamentary dispute.

Mr. Simon is one of the best known representatives of Masonry in Oregon. He is past master of his lodge and past high priest of his chapter, and he has attained to the highest rank, the thirty-third degree of the A. & A. S. R. (honorary). He has come to be known as a man loyal to any terms made or to his pledged word, and in manner is ever courteous and obliging, recognizing his obligations to others and meeting them in full measure. He has also served one term as mayor of Portland, a fact which indicates his popularity and the confidence reposed in him in his home city, where he is best known. He gave to Portland a public-spirited and businesslike administration, marked by needed reforms and improvements, progressiveness and conservatism being well balanced forces in his direction of municipal affairs.

WILLIAM ADDISON HOWE, who has resided in Oregon and Yamhill county for almost three decades, is one of the leading and most prominent citizens of Carlton, owning and conducting the largest general mercantile establishment in the town. He is likewise the president of the Carlton State & Savings Bank and the chief executive officer of the Valley Real Estate Company of Carlton and has extensive property holdings. His birth occurred in Longwood, Massachusetts, on the 10th of October, 1859, his parents being S. H. and Lucinda (Savage) Howe, both of English ancestry. They are now deceased, passing away in the old Bay state. The great-grandparents of our subject were natives of England and emigrated to America during the period of the Revolutionary war.

William Addison Howe obtained his education in the schools of his native state and is a graduate of Harvard University. In 1882 he removed to New York and was there engaged in business for one year. On the expiration of that period he made his way to Oregon and has remained a resident of Yamhill county continuously since. Purchasing a tract of land, he devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits for eight years and then disposed of his property and erected the largest general mercantile store in Carlton, which he has since conducted with excellent success. He is also a prominent factor in financial circles as the president of the Carlton State & Savings Bank, being one of the incorporators of that institution in 1910. Prior to the organization of that bank he had established and conducted a private banking concern. Mr. Howe likewise incorporated and is now the president of the Valley Real Estate Company of Carlton, Oregon, which has extensive holdings in Carlton and vicinity. He also owns two farms in Yamhill county, embracing three hundred and fifty acres each, both tracts being well improved and under a high state of cultivation. His landed holdings likewise include various pieces of city property at Dawson, Yukon territory. Two years ago he sold the large sawmill which he had incorporated and operated and which still has a daily capacity of three hundred thousand feet, its operations extending over a radius of many miles. His connection with any undertaking insures a prosperous outcome of the same, for it is in his nature to carry forward to successful completion whatever he is associated with. He has earned for himself an enviable reputation as a careful man of business and in his dealings is known for his prompt and honorable methods, which have won him the deserved and unbounded confidence of his fellowmen.

In 1889 Mr. Howe was united in marriage to Miss A. H. Cunningham, a native of Milton, Massachusetts, in which state her parents passed away. She was one of a family of eleven children, nine of whom still survive. Our subject and his wife have three living children. Alice, who was born in 1890 and obtained her education in a private school of New York, is the wife of B. B. Wood, a landowner of Ontario, Canada. The latter is a son of Colonel C. E. S. Wood, of Portland. William L. C. Howe, whose natal year was 1891, is now attending Cornell University. Marian, born in 1898, is attending school at Portland, Oregon.

In politics Mr. Howe is a staunch republican, being convinced that the principles of that party are most conducive to good government. He has served for two terms as state senator and has also been honored with election to many other positions of public trust. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the United Artisans, while in more strictly social lines he is connected with the Arlington and University Clubs of Portland. He has made good use of his talents and opportunities and stands as a high type of American manhood.

SIMON KENTON HATCHER is the owner of eighty acres of improved and developed land in Coos county, Oregon, which constituted a part of his father's original homestead. He follows general farming, gives a great deal of attention to his dairy and is ranked among the enterprising and representative citizens of his district. He was born in Iowa in February, 1860, and is a son of John R. and Emily (Smith) Hatcher, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Tennessee. His father came to Coos county in 1877 and settled on the tract of land which his son is now operating. He followed agriculture with success until his death, in the summer of 1887, and had long survived his wife, who passed away in the year 1877. They were the parents of nine children: William A., of Arago, Oregon; Delaney R., of Curry county; Simon Kenton, of this review; James A., of Fairview, Oregon, who is married and has ten children; Mybulda C., the wife of James A. Cotton, of Gravelford, Oregon, and the mother of four children; Robert O., of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Perry C., also of Myrtle Point, who has two sons; Rebecca, who married E. M. Clayton, of Gravelford, by whom she has two children; and Perry, who died in infancy.

Simon Kenton Hatcher was reared upon his father's farm and was educated in the public schools of Coos county. He became familiar with the details of agriculture by personal experience early in life and has always operated his farm along the principles learned in his youth. He started active life for himself when he was twenty-two years of age, working for some years in the employ of his father. He now owns eighty acres of the original homestead which was his share of the estate, a brother owning the other half. Mr. Hatcher is almost entirely responsible for the high development of his property. It has been cleared and improved since his father's death, has been fenced, tiled and equipped with labor-saving machinery. He has built new buildings upon his property and has planted his fields to oats and other grain. He engages in general farming and has won success in this field of activity on account of his careful and conservative management and his specialized knowledge of the details of agriculture.

On August 30, 1884, Mr. Hatcher was united in marriage to Miss Ida J. Stillwell, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Russell B. and Olive Ann (Walton) Stillwell. Her father died on July 1, 1907, and her mother is living at Mayville, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Stillwell were born eight children: William, who resides at The Dalles, Oregon; Russell, of Portland, Oregon; Viola and Edmond, both of whom are deceased; Sidney Everett, who lives with his mother in Mayville; Leona, the wife of Fred Moreland, of Washington; Olive A., the wife of George Eads, of Mayville; and Ida, the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Simon Kenton Hatcher have been born six children: Bertha J., whose birth occurred on August 23, 1885, who was educated in the district schools of Coos county and who is at home with her parents; Lucinda, born August 1, 1887, who was also educated in the public schools of her native district and lives at home; Archie, whose birth occurred on the 20th of June, 1889, who attended the district schools of Coos county and who now makes his home with his parents; Sylvia Merl, who died in infancy; Clarence C., born February 11, 1894; who lives at home; and Ernest O., born December 1, 1901, attending school. Simon K. Hatcher's politics are consistently democratic and while he has never sought office his public spirit has led him to accept the position of school director and road supervisor where his efficiency and ability have ranked him among the useful servants of the community.

J. O. HAMAKER, now serving for the second term as mayor of Bonanza, of which town he was practically the founder and builder, and also publishing the Bonanza Bulletin, was born in Marion county, Iowa, July 30, 1856 his parents being David and Rebecca (Rodgers) Hamaker both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania, the latter being a lineal descendant of Sir John Rodgers. The Hamakers are of German lineage and the name was originally spelled Hammacher. The family was founded in America at an early period in the development of this country and the grandfather was born in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania. David Hamaker was married in Ohio and in 1847 removed to Iowa, where he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives. He and his brothers built the first mill in that locality and they came of a family of millers. In 1864 he and his eldest son, J. W. Hamaker, enlisted for service in the Civil war, the latter becoming a member of the Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, while the father was chaplain of the Fortieth Iowa. Both served until the close of hostilities and the father contracted disease which caused his death less than a year after the close of the war. Two daughters of the family died in childhood, while four sons reached maturity, namely: J. W., now deceased; J. D., of Toledo, Oregon; S. C., of Bly, Oregon; and J. O., of this review.

The last named remained at the place of his birth until 1869 spending his time in school and upon the farm. He afterward lived for seven years in Kansas and during that period devoted two years to the study of telegraphy at Humboldt, Kansas. He also worked around the depot in different ways and spent some time in school. Believing that the far west offered better opportunities, he came to Oregon in 1879 and on the 1st of March, 1880, settled in Klamath county, where he has since remained. He spent seven years in the saddle as a cowboy and then embarked in merchandising in Bonanza but during the first year lost five thousand dollars. During that time he platted the first addition to the town and, in fact, was the real founder of the town, for there was only one house here when he came. During the past seven years he has edited and published the Bonanza Bulletin, making it an attractive country town paper. He has also practiced law to some extent and has the only land law library in Klamath county. He also owns two ranches in this district and twenty-five town lots. He is likewise the owner of the telephone exchange of Bonanza, having installed the system and secured a thirty years' franchise. His various business interests are capably conducted and he is now prospering in his undertakings.

In 1885 Mr. Hamaker was united in marriage to Miss Annie M. Horton, who was born in the Willamette valley of Oregon in 1869, and is a daughter of W. H. and Elizabeth (Poe) Horton. Unto them have been born nine children: Ora R., who is the wife of George S. Boyd of Bly, Oregon; Horace E., spent one year as a student in the Oregon Agricultural College of Corvallis and is now in Bonanza; Mont W.; Marie; Marvin Horton; Hilda H.; Birdie E.; Annie; and Amanda. The eldest daughter was a member of the first class that graduated on the completion of the eighth grade work from the schools of Bonanza.

Mr. Hamaker is a republican in his political views and has filled several local offices. He served five years as United States commissioner of Oregon and at the present time he is serving for the second term as mayor of the town. He exercises his official prerogatives and his influence as a private citizen in behalf of the best interests of the community and his labors have been effective forces for upbuilding, progress and development here. He is energetic, determined and resolute and accomplishes what he undertakes.

HARRY D. AND ROBERT W. A. CHERRY are associated in real-estate operations under the firm style of Cherry Brothers, and their labors in this direction have been so intelligently and capably directed as to place them with the leading representatives of this line of business in Lane county. The consensus of public opinion places them in the leading rank of the young men of keen business ability, indefatigable energy and unassailable business integrity. They largely handle town property and at the same time conduct a profitable insurance agency.

Harry D. Cherry was born in Eugene, August 1, 1871, and Robert W. A. Cherry was born August 3, 1876. Their parents were David and Annie Maria (Atkins) Cherry. The father was born in County Armagh, Ireland, and was twelve years of age when brought to the new world by his parents, who settled at Belleville, Canada, and became farming people of that locality. In his youthful days David Cherry entered upon an apprenticeship at the cabinet-maker's trade. On leaving Canada he removed to San Francisco, where he spent two years, and later passed a year in British Columbia. About 1861 he came to Portland and developed a water power between Milwaukie and Sellwood, there operating a manufacturing plant and furniture factory which he subsequently sold to a Mr. Shindler, who in turn was succeeded by the Oregon Furniture Company. On disposing of his interests in that locality David Cherry came to Eugene. He also followed his trade at Springfield and at Albany, Oregon, for a time but finally opened a factory and store of his own in Eugene, the former being erected where the woolen mill now stands. He was the first furniture manufacturer of this city and continued in business for more than two decades, but sold out about twenty-nine years ago to Robert M. Day. His brother, J. W. Cherry, had been a partner of the firm of Cherry & Day and when he sold out to Mr. Henderson the firm became Day & Henderson. For an extended period David Cherry figured prominently and honorably in connection with the business interests of Eugene and after selling out he made a trip through Canada but returned to this city, where he died on the 18th of August, 1903, at the age of sixty-seven years.

In the family were but two sons, who as time has passed have won for themselves prominence in business circles of their native city. The elder, Harry D. Cherry, supplemented his early education by a course in the State University and then began learning the drug business, being registered as pharmacist in 1900. He had previously worked for five years for a railroad company, becoming a telegraph operator. This, however, was before he entered the university and thereby qualified for more important and responsible duties in life.

The younger son, Robert W. A. Cherry, was also connected with the railway interests for ten years and became a railroad telegrapher. About four years ago, however, he withdrew from that field of labor and spent a year in Salem. Two years ago the brothers joined forces in the conduct of a real-estate business, since which time they have handled town property and have negotiated many important realty transfers. They are thoroughly acquainted with values, know the property that is upon the market and are thus enabled to make purchases and sales which are advantageous to their clients.

Both brothers are married. Harry D. Cherry wedded Miss May B. Houghton, a daughter of A. L. Houghton, of Minnesota, and they have one child, Helen N. The younger brother married Miss Minnie E. Taylor and they have two children, Irene and Louise. Both brothers are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, their lives conforming to its teachings. They exemplify the spirit of enterprise which is the dominant factor in the upbuilding of the northwest and are energetic, determined and trustworthy, their success following as the legitimate and logical sequence of these qualities.

CHARLES A. MCGEE, interested in farming in the Callapooia district in Douglas county, was born in Ray county, Missouri, September 5, 1848, and is a son of William D. and Jane C. (Nelson) McGee, both of whom were natives of Guilford county, North Carolina, where they were reared. In 1832 they were married and in the same year removed to Ray county, Missouri. Thirty-two years later or in 1864 they came west to Oregon, crossing the plains with ox teams and settling on the farm which is now owned and cultivated by Charles A. McGee, in the Callapooia district. The father purchased the R. A. Forest donation claim which comprised about three hundred and eight acres of land and subsequently entered eighty acres, making his holdings three hundred and eighty-eight acres. He was identified continuously with agricultural pursuits to the time of his death, which occurred July 13, 1877, when he was sixty-five years of age. His wife long survived him and died December 21, 1898, at the age of eighty-three years. His father was a Douglas democrat and a staunch believer in the principles advocated by "the little giant of Illinois," but was never an office seeker. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist church.

Charles A. McGee was reared at home and attended the common schools but his opportunities were somewhat limited, owing to the fact that his two older brothers were at the front in the Civil war and it was necessary for him to remain at home and do the work of the farm, when otherwise he would have been devoting the same time to the acquirement of an education. When he was seventeen years of age he was given an interest in the home place and has since devoted his attention untiringly to its further development and improvement. His tract of land is rich and productive and his methods of farming are both practical and progressive. He has made a close study of the needs of the soil and the climate in relation to the production of crops here and his labors are attended with good results. From time to time he added to his property until he was the owner of about seven hundred acres, but he has deeded two hundred and fifty acres to his foster son, George Wilcox, leaving his present holdings four hundred and fifty acres.

In 1870 Mr. McGee was united in marriage to Miss Mary Nancy Rice, a native of Washington county, Oregon, and a daughter of James E. Rice, who came to this state from Missouri in 1844, taking up a donation claim in Washington county. Following his marriage Mr. McGee purchased a farm about nine miles from Oakland, upon which he located, but subsequently sold that and made two other purchases and removals ere in January, 1880, he purchased the old homestead on which he now lives. Unto him and his wife no children were born but they adopted and reared two nephews: Robert Wilcox, who for the past nine years has been a successful teacher in the schools of Lexington, Oregon; and George Wilcox, who is in partnership with Mr. McGee in the operation of the home farm.

In politics Mr. McGee is a republican and is thoroughly informed concerning the question and issues of the day. He served for two terms, or four years, as county commissioner but has held no other offices and prefers to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and in the community where they reside they have a large circle of warm friends who justly accredit them with all those estimable qualities which count in good fellowship. From the age of sixteen years Mr. McGee has resided in Oregon, much of the time upon the farm which is now his home, and among the early settlers of Douglas county he is therefore numbered.

LAWSON A. LAWHORN is the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of fine land in Coos county, of which two hundred acres is under cultivation and in pasture. He was born in Bedford county, Virginia, in 1852, a son of William and Harriet (Gentry) Lawhorn, both of whom were natives of Virginia. The father was married three times, his son, Lawson A., being one of the two children born of his first union, the other being Reeves, who is a farmer living near the old homestead in Virginia. After losing his first wife William Lawhorn married Lucinda Waldron, who was also a native of the Old Dominion, and unto them were born three children: William, now a resident of Marshfield, Oregon; Lucy, who is the wife of William Parkman, of Memphis, Tennessee; and John W., of Indiana. For his third wife the father chose Elizabeth Settles, also a native of Virginia, and their children were five in number. Maggie became the wife of John Hodson, but both have passed away after having lived for a time in Coos county. Thomas makes his home at Allegheny, near Marshfield. Alcie is the widow of Albert Stemmman, of Coos county. Myrtle is a resident of Coos county, and Zittie is the wife of William Dully, also of this county.

After his father was married the second time Lawson A. Lawhorn left home. He was then thirteen years of age. With a friend he went to work for a farmer, but after being employed in that way for a short time began working in a sawmill, which position he also kept for only a short time. Later, however, he returned to that line of business, remaining in the mill for only one year. Subsequently he removed to Tennessee, working in a sawmill and for a lumberman for several years. During that period he carefully saved his earnings, ambitious to one day engage in business on his own account. Later he and a young friend rented a farm which they cultivated for a year and a half, at the end of which time Mr. Lawhorn started for the Pacific coast. He arrived in California in company with John S. Coke, the father of Judge John S. Coke. Mr. Lawhorn purchased a team of horses in California and drove on to the Rogue river valley. In 1871 he came to Coos county, Oregon, intending, however, to go to Washington. Finally, however, he made settlement on the old Coos Bay wagon road. He was in the employ of Mr. Coke for a time but afterward married and established a home of his own. He had previously taken up a homestead claim and in 1877 he went to live thereon. He engaged in general stock-raising as well as farming and his labors have resulted in bringing about a notable change in the appearance and productiveness of the place, which was all wild land when it came into his possession. Later he became involved in a big law suit concerning the property, his opponent being the Oregon & California Railroad Company, but Mr. Lawhorn won his suit and obtained clear title to his property. Later he bought one hundred and sixty acres and the additions he has made to his original homestead make him now the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of valuable land, of which two hundred acres are under cultivation and in pasture. His methods of farming produce good results. He raises grain, hay, sheep, cattle and Angora goats. He handles only high grade stock and in his different lines of business is meeting with well merited success.

On the 17th of October, 1877, Mr. Lawhorn was married to Miss Lonisa Norris, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Boon) Norris, in whose family were the following children: George W., of Fairview, Oregon; Mary, the wife of J. L. Barker, also of Fairview; Lucy Ann, who married R. C. Dement, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Mrs. Lawhorn; C. L., of Coquille, Oregon; Thomas C., of Fort Klamath, this state; and Albert, who is deceased. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lawhorn which was celebrated in Coos county, has been blessed with five children. Walter, who is married, resides with his parents and is engaged in the logging business. He was educated in a district school and at Coquille, Oregon, and also took a special course in locomotive engineering. Mabel is now the wife of Jesse Byers, of California. Chester has passed away. Hugh is a resident of Portland, and Ratliffe, who completes the family, is at home with his parents.

Mr. Lawhorn votes with the democratic party and is conversant with the actions of the political organization and the principles for which it stands. He has served as road supervisor and special road master but is not an office seeker. He has likewise been officially connected with the schools. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has many friends, both within and without that organization. Both he and his wife belong to the Farmers Union of Coos county. His farm is situated on what is known as the Lawhorn road, about two miles from McKinley, and he also owns a modern home in Coquille City, which he occupies during the winter months. A spirit of enterprise characterizes him in all of his work and he carries forward to successful completion what he undertakes. He may justly be called a self-made man, for he started out on his own account at the age of thirteen years. He did not depend upon chance or fortunate circumstances to aid him, but realizing that earnest, persistent labor is the basis of all success, he has worked diligently to gain the place that he now occupies as a leading and representative farmer of Coos county.

CAPTAIN ELISHA JENKINS HARDING.

Long residence in Marion county made Captain Elisha Jenkins Harding well known in his part of the state. Moreover, he was a veteran of two wars, having enlisted for service in the Union army after having served to suppress the Indian outbreak in the northwest. For many years his time and energies were devoted to agricultural pursuits, and judicious investment in property made him ultimately the owner of three thousand acres of land in Marion county. In all business affairs he was enterprising and progressive and his integrity and reliability in business transactions were ever unquestioned.

Captain Harding was a native of Wyoming county, Pennsylvania, born February 24, 1828. His parents, Elisha and Amy (Jenkins) Harding, were also born in the Keystone state and were there reared and married. The mother died in 1830, and following her demise the father wedded Nancy Jackson. He too remained a lifelong resident of Pennsylvania, passing away there in 1873, while his second wife died in 1880. The children of his first marriage were: William, Hugh, Elizabeth, Emma and Nancy, all now deceased; Jabez, who is living in Waverly, New York; Frank and Lysander, who have passed away; and Elisha J. Of the father's second marriage there were five children: Nathan J. and Samuel, who are residents of Pennsylvania; Willard, who makes his home in Colorado; and Henry and Harriet, both deceased.

Captain Harding was reared in the east and during that period acquired a college education. In 1849, attracted by the discovery of gold in California, and hoping he might rapidly gain a fortune in a successful search for the precious metal, he came to the Pacific coast and spent two years in the gold mines. In 1851 he arrived in Salem, Oregon, and from that time forward was largely connected with the development and progress of this state. He was elected to the position of county clerk and also served as territorial clerk, remaining in office for eight years. On his retirement from political positions he sold his home in Salem and purchased land near St. Paul, Oregon. Keen foresight enabled him to recognize the fact that property would yearly become more valuable in this section of the state as settlement increased and he made judicious investments in realty from time to time until at his death he was the owner of more than three thousand acres in Marion county. This was in several different tracts and portions of his land were well improved. In all his business affairs he manifested unfaltering energy and determination, and he won his success, moreover, through honorable methods. He ever stood for progress and improvement and gave his cooperation to many movements which were of marked benefit to the community in which he lived. During the early period of his residence in Oregon he met with many of the hardships and difficulties incident to pioneer life. In the Indian war of 1856 he recruited a company at Salem and was appointed captain of this organization which became Company A of a battalion of Oregon mounted volunteers. His appointment came to him on the 26th of January, 1856, from Governor Curry, and with that rank he served until the hostility of the Indians ceased. At the outbreak of the Civil war he again recruited a company at Salem, Oregon, which became Company B, First Cavalry Oregon Volunteers. Governor Gibbs made him its captain, and with that rank he served until December, 1862, when he resigned on account of the pressure of private business affairs. On the 10th of August, 1863, he was appointed lieutenant colonel of the Second Regiment of the Second Brigade of Volunteer Militia of the state of Oregon, being also assigned to that position by Governor Gibbs.

Captain Harding was married in 1857, the lady of his choice being Miss Eleanor Purdy, whom he wedded on the 19th of June of that year. She was born in Ohio, April 14, 1838, and is a daughter of Aaron and Malinda (Bucklew) Purdy, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Virginia. They were married in Ohio and resided in that state until 1842 when they removed to Michigan where they made their home for three years before going to Indiana where they spent two years. In 1847 they crossed the plains to Oregon and took up their abode upon the present site of the city of Salem. After a brief period, however, Mr. Purdy secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres nine miles north of the capital and there he resided until 1856 when he sold that property and bought a farm near Salem. Upon the second place he lived until 1864 when he again sold out, removing to Waitsburg, Washington, where he purchased a flour mill which he operated for one year, or until his life's labors were ended in death in March, 1865. His widow afterward took up her abode upon a small farm which she owned near Salem, living there until 1864, when she removed to Goldendale where she pre-empted eighty acres of land upon which she lived for a few years. Her last days were spent at Forest Grove where she died in 1893. In her family were seven children, of whom the two eldest died in early life. The others were: Hanna, who married Luke Savage of

ELISHA J. HARDING

MRS. ELEANOR HARDING

Salem, but both are now deceased; Mrs. Harding; Jasper, who has passed away; Augusta, the wife of George Smith of Lyle, Washington; and Bruce, who is living in Gaston, Oregon.

The home of Captain and Mrs. Harding was blessed with seven children: Frank, who died December 26, 1883, at the age of twenty-five years; Larz, who passed away in June, 1893; Jenkins, who is residing in Glendale, Oregon; Charles, who is now a resident of Lincoln county, this state; Ellen, who died in infancy; Amy, at home; and Gertrude, the wife of Dr. Calvin S. White, of Portland. Like her husband, Mrs. Harding was college bred, being a graduate of Salem University. Naturally they were much interested in the education of their children to whom they gave excellent advantages. All the daughters have attended college and the sons have had thorough business training in commercial colleges. Since her husband's death Mrs. Harding has built a fine home in Gervais, Oregon, where she now resides, having there a large circle of warm friends who esteem her highly for her many excellent traits of character. The death of Captain Harding occurred March 17, 1897, when he was in the seventieth year of his age, and the community in which he lived mourned the loss of a representative and valued citizen. In politics he was a democrat, and took a deep interest in everything pertaining to the political situation of the country, keeping well informed on the leading questions and issues of the day. His was a well spent life. In every relation he was true to high and honorable principles and never faltered in the choice between right and wrong but always endeavored to follow a course sanctioned by conscience and sound judgment. His integrity in business affairs, his loyalty and patriotism in matters of citizenship, his fidelity in friendship and his devotion to home and family were characteristics which won for him the high and enduring regard of all with whom he was associated.

GEORGE APPLGATE is one of the successful farmers and stock-raisers who reside near Yoncalla, Douglas county. He is a native of Oregon, his birth having occurred in Douglas county, August 17, 1852. He is a son of Charles and Melinda (Miller) Applegate, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Tennessee. The parents migrated to Oregon with the Applegate Emigrant Company and settled in Yamhill county in 1843. Jesse Applegate was the captain of the company and an uncle of the subject of this sketch. More extended mention is made of the parents in the sketch of the Applegate family published in another part of this work. In 1847 Jesse, Charles and Lindsay, three brothers, took up donation claims in Yoncalla valley and there established their pioneer homes.

George Applegate was reared at home and received his education in the public schools. In 1873 he purchased the R. M. Kelly donation claim and engaged in farming. He lived on that property until 1888 at which time he sold out and in 1890 bought his father's old homestead to which he removed and where he has since lived. He and his children own five hundred acres of land, including the old homestead.

George Applegate was united in marriage in 1878 to Miss Flora McKee in Scotts Valley. She came to Oregon from Nebraska where she had been engaged in teaching school. To Mr. and Mrs. Applegate five children have been born: Rachael L., the wife of E. A. Tulley of Wallowa, Oregon; Paul, who is operating the home farm; Eve L. and Eva L., twins who are engaged in teaching school at The Dalles; and Vincent L., in his senior year in the Yoncalla high school.

George Applegate is affiliated with the republican party but has never sought political preferment. He is one of the enterprising citizens of his county and a man whose integrity in business matters has always been above suspicion. He enjoys the confidence and esteem of all his associates and is in every way entitled to be numbered among the influential and useful men of his part of the state.

JUDGE E. L. ELLIOTT, who is engaged in the general practice of law in Klamath Falls, was born in Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, April 14, 1868, his parents being John and Sally (Dudgeon) Elliott, who were natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively, and were reared and married in the latter state. In 1846 they went to Iowa, where the remainder of their lives was passed near Waverly, the father following farming throughout his entire life.

In the family were seven sons and five daughters, E. L. Elliott being the youngest. He was twenty-eight years of age before any of the children died and four sons and three daughters are still living. He remained at the place of his birth until the loss of his mother, when he was twelve years of age, after which he drifted from pillar to post, earning his living as best he could. He worked at the carpenter's trade and followed farming in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Nebraska. As he knocked about the world, trying to earn his living at various occupations until twenty years of age he began to realize fully the necessity of an education and at length entered a college at Waterloo, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1889. Later he became a student in the Illinois Normal School at Dixon, Illinois, and was there graduated in 1892. He afterward taught in a college at Vinton, Iowa, and was also employed in the county auditor's office there. At length he determined to devote his attention to one of the "learned professions" and began a course in the Iowa College of Law, a department of Drake University, at Des Moines. He afterward engaged in teaching in the college at Le Mars, Iowa, and subsequently took charge of the college at Waterloo. He then finished his law course and in January, 1898, was admitted to the bar, after which he began practice at Vinton, where he remained for a year. He next went to Oelwein, Iowa, where he remained until 1907, after which he was appointed and later elected to the bench of the supreme court, serving as judge from 1903 until 1907. In the latter year he became a resident of Lewiston, Idaho, where he practiced law until June, 1909, when he came to Klamath Falls, where he has since engaged in general practice. He has made continuous progress in his profession. Nature endowed him with keen intellect and his analytical powers and careful preparation of his cases have won him a place among the strong and able lawyers at the bar of southern Oregon. In January, 1912, he formed a partnership with his nephew, E. B. Elliott, under the firm style of Elliott & Elliott, attorneys.

In 1894 Judge Elliott was married to Miss Maude Westover and they became the parents of two daughters, Muriel A. and Pauline L., both attending school at Vinton, Iowa. The wife and mother died in 1898 and in 1903 Mr. Elliott wedded Clara B. Redfield, by whom he has three children, Dorothy G., Nellie M. and Jack W.

In politics Judge Elliott is a republican and was appointed city attorney here but resigned. He holds membership with the Masons and has become connected with the Mystic Shrine by way of the York Rite, being a Knight Templar. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias lodge and has given considerable attention to the work of that organization. He is also a member of the Christian church, has served on the official board as one of the deacons, and has been superintendent of the Sunday school. His interest in the moral progress of the community as well as in its material development is deep and sincere and his many sterling traits of character have won him an enviable position in the regard of his fellow townsmen. He deserves great credit for what he has accomplished, for the opportunities of his early youth were extremely limited and it was only by reason of his laudable ambition that he was enabled to make progress and reach his present place of prominence as a lawyer and citizen of Klamath Falls.

D. W. ANDERSON has resided since 1885 upon the place that is now his home, comprising one hundred and sixty acres which is devoted to general farming. His land is not far from Olene, in Klamath county. He has successfully introduced several modern processes, giving special study to the subject of dry farming and demonstrating the excellent results that can be accomplished by that method. He was born in Farmington, Van Buren county, Iowa, February 22, 1836, a son of Andrew E. and Angeline (Millard) Anderson. The father was born in Oswego, New York, and the mother in Massachusetts, and following their marriage they removed westward to Iowa, where Andrew E. Anderson carried on farming and also worked at the cooper's trade until 1852, when he went to California, where he was joined by his wife in 1861. Her death occurred about nine miles below Sacramento and Mr. Anderson passed away in Jacksonville, Oregon. While in California he engaged in mining until 1862 and then turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, to which he devoted his energies throughout the remainder of his life. In the family were four children: D. W.; Mrs. Amanda Slocum, who has passed away; Mrs. Ellen Fassett, of Sacramento, California; and Albert, of Stockton, California.

D. W. Anderson spent the first twenty years of his life at the place of his nativity and in 1856 joined his father in California, going to the coast by way of the isthmus route. He then followed placer mining for about three years, after which he went to Jackson county, Oregon, where he remained for seven years. He there worked as a laborer part of the time but he was ambitious to engage in business of his own account and made his plans with that end in view. At length he felt his capital was sufficient to justify his taking up farming for himself and in 1885 he came to his present place, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres near Olene, Klamath county, on which he has now resided for twenty-seven years. While he carries on general farming he makes a specialty of raising potatoes and melons and that his methods are progressive and resultant is indicated in the fact that he won five premiums on dry farming at the Klamath County Fair in 1909, securing these on watermelons, cantaloupes, green corn, squash and crabapples. He works hard, accomplishes results and has become well established as one of the representative agriculturists of his community. Moreover, he is well known as a healer of both sciatic and inflammatory rheumatism, to which he has devoted a part of his time during the past fifty years.

Mr. Anderson has been married twice. In 1861 he wedded Miss Mary Jane Dean, a native of Baltimore, who died in 1879, leaving four children; George, a resident of Josephine county, Oregon; Geneva, the wife of Peter Bauer, of Olene, Oregon; Walter, of California; and Willie, who died at the age of nine years. On the 25th of July, 1885, Mr. Anderson was again married, his second union being with Dora Hull, who was born in Jackson county, Oregon, July 25, 1866. They have become the parents of ten children, of whom Alzada, Paul and Pauline are deceased. Those living are Oscar Raymond, Myron, Freeman, Wilbert, Estella, Nava and Truman.

Although Mr. Anderson has reached the age of seventy-six years he is still hale and hearty and is an active business man accomplishing results through enterprising, progressive and scientific methods and making for himself a creditable position among the representative farmers of Klamath county.

WILLIAM B. CLARKE. With the history of progress in southwestern Oregon the name of William B. Clarke is closely associated and in his passing Douglas county lost one of its representative citizens. He was one of the early sawmill men of this part of the state and his industry and enterprise were factors in general development and improvement as well as in individual success. He was a native of Fredonia, New York, born January 23, 1836, and for some time resided in Pennsylvania ere coming to Oregon in 1865. On reaching this state he settled first in Douglas county and soon began work in the sawmill on the Calapooia, owned by Messrs. Butler, Mahoney and Barr. He was there employed for a year, after which, in company with John Colvin he rented the old Sutherlin mill on the Calapooia, which they operated for a year. In 1867 Mr. Clarke and Henderson Rone built a mill farther up the stream, which was known as the Clarke & Rone mill. This they conducted for two years, after which Mr. Clarke sold his interest and came to Coles Valley. Here he began work in the Harvey Dixon mill and afterward became a partner of Mr. Dixon, in which connection the mill was operated for about three years, at the end of which time Mr. Clarke bought his partner's interest and carried on the mill independently for about three years. He then removed the plant to Sugar Pine, where he engaged in the manufacture of lumber for a short time, after which he disposed of the mill and returned to Coles Valley. He then settled on the farm where his wife had continued to reside while he was in Sugar Pine. On this place he built a shingle mill, which he operated for three or four years, and in 1878 he went to Hubbard Creek, where, in company with J. L. Baker, he bought out his brother-in-law, Robert Stephens, who had begun the erection of a sawmill there. Mr. Clarke and Mr. Baker completed the mill and continued its operation until within two years of Mr. Clarke's death. Soon after his arrival at Hubbard Creek he secured the establishment of the Millwood postoffice at his place and did everything possible to further its interests until a daily mail service was secured and his office was made an international money order office. He continued to act as postmaster for many years, not that he had any desire to fill the position but because he recognized that the postoffice would work for the betterment of the neighborhood. He was of that class which included General Lane, Creed Flood, George Haynes, Thomas Sheridan, Joe S. Fitzhugh, Aaron Rose, Asher Marks, Sam Marks and others—pioneers who preceded him to the great beyond and all of whom were his friends. He was as popular in Roseburg when among its citizens as he was at home. He had attractive qualities, which made him well liked wherever he was known. He possessed a jovial, sunny disposition, was big hearted, open handed and was ever a true and loyal friend. It was ever a pleasure to know him and be with him, for he shed around him much of the sunshine of life. In politics he was a staunch republican and could have had any office within the gift of his party. In fact, his friends and neighbors frequently urged him to accept nomination for political positions but he always declined. He served, however, at one time as chairman of the republican county convention, but the wide diversity of opinion and the too numerous candidates seeking office disgusted him with party management and he preferred only to exercise his right of franchise in support of the measures in which he believed.

On the 23d of June, 1867, Mr. Clarke was united in marriage to Miss Cassie Stephens, a daughter of Eb Stephens, at one time county clerk of Douglas county, and the sister of R. L. Stephens, a prominent business man of Roseburg, and of George W. Stephens, and J. A. Stephens, of Oakland, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke became the parents of seven daughters and three sons: Ida, deceased; Jennie, the wife of Fred Norman, of Millwood; Anna B., at home, who is a teacher in the public schools; Martha, who resides in Portland; Kittie, who married Francis Smith, of Pasadena, California; Josephine, the wife of Sidney Smith, of Riverside county, California; Margaret, who became the wife of Fred Shelton, of Douglas county; Ben Morton, deceased; Rush R., who operates the mill at Millwood; and Seth S., who makes his home in South Bend, Washington. Mrs. Clarke still resides in Millwood and owns the old mill property, in addition to extensive farm and timber interests. She is a member of the Baptist church and a lady of many good traits of heart and mind. The death of Mr. Clarke occurred on the 2d of August, 1909, following a second stroke of paralysis. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity for many years but, although he allowed his membership to lapse, he never ceased to exemplify in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft, which is based upon a recognition of the brotherhood of man and which fosters kindness, charity and individual aid. Throughout his life he was a careful, systematic business man, a progressive citizen and a reliable friend, and his many sterling traits won him the respect, honor and love of those with whom he came in contact.

JUDGE CHARLES GRAVES, filling the position of justice of the peace at Klamath Falls, was born at Marysville, California, February 1, 1857. His father, Garrett Graves, was a native of New York, while the mother, who bore the maiden name of Mary Driesbach, was born in Pennsylvania. They were married in the east and became residents of California about 1849 or 1850. Their son Charles was but six years of age when his parents passed away. The father died on one Sunday in 1863 and the mother on the succeeding Sunday. He was following farming at the time of his death. In their family were four children: Frank, who has passed away; Charles; Samuel, living in Merrill, Oregon; and Mrs. Ella Sulzberger, of Arizona.

After the death of his parents, Judge Graves resided with an uncle in Michigan until he was old enough to earn his own living, after which he returned to California. When nineteen years of age he purchased a tract of land in Yuba county and cultivated it until 1884. He then sold that property and came to Klamath Falls, Oregon, and was engaged in merchandising here for five years. He then followed farming and stock-raising for about fourteen years, at the end of which time he disposed of his interests in that connection and took up his abode in Klamath Falls. In November, 1910, he was elected to his present position as justice of the peace and is now acting in that capacity. He had previously served one term as county treasurer of Klamath county and had declined a second term in that office. He also served as a member of the first city council of Klamath Falls and all through his life he has given his political allegiance to the democratic party. For twenty-eight years he has resided in this district and has always enjoyed the high respect and warm regard of his fellow townsmen who support him for office, notwithstanding the fact that this is a republican county and he is a staunch advocate of democratic principles.

In 1882 Judge Graves was united in marriage to Miss Eva M. Ward, who was born in Nevada but was reared in California. Unto them have been born eight children: Maude, who is the wife of Joseph L. Ringo, of Crescent, Oregon; Clarissa, who is the wife of S. B. Garner, of Portland; Charles J., who is living in Crescent; Ward L., attending school in Portland; Maurice, Horatio R., Ralph and Elizabeth, all at home.

Judge Graves is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity. He has taken the degrees of the Royal Arch and Knight Templar Masonry and is also a member of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a charter member of the lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Klamath Falls, which is one of the strongest in the state, and is a charter member of the Elks lodge. He likewise belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and helped finance the project at the time of the building of their lodge room and also of the building of the Elks' Home. He is now serving as president of the Commercial Club, in which connection he is putting forth earnest and persistent effort to advance the welfare of his town and county. He is a reliable and progressive business man and citizen and his many commendable traits of character have established him in an enviable position among his fellow townsmen.

MAJOR JAMES BRUCE is an Oregon pioneer of 1850 and a veteran of the Indian wars. He has every reason to be proud of the military record which he made in the effort to subdue the red men when they showed open hostility to the advancement of the white race, resenting the planting of the seeds of civilization in this section of the country. He is now living retired, deriving his income from valuable property interests in the vicinity of Corvallis, Benton county. He was born November 3, 1827, in Harrison county, Indiana, a son of John and Ellen (Lemon) Bruce. His father's mother was a sister of Daniel Boone, the famous Kentucky pioneer and explorer. In 1839 John Bruce removed to Adams county, Illinois, but was not long permitted to enjoy his new home. At his death he left a widow and seven children.

Major Bruce was a lad of twelve years at the time the family went to Adams county, where he remained until 1847, when, as a young man of twenty years, he joined a wagon train bound for Texas, spending two years in that state. In 1849, however, he returned to Illinois and afterward engaged in boating on the Mississippi river until the spring of 1850, when he again joined a wagon train which was bound for Oregon. On the route, however, the plans were changed and after a trip of six months across the desert and over the mountains the party arrived at Hangtown, now Placerville, California. Major Bruce at once proceeded to the mines and met with fair success in his search for the precious metal. Mining activities occupied his attention until the fall of 1851, when he took up a ranch in Scott's valley, Siskiyou county, California. The following year, however, he sold that property and came to Oregon, at which time he established a general mercantile store in Jacksonville.

At the outbreak of the Indian war, in 1853, Major Bruce enlisted as a private and later was promoted from time to time for meritorious service to the rank of captain. By the close of the second Rogue river war, in 1856, he had been promoted to the rank of major and filled that position with distinction, for there were few who took a more active part or displayed greater bravery and fidelity in the Indian wars than Major Bruce, a fact which is indicated in the historical volume of this work. He uncomplainingly bore the hardships and dangers of Indian campaigning, and following the close of hostilities and the removal of the Indians to the Siletz reservation he took a contract to plow and fence a part of that reservation. He afterward followed different occupations until 1862, when he began dealing in live stock and while carrying on that business, in 1864, he accomplished a feat that has seldom ever been attempted—that of driving a large number of hogs for a distance of over seven hundred miles or from the Umpqua valley in Douglas county to Boise City, Iowa. The venture, however, proved successful, for he sold most of his porkers at one dollar per pound. He then returned to Benton county and purchased a part of his present farm, which now contains seven hundred acres all in one body. This he rents, now living retired, and at the present time he is living in McMinnville. His property returns to him a very gratifying annual income and is the visible evidence of the excellent business ability which he has displayed as the years have gone by.

In 1857 Major Bruce was married to Miss Margaret Kinney, of Benton county, who died in 1884. On the 2d of March, 1886, he wedded Elizabeth Mark, a daughter of Charles and Catherine (Munzer) Mark, the former a native of France and the latter of Germany. They were married in Missonri and in that state the mother died, after which the father came to Oregon in 1875. He then engaged in farming in Yamhill county until he retired from business life and settled in McMinnville, where he passed away in 1889. Major and Mrs. Bruce became parents of one daughter, Sarah Catherine.

Major Bruce has not only made an excellent record in military and business circles but also as a political leader of prominence and influence. In former years he took an active part in support of principles in which he believed and he represented Benton county in the state legislature at Salem from 1874 until 1876 and afterward was sent from Washington county to the general assembly. He says that he is a Thomas Jefferson democrat and an Abraham Lincoln republican. In other words, he stands firmly for principles rather than for party and holds to the high standards of two of the nation's most distinguished upbuilders. During all his life Major Bruce has been an ardent advocate of the cause of temperance and untiringly devoted his energies to this movement.

Major Bruce should receive great credit in live-stock circles of the state. He was appointed by Governor Grover to serve as judge on agricultural implements during six months at the National Centennial Exposition in 1876, and there purchased one of the finest Clydesdale stallions ever brought to Oregon. When returning from the exposition he also brought back with him a herd of high-grade Jersey cattle, which were the first that ever came into the Willamette valley. When attending the New Orleans fair, in 1884, he there purchased a carload of Aberdeen Angus cattle, which were the ground stock for a good many herds of that breed in Oregon and, in fact, he was the first man to introduce high-grade stock into this state.

He does not believe in creeds and dogmas but has ever attempted to follow the teachings of the Christ and thus his life has been a most honorable and upright one and his religious faith of the highest character. Although he has now traveled far on life's journey, the precious prize of keen mentality is still accorded him. He has always been a leader among men and in many characteristic and admirable ways has left the impress of his individuality upon public thought and feeling. His life has indeed been well spent and the record is a credit and honor to his adopted state, with the development of which he has been closely identified through sixty years.

C. A. PAINTER operates his steamboat, Flyer on Coos bay and is employed as tender of the government bridge. He bought his vessel ten years ago and since that time has been a familiar figure on the bay. He was born in Mansfield, Ohio, November 8, 1868, and is a son of Michael and Margaret (Spratt) Painter. His father is a native of Ohio and was born in the same house in which our subject's birth occurred. He engaged in farming in connection with the operation of a woolen mill and a tile and brick yard, and was prominent in agricultural circles of Ohio. He served for three years in the One Hundred and Twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war and was wounded in the left shoulder by a cannon ball. He is now living retired. Mr. and Mrs. Michael Painter became the parents of five children, and only two of these are yet living. The children were: C. A., the subject of this sketch; A. J., who is in Alaska; two children who died in infancy; and Lena, who passed away when she was eighteen months old.

C. A. Painter received his education in the public schools of Ohio and lived in that state until 1890, when he came to Oregon and settled on Coos bay in North Bend. He spent two years employed in Porter's sawmill. He subsequently bought his steamboat Flyer and has operated it with much success since that time. At present he is employed as tender of the government bridge and his vessel is a valuable asset to him in the performance of his duties. He owns a beautiful home in North Bend where he resides with his family. He is well known throughout the city.

In December, 1900, C. A. Painter was united in marriage to Miss Marietta Eckhoff, a native of Coos county and a daughter of Charles and Charlotte Eckhoff, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Painter are the parents of one daughter, Lillian C., born October 17, 1906. Politically, Mr. Painter keeps himself entirely independent of party lines preferring to keep his judgment free and his opinions unbiased. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and prominent in the affairs of the Knights of Pythias. He is well known to the citizens of North Bend for his honesty, ability and progressive ideas and he has many warm friends in Coos county.

JOEL THEODORE WARD, connected with the Home Building and Realty Company of Klamath Falls, a project which is proving a vital and significant element in the upbuilding and development of the town, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, September 19, 1880, a son of Willie Thomas and Clara Frances (Welborn) Ward, both of whom were natives of Collinsville, Illinois, although reared and married in St. Louis. Soon after their marriage they took up their abode upon a farm near Mexico, Missouri, where they lived for five years and then removed to a cattle ranch at Lewiston, Idaho. In 1893 they removed to St. Louis, where they remained until the spring of 1906, when they went to southern Idaho and filed on a homestead. They are now living retired in Klamath Falls and are well known and worthy citizens of the town. Their family numbered four children, of whom Joel T. is the eldest, the others being: Cora May, the wife of Ed J. Boyd, of St. Louis; Thomas Jacobs, who is engaged in the real-estate business in Portland; and Daisy Anna, the wife of Fred Crockett, of Portland.

Joel T. Ward resided with his parents until he came to the west in 1906. After attending the grammar schools of St. Louis he began clerical work, securing a minor position with the Missouri Pacific and afterward with the Wabash railroad in his native city. During that period he devoted his evening hours to study, pursuing his lessons under the direction of private tutors. He also took a course in mining engineering through the International Correspondence Schools and on coming to the northwest made his way to Wallace, Idaho, where he was connected with mining interests in various ways in the Coeur d'Alene district for a year. Owing to the hazardous nature of the work and various narrow escapes from death he left there and went to Seattle, where he took the position of computing clerk in the government assay office. He then returned to Rupert, Idaho, and accepted the position of assistant engineer of concrete construction in the reclamation service of the government. When he again located in Portland he engaged in the real-estate business with his brother and in 1910 he came to Klamath Falls, where he has since handled real estate, being now associated with the Home Building and Realty Company, his previous experience well qualifying him for his undertaking in this line.

On the 5th of March, 1911, Mr. Ward was united in marriage to Miss Nona Anne Moore, who was born in Mansfield, Ohio, in 1883. She was left an orphan in early girlhood and was reared by an aunt. Mr. and Mrs. Ward have many friends in Klamath Falls, the hospitality of the best homes being freely accorded them. In politics Mr. Ward is a republican and keeps thoroughly informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day but does not seek office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs. He is yet a young man in the early thirties but his experiences have been broad and his developed capability and powers have made him one of the forceful factors in business circles here.

A. W. OLSON is serving with great success as steward of the North Bend Commercial Club and has been identified with this office since 1906. He is a native of Norway but has spent almost his entire life in America as a resident of Oregon. He was born in Christianssand, on May 14, 1862, and is a son of Andrew and Valbey (Anderson) Olson. His father died in his native land where his mother is living at the age of eighty-three years. They were the parents of four children: Ida and Olaf, residents of New York; A. W., of this review; and Bina, who lives in Norway.

A. W. Olson received his education in the public schools of his native country and came to America in 1887. He settled immediately in North Bend, Coos county, Oregon, and was a sailor on Coos bay for a short time. He then worked at various occupations in North Bend until 1906, when he accepted his present position as steward of the North Bend Commercial Club. He has been very successful during this time and under his direction the affairs of the club have been conducted in an able and efficient manner. Politically Mr. Olson gives his allegiance to the republican party in local affairs but reserves the right to independent voting on national issues. He is a member of the Order of Eagles and prominent in the affairs of that organization. He gives his allegiance to the Lutheran church and religion is an important factor in his life. He possesses those qualities of steady and concentrated purpose, persistency and keen intelligence which America welcomes so eagerly in her adopted citizens.

GEORGE R. BENHAM is the owner of a valuable farm in Coos county, Oregon, comprising an excellent tract of cultivated land conveniently situated near the village of Fairview. He was born in Missouri, on November 29, 1862, and is a son of William and Susan (Miller) Benham, natives of Tennessee. The father came to Oregon in 1863 and settled in the Willamette valley where he rented land and followed agriculture. He was an expert blacksmith and followed his trade in Oregon for a number of years. He went to California and farmed there for seven years, operating at the same time a blacksmith shop. He disposed of his business interests in California eventually and came to Coos county, where he bought eighty acres of land near Fairview and cultivated the soil until his death, which occurred in 1907. He had survived his wife for several years. They were the parents of nine children: John and Samuel, both of whom are deceased; Amanda, the wife of Stephen Hollenbeak, of Coquille, Oregon; William, a resident of Coquille; James, of Sitkum, Oregon; Nancy, the widow of John Neely, by whom she has one daughter, Florence, who lives with our subject; George R., of this review; Martha S., who passed away at the age of ten; and Frances M., who passed away at the age of seven.

George R. Benham has resided in Oregon almost continuously since he was one year old. He came with his parents in 1863 and received his education in the public schools of this state. He became familiar with the details of agriculture in early youth by assisting his father in the work of his Willamette valley farm. Later he went to California and operated the landed holdings of his father in that state while the elder Mr. Benham conducted his blacksmith shop. He returned to Coos county after seven years' residence in California and remained upon his father's original farm for a number of years after which he moved to another tract of land which a brother, James, had purchased. This was all wild timber land and it was necessary to clear it of trees before the soil could be broken. Later George Benham purchased twenty acres which he brought to a high state of cultivation. He built a comfortable and attractive home upon his property, erected suitable barns and outbuildings and now has half of his acres under cultivation in hay and garden truck. He also extensively engages in dairying and has made this branch of his enterprise, by careful and conservative management, an important source of income.

In politics George R. Benham is consistently a democrat and is intelligently interested in local affairs and well informed upon current issues although he has never sought public office. His life record illustrates the power of honesty and diligence in insuring success. His labors have always been constructive and intelligently carried forward and have resulted in placing him in the front rank of progressive farmers.

H. J. O'BRIEN has for twenty-five years engaged extensively in the breeding and raising of horses and is one of the foremost representatives of this business in Bonanza and the Yonua valley. He was born in Galesburg, Knox county, Illinois, July 2, 1859, and is a son of William and Alice (Philips) O'Brien, both of whom were natives of Ireland, born in Galway and Tipperary respectively. The mother was fourteen years of age when she crossed the Atlantic and the father was a youth of fifteen. They were married at Galesburg, Illinois, where they were numbered among the first settlers. Mr. O'Brien worked for Mr. Gale and Mrs. O'Brien worked for Mr. Ferris, and it was upon the farms of those two men that the city of Galesburg was built. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien resided there until the Civil war and he assisted in erecting all of the principal buildings there at that time including Knox College and the seminary. He was a stone and brick mason and took an active part through his trade in the improvement of the city. He and his brothers, Martin, Patrick, Henry and Thomas, were the only Irish republicans in Galesburg at the time of the Civil war. Patrick and Henry both lost their lives while defending the Union, one at Shiloh and the other at Gettysburg. Two years after the war H. J. O'Brien removed with his parents to the Grand Prairie, Livingston county, Illinois, and subsequently to Greenwood county, Kansas, where they became pioneers, settling there two and a half years before the railroad was built. At length H. J. O'Brien came to the west and his parents followed him, becoming early residents of the Pacific coast. Eventually, however, they sold out in the northwest and returned as far as Oklahoma, both passing away there in 1909 when about eighty years of age. In their family were four children: H. J.; Edward, who died in Iowa; Willie, who has not been heard from in twenty years; and Myra, the wife of William Drake, of Hennessey, Oklahoma.

H. J. O'Brien removed from Kansas to Oregon in 1880 and spent six months in traveling over the state, searching for a favorable location. He came to Klamath county with William Hanley, bringing cattle, and spent two years between this district and Rogue river, in teaming. On the construction of the railroad to Ashland in 1882 he located permanently in Klamath county, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres of land upon which he now resides. This is today well improved and under a high state of cultivation. For some time he was actively engaged in the construction of new railroads in the northwest but for the past twenty years he has dealt in horses, breeding black Percheron stock. He is half owner of Richmond, a fine sire owned by the Lost River Valley Percheron Horse Company. They paid twenty-four hundred dollars for him when he was three years old and he is now valued at three thousand dollars. Mr. O'Brien is also the owner of Beau Sire for which he paid one thousand dollars when he was less than three years old. Although Mr. O'Brien learned the carpenter's trade in early life he has handled horses through the greater part of the period of his majority and is an excellent judge of fine animals, doing much to improve the grade of horses raised in this section.

Mr. O'Brien was married in 1901 to Mrs. Addie Clark, who was born in the Cottonwood mining camp, in Siskiyou county, California, March 8, 1860. When she was eighteen months old her parents removed to Jacksonville where she remained until eight years of age, when she went to Linkriver, now Klamath Falls, a trading post, being the first white girl to reside there. At that time there were only a half dozen shacks in the town. Soldiers and the Indians constituted the chief population of the district although there were trappers and hunters. Mrs. O'Brien heard the first shots of the Modoc war and saw the first victims. In 1874 she went to Colorado and was there married to S. B. Clark. She resided there before Cripple Creek came into prominence, near the present site of the town, and after living in that state went to Minnesota, where she lost her husband and eldest child, Mr. Clark passing away in 1891. She then returned to Josephine county, Oregon, where she lived for three years, after which she again came to Klamath county and was married here to Mr. O'Brien. She had eight children by her first marriage: Minnie S., who died at the age of twelve years; Etta A., who is the wife of Walker Blanton, of Washington; Lilly A., the wife of Charles Flackus of Yonua valley; Emma C., the wife of George Gibson, of Boise, Idaho; Silas, of Klamath county; Willie, who is a twin brother of Silas, of Davis; Jessie E., of Minnesota; and Irving H., of Ontario, Oregon. Mrs. O'Brien never resided in a frame house until she went to Minnesota in 1883, having up to that time always lived in pioneer districts where her home was a log house. She attended school at Jacksonville when it was but a mining camp and at Ashland when there was only one store in the town. She also went to school in Linkriver the present Klamath Falls, when there were only six pupils there and she crossed the Link river on the ferry before the bridge was built. In 1870 she walked across the Link river bed when it was dry, caused by a south wind that held the waters back in the lake. She made that crossing with her father and when in the bed of the stream picked up two fish. Such a thing has seldom occurred within the memory of man. Few, indeed, are more familiar with the history of this state and its development or can relate more interesting incidents concerning the early days. Mr. O'Brien has been a republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, casting his first presidential vote for Garfield and always supporting the party, and is now a progressive republican. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias.

SAMUEL G. SPICER is a prominent farmer at Marcola, Oregon, part of his original holdings now being built upon by portions of that city. He owns at present three hundred and thirty acres, one hundred and sixty acres of which is in a high state of cultivation and the remainder in timber. He was born in North Carolina, January 25, 1872, a son of Joseph B. and Lettie (Bryan) Spicer. The father was born in North Carolina, while the mother is a native of Tennessee. They were married in the former state and there made their home until 1887, the father devoting his attention to farming. In that year the family removed to Oregon, where settlement was made in Eugene. After residing there for three years they removed to Marcola, where the father purchased one hundred and thirteen acres of land, which he operated until in 1904, when he returned to North Carolina and is now farming his original homestead in that state. The mother also survives and is ably assisting her husband in the conduct of the homestead. To this worthy couple were born seven children, namely: Mary J., a resident of Salem, Oregon, where she owns property; Charles E., deceased; Frances D., the widow of C. L. Winter, of Seattle, Washington; Samuel G., of this review; Morgan C., a resident of Pioneerville, Idaho; Ernest A., of Marcola; and Maud E., making her home in Seattle, Washington.

Samuel G. Spicer started out to make his own way in the world at the age of seventeen years, going into the stock-raising business in Idaho. He followed that vocation until 1905, and at times was the owner of large herds of cattle and horses. He then sold his stock and landed interests in that state and came to Lane county, Oregon, where he had previously purchased one hundred and fifty acres located where Marcola now stands, the city being in part built upon a portion of his original purchase. He is now operating a farm of three hundred and thirty acres, of which one hundred and sixty are in a fine state of cultivation, the balance containing marketable timber.

Mr. Spicer was married December 20, 1908, to Miss Virtue Gay, who was born in Oregon, May 8, 1888, a daughter of Nathan W. and Sarah E. (Spencer) Gay. Her parents were born in Missouri, the mother migrating to Oregon with her parents when four years of age and the father crossing the plains in 1877, settling in Benton county, this state. They were married in Oregon in August, 1880, and made their home in Benton county until in 1900, when they removed to Springfield, where they are now living retired. They are the parents of four children, as follows: Robert W. and Silas A., both of Springfield, Oregon; Virtue, now Mrs. Spicer; and James B., also residing in Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Spicer have become the parents of two sons: Darwin J., born January 14, 1910; and Glen F., born August 27, 1911. Mr. Spicer is a republican but has never been an office-seeker nor taken an especial interest in political activities. His fraternal relations are limited to membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Marcola. He has long and favorably been known in the community of which he is a member and is one of the progressive and prosperous farmers of this locality. He is energetic in his business and the success which he has achieved is entirely due to his enterprising spirit, his industry and intelligence. He received a good education, and also took a business college course, while his wife has also enjoyed the privilege of a good common-school education. The family is a popular one at Marcola and stands well in business, social and fraternal circles.

JAMES A. STEPHENS is a native son of Oregon. He was born on the Callapooia, on section 15, range 6, township 25, west, in Douglas county, November 25, 1858, his parents being Ebenezer and Rebecca (Stormer) Stephens, the former a native of New York state and the latter of Tennessee. They were married in Illinois, to which state the mother had removed with her parents in her girlhood days, while the father had gone there as a young man. After their marriage they settled near Burlington, Iowa, where they lived until 1852, when they crossed the plains to Oregon, making the trip with ox teams. While they were en route one of their children, John Wesley, passed away. On arriving here the father purchased the interests of William Cox, who had squatted on a land claim on Callapooia creek but had never filed on the land. It was upon this place that the birth of his son James A. occurred. Subsequently the father purchased the donation claim of J. M. Venable adjoining his original property and thus increased his holdings to about six hundred and forty acres. He built the old Rochester flour mill on the Callapooia creek, which he operated for a number of years, and also built and operated the Millwood sawmills on Hubbard creek, which are still operating, being conducted by a member of the family—Rush Clark, who is a grandson of Ebenezer Stephens. The father was a democrat in politics and served for one term as assessor of Umpqua county before Douglas county was cut off from it. Subsequently he served for two terms as county clerk of Douglas county and for two years as deputy sheriff under John B. Noble. He was one of the well known men of his district in Douglas county, prominent in various connections and in the Odd Fellows lodge he had many warm friends, as he did in other relations. His wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

James A. Stephens was reared at home, acquiring his education in the public schools. He worked with his father on the farm and later in the sawmill and lumberyards in Pomeroy, Washington, until his twenty-fourth year, when he rented school land in Garfield county, Washington, where he carried in general agricultural pursuits for a decade. In 1892 he removed to his present home—the donation claim which his father had purchased from J. M. Venable. He rented and cultivated this until the death of his mother, after which he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the old homestead. He has since sold eighty acres of the property so that at the present time his possessions comprise two hundred and forty acres. The farm is well developed and improved, giving every evidence of modern methods and careful management.

In 1881 Mr. Stephens was united in marriage to Miss Ida Oliver, who was born on the plains in 1864, while her parents, Elijah and Nancy Oliver, were traveling westward with ox teams to Oregon. Mrs. Stephens is a cousin of Turner Oliver, state senator from Baker county, and at one time a candidate for governor of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Stephens have become parents of six children, namely: Alva, at home; Bertha, the wife of King Carlyle, a farmer on the Umpqua river, in Douglas county; Angie, the wife of Peter Monner, a ranchman of Crooks; Maud, who married Clarence Thompson, a farmer residing in Coles Valley; Edith, at home; and Raymond, who completes the family.

In politics Mr. Stephens is a democrat but has never been an office seeker. He belongs to Douglas Camp, No. 258, W. O. W., and his wife has membership relations with the Baptist church and Oak Leaf Circle, No. 219. In carrying on his business affairs he has made close study of the possibilities of soil and climate and utilized his land to good advantage, winning that success which is the merited reward of earnest and honorable endeavor.

BURT E. HAWKINS has for only a comparatively brief period made his home in Klamath county but during this time has demonstrated his right to be classed with the representative agriculturists of the community, owning and cultivating one hundred and thirty-five acres of land not far from Klamath Falls. He was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, February 15, 1875, his parents being James E. and Martha A. (Wright) Hawkins, who were natives of Ohio but who were married near Ottumwa. They afterward removed westward to Nebraska and the father was connected with the G. H. Hammond Packing Company. He met his death on a farm in Nebraska in a cyclone, June 13, 1901. The other members of the family were all injured. His widow, however, still survives and is now a resident of Klamath Falls. The family numbered three children: Enola A., who is with her mother; James A., of Klamath Falls; and Burt E.

The last named was but a young lad when his parents removed to Nebraska, where he resided until he came to the northwest. The public schools afforded him his educational privileges and his training was that of the farm, so that he had practical experience when he began farming on his own account. He arrived in Klamath county in 1906 and for a year thereafter cultivated a tract of rented land. He then purchased his present place of one hundred and thirty-five acres, all under ditch, and he is making a specialty of dairying and the raising of hogs. His methods are practical and his untiring industry and unfaltering diligence are bringing to him a substantial measure of success. He is closely studying the problem of the best methods of developing this part of the country and cultivating the soil and has already gained a place among the foremost farmers of Klamath county.

In 1905 Mr. Hawkins was united in marriage to Miss Anna C. Ackerman, who was born in Herman, Nebraska, in 1878, a daughter of Leonard Ackerman. Their children are Dorothea Adeline, Delia Alice, John Lewis and James Lyman. Mr. Hawkins belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but largely concentrates his time and energies upon his business affairs, knowing that close application and unfaltering energy are the basis of honorable success. Laudable ambition brought him to the northwest and he is working his way upward through persistent and intelligently directed effort.

IRVING J. CONWAY, one of the progressive and enterprising citizens of Elkton, is now acting as manager of the drug store of E. Shad and, in association with his brother, Frank W. Conway, is operating the old homestead of four hundred acres in Douglas county. His birth occurred on the home farm, between Elkton and Drain in Douglas county, on the 17th of November, 1883, his parents being John N. and Martha (Hart) Conway, both of whom were natives of New York. In 1849 the father crossed the plains with an ox team to the California gold fields, being engaged in mining for several years and subsequently becoming a hotel proprietor. About 1870 he returned to the Empire state and was married and a year or two later again came to the coast, locating in the Umpqua valley in Douglas county, Oregon. He next took up a homestead on Elk creek, midway between Elkton and Drain, and afterward extended the boundaries of his farm by purchase until at the time of his death it embraced four hundred acres. Following his demise, which occurred in 1894, his widow took up her abode at Council, Idaho, where she passed away in the year 1906. They were the parents of four children, as follows: Irving J., of this review; Lewis A., who is deceased; Herbert D., a resident of Brownsville, Oregon; and Frank W., twin brother of Herbert.

Irving J. Conway was reared under the parental roof and after completing the required course in the Drain public school entered the Central Oregon State Normal School but removed to Idaho before finishing his studies in that institution. In 1901 he took a position in a drug store at Council, Idaho, and began the study of pharmacy. In 1905 he returned to Portland and pursued a course in physics, chemistry and pharmacy at the Young Men's Christian Association. He was afterward made manager of the Coun-eil Drug Company, an incorporated concern, holding that position for three years and at the same time serving as postmaster of Council. In July, 1910, he returned to the old Conway homestead on which he was born, and soon afterward accepted a position in the drug store of E. Shad at Elkton, of which he has served as manager since the 1st of March, 1912. Since his return to Douglas county he has also operated the old homestead of four hundred acres in association with his brother Frank.

On the 17th of November, 1907, Mr. Conway was united in marriage to Miss Bessie E. Sabin, her father being Orrin Sabin, of Vancouver, Washington, who is now a resident of California. Our subject and his wife now have two children, Mabel A. and Wayne I. Mr. Conway is a republican in politics, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party at the polls. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Council Lodge, No. 85, at Council, Idaho. He is also a member of Diamond Rebekah Lodge, No. 56, and is likewise connected with Lodge No. 326 of the United Artisans. He has won an enviable reputation in business circles for one of his years, being widely recognized as a substantial and rising young citizen of his native county.

FRANK W. CONWAY, who, in association with his brother Irving, operates the homestead farm of four hundred acres in Douglas, his native county, was born in the Umpqua valley on the 26th of July, 1876. He acquired his education in the public schools and also pursued a course of study in the Central Oregon State Normal School, at Drain, from which institution he was graduated in 1898. In 1900 he went to Sodaville, Oregon, where Mr. Conway pursued a special course in languages in the Sodaville College. Subsequently he taught school for three months. In 1902 he filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in Idaho, which he proved up and still owns. In 1909 he returned to Douglas county, Oregon, and soon afterward began the operation of the home farm in partnership with his brother Irving. In the conduct of their agricultural interests the brothers have been successful, their land being highly productive and annually yielding bounteous harvests.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Conway has supported the republican party, being convinced that its principles are most conducive to good government. He belongs to Council Lodge, No. 85, I. O. O. F., of Council, Idaho, and is also a member of Diamond Rebekah Lodge, No. 56. In whatever relation of life he has been found he has been true and loyal to the trust reposed in him and his life has been in conformity with a high standard of conduct.

J. F. CRUMP is one of the prosperous ranchmen living on Applegate creek. He was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, October 27, 1862, and is a son of Josiah and Rebecca (Street) Crump. His parents emigrated to Oregon, crossing the plains with a two-horse team, in 1865. The family then consisted of seven members. After a short time spent in the Willamette valley the family removed to Jackson county where they located on a ranch four miles south of Jacksonville and there continued to maintain their residence until the time of Josiah Crump's death, which occurred many years ago.

J. F. Crump was reared in his father's home and acquired his elementary education in the public common schools. His father having died when he was but seventeen years of age the condition of the family was such that it was necessary for him to take his father's place as manager of the home ranch and assume all the cares incident to the protection and improvement of the property and the support of the family. On attaining his majority he became engaged at Sterling as a miner and continued in that employment for a period of thirteen years. In 1899 he severed his connections with the Sterling mines and purchased a ranch on Little Applegate creek. There he established his home and has since continued to reside.

J. F. Crump was united in marriage to Miss Cora B. Ankeny, on October 8, 1893. Mrs. Crump is a daughter of Henry E. and Cordelia L. (Stryker) Ankeny. Her parents removed to this state with their parents when they were small children. To Mr. and Mrs. Crump three children have been born, Vivian B., John A. and Harold F.

Mr. Crump is one of the leading and successful farmers on Little Applegate creek and he is always identified with every public measure seeking the advancement and improvement of the people throughout this section of the state.

ELIJAH BRISTOW, the first settler in Lane county, whose portrait will be found in this work, was born in Tazewell county, Virginia, April 28, 1788. His boyhood days were passed in the mountainous regions of Virginia, where his early training accustomed him to the woodman's ways and to the use of firearms. Here he rapidly became noted as an expert marksman and hunter. His surroundings and early training imbued him with the restless spirit of adventure, and upon arriving at manhood, he turned his face westward. Emigrating to Kentucky, he commenced the improvement of a home, acquiring in the meantime, the different trades of hatter, blacksmith and gunsmith. The two latter being his favorites, were followed assiduously, together with the occupation of a farmer, until old age palsied his arm and he was unable to do further labor. When the War of 1812 and the Creek Indian war broke out, he was among the first in his locality to volunteer his services to his country. Declining proffered command of a company of volunteers, he went, as he preferred, in the ranks, serving with distinction, in Captain Kennedy's company, through one campaign under General Jackson against the Creek Indians. He was present and took part in the battle of Taladega during that expedition. His accurate marksmanship soon brought him under the notice of General Jackson, who took occasion to frequently put him upon special duty, scouting, etc. The following instance he used to relate with much amusing detail as illustrating "Old Hickory's" violent temper and arbitrary disposition. Being ordered to shoot some beeves, he took his trusty rifle and started for the cattle pens near the camp, but was stopped by a sentinel who refused to let him pass without the countersign. He returned to the general's tent to obtain it, but "Old Hickory" being out of humor about something, began storming, saying he did not send him out to get countersigns but to kill beeves. That was enough for Bristow, who walked back to the line of the sentinel's beat, and at long range began shooting down the cattle on the hillside beyond. On learning what was being done, Jackson ordered the sentry to "let that d— sharpshooter pass the lines." Various incidents of his campaign life might be related illustrative of his energy and determination under difficulties, but space will not permit.

From Kentucky Mr. Bristow emigrated to Illinois, settling first in Macoupin county. Later he removed to McDonough county, where he lived about twenty-three years. During the Black Hawk war, his neighbors becoming alarmed, commenced to build a fort in which to place their families for safety. In order to quiet their fears, Mr. Bristow volunteered to go to the front and ascertain if any immediate danger was pending; in doing which, he went alone from his home to Rock Island and back, a distance of over a hundred miles, through a country which was then uninhabited except by Indians. Finding the territory clear of hostiles, he returned to his neighbors, quieted their fears and caused the little settlement to again resume its round of peaceful occupations. In the year 1845, Mr. Bristow turned his face westward again, going first to California, and thence to Oregon the following year, where he became, as previously stated, the first settler in Lane county.

March 7, 1812, Mr. Bristow married Miss Susanna Gabbert, who, by her patience, perseverance and Christian fortitude, did much towards making his future life happy and successful. Elijah Bristow died September 19, 1872, and his loved wife and lifelong companion passed away March 7, 1874. Theirs was a long and eventful life, interspersed with many trials and hardships, but also with much of happiness and genuine life pleasures. As in life, together they rest, side by side under the oaks in Pleasant Hill cemetery. Theirs was truly a pioneer life and in living it, their Christian acts have left their impress behind them, beautifying their memories and benefiting the lives of those that follow after them.

WILSON F. JEWETT is the vice president and general manager of the Gardiner Mill Company, employing two hundred people. This is the leading industrial concern of Gardiner, and in addition to his interests therein Mr. Jewett is a stockholder in the Kerchoff, Cuzner Mill & Lumber Company, of Los Angeles, California. His business interests are of an important character, and their careful management and control show Mr. Jewett to be possessed of keen sagacity and powers of discernment. He was born in Maine, June 14, 1852, and is a son of Walter G. and Flavilla (Wilson) Jewett, both of whom were members of old New England families that came of English ancestry and were numbered among the early colonial settlers. Walter G. Jewett and his family resided in Solon, Maine, where he was identified with lumber and timber interests throughout his active business life. He died at the age of sixty-three years, while his wife survived, reaching the advanced age of eighty-eight years. She was spending the last years of her life with her son, Wilson F. Jewett, when her death occurred in February, 1911.

Wilson F. Jewett acquired his early education at the Eaton boarding school at Norwich, Maine, and later entered the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire, Connecticut, one of the old schools of New England, established about 1770. He afterward became a student in the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, from which he was graduated in 1872. The following spring he came to Coos Bay, Oregon, and was employed as a clerk in the store of E. B. Dean & Company, at Marshfield. He remained with that firm for five years and in the meantime was advanced to the position of manager of their mercantile interests. In 1878 he became associated with the lumber firm of G. S. Hinsdale & Company, at Gardiner, and purchased an interest in the business, after which he was placed in charge of their San Francisco offices. There he remained for three years and in 1881 came to Gardiner, where he has since made his home. He became one of the dominant factors in the organization of the Gardiner Mill Company which absorbed the properties of G. S. Hinsdale & Company and subsequently purchased the mills of A. M. Simpson. In March, 1885, the Gardiner Mill Company took out papers of incorporation and Mr. Jewett was made superintendent of the mills and practically had charge of all the business here. In 1907 he was elected to the vice presidency of the company, in which capacity he has since served. The Gardiner Mill Company is identified with the Kerchoff, Cuzner Mill & Lumber Company of Los Angeles, California, through whom all the product of the Gardiner Mills is placed upon the market. The business is one of large and growing proportions and constitutes the chief industry of the town. In addition to his other activities Mr. Jewett has extensive banking and real-estate interests in Los Angeles.

In 1886 occurred the marriage of Mr. Jewett and Miss Mary Hughes of San Francisco, California, and unto them were born four children, of whom two are living: Wilson H., who is clerk in the company store of the Gardiner Mill Company; and Narcissa, at home. In politics Mr. Jewett is a republican but has never been an office seeker, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs which have been of constantly growing volume and importance. He is today one of the leading lumbermen of the coast country, the Gardiner Mill having an output of eighty-five thousand feet daily. This business has been built up largely through Mr. Jewett's enterprise, his well formulated plans and his resolute will. He has studied the conditions of the trade and its possibilities and has utilized every means at hand in such effective measure as to produce a harmonious working whole, bringing substantial results.

DR. SANDFORD WHITING, physician and surgeon, who is specializing, however, in surgical practice in Portland, has had thorough training in preparation for his chosen life work. He was born at Taylor's Falls, Minnesota, September 15, 1868, and is a son of Charles B. and Flavia (Blanding) Whiting. He is descended from one of the oldest New England families. His grandfather, however, became a pioneer settler of Illinois and his father of Minnesota. The latter was a native of Connecticut and was reared in that state and in Illinois, his parents removing westward during his youthful days, at which time the family home was established near Galena, Illinois. Later Charles B. Whiting took up his abode in Minnesota, becoming interested in the lumber business in that state and Wisconsin, where he carried on extensive operations to the time of his death, which occurred in 1871, when he was forty-seven years of age. He filled the position of register in the United States land office under President Lincoln and was also deputy United States marshal during the period of the Civil war.

Dr. Whiting pursued his preparatory education in McAllister College of Minnesota and then, having determined to engage in the practice of medicine as a life work, he entered the Pulte Medical College, at Cincinnati, Ohio, while subsequently he became a student in the New York College Hospital. Later he returned to Pulte and was graduated therefrom in 1892. He has since pursued further courses of study in the New York Post Graduate College. He spent two years in Ward's Island Hospital of New York as house surgeon and in that manner gained broad practical experience such as only hospital practice brings. On leaving that institute in 1894 he came to Portland and opened an office in this city, where he has since resided, save for the period of his service in the Spanish-American war. Following the outbreak of hostilities with Spain he became captain and assistant surgeon of United States Volunteers and with the Second Oregon Regiment went to the Philippines, where he remained for eighteen months in active duty. He then returned to Portland and has since been closely identified with professional interests in this city. He has a large private practice in both medicine and surgery but specializes somewhat in the latter field. He is now serving on the surgical staff of the Good Samaritan Hospital and he is a member of the Multnomah County Medical Society, the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

In 1893 Dr. Whiting was married to Miss Iva Marvel Curtis, a daughter of Charles Curtis, of Wisconsin, and they have two sons, Curtis Charles and Sandford. Dr. Whiting belongs to Hawthorne Lodge, A. F. & A. M., to the Knights of Pythias and to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a republican and is well informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day. Eight years ago he was elected to the city council to fill out an unexpired term but he cares little for public honors and offices, avoiding those of a political character, and in the lodges as well. He is a man of modest, unassuming manner, who is recognized as one of the leading surgeons of the northwest.

LEE M. TRAVIS. For eleven years Lee M. Travis has engaged in the practice of law in Eugene, specializing in commercial law. His thorough preliminary training well qualifies him for the onerous duties of the profession and he gives to his clients the benefit of unwearied service and broad knowledge of the judicial principles bearing upon his particular branch of professional work. He was born in Howard, Steuben county, New York, June 20, 1874, and is a son of the Rev. Gould J. and Ella (Ford) Travis. The father was a native of Poughkeepsie, New York, and pursued his education in Hamilton College and in the Rochester Theological Seminary of that state. In 1889 he came to Eugene as pastor of the Baptist church, with which he was continuously connected until he met death in a runaway accident. In the work of the church he manifested a contagious enthusiasm and zeal that were manifest in the growth of the organization with which he labored. His fraternal relations were with Eugene Lodge, No. 11, F. & A. M., Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M., and Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T.

In the public schools Lee M. Travis mastered the elementary branches of learning. He was about fifteen years of age when his parents crossed the continent to Oregon and he later entered the University of Oregon, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897. In the following year was written the military chapter in his life history. When the country had become involved in war with Spain he enlisted as a member of Company C of the Second Regiment of Oregon Volunteers and was sent to the Philippines, where he served with his regiment until honorably discharged at the close of his term of enlistment. Determining to enter upon the practice of law, he pursued the regular course of study in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and was admitted to the Oregon bar at Salem in 1899. He had previously read law when in the army. He did not graduate from the Michigan University until 1900 and on the 1st of January, 1901, he opened his office in Eugene, since which time he has practiced largely in the commercial law field.

In 1893 Mr. Travis was married to Miss Lillian Baker, a daughter of Fred C. Baker, who is editor of the Tillamook (Ore.) Headlight. Mr. and Mrs. Travis have two children, Frederick and Gould. Mr. Travis is well known in various fraternal organizations, holding membership in the Acacia fraternity; Eugene Lodge, No. 11, A. F. & A. M., in which he is a past master; Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M.; Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T.; Al Kader Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; Eugene Lodge, No. 357, B. P. O. E.; Eugene Camp, No. 115, W. O. W.; Eugene Aerie, No. 275, F. O. E.; and the Order of Hoo Hooos. Moreover, he takes quite an active interest in politics and is recognized as one of the local leaders of the party, serving at the present time as chairman of the democratic county central committee. He is a member of the Panama canal commission for the San Francisco exposition in 1915. His life is actuated by a spirit of progressiveness that recognizes and utilizes opportunities and he is widely known in this part of the state through his professional, fraternal and political relations.

ALBERTUS LAROWE entered into his present business relations as secretary and treasurer of the Peninsula Iron Works at St. Johns, on the 1st of April, 1910, and is thus prominently connected with industrial activities there in the conduct of a general foundry, machinist and blacksmithing business. He was born in Steuben county, New York, February 24, 1880, a son of Albertus and Katherine M. (Morgan) Larowe. The family is an old one of that part of the state, having been there represented for several generations. The name was originally La Rue but being driven from their native country of France at the time of the persecution of the Huguenots, they changed the spelling of their name to prevent identification. When representatives of the family first came to America settlement was made in New Jersey and later a branch of the family was established in New York. In the maternal line Albertus Larowe is a direct descendant of Miles Morgan of Springfield, Massachusetts. This family was represented in the Revolutionary war, entitling Mrs. Katherine M. Larowe to membership with the Daughters of the American Revolution, with which she is now identified. Albertus Larowe, Sr., was a miller by trade, following that pursuit as a life work. In politics he was a republican and became prominent as a party leader in his county. He was also an active Mason and became a past master of Liberty Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., of Cohocton, which he joined on its organization.

His son, Albertus Larowe, whose name introduces this review, pursued his education in the public schools and on starting out in business life on his own account became engaged in merchandising in New York city. He afterward removed to the middle west and for ten years was connected with the wholesale grocery trade in Duluth, Minnesota. In 1910 he arrived in Portland and became interested in the Peninsula Iron Works, which were established by J. C. Murphy and W. A. Bennett, under the name of the Modern Machine Works, in November, 1909. They employed about three men and something of the growth of the business is indicated in the fact that employment is now given to from twenty-five to forty men. On the 1st of March, 1911, the name was changed to its present form. On the 1st of April of the preceding year Mr. Larowe had become secretary and treasurer, having purchased Mr. Murphy's interest. The company does a general foundry, machinist and blacksmithing business, drawing a large trade from Portland and the Columbia river valley.

In 1910 Mr. Larowe was married to Miss Helen Maginnis, of Duluth, Minnesota, and they now have one child, Albertus Eugene. In politics Mr. Larowe has ever been an earnest republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He does not seek nor desire political office, however, but has served for two terms as a member of the school board in district No. 2 and the cause of education finds in him a stalwart champion. He belongs to St. Johns Commercial Club and the company of which he is a representative has a membership in the United Metal Trades Association. Mr. Larowe is recognized as a self-made young man of unusual business ability and enterprise. He is what is known in modern parlance as a good mixer; in other words, he has attractive social qualities which render him popular and at the same time he is ever appreciative of the good points in others. He has made steady progress in his business career since starting out in life on his own account and he is now one of the leading factors in the development, management and control of a business which is proving a valuable asset to industrial and commercial circles. It is not that parasitical kind that feeds upon a community, giving nothing in return, but is one of the moving vital forces in industrial upbuilding and constitutes a tangible evidence of the energy, determination and progressiveness of Mr. Larowe and his fellow officers.

ORANGE SYLVESTER COLEMAN has a large and attractive residence, which stands in the midst of one hundred and twelve acres of good land, of which he has brought about seventy-five acres under cultivation, the place being located four and a half miles from Myrtle Point, in Coos county. Dairying and the raising of apples are also features of his place and in a word the owner stands as one of the foremost and representative agriculturists of the community. He was born in California in 1856 and is a son of William M. and Mary (Bearden) Coleman, who were natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. They were married in the latter state and removed to Nevada, whence in 1849 they came to California, making their way to the gold fields. The father engaged in the hotel business in that state for some years and afterward took up his abode upon a farm. Both he and his wife have passed away, Mrs. Coleman having died when her son O. S. Coleman was but four years of age, this being in 1861. In the family were six children: Angeline, who died leaving a large family; James, deceased; Amanda J., the wife of Henry Garner, of Kerby, Oregon; Elias S., of California, who is married and has five children; Orange S.; and Katinka, now Mrs. France of Ellensburg, Washington.

The usual experiences of the farm boy fell to the lot of O. S. Coleman during the period of his minority. When twenty-one years of age he left home and went to Moscow, Idaho. Near there he took up homestead and pre-emption claims and lived in that locality for six years, devoting his energies to farming. He then came to Ashland, where he lived for a year, after which he removed to Coos county and in the meantime disposed of his three hundred and twenty acres of land in Idaho. On coming to Coos county he invested in one hundred and sixty acres on the north fork of the Coquille river and, although this was an undeveloped tract when it came into his possession, he has cleared much of it and has carried on the work of improvement until he now has a good property. He has also purchased another place of one hundred and twelve acres, on which he erected the large fine residence that he now occupies. He sold the old place and lives on one of the more recent acquisitions, and he has on both places seventy-five acres of cleared and cultivated land. However, his attention is largely given to dairying, for which purpose he keeps twenty-five cows. He has three orchards on the two places, mostly planted to apples, and in 1911 he packed and shipped more apples than anyone else in the county. He also makes a specialty of raising fine poultry and he raises fine horses and cattle. In fact, every feature of his business indicates that he follows progressive methods, that his standards of farming are high and that he is winning success by reason of sound judgment, unfaltering enterprise and progressive methods. All the features of a model farm of the twentieth century are found upon his place and it is one of the most attractive properties in Coos county.

On the 29th of May, 1881, Mr. Coleman was united in marriage to Miss Katherine Luper, a native of Washington county, Arkansas, and a daughter of James and Mary (Taylor) Luper, both of whom were also natives of Arkansas. Mrs. Coleman was their only child and by her marriage she has become the mother of five children: Florence Dell, who was born July 14, 1882, and is the wife of James L. Guerin, of Myrtle Point, Oregon, by whom she has one child, Chrystle; William M., who was born February 2, 1885, and is a successful school teacher of Coos county, where he was educated, supplementing the usual branches of learning with the mechanical course; Myrtle L., who was born June 19, 1887, and is the wife of James Hall, of Gravel Ford, Oregon, by whom she has one child, Leslie G.; Arthur F., who was born July 10, 1892, and is now attending school; and Lester Ray, who was born March 27, 1902, and is also in school. Mr. Coleman has ever been a stalwart champion of the cause of education and has provided his children with good opportunities in that direction. He has been a director of the Gravel Ford Academy and was also a school director in his home district. His political faith is that of the republican party, and his religious belief that of the Seventh Day Adventists church. His home is pleasantly situated four and a half miles from Myrtle Point on the Dora road and he is well known in the community, his sterling traits of character winning for him the high regard of a circle of friends that is almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances.

JOHN HOBBS. A pioneer of Oregon who has evidenced in his life all that is vital and forceful in the meaning of that word is John Hobbs who, after an active life spent in agriculture is now living in honorable retirement in Glendale, Oregon. He is one of the sturdy band of early pioneers of the state who crossed the plains with ox teams over prairie and undeveloped wildernesses, encountering hardships and perils, and opened up one of the greatest sections in America. During his active life he continued the work which he had so ably begun by intelligent development of farm lands in Polk and Douglas counties and has won the rest from arduous labor which he is now enjoying. He was born in Missouri on December 4, 1838, and is a son of James and Mary (Burns) Hobbs, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Ireland. The father was a farmer in Missouri for a number of years and followed this occupation until the time of his death in 1845. He had survived his wife four years, her death having occurred in 1841. John Hobbs is one of seven children born to his parents. He remained at home until the death of his parents and then went to live with his brother and pursued his education in the public schools until he was eighteen years of age. In 1858 he joined the caravan under Colonel Morrison, crossing the plains as a member of the quartermaster department. The journey was taken in the stirring and eventful period immediately following the Mountain Meadow massacre. This occurred during the Indian war of 1857-58 when a large number of gentle emigrants were attacked by the combined forces of the Mormons and Indians. The warfare culminated in the massacre at Mountain Meadow where all the pioneers and their wives were killed and only small children were spared. The caravan with which Mr. Hobbs was identified went from Camp Floyd to the massacre grounds under the leadership of Lieutenant Price. They gathered up the destitute children and took them to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Hobbs resumed his journey in the same year and spent some time in Colorado. He went from there to Oregon with horse teams, landing in the eastern part of the state in 1864. He settled in Polk county and after a short period spent in the mines bought a farm which he improved and operated for twelve years. He brought his property to a highly improved condition and finally sold it in order to come to Douglas county. Here he bought land and followed agriculture until 1909 when he definitely abandoned his labors and bought property in Glendale, Oregon, where he now resides.

In 1866 Mr. Hobbs was united in marriage to Miss Victoria Hardison, a native of Oregon, and to their union were born seven children, Alice, Charles, Lottie, George, Dessia, Lee and Mary. In his political views Mr. Hobbs is a consistent democrat and has served as justice of the peace for two years. He is seventy-four years old and can look back upon a long and active life. His career included a period of development in the history of northwestern America and it is his greatest satisfaction that he found himself equal to bearing his part in the evolution by constant labor along progressive lines.

WILLIAM H. EGAN, one of the leading agriculturists and influential citizens of Marion county, is the proprietor of Mount View Farm, consisting of five hundred acres of land eight miles north of Salem. Practically his entire life has been spent in the Sunset state and for more than a quarter of a century he was here identified with educational interests as a school teacher. He is a native of Watertown, Wisconsin, his birth having there occurred on the 24th of November, 1850. His father, Patrick Egan, was born in Ireland, and when six years of age was brought to the United States by his parents, who made their home in Boston, Massachusetts, for four years. On the expiration of that period they established their home in the town of Nelson, New Brunswick, in British North America. It was there that Patrick Egan, at the age of twenty-one years, married Miss Catharine Canty. The young couple resided in New Brunswick for five years, at the end of which time their attention was called to the fact that Wisconsin, with her virgin soil, offered splendid inducements for the energetic and fearless to build up new homes. Accordingly they launched their fortunes with the new state, locating on a farm near Watertown. After improving the place and bringing it up to the standard of the farms at that date they disposed of the property and took up their abode in Watertown, where they remained until the spring of 1852. Fully appreciating the improvements in climatic conditions between New Brunswick and Wisconsin, they resolved to go still farther west and link their fortunes with the great Oregon country. In 1852, therefore, during the dangers of that long journey, they started across the plains with ox teams. Like other emigrants of that year, they suffered many privations, sickness and even death, losing their little daughter Margaret. They finally reached their new home on the banks of Mary river, near the present site of Philomath, in Benton county, and named their farm The Valley of Ease. In 1857 they removed to French Prairie, in Marion county, and purchased a large farm near the present site of Wacanda on the Oregon Electric railroad, where Patrick Egan died at the advanced age of ninety-one years. He was cheerful, progressive, artistic, conservative and notably temperate throughout his long life, never using tobacco nor any beverage stronger than tea. He was a devout communicant of the Roman Catholic church and a strict member of Father Mathew's Teetotal Temperance Society, having taken the pledge at the age of twenty-one years and faithfully preserving it for seventy years.

Mrs. Catharine (Canty) Egan was born in Clonokilty, County Cork, Ireland, in the year 1812. She came to America at the age of nineteen years and located in the town of Nelson in New Brunswick, British America, where at the age of twenty-one she gave her hand in marriage to Patrick Egan. Being a woman of unusual energy, she cheerfully joined him in the journey to Wisconsin and later, feeling that "westward the Star of Empire takes its way" and that new and beautiful homes were offered to those who had the courage to brave the dangers of the trip, she nobly joined her husband in all the privations of emigrant train and pioneer home. Although born in luxury and ease, she readily adapted herself to the hardships of pioneer life and by her beautiful example of resignation and fortitude cast a ray of sunshine on the rugged pathway of many a discouraged emigrant. Her cultured mind and artistic hand served as strong supports against the disappointments and ills of border life. She became the mother of seven children, as follows: Michael J., John T., James, Mary A., Margaret, William H. and Ellen M., of whom James, Mary A. and Margaret are deceased. Mrs. Catharine Egan was a member of the Roman Catholic church from early childhood, to which she faithfully clung through every reverse of fortune. She was also a scrupulous member of Father Mathew's Teetotal Temperance Society, having taken the pledge at the age of twenty-one and keeping it faithfully until her death, which occurred at the age of eighty-two years.

William H. Egan, whose name introduces this review, was in his second year when brought to this state by his parents. Regarding his youthful days he writes as follows: "I owe my early training and education to my mother, who from my early childhood insisted upon lessons at a certain allotted time each day and endeavored to keep the hour as promptly as possible, often leaving a task half done to hear my lessons. Owing to the fact that schools were distant from our pioneer home, my education continued in her hands until I was nine years old, when I entered my first public school—a good fifth grade pupil." After completing the graded-school course he attended high school at East Salem, later studied in McMinnville College and subsequently received special training in several private schools. He early manifested a studious nature and well fitted himself for the educational work which later devolved upon him. At the age of twenty years and six months he started out for himself with a capital of ten dollars, securing employment as a cutter of black pole rails at a wage of sixty-five cents per hundred, with the understanding that he pay his own board and that he need work only until a better opportunity offered itself. After cutting one hundred rails he was offered a better position at a dollar and a half per day and board, and soon received two dollars and board as a mower, reaper and header driver. In the fall he used half of his earnings in speculation and utilized the remaining sum in continuing his education. Securing a teacher's certificate, he opened his first school in Mission Bottom, Marion county, Oregon. In connection with his duties as an instructor he also devoted considerable time to athletics, becoming so proficient that he could leap from a falling horse without receiving even a scar. "On one occasion," he writes, "while riding rapidly, my horse turned turtle. While he was doing so, I sprang from the saddle, lit running and was only struck on the boot by the horse's hind hoof. On another occasion, near the present site of Wacunda, I was riding across a long eight-foot bridge. While in the middle an outside stringer broke. The bridge, horse and myself started down. I leaped from the saddle to the horse's head and then to solid footing, while the horse and broken section of the bridge fell into the creek below. I believe every boy and girl should be taught athletics for health, brain power and bodily safety."

Mr. Egan continued as a school teacher for twenty-six years with no intermission except the two years during which he held public office. With the exception of one year, he spent the entire period of his service as an educator within a radius of seven miles of his home, and he is justly proud of the fact that during the twenty-six years he never missed even a quarter of a day on account of illness. In the discharge of his duties during this period he spent much time in the saddle, riding more miles than measure the circumference of the globe. Since reaching man's estate he has also directed agricultural investments, has bought and sold acreage and has made much unimproved land profitable and productive. For the past five years he has directed the business incidental to the supervision of over one thousand acres. He is a strong believer in diversified farming and has always maintained that the farmer should be a student, keep abreast with the times, educate his children to the best of his ability and make them realize that there is no education or energy wasted on a well diversified farm. His home place, consisting of five hundred acres and known as Mount View Farm, is in Marion county, eight miles north of Salem, on the Salem and Champoeog road and also on the Oregon Electric railroad. This property is farmed on the diversified plan and on it may be found commercial orchards of peaches, pears, prunes and apples, fields of hops, grain and hay, large gardens of beaver dam and upland, together with all kinds of live stock.

On the 27th of December, 1886, at Salem, Oregon, Mr. Egan was united in marriage to Miss Julia B. Coffey, a daughter of James and Johanna (Horrigan) Coffey. Mrs. Egan was born in Salem, Oregon, on the 21st of October, 1868, and received her education at the Sacred Heart Academy of that place, being graduated from that institution in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Egan have three children, as follows: Albert J., Marguerite C. and Homer W.

Politically Mr. Egan is a democrat, but his patriotism has always transcended partisanship and he believes that it is the duty of every American citizen to uphold and extol the government and to exercise his right of franchise in correcting its mistakes. Notwithstanding the fact that Marion county is a republican stronghold, he was elected county clerk in 1892. Two years later he was a candidate for reelection and, though receiving double his party's vote, met defeat in the republican landslide of 1894. His religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic church, while fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World, the Grangers and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His residence here covers a long period and he has always stood for that which is progressive in citizenship, cooperating in various plans and measures for the material, social, intellectual and political progress of the community. His life has at all times been upright and honorable and the circle of his friends is almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances.

WILLIAM ABERNETHY is one of the venerable citizens of Forest Grove, having attained the age of eighty years. Much of this period has been spent in Oregon and in the improvement of his business opportunities here he has won success that now enables him to live retired. His birth occurred in New York city, September 16, 1831. His father, George Abernethy, was also a native of the American metropolis, born October 7, 1807, and there he acquired his education. In early manhood he wedded Anne Pope, who was born in Plymouth, England, September 10, 1811. Their wedding was celebrated in New York, January 21, 1830, and the remains of both now rest in River-view cemetery of Portland, Oregon, the father having died in that city May 2, 1877. The mother, however, passed away in New York city, April 30, 1884, but her remains were brought back to this state for interment. In the family were two children, the younger being Annie Abernethy, who became the wife of General H. C. Hodges, of the United States army who is now retired and lives in Buffalo, New York. His wife passed away in Washington, D. C., April 31, 1911. General Hodges is a graduate of the West Point Military Academy and was stationed first in the Indian Territory and later in Vancouver, Washington, where he served as adjutant of the Fourth Infantry. Subsequently he was transferred to California and afterward to Philadelphia.

Few residents of Oregon have resided within the borders of this state for a longer period than William Abernethy, who came to the northwest in 1840 when but nine years of age, landing at Vancouver, Washington, on the 1st of June, 1840, after having made the long voyage around Cape Horn on the ship Lausanne. His father came to the Pacific coast as secular agent of Methodist missions and was stationed first at Salem and afterward at Oregon City, assisting in building the Methodist church at the latter place. He also erected the first brick store in Oregon City, it being the second brick building in the entire state. He was very prominent as a factor in the early progress and up-building of this section of the country and was chosen the first provisional governor of Oregon Territory for two terms of four years. That he filled the office most capably is indicated by the fact that he was re-elected while on a trip to the Sandwich islands. Following the expiration of his second term and his retirement from office, he owned and operated the Linn City (Oregon) Works, a flour mill and saw mill, and when that business was burned out he turned his attention to the commission business in Portland, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred when he was sixty-six years of age.

WILLIAM ABERNETHY

Brought to the northwest in his early boyhood, William Abernethy largely acquired his education in Willamette University. Later he went to California, in 1849, attracted by the discovery of gold in that state. He next made his way to New York city, where he spent three years as a student in the James McEllicott School. He next became a student in the Phillips Academy in Andover, Massachusetts, in which he spent three years, and later matriculated for a three years' course in the scientific department of Yale University, completing his studies within the classical walls of that old institution in 1853. In the same year he returned to the Pacific coast, making his way to Oregon City, after which he began farming at Green Point. He next went to Portland, where he engaged in assaying for George Collier Robbins, of that city. He subsequently spent a year at The Dalles and another year at Boise, after which he returned to Portland, where he established a packing business and bag factory. Here he suffered losses through fire, the factory being totally destroyed, after which he removed to Abernethy Heights, near Oswego, Oregon, where he lived for about a quarter of a century, and then sold his property there, comprising one hundred and sixty and a third acres, to a syndicate. This is now one of the most beautiful residence districts in the vicinity of Portland. For a year thereafter he resided in the Rose city, and in August, 1891, removed to Coos county, where he continued until 1904. In that year he came to Forest Grove, where he still resides, resting now in the enjoyment of the fruits of his former toil and the handsome competence which he has gained through his investments.

On the 25th of June, 1863, Mr. Abernethy was married to Miss Sarah F. Gray, who was born November 25, 1843, at the mission near Salem, Oregon. Her father, William H. Gray, was born in New York state in December, 1810, and came to Oregon in 1836, with Dr. Marcus Whitman, engaging in missionary work. In early life he had been apprenticed to the cabinet makers' trade and later had studied medicine for three years, but ill health forced him to abandon his studies and go to the mountains. It was at this time that he associated himself with the American Board of Missions and this led to his removal to the Pacific coast. When he severed his connection with the missions he went to Clatsop Plains where he rendered medical aid to those in need of such service. At length he went east to buy sheep for himself and farmers in that locality. He brought the sheep across the plains to Portland, where he put them on flat boats to be taken to their destination, but a storm came up and wrecked the boats, so that all of the sheep were drowned. Mr. Gray thus losing everything that he had for he invested his entire fortune in the sheep. He at once sought employment in other ways, accepting anything that he could find to do in order that he might properly care for his family and retrieve his fortune. Going to Astoria he built a house and kept boarders. Later he removed to Fort Hope, on the Frazier river in British Columbia and built a sloop, after which he engaged in freighting between Fort Hope and Fort Yale, remaining at that point for two years, or in 1859 and 1860. He afterward built a sloop called the Sarah F. Gray, which he brought down the Columbia river. In July, 1861, he went to Portland and afterward to The Dalles and engaged in freighting on the Columbia and Snake rivers. Again he turned to Astoria and took up his abode upon a farm where his wife died, while he passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. Kamm, in Portland.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Abernethy were born thirteen children of whom three died in early life: George Henry, who passed away at the age of ten years; Mary, who died at the age of one year; and Priscilla, at the age of three years. The others are: Anna May, the wife of B. W. Starr, of Tacoma, Washington, in the office of the Shasta Limited; Caroline A., the wife of the Rev. H. F. Burgess, of Sunnyside, Washington; William Gray, who was in Alaska for eleven years and is now a mining engineer living in Tacoma, Washington; Edwin P. S. A., who is running a mill in Coos county; Violet O. G., the wife of Bennett Swanton, a lawyer of Marshfield, Oregon; Daisy S. F., who is the twin sister of Violet and the wife of Archie Hahn, of Whitman College, of Walla Walla, Washington; Pearl Dunning, the wife of M. C. Miller, of Dora, Oregon; Frances Mary, the wife of A. T. Hahn, a mining engineer with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company of Portland; Camilla D., at home; and Mizpah L., the wife of Virgil E. Waterman, of Welches, Oregon.

Such in brief is the history of William Abernethy, yet it tells little of his real experiences for he lived in this state long before its admission to the Union. At the time of his arrival here the major part of the great forests was uncut, the natural resources of the state were unimproved and the Indians far outnumbered the white settlers. Here and there a little settlement was to be seen and the seeds of civilization planted by the early residents have born rich fruit. Mr. Abernethy has not only been an interested witness of all the changes which have occurred as the years have gone by, but has ever borne his part in the work of public improvement and upbuilding.

WILLIAM WOOD is well known at Bonanza and in Klamath county as a dealer in horses. He owns a large feed shed and livery barn and is meeting with success in his undertaking. His birth occurred in Columbia county, Wisconsin, his natal day being May 1, 1859. His father, William Wood, Sr., was born in Scotland and after arriving in the new world was married near the birthplace of his son William, in Wisconsin, to Miss Lucy Hawkins, a native of the state of New York. Her people were pioneer settlers of Wisconsin and William Wood, Sr., also located there at an early day. Both he and his wife continued to live in that state until called to their final rest and he followed the occupation of farming in order to provide for the support of his family, which included ten children, all of whom are yet living with the exception of one daughter.

No event of special importance occurred to vary the routine of farm life for William Wood in his boyhood and youth. He worked in the fields with his father during the summer seasons and in the winter months attended the public schools. He was about twenty-five years of age when, in April, 1884, he left Wisconsin and made his way to Truckee, California, there remaining until the fall of 1887, when he came to Klamath county, Oregon. He settled on a ranch two miles from Dairy and engaged in its cultivation until 1907, when he took up his abode in Bonanza, although still supervising his ranching interests until April, 1912, when he sold his land. He is now engaged in the saloon business and also deals quite extensively in horses, owning about thirty head of draft horses and running stock. He has a large barn in addition, conducting a feed, sale and livery business. He is also the owner of a large residence which his wife conducts as a rooming house.

In August, 1908, Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Mrs. Etta Vincent, a widow, with one daughter. To this marriage has been born a daughter Thelma, now three years of age. Mr. Wood votes with the republican party and is interested in its success. While residing at Dairy he served as constable for many years and at the present writing he is deputy sheriff. He has also for many years been identified with the school board of Dairy. He is greatly interested in the upbuilding and progress of Bonanza and is a member of the Commercial Club.

H. L. CLOPTON, postmaster at Bonanza, was born November 9, 1870, in Missouri, and is the eldest of the five children of Thomas J. and Mary M. (Potter) Clopton, the former a native of Missouri, and the latter of Kentucky. They were married in Missouri and in 1874 removed westward to Idaho, where they lived for two years. They were afterward residents of the Willamette valley of Oregon until 1881, when they settled at Brownsboro, Jackson county, Oregon, and in 1888 came to Bonanza. The father died in Klamath Falls in 1893, when forty-three years of age, and the mother now makes her home in Berkeley, California. He followed merchandising during the greater part of his life, thus providing for his family of five children, namely: H. L.; C. O., living in Merrill; Kate, the wife of Richard Wells, of Roseville, California; Margaret, who is with her mother; and Percy, also at home.

H. L. Clopton remained at home until his father's death, or until 1893, and during that period acquired his education in the country schools. He started in life on his own account in 1893 as a dealer in cattle at Bonanza and was thus engaged until 1897, when he turned his attention to general merchandising, following that business until 1910, when he lost all in the great fire that swept over the town. In 1897 he was appointed postmaster at Bonanza, which position he now fills. He is also the owner of four hundred acres of land four miles east of the town which is constantly increasing in value as the district becomes more thickly settled.

On the 5th of April, 1903, Mr. Clopton was married to Miss Bertha M. Nichols, who was born at Bonanza, Oregon, October 3, 1880, and is a daughter of D. B. Nichols. They are the parents of three children, Carol, Ruth and Lyle. In politics Mr. Clopton is a republican and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He is recognized as one of the local leaders of his party and for three or four years has served as a member of the city council, in which connection he has exercised his official prerogative in support of many progressive public movements. For fourteen years he has been clerk of the school board and he is interested in the various plans and projects for the benefit of educational work here. His name is on the membership roll of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Rebekah lodge of Bonanza and he is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce, cooperating in the progressive work of that organization, whereby the advantages and resources of this district are exploited and trade interests promoted.

WILLIS EDWARD NEELY, whose home place is a visible evidence of a life of well spent activity, started out in the business world empty-handed and step by step has reached his present position as one of the substantial and progressive ranch owners of Coos county. He was born in Josephine county, Oregon, August 9, 1870, and is a son of Edward and Zilpha (Mays) Neely. The parents crossed the plains in 1852 from Illinois, of which state they were natives. They made their home in Illinois until they determined to remove to the northwest, in which year they took up their abode in Lane county, near Eugene, there residing until 1867. In that year they became residents of Josephine county. The father served in the Rogue river war of 1855-56, and in 1872 he went to Douglas county, where he lived for two years. He then came to Coos county, settling near Fairview. In different localities he shared in the work of pioneer development and improvement and his life was an element of value to the community. He died July 4, 1898, and is still survived by Mrs. Neely who makes her home with her son Willis. In the family were three children: John C., who died leaving a wife and one child, Florence, their home being near Fairview in Coos county; Willis; and Arthur Lee, of Coquille, Oregon, who has two children, Alvin and Ivan.

The experiences that fell to the lot of Willis E. Neely in his boyhood and youth were such as usually come to those who live upon the frontier. He started out in business life for himself in 1891 at the age of twenty-one years by leaving the farm and taking up a homestead. In the meantime he had acquired a good education by attending the district schools and the academy at Coquille, and when twenty years of age he began teaching in the district schools of Coos county. Before this time he had worked in the woods at logging and at different occupations and for different people. For eight years after attaining his majority he continued to engage in teaching school and alternated his educational work with employment in the woods and at logging. He also availed himself of opportunities for improving his homestead. For four years he was employed in a sawmill, but in more recent years he has concentrated his energies entirely upon agricultural interests. After selling his original homestead he purchased, improved and resided upon a number of farms before buying his present place of eighty acres, which he has since greatly improved. There are modern equipments upon his farm, together with good buildings and the latest improved machinery.

Mr. Neely was married in 1892 to Miss Leonora Bennell, a native of Tillamook county, Oregon, and a daughter of Edward and Louisa (Griner) Bennell. She was the eldest of their nine children, the others being: Nettie, the wife of Andrew Lilquist, of Rochester, Washington; Edna, the wife of Alfred Carlson, of Seattle, Washington; George, who is living in Redlands, California; Lloyd and Victor, who make their home in Shelton, Washington; Ernest, deceased; Fay, also of Shelton; and Garry, who has passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Neely have become the parents of five children: Alva, born in 1893; Sylvia, born in 1896; Myrtle, born in 1898; Elmer, born in 1899; and Mildred, whose birth occurred in 1902.

Mr. Neely is a socialist in his political views but has never been an office seeker. Since 1898 he has held membership in the Woodmen of the World. His home is near the Fairview bridge, not far from the town of Fairview, and its pleasant location and excellent improvements render it one of the attractive features of the landscape. Working earnestly and persistently year after year Mr. Neely has made steady advancement in a business way, and the success he has attained is well merited.

COLONEL FRANK H. TRUE is one of the organizers of the Home Building and Realty Company of Klamath Falls, an organization somewhat unique in its purposes and plans for the development and improvement of the city whereby monthly payments will insure to the purchaser the property that he desires. The commercial spirit is not all that lies back of this organization. It was planned with the view of aiding the home-seeker and thus up-building the town. In formulating the policy of the company and executing its plans Colonel Frank H. True has proved himself an enterprising, progressive and far-sighted business man. He was born in Janesville, Wisconsin, February 26, 1854, his parents being Frederick D. and Mary E. (Goodrich) True, both of whom were natives of New York. They were reared in that state but were married in Wisconsin and the father passed away in Rock county, Wisconsin, November 20, 1863, at the age of forty years and ten months. The mother long survived, her death occurring in Mitchell county, Iowa, June 25, 1901 when she was seventy-seven years of age. All through his life Frederick D. True had engaged in farming. He attempted to join the army in 1862, enlisting as a sharpshooter with the United States troops, but was rejected because of weak lungs. This was a very great disappointment to him for he knew that he was a fine shot, having been most skillful as a hunter, and his patriotic devotion to his country made him desire to use his skill in defense of the Union cause. It was not an unmanly thing, therefore, that tears came to his eyes when he learned that he would not be accepted. In his family were four children: E. Fred, now living in Los Angeles, California; Charles who died in infancy; Frank H.; and William H., who died in infancy.

Frank H. True resided in Rock county, Wisconsin, until August, 1876, and pursued his education in Milton College of the town of Milton, being graduated with the class of 1871. He then entered mercantile circles on the 1st of November, 1871, as a clerk at Edgerton, Wisconsin, and was thus employed until he started in business on his own account as proprietor of a store at Osage, Iowa, in 1879. He carefully managed his interests there until November, 1887, and during that period served as a member of the staff of Governor William Larrabee. Prior to his removal to the west he also attended the Centennial celebration in Philadelphia in 1876. In December, 1887, he became a resident of San Diego, California, where he engaged in dealing in real estate. In 1892 he removed to San Francisco, where he began business as an appraiser and real-estate and loan agent for the Renters Loan & Trust Company of San Francisco, in which position he continued for twelve years, or until 1904. He then entered the real-estate business at Los Angeles, California, and operated in property there until August 12, 1907, when he secured a patent of a process for the manufacture of common mill shavings into fuel and formed a corporation for the manufacture of that fuel under the name of the Economy Fuel Company of Phoenix, Arizona. The business was capitalized for one million dollars and five hundred and twenty-five thousand shares were issued. At the present time Colonel True is president of the company and owns a controlling interest in the stock. He also owns a half interest in the Scott Shavings & Sawdust Company of Los Angeles, California, which controls a majority of all shavings and sawdust at Los Angeles and at San Pedro.

On the 8th of February, 1912, Mr. True removed to Klamath Falls and organized the Home Building and Realty Company, of which he is now secretary and a member of the executive committee. This company is capitalized for two hundred thousand dollars, with one hundred thousand dollars fully subscribed at this date. He has been instrumental in interesting a number of capitalists in investments in Klamath Falls and while one of the more recent additions to the citizenship here, he is recognized as one who is doing much for the upbuilding of the district and the promotion of its commercial and industrial activity. He has the utmost confidence in this wonderful country and is a most active and helpful member of the Chamber of Commerce, in which he was appointed to the membership committee immediately after joining the organization.

On the 1st of May, 1877, Colonel True was united in marriage to Miss Hattie M. Annis, of Osage, Iowa, who is a native of Orleans county, Vermont, and is a daughter of Dr. Annis. They have one son, Dr. Herbert F. True, who is practicing in Los Angeles, California, as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear and throat. He was educated at the University of California and was graduated from the Medical College of Southern California in Los Angeles. He afterward pursued special courses in McGill College at Montreal, Canada, in the Royal Ophthalmic College of London, England, and in Vienna, Austria, where he completed a course on the eye, ear, nose and throat. After traveling for fourteen months on the continent he returned to America and has since practiced in Los Angeles. He was born in Osage, Iowa, August 14, 1879, and is most prominent for one of his years.

Colonel True although a resident of this district for a comparatively brief period, has become both prominent and popular in Klamath Falls and southern Oregon. He is yet in the prime of life and looks ten years younger. He keeps in close touch with the spirit of progress and enterprise resulting in the rapid upbuilding of this section and is a firm believer in its future. Colonel True has always been deeply interested in politics and manly outdoor sports. While in Milton College he was captain of the baseball team in 1869, 1870 and 1871. He has made many records in athletic circles, especially in connection with the Caledonian Scotch games at Madison, Wisconsin. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party and he is a warm admirer of Robert M. La Follette, the distinguished Wisconsin statesman. In 1889 and 1890 he spent two years in lower California and Mexico, during which period he acted as explorer for the International Company and was also appointed guide for Kate Field during her last trip to that country. Few men are more familiar with the history of the west during the past quarter of a century. He has been an interested witness of all that has occurred and marked its growth and development and at all times has been in the forefront among those who are seeking substantial results that shall be factors in the upbuilding of the Pacific coast country.

JOHN REYNOLDS, M. D. Dr. John Reynolds, a physician of Salem who in the long years of practice has demonstrated his ability to successfully cope with the intricate problems which are met in the efforts to restore health and check the ravages of disease, has practiced continuously in Salem since 1874. He was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, October 2, 1837, a son of Lloyd and Elizabeth (Glass) Reynolds, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. The father and mother removed to Washington county, Ohio, later in life and their deaths occurred in that locality. They were the parents of nine children, six of whom survive.

When John Reynolds was but three years of age his parents removed from Columbiana county, Ohio, to Washington county and it was in the latter place that he was reared and educated. After receiving the education which the common schools of Ohio offered he took up the study of medicine at the age of nineteen years under his father, who was a general practitioner. After having completed the medical course at Miami Medical College, he began practice at Beverly, Ohio, and remained there until 1874, when he came to Salem. He is one of the oldest practicing physicians in the city and has proven his skill and ability. From the outset of his professional career his labors have been attended with success viewed from both the professional and the financial standpoints. He has ever been most careful in the diagnosis of his cases and seldom if ever has been at fault in anticipating the outcome of a disease. He has not specialized in any particular field but has continued in the general practice of medicine and has kept in touch with its advancement by giving careful attention to the research and investigation which have been undertaken by the members of the medical fraternity. Without at any time neglecting the duties of his vocation he has interested himself in agriculture to the extent of overseeing the forty-nine acre fruit farm which he owns one mile north of the city limits of Salem. He has brought this property under a high state of productivity and it is planted to prunes, pears and cherries. His real-estate investments also include several valuable pieces of property in Salem.

DR. JOHN REYNOLDS

In 1860 Dr. Reynolds was married to Miss S. A. Truesdell, a native of Washington county, Ohio, and a daughter of J. M. and Adelia Truesdell, both of whom were born in Ohio and are now deceased. To Dr. and Mrs. Reynolds five children have been born: Mary E., who is residing at home and is teaching in Willamette University; Kate D., who is married to John Goltra, of Portland, Oregon; L. T., who is a fruit grower in Marion county; J. W., an attorney of Portland; and Harry B., deceased.

In politics Mr. Reynolds is a republican and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. His professional duties have brought him into close relations with many households and in all he commands the high regard and love of those to whom he has ministered. His life work has indeed been one of broad usefulness and in every relation he has lived up to the high ideals which he has set for himself.

HENRY A. STRONG. Whatever success has attended the efforts of Henry A. Strong is attributable entirely to his own labors. He has recognized the possibilities of this region and knows that patient, persevering effort will transform it into a rich agricultural district. He is, therefore, devoting his energies to farming, truck gardening and stock-raising and, working diligently day by day, he is meeting with a fair measure of prosperity. He was born in Josephine county, Oregon, July 16, 1870, and is a son of Louis and Catherine (Wimer) Strong, both of whom are natives of Missouri. They were married, however, in Iowa, to which state they had removed with their respective parents in childhood days. Unto them were born twelve children: James Frank, of Myrtle Point, Oregon, who is married and has a family of seven children; William J., also living at Myrtle Point; Lucy, the wife of E. W. Jones, of Myrtle Point, by whom she has four children; Henry A.; Louis M., of Arago, Oregon, who is married and has four children; Viola, who is the wife of Seldon Warner, of Myrtle Point, and has five children; Eugenia, the wife of William Floyd, of Riverton, Oregon, by whom she has five children; Alice A., the wife of C. L. Neil, of Ruckles, Oregon, and the mother of one child; J. C., of Myrtle Point, who is married and has two children; and Evan, Ralph and Eva, all deceased.

Upon his father's farm in Josephine and Coos counties Henry A. Strong spent the days of his boyhood, youth and early manhood to the age of twenty-four years. He was educated in Josephine county but had no special advantages. After putting aside his text-books he remained at home and assisted his father until three years after he had attained his majority. He then went to work in a gold mine in Josephine county, where he spent seven months, and at the end of that time he rented a tract of land and engaged in dairy farming and in raising grain. For a year he lived upon that place and then rented another farm for a period of four years. He next bought thirty-nine acres of land situated about two miles from Myrtle Point on the Dora road and he has made practically all the improvements upon the property save the erection of the residence. He now has seventeen acres under cultivation and raises green food for cows and also garden truck. He has likewise planted an orchard and year by year he is adding to the productiveness of his land through the careful cultivation and development of his fields. He also raises blooded stock, including fine horses and Jersey cows. In addition to his home place he has a timber claim about twelve miles from Myrtle Point and it is figured that there are four million feet of timber on the claim of a second growth. His business interests are of a character that contribute to public progress as well as to individual success and what he accomplishes represents the fit utilization of the innate talents which are his.

On the 9th of September, 1894, Mr. Strong was united in marriage to Miss Alice M. Berry, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of John and Mary (Warner) Berry, the former born in Ireland and the latter in Indiana. In that family were eight children: Mary E., deceased; John, living in Fort Klamath with his wife and two children; Olive, who is the wife of B. C. Shull, of Myrtle Point, and has eight children; William L., living in Allegany, Oregon; Alfred E., of Alaska; Mrs. Strong; Horace, of Prosper, Oregon, who is married and has two children; and Laura E., the wife of H. A. Schroeder, of Myrtle Point, and the mother of two children. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Strong have been born three children: Clarence H., born July 12, 1898; Bertha E., November 25, 1901; and Andra B., September 22, 1907.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Henry A. Strong has voted for the men and measures of the democratic party. He has served as a member of the school board and the cause of education finds in him a stalwart champion. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen camp and also to the Grange and is a citizen whose interest in the welfare and upbuilding of the community is deep and sincere. He recognizes something of the opportunities which are to be found in this section and at all times bends his efforts toward the improvement of the region which he has selected as his home, knowing that here as elsewhere, earnest and intelligently directed labor will be rewarded with substantial results.

BENJAMIN ROBERT PATTERSON is the junior member of the drug firm of Patterson & Son, which is doing a satisfactory business in Heppner, Oregon. He was born in Hornellsville, New York, January 28, 1874, a son of J. H. and Rebecca (Griffiths) Patterson, both of whom are living. The father came to Heppner in 1883, by stage from Montana. He entered the employ of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company as a locomotive engineer and was the first engine driver on the Heppner branch of that road, in the service of which he remained for twenty-one years. In 1889 although still on the railroad company's payroll, he engaged in the drug trade in Heppner, conducting it as a side interest until his son, Benjamin Robert Patterson, became actively connected with the business. The father then left the employ of the railroad company and since that time, both he and our subject have been actively engaged in the drug business in Heppner. In the spring of 1872 J. H. Patterson was married to Rebecca Griffiths, of Hornellsville, New York, and shortly afterward they came west, becoming pioneers on the Pacific coast. J. H. Patterson is a republican, and fraternally he holds membership in the Masonic order, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree. He belongs to the Shrine and is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Benjamin R. Patterson received his primary education in the public schools of Heppner and later entered the pharmaceutical department of the University of Buffalo, being graduated from that institution in 1897. He then returned to Heppner and in partnership with his father engaged actively in the drug business, which has since been successfully conducted under the firm name of Patterson & Son.

At Portland, Oregon, in July, 1900, Benjamin R. Patterson was united in marriage to Miss Addie Bean, a daughter of H. F. Bean of that city. Mr. Patterson is a republican and takes a reasonably active interest in matters of state. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, being one of its active members. The members of the firm of Patterson & Son are widely known in the community, where they are regarded as being among its best and most valued citizens. They are public-spirited, have great faith in the future of their county and town and, being genial in disposition and optimistic by nature, have during the course of their business and social careers formed an extensive acquaintance among the people of Morrow county, large numbers of whom are their intimate friends.

J. B. C. TAYLOR is a partner in the Crater Lake Navigation Company, being actively engaged as engineer and sometimes as captain on the steamer Mazama, plying on the Upper Klamath lake. He was born in Solano county, California, December 29, 1862, a son of G. W. and Elizabeth (Shoop) Taylor, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. They were married in the east and in 1854 the father made his way to California, after which he returned and brought his family to the Pacific coast. In 1866 he went to Idaho and in 1868 came to Oregon. Both he and his wife were residents of the Willamette valley at the time of their death, the father dying in 1907, at the age of seventy-four years, while the mother passed away in 1872, at the age of thirty-six.

J. B. C. Taylor was the fifth in order of birth in a family of eight children. He resided with his parents until 1879, when at the age of seventeen years, he began working for wages in Linn county. At different times he clerked in stores, taught school and worked in the mines, in lumber camps and at blacksmithing, shoemaking and carpenter-

ing. He also took up steamboating and has occupied the position of engineer on railroads as well as on steamboats. In the fall of 1885 he came to Klamath Falls, where he has since made his headquarters. He is a man of considerable mechanical ingenuity, able to turn his hand to almost any kind of work along industrial lines. He was employed for ten years by the government on the reservation but for the past four years has been connected with the steamer Mazama, acting most of the time as engineer but during a part of the time as captain. This has brought him a wide acquaintance and he has gained many friends during his residence in this district.

Fraternally Mr. Taylor is a Mason of high rank, belonging to the commandery and to the Mystic Shrine.

C. H. McCUMBER is the owner of a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres which is the only one all under cultivation in the Yonna valley. When it came into his possession it was covered with sage brush but in a comparatively short space of time the gray-green of the sage has given away to the golden harvests of autumn, while in the midst of the fields are found substantial buildings, giving ample shelter to grain and stock. Mr. McCumber was born in Readfield, Maine, August 2, 1860, and is a son of Horace and Elizabeth (Lane) McCumber, both of whom were natives of Maine and representatives of old New England families. The mother died in the Pine Tree state in 1882, at the age of fifty-four years, and about 1885 the father went to Texas, where his death occurred in 1888, when he was sixty-four years of age. He was a traveling salesman during the greater part of his life, thus providing for his family, which numbered five children. The three sons and two daughters of his household are: Willard A., now living in Pittsfield, Maine; Fred, who is living in Alaska; C. H., of this review; Eva, the wife of A. H. Yeaton, of Skowhegan, Maine; and Ella, the wife of George S. Healy, of New London, Connecticut.

C. H. McCumber remained a resident of the Pine Tree state until 1876, spending the period of his youth largely in school. He afterward traveled extensively over the United States, working at any employment that he could secure until he came to Oregon in the spring of 1882, making his way first to Portland. He was there employed on public works and remained a resident of the Rose City for six years, or until 1888, when he took up his abode on his present ranch of two hundred and eighty acres in the Yonna valley. He preempted and homesteaded this tract, which was covered with sage brush. Presently he undertook the work of cultivating crops where heretofore the wild brush grew at will, and today he has the only ranch in the Yonna valley that is all under cultivation. He carries on general farming and stock-raising and in addition is a timber cruiser and locates lands for settlers. His example in the development of his property is one well worthy of emulation and his efforts have been a potent element for the upbuilding of the district.

In October, 1909, Mr. McCumber was united in marriage to Mrs. Elizabeth Alred, a native of Oregon and a daughter of W. H. Teters. By her former marriage she had two children, Earl and Ora. Mr. McCumber may be called an independent republican but is liberal in both his political and religious views and holds rather to an independent course instead of binding himself by any creed or platform. His fellow townsmen recognize in him a reliable, trustworthy business man and one who merits his success because it has been won through industry.

PETER NELSON. The name of Peter Nelson figures prominently in connection with events that have left their impress upon the history of Oregon and the northwest, and by reason of this and his personal work as a citizen he well deserves mention in this volume. He was one of the pioneers of Gardiner, where he still makes his home. His birth occurred in Norway, May 27, 1837, his parents being Nels and Martha Olsen, both of whom were born, lived and died in Norway. In 1851, when fourteen years of age, Peter Nelson came to the United States. He was then following a sea-faring life and sailed out of New York until 1858, when he came around the Horn to San Francisco. He there made his headquarters for a time, sailing out of the Golden Gate for two years on trips to the sound. While in the northwest he made a trip to Australia, where he spent the winter, after which he returned to San Francisco and continued on the sea until 1867. That year witnessed his arrival in Gardiner, at which time the inhabitants of the town numbered but three families. Mr. Nelson began work here in the lumber mills and was thus employed for about three years. He afterward went to Scottsburg where he engaged in the saloon business for three years and then returned to Gardiner where he bought a saloon, which he conducted successfully for thirty-four years. He retired from active life in 1907 and has since enjoyed a rest, made possible by his careful expenditures and his able business management in former years.

In 1877 Mr. Nelson was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Sawyer, a daughter of Andrew Sawyer who was a pioneer of Umpqua county, now Douglas county, of 1850. His daughter Anna was the first white child born in that county and Mrs. Nelson was the second. Andrew Sawyer took up a donation claim on the Umpqua river about nine miles above Scottsburg, and the farm is now owned by his son William Sawyer. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have been born three children: Anna L., the wife of George Perkins of Gardiner; Fannie, who married Captain Gust Westerdale of San Gabriel, Oregon; and Peter A., of Gardiner.

Mr. Nelson is a democrat in politics, prominent in local ranks of the party and for several years served as chairman of the county committee and as a delegate to state conventions. In fact, he was the dominant factor in democratic politics in this district but always refused any political preferment for himself. He belongs to Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E., and is a charter member of Aurora Lodge, No. 59, A. F. & A. M., of Gardiner. With many important events of this region he has been closely associated. He was one of a crew of thirty who took the steamer Swan up the Umpqua river to Roseburg, this being the first and only vessel that has made the trip. At that time it was thought feasible to navigate as far as Roseburg and several thousand dollars were spent in deepening the channel. After the trip was made congress gave an appropriation of fifty thousand dollars for more work, and while the more powerful steamer Enterprise was built for that service it was found to be impracticable and the navigation of the upper Umpqua was abandoned. For years Mr. Nelson was a factor in political life of Douglas county and became widely known throughout southern and central Oregon. He has always taken a progressive stand in support of public measures and is one of the first to foster and support any movement for the advancement of the interests of Douglas county.

EDWARD FREUER, whose home property, known as the Seven Springs Ranch, is splendidly located not far from Bonanza, has been a witness of the arrival of every settler in the Poe valley, for he is a pioneer here and others have followed in his footsteps in choosing this location as a place of residence. He was born in Suffolk county, England, April 1, 1854, and is a son of W. L. B. and Elizabeth (Ray) Freuer, who spent their entire lives in the mother country. Edward Freuer was the eighth in order of birth in a family of nine children and is the only one that ever came to the United States. He arrived at his present place of residence in 1882 and has since made this his home, covering a period of thirty years. His boyhood days and youth were spent in his native country and for some time he worked in accountant offices in London. He also engaged in farming for six years in England and since arriving in Oregon has led the life of a ranchman, having at the present time four hundred and eighty acres on section 1, township 40, range 11, east, in the Poe valley. The place is today well fenced and upon it is a comfortable residence and good barns and outbuildings for the shelter of grain and stock. It is appropriately named the Seven Springs Ranch by reason of the seven different springs which are found upon the place. Many modern conveniences, accessories and improvements have been introduced and the farm is today one of the valuable properties of the community.

Mr. Freuer was married in England in 1880 to Miss Claudine Cheney, who was born in Gloucestershire, England, in 1856. They have become the parents of four children, all of whom were born upon the old home ranch, namely: Ray; Bertha, who is the wife of R. D. Wagner, living at Calgary, in the Alberta province of Canada; Sidney; and Frances, at home. Sidney and Ray each own a quarter section of land adjoining their father's property and are enterprising young business men of this part of the state.

Mr. Freuer came to Oregon a poor man and acquired land cheap. He has won prosperity through his dealings in live stock, making a specialty of cattle for a quarter of a century. At the present time he is engaged in dairying and he also handles horses. He has worked with unfaltering purpose to accomplish what he had set out to do and his success is the logical and legitimate outcome of his earnest purpose, careful management and determination.

Mr. Freuer is interested in the public welfare of the community to the extent of giving aid to many movements for the general good. In politics he is a democrat but takes only a citizen's interest in the questions of the day, never seeking political preferment. He had the first postoffice established in Poe valley, calling it Bedfield after his old home. After ten years this postoffice was discontinued. He helped to establish district No. 20 and has been a school officer most of the time. For ten or twelve years he conducted a road house on his ranch and entertained many of the leading stock men of the community. He also gave an acre of land and established the cemetery conducted under the name of the Bedfield Mutual Burial Association. He is today the oldest resident in Poe valley and has taken a most active and helpful part in promoting its interests along lines leading to continuous development and progress. There has been nothing spectacular in his entire life. He has worked earnestly and perseveringly day by day, knowing that industry and close application are the basis of all honorable success. He has had the usual experiences of the pioneer dairyman and farmer upon the frontier and he has lived to triumph over difficulties and obstacles and reach a place among the substantial residents of this part of the state.

THOMAS JEFFERSON BRATTAIN. The specific and distinctive office of biography is not to give voice to a man's modest estimate of himself and his accomplishments but rather to leave the perpetual record establishing his position by the consensus of public opinion. Judged in this light, Thomas Jefferson Brattain was one of the most prominent, influential and valued citizens who have lived in southern Oregon. He was very successful in his business undertakings and his life was fraught with many good deeds—the expression of his generosity and his deep interest in his fellowmen. He was born January 2, 1829, in Illinois, and was the second child of the Hon. Paul Brattain, who was a native of North Carolina. At an early day the latter removed to Tennessee when that state was a wilderness, became a resident of Illinois when it was a territory and went to Iowa when it was the "far west," settling on the broad prairie east of Keosauqua. Still he felt the lure of pioneer life and in 1852 came to Oregon, taking up his abode upon a farm in Lane county, which he occupied to the time of his death. He became known throughout that section of the state as "Uncle Paul," a term expressive of his kindly nature and of the affectionate regard entertained for him by all who knew him. He was a man of much more than ordinary ability, as manifest in his business affairs and in his active connection with public life. He filled many positions of prominence, leaving the impress of his individuality upon the history of Illinois, Iowa and Oregon as a member of the constitutional conventions of those states. He served as county auditor of Lane county under the territorial government and for many years held the position of county agent. His plans were well formulated and carefully executed in office and in business life, and he carried forward to successful completion whatever he undertook. His family numbered ten children: John, who died in Baker, Oregon; Thomas J.; Alfred, who formerly lived near Springfield, Oregon, but who died in 1909; William, a resident of the Columbia river country; Marion, who died in Lane county, this state; Cyrus, who formerly lived on the old homestead in Lane county and died in September, 1912; Elizabeth, the deceased wife of James Ebert; Mary, who died in her father's home; Martha, the deceased wife of Robert Hadley; and Emilie, the wife of Frank Smith, of Jasper, Oregon.

Thomas J. Brattain accompanied his parents on their various removals and was a young man of twenty-one years when he came to the west. He had already become familiar with the various experiences of pioneer life in the different states where they had lived, his boyhood being largely passed in Van Buren county, Iowa, when it was a frontier district. It was in the spring of 1850, when twenty-one years of age, that he joined a wagon train proceeding westward. He walked most of the way, driving an ox team, and in the fall arrived in the placer fields of California, where he remained until the spring of 1851. Removing to western Oregon, he first settled in Linn county but soon afterward went to Lane county, taking up his abode near Springfield. He purchased a tract of land there and at the time of his death was the owner of three hundred acres adjoining Springfield on the east, which is now the property of his widow. In 1869 he removed to Langells valley, in Klamath county, and in 1873 took up his abode in the Chewaucan valley, in Lake county, locating on the place where his remaining days were passed and where his widow now resides. He engaged in the cattle business, which he followed on the ranges of Lake and Klamath counties for more than forty years. He was still actively engaged in business with his sons at the time of his death. His enterprise, determination and energy were ever strong features in his career and he moreover displayed sound judgment, keen insight and unfaltering purpose. As the years went by his business affairs prospered, bringing him a very substantial and gratifying measure of success, and his dealings were ever characterized by the strictest principles of integrity and honor.

THOMAS J. BRATTAIN

On the 30th of June, 1859, in Lane county, Oregon, Mr. Brattain was married to Miss Permelia Jane Gillespie, who was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, June 4, 1838, and in 1852 crossed the plains to Lane county with her parents, Jacob and Elmira (Hanna) Gillespie. She was married in the house which her father built on first coming to the west. He was a native of Sumner county, Tennessee, and died in Lane county, Oregon, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. Her mother had passed away in Missouri, in 1845, and the father afterward married Mrs. Amelia Wood Martin, whose death also occurred in Lane county, Oregon. There were seven children by the first marriage, of whom Mrs. Brattain was the fourth in order of birth. By her marriage she became the mother of four children, as follows: Celesta Maude, the wife of James Small, of Sumner Lake, Lake county; Judge Elden Marcellus Brattain, a practicing attorney of Lakeview, who at one time was county judge and who is married and has two sons; and Hazen Adelbert and Paul Jacob, who are partners in stock-raising interests in Lake county. The former resides on the ranch with his mother. He is a graduate of the State University of Oregon and is one of the most extensive stockmen of Lake county. He is also well known as the vice president of the First National Bank, of Lakeview, and as a leading and active republican who for one term has represented his district in the state legislature.

Thomas J. Brattain was also a prominent factor in political circles and earnestly advocated republican principles, believing that in the platform of the party were contained the best elements of good government. During the Civil war he served as sheriff of Lane county and afterward became the first sheriff of Lake county, filling that position when Lake and Klamath counties were one. In early life he took an active and helpful interest in educational affairs, gave to his children good opportunities in that direction and served on the school boards of both Lakeview and Paisley. He also assisted his neighbors in building a schoolhouse at the south end of the Chewaucan valley, it being at the time the only one between Prineville, Crook county, on the north and the Pine Creek district on the south. At that time the town of Lakeview had not sprung into existence and there were only a few hundred people in Lake county. The district as petitioned for included Chewaucan, Sumner Lake and Silver Lake.

Early in October, 1909, Mr. Brattain, while out on the hills gathering plums, suffered a slight stroke of paralysis from which he seemed never to fully recover. Later he incurred a cold which developed into pneumonia, and he passed away on his ranch, four miles south of Paisley, on the 3d of December, 1909, when almost eighty-one years of age. His was a well spent and honorable life which gained for him the high regard and respect of all who knew him. He was very generous to those in distress, having never been known to refuse assistance to anyone in need. His home was a hospitable one, displaying the spirit of old-time hospitality when "the lathstring was always out." He gave more money to the San Francisco sufferers at the time of the earthquake than any other man in Lake county. He did not profess to be a religious man but the true spirit of Christian helpfulness and ministry was exemplified in his life. He ever made wise use of his time and opportunities, not only for the benefit of himself but for friends and neighbors and for the community at large. The world is better for his having lived and his life record constitutes an example well worthy of emulation. He established in Lake county one of her oldest, wealthiest and most prominent families and at his death he was able to leave to his widow and children a most handsome competence as the visible evidence of a well spent life, his acres and his cattle being numbered by the thousands.

MOORE BROTHERS. Elsworth and Elmer Moore are now operating the ranch of five hundred and twenty acres in the Poe valley, on which the family have resided since 1893. The place is now devoted to general farming and stock-raising and indicates the careful supervision and practical management of the two brothers, who are natives of Sutter county, California, their birth having occurred about eight miles from Marysville, in the Sacramento valley, on the 18th of October, 1875. Their parents were William P. and Clara (Chambers) Moore, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively, the latter having been born in 1846. They were married in Missouri, and in 1872 became residents of California, where they lived for fourteen years, coming to Oregon in 1886. On arriving in this state they took up their abode upon a ranch that constitutes a part of the Hot Springs addition to Klamath Falls. This ranch was cleared by the family, who lived there for eight years, and the two brothers then came to their present ranch in Poe valley in 1893. The place today comprises five hundred and twenty acres of rich and productive land which is devoted to general farming and stock-raising.

In the family were seven children: George, now living at Moulton, Washington; Elsworth and Elmer, twins; Charles, a resident of Lake county, Oregon; Bertha, who died in 1891 at the age of twenty-two years; Ethel, the wife of J. B. Casey, of Ashland; and Grover, who is in the government civil service at Chico, California.

The family came to Oregon by wagon. Mrs. Moore made the trip with three of her children, who were then quite small, camping at night along the way, for the big wagons had gone on ahead. The family had a hard struggle in the early years and met with extensive financial reverses caused by the loss of their stock and other unavoidable conditions. The loss of an accomplished daughter also added to the weight of the trials which the family had to bear. The mother and children, however, struggled on bravely and prosperity has at length rewarded their efforts in the reclamation of their claim and in the development of their farming property which now constitutes one of the well improved ranches of this part of the state. The sons who are now in charge are young men of marked enterprise and ability and their capable and progressive methods are indicated by the excellent condition of their farm.

F. W. BOLD. The enterprising and growing town of Bonanza finds a worthy representative of the progressive element in its citizenship in F. W. Bold, a successful blacksmith who is doing all kinds of iron work and wagon work in wood. He was born December 17, 1857, in New Lisbon, Wisconsin, and is a son of James and Lydia (Kidd) Bold, who were natives of England and were married there. They came to the United States in 1830, settling first in Illinois, while later they removed to Wisconsin. The father was foreman for seven years at the Bain Wagon Works, and also spent seven years in the J. I. C. Plow Works. He was closely associated with mechanical interests throughout his entire life to the age of seventy years, when he retired, well meriting the rest which he enjoyed throughout his remaining days. Both he and his wife died in Wisconsin at the ages of eighty-seven and eighty-eight years, respectively. They reared a family of seven children: Henry, deceased; George, who resides in Wisconsin; Mrs. Anna Taylor, who has also passed away; F. W., the subject of this review; Byron, who makes his home in California; Ella, the wife of William Chase, of Nebraska; and Edward, of Wisconsin.

F. W. Bold resided at the place of his birth until twenty-one years of age and when a lad of thirteen began learning the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until about twenty-two years of age. He then became agent for the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company in Grant, occupying that position from 1879 until 1888. Since that time he has largely devoted his attention to blacksmithing, which he followed in Goldendale, Washington, and The Dalles, Oregon, until January, 1908, when he came to Bonanza and here opened a blacksmith shop. He does all kinds of iron work and wagon work in wood and his business is an extensive one, necessitating the employment of at least two and oftentimes three workmen throughout the year. He also handles barbed wire and agricultural implements. Bonanza wagons, hacks, plows, etc. His patronage is steadily growing and his business is now a profitable one.

In 1888 Mr. Bold was united in marriage to Miss Ida Sparks, who was born at Goose Lake, Oregon, and died in 1905, at the age of thirty-eight years. They lost three children in infancy, while two are yet living: K. L., who works with his father in the shop; and Cecile, who is managing the household affairs for her father. Mr. Bold votes with the republican party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but does not seek nor desire office. He has membership relations with the Modern Woodmen, the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias. There have been no exciting chapters in his life record but his history is characterized by faithful performance of duty and by unfaltering industry that has brought him a substantial measure of success and made him recognized as one of the trustworthy citizens of his district.

PROFESSOR JOHN GRAY IMEL. Perhaps no appointment of an individual to a position in the public service of Astoria has given more uniform satisfaction than when Professor John Gray Imel was again called upon to take charge of the public-school interests of this city as superintendent for a three years' period that will continue him in the office until 1914. His record as an educator has been a most creditable one, crowned with that success which is the expression of duty faithfully and capably performed. He was born September 29, 1871, in Jefferson county, Indiana, and is descended from one of two brothers who came from Germany just prior to the Revolutionary war. All trace was lost of one of the brothers but the other married and removed to Indiana, becoming the progenitor of the representatives of the name in that state and in Ohio. His parents were James M. and Anna (Gray) Imel, both of whom were natives of the Hoosier state, whence they removed to Ford county, Kansas, in 1878. There the father engaged in the stock-raising business and is still the owner of a large ranch in that county. The children, six sons and three daughters, are yet living.

Professor Imel supplemented his public-school course by academic training in Kansas and his professional training in the Oklahoma State Normal School, while his more advanced training was received in the University of Chicago. He received the degree of Master of Arts from Milton University. In early manhood he determined upon the profession of teaching as his life work and that his choice has been the pursuit for which nature evidently intended him is indicated in the successful outcome of his labors which have won wide commendation in the various localities where he has taught. He was a teacher in the common schools of Kansas in 1892 and 1893, and of Oklahoma in 1895 and 1896. In 1900 he was appointed to a position as instructor in the Oklahoma Central State Normal School and in 1904 was appointed professor of Latin in the same school, occupying that position until 1908. In the latter year he accepted the principalship of the high school of Astoria, Oregon, and the following year was chosen superintendent of the Astoria city schools for a term of two years. In 1911 he was re-elected for a term of three years, on which occasion the Morning Astorian of May 7, 1911, said: "The pleasant and satisfying news developed yesterday that the board of directors of Astoria school district had secured the further service of Professor J. G. Imel as superintendent of the city schools for a period of three years and at an advanced salary. Mr. Imel has been a most faithful and efficient officer and has given the city and its big school system the best possible care in the past and his retention means much for the immediate future of the young people of Astoria, with whom he has been an influence for good in many ways, as well as a dependable custodian of the public interests in that direction, and the Morning Astorian takes pleasure in congratulating both the board and Mr. Imel upon the conclusion of this gratifying business." In the Astoria Daily Budget of the 8th of May appeared the following: "In the reappointment of Professor J. G. Imel as superintendent of the city schools for a term of three years the local school board has, we believe, made a judicious move. Mr. Imel has during the time he has been the head of the city school department handled the affairs of that position in a manner that has reflected credit upon himself and also been of great benefit to the educational system. A strict disciplinarian, he has established a system embracing the entire school department that has created and maintained harmony among the different schools and branches and thus accomplished better results in behalf of the pupils." The only business connection which Professor Imel has ever held outside the strict path of his public profession was that of director of the Citizens Bank at Edmond, Oklahoma, from 1902 until 1905.

In 1894 in Genda Springs, Kansas, Mr. Imel was married to Miss Sarah N. Mann, a daughter of S. S. Mann, of Gladbrook, Iowa, a descendant of Horace Mann. The only child born unto Professor and Mrs. Imel is Dea L. Imel. Professor Imel devotes his undivided attention to his family and his professional duties, yet with his wide reading keeps abreast with the best thinking men of the age upon subjects which are of significant and vital interest. He holds to high standards in his chosen life work and is continuously seeking out new methods whereby he may reach his ideal. Moreover, each forward step brings him a broader outlook and wider opportunity and his work is of increasing usefulness as the years go by.

ORA W. TAYLOR is general manager of the Gearhart Park Company, which owns one of the most attractive seaside resorts along the Pacific coast, and in this connection his business ability and executive qualities are resulting in the attainment of a gratifying measure of success. He was born in Algona, Iowa, February 13, 1865, and is a son of James M. and Velonia (Foster) Taylor, the former a native of Jamestown, New York, and the latter of Pennsylvania. The father was a carpenter by trade but after his marriage took up his abode upon a homestead near Algona, Iowa, and was associated with agricultural interests in that locality for a number of years. He came to Oregon in 1874 and settled at Oregon City, where he lived for a year, after which he spent two years in Salem. On the expiration of that period of time he began farming at New Era, Clackamas county, and was very successful in his labors there. As the years passed he acquired a comfortable competence, with which he retired about eleven years ago, establishing his home in Portland, where he still resides at the age of about eighty years, his birth having occurred July 19, 1832. One of the most creditable chapters of his life record covers his experience as a soldier in the Civil war. He served as a member of Company D, Twelfth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and participated in a number of important engagements, including the battle of Fort Donelson, in which he was wounded, being struck on the shoulder by a grape shot when the troops were storming the breastworks and he had almost reached the top. A spirit of patriotism has characterized his entire life. In matters of citizenship he ever stands for progress and improvement. He holds membership with Oregon City Post, G. A. R., and belongs to Oregon City Lodge, I. O. O. F. In 1906 he was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who passed away at the age of fifty-eight years, dying in the faith of the Congregational church, of which she had long been a consistent member. In his family are two sons and a daughter: Frank M., who is living in Benton county; Clara, the wife of George Broughton, of Irvington; and Ora W.

Ora W. Taylor was a lad of about nine years when the family left Iowa and came to Oregon. In this state he was reared upon the home farm to the age of seventeen years, when he started out in the business world to provide for his own support. He began studying telegraphy with the Western Union Telegraph Company in their Salem office under William Dumars and in 1883 became agent and operator for the Oregon & California Railroad at Glendale, Oregon. After two years he was transferred to Portland as night operator in the dispatcher's office and subsequently was operator and assistant dispatcher until 1892, when he was promoted to the position of chief train dispatcher. He severed his connection with railway interests in 1906. During the last two years of his work in that field of business he acted as train master and assistant superintendent. Gradually he worked his way upward as he gave proof of his ability and the same spirit of progress has characterized him since severing his connection with railway interests. His next step in the business world brought him to the position of manager of the real-estate department of the firm of Hartman & Thompson, with whom he continued for two years. During this time Rose City addition, the largest residence section of the city of Portland, was platted under his direction. He afterward became manager of the Ruth Trust Company and in November, 1909, was also elected to the presidency of that institution, after which he continued to act both as its president and general manager until April, 1911, when he resigned on account of impaired health. After a rest by which he was greatly benefited he became identified with the Gearhart Park Company as its general manager. Gearhart Park is located on the seashore of Astoria. Thousands of dollars have been spent in its improvement and thousands more are being expended to keep the improvements proportionate to its rapid growth. Because of the salubrious climate of Oregon it is an all-the-year-round resort. The place has great natural beauties, to which the work of man has added. Only a year or two ago the company erected a splendid hotel, one of the finest to be found on the coast. It contains spacious parlors and also sun parlors. The magnificent dining room and many large chambers are fitted with every modern convenience. It has broad verandas overlooking the sea and a splendid natatorium, where one can have warm salt water baths if surf bathing is not desired. In the rear of the hotel is a beautiful stretch of natural forest. All around the hotel have been erected attractive cottages for the park is artistically laid out and offers every advantage to those who wish to have homes at a seaside resort. An attraction of the season of 1911 was a Chautauqua, for which superior talent was secured. The management is making every effort to sustain the high reputation which Gearhart has already enjoyed as one of the most popular, attractive and high-class resorts on the Pacific coast. As general manager Mr. Taylor's efforts are a potent element in the accomplishment of this result.

In 1897 occurred the marriage of Ora W. Taylor and Miss Nellie Beverly, a daughter of John Beverly, of Canyonville, Oregon, and they have three children, Anna Marie, Gretchen and Robert. Mr. Taylor is a life member of the Portland Commercial Club. He is a public-spirited citizen and his efforts and cooperation can always be counted upon to further any movement for the general good. He served on the charter commission appointed by Mayor Simon and he has in many other ways given tangible evidence of his devotion to Portland and her upbuilding. He is a man of unflinching courtesy, always earnest and genial and his frank and cordial address wins confidence.

LEE LAUGHLIN is one whose life interests have been closely associated with the progress and development of Yamhill county. His activity in the business and political affairs of Yamhill, where he now resides, has shown that he is not wanting in those essential features of judgment and integrity which win the success due to the man displaying them. The intimate connection he has had with the development of Yamhill has proved his foresight, sound judgment and altruism.

Mr. Laughlin was born in Lincoln county, Missouri, January 17, 1833. His father, Samuel Laughlin, was a native of Pendleton district, South Carolina, while his mother, Nancy (Doughty) Laughlin was a native of Buncombe county, North Carolina. They were married in Missouri, where they lived for seventeen years. The father had been previously married and had lived in Missouri seven years. By his first union there were seven children, all of whom are now deceased. In 1847, crossing the plains to Oregon, Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin settled in Yamhill county and each took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. Mrs. Laughlin's death occurred before she had proved her claim and it reverted to the government under the ruling of the donation law. Mr. Laughlin, however, lived upon his original three hundred and twenty acres throughout the remainder of his life, engaging in farming and stock-raising. By his second marriage he also had seven children, namely: William, living retired in Yamhill, Oregon; Lee, the subject of this sketch; Samuel, who died in 1911 at the age of seventy-six years; Delia, who married William Smith and both are now deceased; Nancy, the widow of J. D. Capps, of Portland; Lucinda, who married J. W. Sapington but both have now passed away; Mary, the deceased wife of G. W. Sapington, also deceased.

When but sixteen years old Lee Laughlin started to make his own way in the world. Lured by the reports of gold in California, he and a number of companions eventually worked their way to Trinity river after various prospecting trips. The rainy season began after he had worked about two and one-half months and Mr. Laughlin found himself without employment in a strange country and without provisions necessary for existence. Forced by these conditions, he walked the greater part of the way to San Francisco, from which place he set sail in a bark, the Ann Smith, of which Captain Flanders was master, for Portland and proceeded north by ocean to the mouth of the Columbia river. Reaching home, he remained there until 1851, but gold mining again seemed to make a stronger appeal than farming and for the second time Mr. Laughlin set out for California. He found however that there was little gold to be dug at Yreka and was soon back home in Oregon. After farming for one year he took a three years' course of study at the Tualatin Academy and the Pacific University. About the time he finished this work the Indian war broke out and his love of adventure led him to enlist as a volunteer in that treacherous war. He actively served for three months.

On October 8, 1856, Mr. Laughlin was married to Emma Stewart, a daughter of Benjamin and Ann (Crumbaker) Stewart, of Putnam county, Ohio, who crossed the plains with their family in 1847. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were both born in Pennsylvania and died in Oregon. They were the parents of eight children: Mrs. Laughlin; David C. deceased; Eminger, who resides in Grant county, Oregon; James and Orville, both deceased; Montgomery, of Monmouth, Oregon; Frances A., deceased, who was the wife of John Fox, of Astoria; and Eva, the wife of John Stewart.

After his marriage Mr. Laughlin located on a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres which he had previously taken up. He lived upon this for eight years and then removed to Idaho, where he remained for two years. After his return he sold his claim and embarked in the general merchandise business in North Yamhill. With his partner, Francis Hauswirth, he carried on this business successfully for eight years, but in 1874 he sold his interest and now that leisure was again his, he started on another trip. This time he went toward the center of that civilization which he had helped to advance in its progress in the west. After visiting various points of interest he attended the Centennial Exposition, then being held in Philadelphia.

Upon his return to Oregon Mr. Laughlin purchased a farm of one hundred and eighty acres, immediately adjoining the town of Yamhill. This was a business deal, contracted purely as such, for instead of engaging in agricultural pursuits upon it he sold it in a very short time in two separate tracts. In 1877 he again engaged in mercantile business, entering into a partnership in Yamhill, which connection lasted for nine years. At the end of that time he sold out and built himself a very substantial and comfortable residence which he now occupies. The discontinuance of this business undertaking marked the close of his mercantile activities.

In politics Mr. Laughlin is an enthusiastic and vigorous supporter of the republican party. His first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln. In 1860 he began serving his party by accepting offices. His first position was that of county assessor of Yamhill county and he acted in that capacity during 1860 and 1861. In 1870 he was elected to the Oregon state legislature and again to the same office in 1874. His third election to the legislative body of his state took place in 1880 and again he served a full term. He introduced a resolution before the house of representatives to amend the state constitution, striking out the word "male" from the qualification of the electors, thus giving woman equal suffrage with man. This resolution was passed by the house and subsequently by the senate but when finally submitted to the vote of the people of the state was defeated.

In his own city he showed his public spirit and interest in the general welfare by an active support of the public schools, serving for many years as director. He also acted as president of the city council for several terms. In March, 1888, Mr. Laughlin was one of the organizers of the McMinnville National Bank at McMinnville, Oregon, and was its first vice president. This office he held for eight years and, upon the death of the president, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy, an office which he was particularly well qualified to hold. After eleven years' service as president, Mr. Laughlin felt that the arduous duties of the position were too great for him to assume any longer and he retired from the presidency but is still a director.

In 1901 Mr. Laughlin was called upon to mourn the death of his first wife, who died February 11 at the age of sixty-three years. In 1904 he married Miss Anna Brown and by this union has one child, Lee Laughlin, Jr., born October 23, 1905. The family now reside in a very fine home, which is one of the most beautiful residences of Yamhill and adds much to the attractiveness of the city.

Mr. Laughlin's influence has been felt throughout the state of Oregon. As an agriculturist, a merchant, a banker, a politician, a legislator, and as a citizen he has held the confidence of all with whom he came in contact, and this confidence has never been misplaced. To such men as Mr. Laughlin a community and a state owe a lasting debt which can be partially eradicated by grateful appreciation and by a continuance of the valuable and broad lines of work their activities have established.

ARTHUR T. LANGELL has for twenty-six years been actively connected with live-stock interests in Klamath county. For a considerable period he raised stock but at the present time is buying and shipping only. His sound judgment concerning the value of horses and cattle has enabled him to make judicious investments, which have been followed by success. He was born in Jacksonville, Jackson county, Oregon, February 10, 1866, and is a son of Nathaniel and Loretta Jane (Hensley) Langell, natives of Nova Scotia and of St. Joseph, Missouri, respectively. The father went to Ohio in his boyhood days and there learned the trade of shoemaking, after which he came to Oregon by way of the Isthmus route, arriving in this state about 1852. It was still a frontier district, in which the work of improvement was being slowly and steadily carried forward. He was married in Jackson county to Miss Hensley, who had previously crossed the plains with her parents. They began their domestic life in Jacksonville, where they resided for more than forty years. Mr. Langell working at his trade there. He also became interested in the live-stock business in connection with his brother Arthur Langell, and about 1869 came to what is known as Langell valley, which was so named in honor of its first settlers—the father and uncle of Arthur T. Langell, and his grandfather, Joseph Langell. The uncle and grandfather both died in this valley. The parents of Arthur T. Langell are still living and now reside near Portland, Oregon, the father having retired from active business. He is now in his eighty-second year, while his wife is in her seventy-fifth year. In their family were ten children: Eliza, the wife of Judge W. C. Hale, of Grants Pass; Mary, who married Charles Moore, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Addie and Frank, who died at the age of twenty and twenty-six years, respectively; Arthur T.; Jessie, the wife of Harry Foster, of Medford; Fred; Harry, who makes his home with his parents; and two who died in infancy.

Arthur T. Langell was a resident of Jacksonville during the winter seasons until seven-teen years of age and spent the summer months in connection with his father's live-stock interests in Klamath county. When a youth of seventeen, however, he went to Salem, where he learned the plumber's and tinner's trades, which he followed for two years. Since that time, however, or for the past twenty-six years, he has been engaged in the stock business in Langell valley and in Bonanza. He has now disposed of his ranches and for the past few years has engaged only in buying and shipping. He has purchased many horses for the United States government and is an excellent judge of stock, so that success has attended his efforts and he is one of the well known stockmen of the district.

On the 5th of November, 1896, Mr. Langell was married to Miss Anna E. Chastain, a daughter of Dr. J. A. Chastain, who is mentioned at length on another page of this work. They now have two children: Frederick C., who was born September 1, 1897; and Claudia L., whose birth occurred February 19, 1902. Mr. Langell is a typical western man—wide-awake, alert and enterprising. The west is making its history with vast possibilities before it and, recognizing this fact, Mr. Langell has become active in the work of public progress, his labors constituting an element in the upbuilding of the community as well as in individual success.

GEORGE E. FLATMAN, who started out in business life without any special advantages, has steadily worked his way upward by the force of his own ability, determination and ambition, and is today one of the representative men of Hammond, where he is conducting a store and where he also owns other properties. Moreover, he has been active in the public life of the community and his fellow townsmen have called him to a number of political positions.

Mr. Flatman is a native of London, England. He was born on the 19th of January, 1861, and is a son of Charles E. Flatman, who was born in Suffolk, England, on the 3d of April, 1838. His grandparents, Eastgate and Harriet Flatman, spent their entire lives in England, where the former engaged in business as a carpenter and contractor to the time of his death, which occurred in 1869. His son, Charles E. Flatman, is the only one of the family of nine children now living. He was married in London, England, in 1860, to Miss Mary A. Thompson. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Flatman there were born six children, of whom George E. Flatman, of this review, is the eldest. The others are: Charles W., who was born in London and makes his home in Grand Rapids, Michigan; Arthur, who was born in London and now resides in Mills City, Marion county, Oregon; Frank, who was born in Michigan and now resides in Hammond; Robert, deceased; and one who died in infancy. It was in the year 1869 that the family came to America, first settling in Belleville, Canada, where the father worked at the carpenter's trade for a year. He afterward spent six months at Brantford, Canada, and a similar period at Fort Gratiot, Michigan. Later he was employed in the car shops of the Michigan Central railroad at Detroit as a car builder, working on passenger cars for fifteen years. In 1889 he became a resident of Fort Stevens, Clatsop county, Oregon, where he worked at carpentry for the government and he is still in the government employ, making his home in Hammond since 1900.

George E. Flatman, whose name introduces this record, was a lad of eight years when the family came to the new world. He accompanied his parents on their various removals and acquired his education in the public schools of the different localities in which he lived. He remained under the parental roof until he had attained his majority, after which he worked as a farm hand for two years and then accepted a position as a steam engineer in the Fort Stevens Jetty Works, at Fort Stevens, Oregon, continuing in the employ of the government for nineteen years. In 1889 he purchased a half interest in a mercantile store at Hammond and is still an equal partner in that enterprise and in the building in which it is located. He also owns other property in Hammond and his life on the whole has been a successful one, unfaltering industry being the secret of his advancement and prosperity.

On the 6th of July, 1893, Mr. Flatman was married to Miss Sarah Kindred, who was born in Clatsop county, Oregon, and is a daughter of B. C. Kindred, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Flatman are now parents of two children: Vivian L., born March 17, 1894; and Edna R., July 30, 1895. Both are attending school. Mr. Flatman and his family hold membership in the Episcopal church and he belongs to the Order of Maccabees at Hammond. His political views are in accord with the principles of the republican party which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. For several years he served as a member of the school board of Hammond and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth as a citizen, called him to public office as the chief executive of Hammond. For two years he served as mayor and his record was one highly satisfactory to the general public for he advocated progress, reform and improvement and sought by practical methods to attain the ends desired.

MANUEL VIEIRA is engaged in farming, his tract comprising almost six hundred and forty acres of land. The town of Hildebrand is now being built upon a portion of his farm which bids fair to become the center of a prosperous agricultural community. Mr. Vieira is a native of St. George, Portugal, born May 8, 1859, his parents being Mattian and Ukena (Broco) Vieira. The father died in Portugal in January, 1897, at the age of sixty-three years, after which the mother came to the new world, joining a son in California. She passed away there May 22, 1912, at the age of seventy-seven years. In the family were eight children, three sons and three daughters, of whom one daughter is still living in Portugal, while the others are in California, save the subject of this review, who is the eldest.

After spending the first fourteen years of his life in the country of his nativity, Manuel Vieira came to the United States, making his way to California. Twenty-three years ago he came to the Yonna valley in Klamath county and has since followed farming and stock-raising. His life has been fruitful of good results. He has worked persistently and diligently as the years have gone by and is now the owner of about six hundred and forty acres of good land. His tract would comprise fully that amount if it included the schoolhouse lot and the roads. The town of Hildebrand is being built to furnish a market for the agricultural district that is fast being developed here. Mr. Vieira's home is a "traveler's inn" or a place of entertainment for travelers midway between Bly and Klamath Falls, being twenty-six miles from each place.

On the 12th of November, 1899, Mr. Vieira was married in California, to Miss Rose Rose, who was born in St. George, Portugal, and on coming to the United States first settled in California. There were three children of this marriage, Lizzie, James and Arthur, all born on the ranch which is still the family home. Mr. Vieira is truly a self-made man and one who deserves great credit for what he has accomplished, for he started out empty-handed at the age of fourteen years and has worked his way gradually upward by his own industry and merit.

JOHN L. BARKER is the owner of an excellent farm about a mile and a quarter north of Fairview on the Coos Bay wagon road. He was born in Platte county, Missouri, in 1814, and is a son of William H. and Sarah Margaret (Nolan) Barker, who were natives of Kentucky. Their son John was eight years of age when the parents started with their family to the Pacific coast, with California as their destination. The father however, died of cholera while crossing the plains, for this was the year 1852 when cholera was epidemic among the emigrants to the far west to such an extent that the route could be followed by reason of the newly made graves along the way. The mother continued on her way to California with her children and settled in Solano county, where she purchased twenty acres of land, living thereon for several years. In 1860 she came to Oregon, taking up her abode in Douglas county, near Roseburg. She remained there only a short time, however, and soon afterward the family was broken up, the different children having started out for themselves. Mrs. Barker passed away near Salem in 1868. In the family were twelve children, but only four are now living: Ann, who is the wife of John Long of Washington, and is eighty-five years of age; Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Miller of California; Nancy L., the wife of Captain A. D. Boon of Sumner, Oregon; and John L.

The last named accompanied his mother on her various removals until the family was broken up. He was then about eighteen years of age and started out in life for himself. He engaged in driving cattle, in packing and teaming for others, being thus employed for ten years. He was then married and took up his abode in Coos county, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land on the Coquille river, whereon he resided until 1900.

He then bought his mother-in-law's property and has since made his home upon that farm which is situated about a mile and a quarter north of the town of Fairview. He carefully and systematically develops his place and it presents a neat and attractive appearance which shows his methods are both practical and progressive.

On the 14th of September, 1871, on the old home place at Fairview which they now occupy, Mr. Barker was united in marriage to Miss Mary C. Norris. Her father had taken up the claim in 1868 and it has since remained in possession of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Barker have become the parents of eight children: Fred W., of Coquille, Oregon, who is married and has two children; Verner N., of Marshfield, Ore., who has two children, Lyle and an infant; Thomas G., of Fairview, who has two children, Ellis and Elda; Clyde A., of Fairview, who has one child, Wilda; Jesse, who has charge of and operates his father's farm and also raises and deals in stock and carries on dairying on a limited scale; Edwin C., of Marshfield, who has two children, Irene and Grace; John L., of Sumner, Oregon, who has one child, Evelyn; and Birdie M., the wife of Lester L. Hazleton of Sumner, Oregon, and the mother of one child.

Mr. Barker votes with the democratic party and has served as road supervisor but cares little for public office. The cause of education, however, finds in him a warm friend as is evidenced by his twenty-one years' service as school director. He is interested in all that pertains to public progress and improvement and gives his aid and influence to projects for the general good, while at the same time he carefully manages his business affairs.

J. G. WIGHT was for many years identified with educational interests and contributed in large measure toward the development of the schools, but he is now concentrating his time and energies upon the cultivation of crops and the raising of stock, having one of the well improved ranches of Klamath county, situated in the Yonna valley not far from Hildebrand. He was born near Hamilton, Wentworth county, Ontario, Canada, April 27, 1859, his parents being James and Agnes (McKinley) Wight, in whose family were fourteen children, of whom J. G. Wight was the fifth. He resided at the place of his birth until 1880, was reared to farm life and acquired his education in the district schools. He then made his way westward in company with his sister Barbara to Solano county, California, and there engaged in farming for about four years. He also attended school to some extent in that district, for he has ever been interested in educational advancement, finding genuine joy in the study that brings him a broader intellectual outlook. In 1884 he came to Klamath county and preempted one hundred and sixty acres of land, to which he has since added, until now he has two hundred and forty acres in the Yonna valley, six miles north of Dairy. Most of his time, however, has been spent elsewhere in school work until the last four years, during which time he has resided continuously on his ranch. He was graduated from the state normal school at Monmouth and for about ten years he engaged in teaching in Polk and Yamhill counties. He also taught at Bonanza, Klamath county, for five years, and in 1904 was elected county superintendent of schools, which position he filled for one term of four years. On his retirement from that office, in which he had made a most creditable record, he returned to the ranch and has since engaged in the cultivation of the crops best adapted to soil and climate and in the raising of stock, in both branches of his business meeting with success which is the legitimate outcome of persistent, earnest effort.

In 1909 Mr. Wight was married to Miss Mary L. Davison, who was born near Salem, Oregon, November 14, 1868, and was reared and educated in Jackson county. She is a graduate of the Ashland Normal School with the class of 1889, and also Heald's Business College of San Francisco, of the class of 1893. She, too, was a capable and successful teacher, having taught for ten years in Jackson county, Oregon, for four years in Siskiyou county, California, and for four years in Klamath county, making a total of eighteen years. She is a daughter of Andrew and Mary A. (Wright) Davison, the former a native of Fountain county, Indiana, born in 1832, and the latter a native of Ohio, born in 1837. Her father crossed the plains to California in 1850 and in 1851 came to Jackson county. His wife made the journey across the country in 1852 through the Rogue river valley, her parents taking up a donation claim there. Mrs. Davison is now homesteading on eighty acres near the Wight home and she also has a residence in Medford. She has been a widow since 1884. Her husband was a miner in early life and later secured a donation claim in Jackson county, where he resided until the time of his death. In their family were nine children, six of whom are yet living, including Mrs. Wight. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wight are widely and favorably known in the Yonna valley, the circle of their friends increasing as the circle of their acquaintance widens. Mr. Wight votes with the republican party but has never been an office seeker, preferring to concentrate his energies upon the professional interests and the business cares which have occupied his time since he attained his majority. He has advanced step by step, his eyes fixed on the goal of success, never deviating from the path of honorable achievement.

SAMUEL W. JONES, who resides two miles south of Gervais on the old Stage road, is the owner of two thousand acres of valuable land. His birth occurred in Indiana, on the 17th of November, 1850, his parents being Silas W. R. and Elizabeth (Allen) Jones, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Indiana. The parents were married in the Hoosier state, where they resided until 1853, when they started across the plains. After they arrived in Oregon they settled in Marion county, on the Michael Dougherty donation claim. Afterward Mr. Jones purchased a squatter's right of a donation land claim of three hundred and twenty acres situated four miles southeast of Gervais. This was their home until 1862, when he purchased another claim of six hundred and forty acres two miles south of Gervais, where he resided until 1890, when he returned to Indiana. He passed away in November, 1911, at Kokomo, at the age of ninety-seven years, his wife having died in 1890, when seventy-two years of age. They were the parents of a very large family, eight of whom survive, namely: Mrs. H. K. Humsaker, of Portland, Oregon; Silas A., a resident of Brooks, Oregon; M. L., who is also living in Brooks; Samuel W., the subject of this review; Mrs. Emma Simmons, of Gervais; Mrs. Sarah Clark, a resident of Portland; and Harrison and Scott, twins, who are both residing in Gervais.

After finishing school Samuel W. Jones started in life for himself at the age of eighteen years. His first farming enterprise was on rented land and he continued thereon for five years, at the end of which time he purchased a six hundred acre farm at Waldo Hills. For three years he was engaged in the cultivation and management of this farm before disposing of it and purchasing seven hundred acres on French prairie, which he occupied for seven years. At that time he purchased his present home of four hundred and fifty-six acres and has since added to it until he is at present the owner of two thousand acres, all located in Marion county, more than fifteen hundred of which is under cultivation. Mr. Jones is one of the most able and industrious farmers of Marion county. He has given his personal attention to all details of the development of his property and by careful study and management has made it one of the most profitable tracts in this district, so rich in agricultural resources.

On February 27, 1876, Mr. Jones was married to Miss Sarah E. Darland, whose birth occurred on the 18th of May, 1856, and who is a daughter of Samuel R. and Susanna (Hutton) Darland, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Kentucky. They were married in Indiana, where they resided for several years before removing to Iowa, where they lived until 1865, when they came overland to Oregon and settled in Waldo Hills, Marion county. This was their home until 1876, when they removed to the state of Washington, where their deaths occurred in 1903 and 1901 respectively. To them sixteen children were born, eleven of whom survive; Mrs. Mary A. Baker, of Forest Grove, Oregon; I. C., who resided in Goldendale, Oregon, and passed away March 18, 1912; Levi, who makes his home in San Francisco, California; Mrs. Harriett Bryson, of Garfield, Washington; Mrs. Amanda Alberson, who is living in Alberson, Oregon; Mrs. Jones; Mrs. Macey Gillmore, of North Yakima; Mrs. Loretta L. Stice, also a resident of North Yakima; James, who makes his home in Pullman, Washington; George, who resides at Goldendale, Oregon; and Charles, of Arlington, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Jones seven children have been born: Mrs. Bertha S. Hoover, born in 1876, who received a musical education and engaged in teaching for many years; Mrs. Jennie M. Collard, who was born in 1878 and now makes her home in Gervais; Mrs. Altha Naftzger, who was born in 1880 and also resides in Gervais; Sylva W., who was born in 1883 and is at home, a graduate of Willamette University, having taught school for three years; Mrs. Edna S. Ramp, of Brooks, Oregon, who also received a musical education; Samuel Paul, who was born in 1888 and makes his home with his parents and Areta V., who was born in 1896 and is also at home. They have all been given more than ordinary advantages in education.

Mr. Jones gives his political support to the republican party and is thoroughly alive to the leading issues of the day. He is a member of the Masonic lodge of Gervais, in which he has filled all of the chairs, and he also holds membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Both he and his wife are affiliated with the Christian church, in whose circles they are both active and influential. He is one of the largest landowners of Marion county and has proved his worth as an agriculturist by his close study of modern methods, by his careful attention to details and by his progressiveness.

SAMUEL M. DOUGLAS. The history of a state as well as that of a nation is chiefly the chronicle of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon society. The world judges the character of a community by that of its representative citizens, and yields its tribute of admiration and respect for the genius, learning or virtues of those whose works and actions constitute the record of a state. It is their character, as exemplified in probity and progress, in kindly virtues and in integrity in the affairs of life, which is ever affording worthy examples for emulation, and no more worthy example of such a life could be recorded in the history of Oregon than that of Samuel M. Douglas.

The birth of Mr. Douglas occurred in Henry county, Iowa, December 1, 1854. He was the son of Thomas Douglas, who was an own cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, while his mother, Lucinda Hanks, was an own cousin of Abraham Lincoln. When he was ten years old his parents crossed the plains with ox-teams, and after a journey of five months they arrived safely in California. The father located in Marysville, where his son remained until he was nineteen years old, and then with his father engaged in ranching, continuing in this line of endeavor for seven years. While so engaged he began the work of shearing sheep, etc., and after twelve years of this life he bought his father's ranch in Humboldt county, making that his home for five years, when in 1887, he came to Oregon. He first bought seven hundred and eleven acres, located two miles east of Springfield. Later he purchased more land and owned, at one time, nine hundred and fifty-two acres along the Willamette river, six hundred and forty of which was valley land, and rich in the fine grass of this region. He purchased this farm from Stephen Edwards and J. Goodman with the intention of entering the dairy business, and his faith in the value of the location was justified with the passing years. Prior to his death he disposed of four hundred and ten acres. He spared neither time nor expense in placing his business on a substantial and reliable footing and his reward came in the success which he achieved and the reputation he won as one of the progressive farmers of the Willamette valley.

Mr. Douglas was married in September, 1889, to Miss Florence Dale, of Humboldt county, California, who is a representative of an old and distinguished family. Mrs. Douglas was the daughter of Jeremiah and Sadie (Callihan) Dale, both born and reared in Clarion county, Pennsylvania. The father was born in 1834 and the mother in 1838. The father's ancestors came from Switzerland and settled in Pennsylvania, early in 1700, and the mother's people were of Quaker stock. At the time of the gold fever in California Mr. Dale migrated from Pennsylvania, but after remaining in California for a year or two he returned and was married December 16, 1859. They then removed to West Virginia, where they remained for four years. Mr. and Mrs. Dale then started for the far west, taking a steamer from New York to Panama and from there to San Francisco, and finally located in Nevada county, California, residing there for six years. They then removed to Humboldt county, where they have since resided.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Douglas has been born one daughter, whose natal day was June 11, 1890. Mr. Douglas was not affiliated with any fraternal organizations, but in politics he was a democrat. He died September 13, 1911. Those who had the good fortune to be his neighbors and friends or to come in contact with him in business dealings, know that he was a man, honest and just to all, kind where kindness was required, and one who cheerfully lent his aid to any worthy cause in the community. He was a gentle husband and a kind father and left an untarnished name to his family.

NATHAN W. BOWER, although a resident of Clatsop county only since 1908, has become well known here and is meeting with success as one of the owners of Sunset Beach, an attractive summer resort which borders the ocean and also Sunset Lake. He was born in Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in 1864, a son of Nathan S. and Maria Bower, both of whom were natives of Nova Scotia and of English parentage. They spent their entire lives in the land of their nativity and the father conducted a lumber business there for many years, but later he established a hotel which he carried on until his life's labors were ended in death, in 1902. He is still survived by his wife, who yet makes her home in Nova Scotia. In their family were seven children: Chapman S.; Nathan W.; Bertha A., who died in 1890; William E., a contractor of Nova Scotia, working on government contracts; Annie S., the wife of George A. Evans, of Walla Walla, Washington; Alice N., the wife of Kiff Cameron, of Nova Scotia; and Andrew R., of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, who is engaged in contracting with his brother.

Nathan W. Bower, whose name introduces this record, acquired a common-school education and also studied drafting under Professor Hauslein, of the Chicago Athenaeum. He came to the United States in 1887, at which time he took up his abode in Chicago, where he resided for four years. In 1891 he removed to Boise City, Idaho, where he lived for some years, conducting business as an architect and contractor at that place until 1901. The succeeding seven years were passed in Meridian, Idaho, and he built the first house there. He had large interests at that place and still owns many properties in the heart of the town. In 1892 he became the owner of a third interest in the town site of Nyssa, Oregon, and he also owns a placer stone claim in Malheur county, Oregon. He continued his residence at Meridian, Idaho, until 1908, when he removed to Clatsop county, where he has since resided. Aside from his property interests elsewhere he is the owner of a third interest in Sunset Beach, an attractive resort of Clatsop county, which borders the ocean and also extends to Sunset lake. He is doing much to improve this and make it one of the popular resorts at the seaside. He is also engaged in freighting and does deep sea fishing with a gas schooner, Moonlight.

On the 28th of February, 1893, Mr. Bower was married at Boise City, Idaho, to Miss Julia Asbery, who was born in Lee county, West Virginia, in 1866, a daughter of Joseph and Julia (Brooks) Asbery, who spent the greater part of their lives upon a farm in West Virginia. The mother died during the girlhood of her daughter, Mrs. Bower, and the father passed away in 1903. In their family were eleven children: John; Thomas; Reese; Jeff and William, all deceased; Margaret; Sina; Roxanna; Frances; Rebecca; and Julia. Mr. and Mrs. Bower have become the parents of four children but the oldest, Nathan W., died at the age of fourteen years, and the youngest, Hazel M., when eight years of age. The other children of the family are: Eva S., who was born February 2, 1895, and is now a high-school student; and Jessie L., born July 14, 1897. Mr. Bower possesses the enterprising spirit that has been the dominant feature in the rapid and substantial upbuilding of the northwest, quickly recognizing and utilizing the opportunities that have come to him, and as the years have passed by he has made steady progress which indicates greater success in the future.

CHARLES H. FLACKUS, who since 1903 has devoted his entire attention to ranching, having a place of two hundred and eighty acres of which one hundred and eighty acres is being cultivated, was born on the Rhine, Germany, on the 4th of November, 1872, and is a son of August and Minnie (Herbel)

Flackus, who remained residents of the fatherland until 1882, when they crossed the Atlantic and settled in Des Moines, Iowa. In May, 1889, the family arrived in the Yonna valley of Klamath county, Oregon, where the father carried on carpentering as well as ranching until his death, in 1908, when he was sixty-six years of age. His widow still survives and is now living in the Yonna valley. In their family were four children: William, now residing at Ashland, Oregon; Charles H.; and Theodore and Emil, both residents of the Yonna valley.

Charles H. Flackus made his home with his parents up to the time of his marriage, working earnestly and persistently in his youthful days and manifesting unfaltering industry since attaining man's estate. He learned the butcher's trade and conducted a shop at Redding, California. He also worked at Etna, California, at Yreka and at Klamath Falls, becoming well known as a butcher in the southern part of the state. In 1903 he began ranching on his own account and his place, attractive in its appearance, indicates his careful supervision and progressive methods. His ranch is two hundred and eighty acres in extent and is devoted to general farming and stock-raising with one hundred and eighty acres under the plow. He has added many modern equipments and improvements to the place, which in its neat and thrifty appearance indicates his careful supervision.

Mr. Flackus has been married twice. His first union was with Miss Viola Godfrey, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Benjamin Godfrey, of Bonanza. Mrs. Flackus died, leaving two children: Louisa, the wife of Warren Kilgore, of Langells valley; and Beulah, at home. In 1903 he was again married, his second union being with Lillie Clark, who was born in Minnesota in 1883 and came to Klamath county fifteen years ago with her parents. She is a daughter of Mrs. H. J. O'Brien, who was married a second time and now resides in the Yonna valley. Three children have been born unto Charles H. and Lillie Flackus: Lyle, Ada and Harold.

Mr. Flackus votes with the democratic party, keeps well informed on the questions of the day and is interested in matters of citizenship but does not seek nor desire office, for he finds that the problems of his business are sufficient to keep him occupied and he is putting forth every effort to provide a comfortable living for his family and win that measure of success which is the merited reward of persistent and intelligently directed effort.

WILLIAM E. RACKLIFF, whose name is closely associated with the history of Coos county and the development of this part of the state, instituted various business enterprises which have proven of value as factors in the development of the region and at all times his sterling worth demanded the good-will and confidence of those who knew him. He was born near Portland, Maine, in 1834, and his life record covered the intervening years to 1908, when he was laid to rest in the old family burying ground across the river from Myrtle Point, Oregon. His parents were William and Mary Rackliff. His father was the owner of a farm but was largely connected with the fishing industry for some years and later engaged in navigation, becoming a sea captain. In 1849 William E. Rackliff, his father and one sister, Mrs. Mary J. Clarke, now deceased, came around Cape Horn on a small schooner which was owned by his father, and in 1850 arrived in San Francisco. Soon afterward he took up a donation land claim near Scottsburg, Oregon, and also purchased land, while his father became a resident of Douglas county, where he bought land. Subsequently, however, the father removed to Coos county, where he further invested in farm land, making his home thereon until his death, which occurred in 1879.

William E. Rackliff was one of a family of seven children, all of whom are now deceased. He was a youth of fifteen years when he came to Oregon and after devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits here for some years he built a schooner in connection with his father, using it in the coasting trade between Coquille river and San Francisco. He was thus engaged for a number of years, after which he established a trading post on his farm, in the meantime disposing of the schooner. He owned land in Douglas county and there built a small flour and grist mill, operated by water power. For a short time he engaged in the manufacture of flour and afterward removed to Myrtle Point, arriving in April, 1870. He built a small river steamer, which he used for towing purposes. On disposing of that he removed to near what is now Parkersburg, Oregon, and built a small steam schooner, which he named the Cordelia. This he operated for a year, when he again sold out and once more came to Myrtle Point. Here he invested in one hundred acres of land, which his widow now owns. He opened a store, also built another river steamer, which he ran for several years and then again sold. He became identified with industrial activities here in the building and operation of a grist mill at the forks of the Coquille river and in 1890 he built a sawmill which at the present time is being operated by the Myrtle Point Mill Company. In 1897 his grist mill was destroyed by fire, as was his residence. The latter was rebuilt but the mill was not. The foregoing shows how active and efficient was the life of William E. Rackliff. He was a hard worker and never afraid of arduous labor. He was a fine mechanic and his ingenuity largely furthered his interests. Whatever success he achieved is attributable to his own labors and was the merited reward of earnest, persistent effort.

Mr. Rackliff was united in marriage to Miss Cordelia Ransom, a native of Indiana, who was brought to the coast country when but four years of age by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. William C. Ransom, the former a practicing physician now residing in Klamath Falls. He has reached the age of ninety years. In his family were six children but only three survive: Marietta, who is the widow of Benton Haines and lives in Elkton, Oregon; Nannie H., the wife of Daniel Giles, of Myrtle Point; and Mrs. Rackliff. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Rackliff were born eleven children. Edward, the eldest, a farmer living near Myrtle Point, Oregon, married Miss Mary J. Roberts, a native of Missouri and a daughter of J. H. and Louisa (Duvall) Roberts, who came to Oregon in 1873 and settled near Myrtle Point, where they still reside. Edward Rackliff and his wife were married in 1888 and to them have been born eleven children: Lawrence, at home; Arthur R., of Bandon, Oregon; Sylvia L., a school teacher of Coos county; Leland R., David, Melvin, Donald and Lowell, all at home; Benlah and Allison, both deceased; and Spencer, at home. The next member of the family of William E. Rackliff was Mary, now deceased. Annie is the wife of Charles Lehmanowsky, of California. William is deceased. Charles is living in Coos county. Ralph R. makes his home at Myrtle Point. George is a jeweler of Myrtle Point. Lyman is living in Coos county. Nelson is deceased. Ellen is the wife of Charles Angel, of Myrtle Point, and Owen is at home with his mother.

In his political views Mr. Rackliff was a republican but never an office seeker. Although he had but limited educational privileges, he became a well read man. He was also a self-made man when viewed from a business standpoint, for whatever success he achieved was attributable to his own labors. He worked his way upward by dint of energy and determination, faltered not in the face of obstacles and utilized every opportunity that he believed would promote his interests along legitimate lines. His labors at the same time were an element in public progress and he was closely associated with the development of this part of the state.

JOEL A. COLE has been a lifelong resident of Oregon. He was born July 28, 1865, in the house which he now occupies in the Callipooia precinct of Douglas county, his parents being James and Louisa (Leeper) Cole. The father was a native of Kentucky and in young manhood removed to Missouri. The mother was a native of Tennessee but from her ninth year was reared in Greene county, Missouri, and in that state was married. In 1851 Mr. and Mrs. James Cole started for the northwest, making the long and arduous journey across the plains. The father had previously visited the Pacific coast, however, having been among those who in 1850 sought fortunes in the gold fields of California. On arriving in Oregon they settled in what is now Coles valley and they lived there for more than a year ere Mrs. Cole ever saw another white woman. James Cole was the first white man with a family to locate in the valley, which was named in his honor. He took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres in the head of the valley, comprising property that is now owned by the Shambrook heirs. He subsequently traded that ranch for a bunch of cattle and after two or three purchases and removals he bought the Van Riper donation claim, which is now occupied by his son Joel. Upon this place the father and mother spent their remaining days. The former was a republican in politics and was one of the prominent and influential residents of his section. His fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, called him to represent his district in the state legislature for two or three terms, and he gave careful consideration to each question which came up for settlement and left his impress upon the legislation enacted while he was still a member of the house. He and his wife held membership in the Christian church. As time passed on he prospered and when death came to him he was the owner of about nineteen hundred acres of rich and valuable land. He died August 4, 1888, and was survived by his wife until January 10, 1896.

Joel A. Cole was reared at home and was a pupil in the public schools. After attaining his majority he was associated with his father in farming, receiving an interest in the crops. After the father's death he and his four brothers, W. H., Sidney, Hannibal and James L., succeeded to the land which they operated conjointly.

On the 7th of December, 1893, Mr. Cole was united in marriage to Miss Lena Goodman, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of John and Mary A. (Brinegar) Goodman, who came to Oregon in 1874 but afterward returned to Missouri and in 1876 again made their way to this city, where they took up their permanent abode. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Cole were born three children, but only two, Elmer Guy and Merle Ann, are living.

Mr. Cole votes with the republican party, intelligent understanding of the political questions and situations guiding him in the exercise of his right of franchise. He is a member of Oakland Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F., and is one of the substantial and influential residents of Douglas county, interested in all that brings about its welfare and upbuilding.

W. P. SEDGE is a general merchant of the town of Dairy, where he is also serving as postmaster, and he belongs to that class of enterprising citizens who are upbuilding the great west, using every advantage and effort to place it upon a par with the older east. He was born in Meigs county, Ohio, November 8, 1857, and is a son of Alexander and Eleanor (Stone) Sedge, who were natives of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, respectively, while their marriage was celebrated in Ohio. They spent about twenty years of their married life in that state and afterward removed to the vicinity of Kansas City, Missouri. The father died in Missouri, after which the mother came to Oregon and spent her last days at the home of her son, W. P. Sedge, who was the fifth in order of birth in a family of seven children. He resided with his parents until fourteen years of age, when he started out in life on his own account. He worked in Kansas and Missouri until 1879, when he made his way westward to California, where he was employed at farm labor until 1881. In that year he married and drove to Sherman county, Oregon, where he secured a homestead upon which he lived for seven years. At the end of that time, or in 1888, he removed to Idaho, but in 1891 returned to California, where he lived until 1898. He then came to Douglas county, Oregon, and in 1905 he arrived in Dairy, where he has since lived. He had followed merchandising in Idaho, opened the first store at Leland, Idaho, and was a merchant at Byron, California for seven years from 1891 to 1898. He followed farming and stock-raising in Douglas county and is now a merchant at Dairy, Klamath county, where he also fills the position of postmaster. His line of general merchandise includes farm machinery and his business has been a growing one for he is constantly drawing trade from more extended quarters. He likewise takes care of the stage business, the telephone central office and is notary public. All of this makes him indeed a busy man and one whose activities reach out in a constantly broadening field of usefulness.

In 1881 Mr. Sedge was united in marriage to Miss Mary Melissa Byer, who was born near Sacramento, California, October 23, 1863, and is a daughter of John R. and Elvira Letitia (Boggus) Byer. The father was a native of Virginia and the mother of Illinois. They crossed the plains to California in 1863 and the mother died in that state. The father now resides at Brentwood, California, where he owns and conducts a large ranch. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Sedge have been born four children. Edward B., born September 3, 1882, married Gertrude Jewell and is now in partnership with his father. Anna Pearl is the wife of Alfred E. Davison, living near Oakland, Douglas county, Oregon. Flora died at the age of two years, and Zelma, born in Idaho, May 22, 1891, completes the family.

In politics Mr. Sedge has ever been a republican, giving stalwart support to the party. He holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Bonanza and with the Methodist church—associations which indicate much of the nature of his principles and the rules which govern his conduct. He is one of the builders of the northwest and the structure which he and his fellow citizens are rearing is a credit and honor to them and to the community.

MELANCHTHON M. DAVIS. Probably one of the best known pharmacists in the state of Oregon for many years, and one who materially assisted in framing and having enacted the initial medical and pharmaceutical laws of the state, was Hon. M. M. Davis, who was born in Lane county, near Eugene, Oregon, on September 30, 1851. His parents, Benjamin and Catharine S. Davis crossed the plains and settled about two and one-half miles northwest of the present site of Eugene, in 1847, theirs being the second cabin built in that vicinity.

M. M. Davis was reared on the donation claim of his parents, and acquired his education in the semi-public schools of those early days, and for a time was a pupil in the old Columbia College until it was discontinued, and then attended an academy which was maintained for a time at Eugene under the auspices of the Episcopal church, which was later removed to Oswego, and combined with the Bishop Scott academy. He was one of the early graduates of the first business college conducted in Portland, and commenced his business career in 1868 as a clerk with Avery A. Smith, who was at that time conducting a large general merchandise store in Eugene, later clerking in drug stores in Eugene, and studying pharmacy under Dr. H. H. Ellsworth, a pioneer physician and pharmacist of that town. He also read medicine under Drs. George W. Odell and Abram Sharples.

In 1874 Mr. Davis was married to Miss Mary Bushnell, a daughter of George E. Bushnell, who settled in Lane county in 1866. In 1881 with his wife and infant daughter he removed to Newport, then in Benton county, and started a drug store which he conducted until 1884. When the Oregon Pacific Railroad was constructed from Corvallis to Yaquina, he removed to Yaquina, where he conducted a store and practiced medicine for some years.

In the great panic of 1893 a large milling corporation on the Santiam river, in which he had made investments, failed and he was appointed receiver to wind up its affairs. In order to do this he removed with his family to Corvallis, where they continued to reside until all of his four children had graduated from the Oregon Agricultural College. He retained his interests at Yaquina bay, however, and spent the summers there. In 1907 he built a home in Eugene and returned there for permanent residence.

Although a democrat, he was elected to the legislature in 1886 in Benton county, which was then largely republican, and in the ensuing session he supported the first bill to be introduced to regulate the practice of medicine. This bill was bitterly fought being finally defeated by one vote. At that time Hon. John Wilson of Portland had introduced a bill to regulate the prescribing for, and sale of, opium, morphine, chloral hydrate and other narcotics, which was much more drastic than the medical bill, and would confine the prescribing for such medicines to regular graduate physicians only. This bill had been pigeonholed in committee, and when the medical bill was defeated, Mr. Davis went to Mr. Wilson and suggested that if he would allow him to amend the bill to permit the licensing of pharmacists to sell those drugs, they would get it recommended and have it passed. This was done, and the bill passed unanimously, none of the opponents of the medical bill suspecting its real purpose. So was enacted the first legislation in Oregon attempting to regulate the practice of medicine and pharmacy, this law remaining upon the statute books until long after the passage of regular laws affecting these subjects rendering it unnecessary.

On June 10, 1890, he assisted in organizing the Oregon State Pharmaceutical Association, and was elected its first president, with H. D. Dietrich as secretary, and Louis G. Clarke as treasurer. Through the efforts of the association a pharmacy law was passed at the ensuing session of the legislature, in 1891, and the Oregon State Board of Pharmacy was created, and Governor Penney offered Mr. Davis an appointment as a member of the board, which he waived in favor of L. G. Clarke who was appointed, and was elected the first president of the board. The next year upon the expiration of Mr. Clarke's term, the Governor without previous consultation or notice sent Mr. Davis a commission as member of the board for the full term of five years, which he accepted, and at the ensuing meeting was elected president which office he held for five years, being reelected each succeeding year at all times giving his best efforts for the good of the cause.

His experience as a member of the board convinced him of the necessity for more adequate provision for a school of pharmacy in the state, and together with Professor Shaw (Professor of chemistry in the Oregon Agricultural College) he began negotiations, which the board afterward concluded with the regents, to establish in the Oregon Agricultural College the course of pharmacy, which was a success from the start, and which is of inestimable value to the state.

Having great faith in the progress and development of the material resources of the state, after the business matters which had called him to Corvallis had all been satisfactorily settled, he engaged in developing and settling up the uninhabited portions of western Benton and of Lincoln counties. With some of his friends and associates he organized the Coast Land Livestock Company, which purchased and placed upon the market forty thousand acres of the Corvallis and Yaquina bay military wagon road lands, and sold in tracts to settlers, adding materially to the population and prosperity of the sections of the two counties.

While engaged with those lands, he purchased on his private account extensive tracts of tidelands on Yaquina bay, and in 1909 built the first dredge to be used on that bay for diking and reclaiming tidelands. He reclaimed his own lands and those of his neighbors, and his land has become one of the finest dairy farms in the state.

SAMUEL PADGETT is the postmaster and a merchant of Keno and is conducting a well appointed store, while his business activities place him with the enterprising citizens of the community. He was born April 22, 1874, in Kansas, his parents being J. L. and Eliza C. (Lissman) Padgett, who were natives of Indiana and were reared and married there. They afterward resided at different periods in Kansas and Missouri as well as a number of places in the middle west. In 1891

they came to Oregon and the father engaged in merchandising at Keno until he retired and removed to Ashland about four years ago. His death there occurred in October, 1910, when he was sixty-seven years of age. The mother is now living in Siskiyou county, California, at the age of seventy-one years. The father had ranch and timber interests and also city property in Ashland and town property in Keno. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served for two years as a member of Company I, Seventeenth Indiana Regiment of Volunteer Infantry. He belonged to the Grand Army Post at Ashland, and he gave his political allegiance to the republican party although the other members of the family were democrats. For about eight years he served as postmaster at Keno, proving a faithful incumbent in that office. During the greater part of his life he was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Unto him and his wife were born two children, the elder being Albert F., of Dorris, Siskiyou county, California.

When only fourteen months old Samuel Padgett was taken by his parents to Missouri, where he resided until seventeen years of age. The family then came to Klamath county, Oregon, and Samuel Padgett has since resided in this locality. He continued with his parents until about sixteen years ago, when he married and went to Siskiyou county, California, and settled about twenty-five miles south of Keno. There he secured a homestead on which he lived for seven years, at the end of which time he traded it for a half interest in his present mercantile business, making the trade with his brother. They now own adjoining homesteads and each has a half interest in the store at Keno. Mr. Padgett traded his homestead for his brother's half interest in the store and he has since been identified with the same. The father gave to each of the two sons a third interest in the business and kept a third but Samuel Padgett now owns the whole store building and its appointments and he has a half interest in his father's estate. He was appointed postmaster on March 18, 1910.

In 1896 Mr. Padgett was united in marriage to Miss Vina May Pratt, who was born in Klamath county and is a daughter of Newton and Rebecca Jane Pratt. The former is deceased but the mother still survives. Mr. Pratt was born in New York, March 19, 1833, a son of Jackson and Caroline (Smith) Pratt. They removed to Michigan when their son Newton was a small boy and he was yet quite young when left an orphan, his mother dying in Michigan and his father in Indiana. He was one of four sons, the others being: Warren and Barney, both deceased; and Morgan, whose home is in lower California. Newton Pratt resided in Michigan and in Indiana, near Crown Point, until 1853, when he crossed the plains, leaving his old home in April and reaching Oregon late in the fall. He spent two years in and near Salem, where he had a dray line, and in 1855 he went to Siskiyou county and worked in the Scott valley until 1857. He then returned to Salem and in 1859 again went to Siskiyou county, where he had a small vegetable ranch and also a livery stable in Fort Jones until 1862. After selling out he engaged in teaming until he came to Klamath county and he was employed as a teamster by the United States government during the Modoc war. He then located a claim at Teater's landing and after living upon it for two years sold it. He next purchased the McCormick sawmill at Keno, which he operated for five years and throughout the succeeding ten years was engaged in teaming at Klamath Falls, hauling freight from Roseburg to Redding, which were the nearest railroad points at that time. For four years he engaged in ranching in the Poe valley and then again spent two years in Klamath Falls. He next rented and operated the John H. Miller ranch for three years, at the end of which time he removed to Keno, where he died July 30, 1901. Mrs. Pratt conducted a hotel in Keno for six years after her husband's death. He had traded for the property in 1891 and had managed the hotel up to the time of his demise. Mrs. Pratt still owns a number of pieces of property here and has displayed excellent business ability in their management. Mr. Pratt was a man of enterprise and perseverance, never afraid of work, and his persistency of purpose was one of the strong elements in his success. On the 6th of February, 1865, he wedded Rebecca Jane Gordon, who was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, November 16, 1844. She was but eight months old when her parents removed to Buchanan county, Missouri, and in 1852 they crossed the plains to Yreka, California. Her father, Daniel Gordon, was a native of New York and when quite young was left an orphan. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Castle, was a native of Virginia and when ten years of age removed with her parents to Ohio. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gordon spent their last days in Keno, passing away at the ages of ninety-six and seventy-three years, respectively. He was a millwright and cabinet-maker and thus provided for his family, numbering seven children who reached adult age. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Pratt were born two children: Linnie B., the wife of Henry Stout, of Klamath Falls; and Vina May, now Mrs. Padgett.

Mr. and Mrs. Padgett have four children, Arthur Newton, Marion Finley, Victor E. and Erwin F. In politics Mr. Padgett is a republican but the honors and emoluments of office have never attracted him. He prefers to concentrate his attention upon his business affairs and their capable direction is winning for him a gratifying measure of success. He now has a well appointed store and as postmaster of Keno is widely known.

WILLIAM R. HARRIS has lived upon the farm in Coos county near Myrtle Point which is still his home since 1902, and through the intervening period has made many improvements upon the place. He was born in Canada, November 4, 1835, and has therefore passed the seventy-seventh milestone on life's journey. His parents were George and Hannah (Brooks) Harris, the former a native of Canada, born in 1795, while the mother's birth occurred in New York in 1801. In their family were thirteen children, but only five are now living: Hannah, who is the widow of James A. Reynolds, and resides in Lockford, California; Elizabeth J., who is the wife of Isaac Dietderich, of Vancouver, Washington; Nancy, the wife of Alfred Keagle, California; Olive, who married Andrew Brown of Sunnyside, Washington; and William R.

The last named was only seventeen years of age when his father died, and the next spring he purchased an interest with his brother in a sawmill which he operated for seven years. He was practically empty handed when he started in the business world, but he made plans that enabled him to become a factor in industrial circles. At length, however, he put aside business and personal considerations, joining the Union army in Iowa. He served for three years and ten months, making a creditable record as one whose loyalty was ever above question. At the close of that time he was honorably discharged. He then married and purchased land in Missouri, where he lived for a year, after which he returned to Iowa and spent the succeeding year. He next came to Oregon by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and after remaining in Portland for a time went to Polk county where he cultivated a rented farm for two years. He then took up a homestead near Vancouver, upon which he lived for three years, when he removed to Tulare county, California, where he entered land and also purchased railroad land. For twenty-seven years he followed farming in that state and in 1899 returned to Oregon, where in connection with his son he took up a homestead near Myrtle Point. He also rented land and conducted a dairy business near Myrtle Point. His son filed on his homestead in 1902 and Mr. Harris has since been with him. They have made great improvements on the place, planted an orchard and are adding to the ranch all the modern equipments and accessories. Mr. Harris is still a busy worker although he has passed the seventy-seventh milestone on life's journey.

In early manhood he was married to Miss Louisa Reed, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of Thomas and Maria (Jones) Reed, in whose family were ten children although only three are now living: Mrs. Harris; Mary, the wife of Amos Pierce of Des Moines, Iowa; and Maria, the wife of Michael Reed of Myrtle Point. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Harris was celebrated in Marion, Iowa, August 3, 1865, and they have become the parents of four children. Henry H., the eldest, obtained his education in California and is now a dairy farmer of Myrtle Point, owning a ranch of twenty acres. He is married and has four children: Dolphus, Giles H., Lucile and Lois. William is a salesman living in Lodi, California. He is married and has two children: Kayrl and Edwin. Mary is a professional nurse and makes her home with her parents. Edwin H. also lives at home and devotes his time to farming, owning the place upon which his father now resides.

Mr. Harris has taken an active interest in politics and for many years was a stalwart republican. In 1890 however, he retired from that party and joined the populists. At one presidential election he supported William Jennings Bryan but his sympathy is now with the socialist party. He has never been an office seeker and has always regarded it as a sacrifice of his personal interests to accept public positions. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic, thus maintaining pleasant relations with the boys in blue. As one of the veterans of the Civil war he deserves the honor and gratitude which should ever be accorded an old soldier. His life has been characterized by unflinching diligence. He early realized that work is the basis of all honorable success, and day by day he has given his time and energies to the duties that have devolved upon him in his business affairs and in a public way. Wherever known he is widely esteemed and he has an extensive circle of friends in the county where he now makes his home.

HENRY SNOWGOOSE is the owner of one hundred acres of land on the Klamath river, adjoining Keno, of which half is under cultivation, and in addition to raising the cereals best adapted to the soil and climate he has given considerable attention to live-stock interests, making a specialty of the breeding of jacks. He dates his residence here from 1891. He was born in Parke county, Indiana, September 8, 1842, a son of Henry and Selma (Wendel) Snowgoose, both of whom were natives of Germany, where they were reared and married. They came to the United States in 1839, settling in Indiana, where both died. The father had devoted his life to merchandising. The only survivor of the family is Henry Snowgoose, his sister Louisa, who was his junior, having died in early life.

Henry Snowgoose resided in Indiana until twenty-one years of age, devoting his time largely to the acquirement of an education and to the work of the fields. He began teaching when twenty years of age and after a year went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he entered the Iron City Commercial College, from which in due time he was graduated. For about twenty-five years he successfully engaged in teaching in the district schools of Iowa, proving himself a capable educator who imparted clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he had obtained. In 1891 he came to Keno, where he has since resided. He owns one hundred acres adjoining the town and lying along the Klamath river. Of this he has about fifty acres under the plow and his methods of farming are modern and progressive. He makes a specialty of raising jacks, having brought a carload here from Iowa when he came. He also conducts a feed stable and he has a boat-landing at his place. In addition to his other property he owns four city lots and two dwellings and his realty possessions are the visible evidence of his life of thrift and energy.

In Iowa, in 1865, Mr. Snowgoose was married to Miss Sarah Frances Taylor, a native of Indiana, who died in Iowa in 1868, leaving two children: Daniel, whose home is in Jerome, Arizona; and John, living in Mono county, California. In Iowa, in 1871, Mr. Snowgoose was again married, his second union being with Amanda Perkins, a native of New York. They have one son, Charles, of Klamath Falls.

Mr. Snowgoose was reared in the faith of the democratic party but afterward became a populist and is now independent. He has served for three terms as justice of the peace and for six years held that office in Iowa. His decisions were strictly fair and impartial and he has made a most creditable record in this connection. Laudable ambition prompted him to come to the new and growing Pacific coast country, where he believed that better opportunities could be secured. Gradually he has worked his way upward undeterred by obstacles and difficulties in his path and his energy and persistency of purpose have featured largely in the attainment of the success which is now his.

ELDER SAMUEL S. BARKLOW. In the history of moral progress as well as material development in Coos county mention must be made of Elder Samuel S. Barklow, one of the founders of the German Baptist church at Myrtle Point. A life of great usefulness and of far-reaching influence ended when on the 17th of December, 1897, he was called to his final home, at the age of fifty-six years. He was a native of Union county, Pennsylvania, born July 27, 1841, and in 1848 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Stephenson county, Illinois. He was a son of James and Anna Barklow, both natives of the Keystone state, where they lived until going to Illinois, where the father died. The mother afterward removed to Iowa, where she made her home until 1872, when she came to Oregon, settling in Coos county. Thereafter she made her home with her son David until she died at the age of eighty-one years. Samuel S. Barklow was one of a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters, all of whom passed away before his death save his sister, Mrs. Sarah Hickson, who at the time of Mr. Barklow's demise was in her seventy-seventh year but has since passed away.

Mr. Barklow spent his boyhood and youth largely in Stephenson county, Illinois, and in 1858, when in his seventeenth year, united with the German Baptist church. From that time forward he never ceased to labor untiringly for the upbuilding of his denomination, using every effort to promote its teachings and extend its influence.

In 1861 Mr. Barklow was married to Miss Mary Studebaker, who died in March, 1866, leaving two sons, J. H. and J. S., the former now a resident of Coos county, Oregon, where for several years he was county superintendent of schools, while the latter became a physician and died on the 1st of June, 1889, at the age of twenty-five years. On the 9th of September, 1867, Elder Barklow was again married, his second union being with Miss Anne Miller, who was born in Pennsylvania in September, 1845, a daughter of Jacob W.

and Catharine (Walter) Miller, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania, where the father followed the occupation of farming until his death in 1872. He had long survived his wife, who passed away in 1860. In their family were twelve children, of whom only four are living, Mrs. Barklow being the youngest. The others are: A. W., a resident of Nebraska; John B., of New Paris, Pennsylvania; and Mrs. Julia Holsopple, of Penn Run, Pennsylvania. Those who have passed away are Eli W., Mrs. Mary Rodgers, Elizabeth, Mrs. Sarah M. Rouser, Henry W., Martin, Nathan and Jane. Unto Samuel S. and Anne (Miller) Barklow were born seven children: Sarah E., who is the widow of J. L. Randleman and lives in Bandon; Nathan E., of Myrtle Point; John D., of Arago; Mrs. Mary L. Broadbent, whose husband is conducting a creamery at Myrtle Point; Mrs. Bertha M. Snell, of Covina, California, who has a daughter, Neva Susie; S. Willie, who was accidentally killed when twenty-six years of age; and Alta Annie, who is the wife of Ira M. Abbott, who is conducting a barber shop at Myrtle Point and they have one son, Gale R., born in January, 1909.

After his marriage Samuel S. Barklow took up the occupation of farming, which he followed throughout his entire life. He also engaged in preaching the gospel from 1871 until his death. In that year, in company with twenty others, he came to Oregon and settled on the Coquille river, where he met the usual experiences and hardships that are features of frontier life. He faltered not, however, in the arduous task of developing a new farm, nor did he hesitate to give active aid in the work of public improvement. He and his brother David introduced the German Baptist religion into this valley and began the work of building up a strong church of that denomination. There were originally but eight members, the three brothers, David, John and Samuel Barklow, their wives, their mother and Miss Betsy Snyder. By 1873 the church had increased in membership to twenty-one and at that time a church organization was effected that has long since numbered more than one hundred members. David Barklow presiding as elder until his death in 1889, after which Samuel S. Barklow became elder and as such was the directing head of the church to the time of his demise. He was also elder over the churches at Coquille, Moscow, Idaho, and Oysterville, Washington. He was ever an able and earnest worker in behalf of the church of his faith and gave liberally of his time and means for its advancement.

At the time of his death Elder Barklow was the owner of forty-three acres of land, although at one time he had more than two hundred acres. While he sought to provide a comfortable living for his family, the desire for wealth was never paramount with him. In fact, he sought first the Kingdom of Heaven and put forth earnest and effective effort to spread the teachings of the gospel according to the interpretation of his denomination. His influence was of no restricted order and his memory remains as an inspiration and blessed benediction to many who knew him. Mrs. Barklow, surviving him, makes her home in Myrtle Point, where she has a wide circle of friends.

MRS. MARY JANE PERKINS owns and conducts the Hotel Perkins at Drain and manifests excellent business ability in her management of this and other enterprises and undertakings. She has been a lifelong resident of Oregon, her birth having occurred on a donation claim that was taken up by a Mr. Reed and afterward purchased by Mrs. Perkins' father. Upon this land has since been built the town of Leona. Mrs. Perkins is a daughter of Newton and Elizabeth (Davis) Mulvany, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Illinois. They were married in Oregon, the father when a young man having driven a team of oxen over the plains in the same wagon train with which the Davis family came to the northwest. This was in the year 1852. The grandfather Davis and three of his sons, Elisha, James and Aaron, died on the journey. The grandmother continued her way with her six children, four daughters and two sons. The elder son, John Davis, took up a donation claim in Yamhill county and there the mother settled with her family. The children, however, were young men and young women grown at that time. After reaching Oregon Mrs. Davis became the wife of Samuel Laughlin and both she and her husband spent their remaining days in Yamhill county. Elizabeth Davis became the wife of Newton Mulvany on the 26th of December, 1852, and for three years thereafter lived in Yamhill county. In 1855 they left that county with California as their destination. The Indian war, however, was then in progress and Mr. Mulvany, leaving his wife at Leona, enlisted in the service against the Indians. After the close of hostilities he settled at Leona, where he purchased of Samuel Reed his donation claim and thereon made his home to the time of his death, which occurred in 1889, when he was fifty-six years of age. For many years he operated a sawmill, building the first mill of that kind in Douglas county. Parties came from Salem, Eugene and many other points from a territory many miles for their lumber in those early days and Mr. Mulvany had a wide acquaintance among pioneer settlers. His labors, too, were of a character that contributed to the upbuilding and prosperity of the community as well as to individual success. Unto him and his wife were born three children, of whom two are now living: Henry, who is a mining prospector of Alaska; and Mary J., now Mrs. Perkins. Mrs. Mulvany still survives and makes her home with her daughter.

Mrs. Perkins was reared at Leona and educated in the public schools. On the 8th of March, 1882, she became the wife of Leonard M. Perkins, a native of Kansas, who came to Oregon in 1878 with his parents, settling in Oakland, Douglas county. Following their marriage Mrs. Perkins and her husband took up their abode at Roseburg, where he engaged in railroad work. A year later they removed to Latham and when another year had passed established their home in Comstock, where they resided for five years. In 1889 they removed to the Mulvany farm which Mr. Perkins has since cultivated. It is a tract of four hundred acres which is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Perkins and her mother, Mrs. Mulvany. In 1906 Mrs. Perkins built the present commodious hotel at Drain which she has since conducted and it has the reputation of being the best managed of any country hotel along the Southern Pacific railroad between Portland and San Francisco.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have been born five children: Nellie B., who is employed at office work at St. Helens, Oregon; Leona R., who occupies a situation in an office at St. Helens; Effie E., at home; William Benjamin, who is in charge of the commissary department of the McCormack Lumber Company at St. Helens; and George H., at home.

Mr. Perkins is a member of the Woodmen of the World and his wife belongs to the auxiliary lodge known as the Circle. Mrs. Perkins is also a member of the Christian church, loyal to its teachings and liberal in its support. She owns one hundred and fifteen acres of land adjoining her town property, on which she has a herd of Jersey cows. She is a lady of excellent business ability, sagacious and far-sighted, energetic and capable, and in the management of her interests it is evident that she carries forward to successful completion whatever she undertakes.

H. S. ODEN has for a quarter of a century resided upon the ranch that he now occupies in the Pine Flat valley of Klamath county, having preempted one hundred and sixty acres, while a purchase of eighty acres has increased his holdings to two hundred and forty acres. He was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, October 11, 1852, and is a son of Philip and Sarah (Daniels) Oden, natives of North Carolina and of Sandusky, Ohio, respectively. They were married at Dresden, Ohio, and at the first call for troops in the Civil war the father left his family, enlisting for three months. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run and later reenlisted for three years but upon the expiration of that term of service was honorably discharged because of physical disability. He died in Muskingum county, Ohio, February 26, 1868, and for almost four decades was survived by his wife, who passed away in Missouri, April 8, 1906, in her eighty-fourth year. They were the parents of six children: William, of Missouri; Joseph, of Illinois; Elias, deceased; H. S.; Wesley, living in Illinois; and Etta, the wife of Matt Booth, of Missouri.

H. S. Oden resided at the place of his birth until fifteen years of age and then went to Illinois, where he worked for three years in a blacksmith shop. He afterward followed his trade at different places in Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Idaho, and in June, 1887, he turned from industrial to agricultural interests by locating on his present ranch in the Pine Flat valley of Klamath county. He secured a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he has since lived. On his farm, now two hundred and forty acres in extent, he has placed one hundred and fifty acres under cultivation. He has made a specialty of stock raising, principally horses and cattle, and is regarded as an excellent judge of stock, so that his investments have been judiciously made and his sales have brought him a good profit.

Mr. Oden was married in Missouri, in 1875, to Miss Harriet Louise Thrasher, who was born in Indiana in 1854, and is a daughter of William and Eliza Thrasher. Mr. and Mrs. Oden have become parents of ten children: Philip, who resides upon a neighboring ranch; Willie, who was born November 7, 1878, and died September 26, 1880; Della, who is the wife of Alonzo De Carlow, of Susanville, California; Ray, who was born April 26, 1884, and died September 28, 1887; Claude, who was born November 13, 1886, and died June 2, 1888; Wade, living in Reno, Nevada; Elsie, the wife of J. H. Dean, of Reno, Nevada; Gerald, Harry and Zelma, all at home.

Mr. Oden votes with the republican party and desires the welfare and progress of his community yet never seeks nor wishes for public office for he feels that his business affairs need all of his time and attention. That his hours are profitably employed is indicated by the excellent appearance of his place, which is one of the well cultivated and improved ranches of the district. He is the fourth oldest settler in Pine valley and now the oldest in years of continuous residence here.

GIDEON STOLZ, who is president of the Gideon Stolz Company, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 9th of December, 1844, being one of ten children born to his parents, Jacob and Mary Stolz. They were natives of Germany, the father being born in Wurttemberg near Stuttgart. He came to America in 1832 at an early age and engaged in agricultural pursuits in Columbiana county. Subsequently he secured government land in Scioto valley upon which he resided before removing to Montgomery county near Dayton. That place was his home until the time of his death which occurred when he was eighty-six years of age. His wife also died near Dayton at the age of seventy-eight years. They were both members of the Lutheran church. Of their family five sons and one daughter reached maturity. Dr. John Stolz, the eldest, was a surgeon in the Ninety-fourth Ohio Regiment during the Civil war and was a practicing physician in Reading, Pennsylvania, for many years, and is now deceased. Jacob, the second eldest, was a member of the Ninety-third Ohio Infantry and was killed in the battle of Murfreesboro. David, who joined the Fifteenth United States Infantry for three years' service, was captured at the time of Rosecrans' retreat at Chicamauga, and was in the Andersonville prison for eleven months where his death occurred. Gideon, the fourth son, is the subject of this review. William G. is living retired at Dayton, Ohio. Mrs. Mary Kuhn, the daughter, is residing at Gallion, Ohio.

Gideon Stolz pursued his education in the public schools and in May, 1864, when he was but nineteen years of age, volunteered for service in the Union army, with Company B, One Hundred Thirty-first Ohio Infantry. He was mustered into service at Columbus and immediately stationed at Baltimore. He received an honorable discharge the following September but the next month reenlisted. His second enlistment was in the quartermaster's department and his duties were carried on principally in the vicinity of Memphis, Tennessee. In 1865, at the close of the war, he was mustered out and returned to his home where he remained for several years, engaging in the dairy business at Dayton. In 1873 he disposed of his interests there and came to Salem. When he arrived in this city he possessed only one hundred dollars, indomitable courage and a desire and ability to work. He turned his attention to gardening, conducting the old Dickenson seed garden under contract for six years. At the expiration of that time, in 1879, he began to deal in cider and vinegar, conducting his place of business at the corner of Trade and Cottage streets. It was not long before he had built up a profitable business and in 1886 it was incorporated under the name of the Pacific Vinegar & Pickle Company, Mr. Stolz becoming its president. He conducted this enterprise until 1891 when, on account of the majority of stockholders living in Portland, the plant was removed to East Portland. Mr. Stolz, not caring to give up his residence in Salem, continued to reside there. In 1894 he disposed of his share in the Pacific Vinegar & Pickle Company, but after the inauguration of President McKinley when he recognized the change in the financial prospects of the country he believed that the period of prosperity which would ensue would be a fortunate time for him to again engage in business. Consequently, in the spring of 1897, he began the manufacture of cider and cider vinegar and extended his business until it was an important industry. This business was incorporated under the firm name of the Gideon Stolz Company, and John B. Hileman became vice president and general manager. Mr. Stolz' son, W. T. Stolz, became secretary and C. D. and E. W. Purvine were the two remaining stockholders. The latter two were associated with Mr. Stolz for three years when he bought their interests and his son, W. T. Stolz, became vice president and manager. The business has been greatly enlarged since and the manufacture of fruit spray has been added to their activities, while they also operate a branch house at The Dalles. Their factory is well equipped and devoted to the manufacture of cider, vinegar, apple butter, pickles and jelly and fruit spray. They also bottle mineral waters. The management has changed somewhat in recent years but Mr. Stolz is still president, and at the present time his son, W. T.

Stolz, is vice president and C. L. McNary is serving as secretary.

In Dayton, Ohio, in 1868, Mr. Stolz was married to Miss Margaret Whittinger, whose birth occurred in Chillicothe, Ohio. To their union two children were born: W. T., who is in business with his father; and Senta D., who is the widow of W. G. Westacott.

Fraternally Mr. Stolz is a charter member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of the Maccabees. He also holds membership in the Commercial Club and is one of the prominent members of the Civic Improvement Society. He is commander of Sedgwick Post, G. A. R., of Salem, of which he is a charter member. Politically he is a republican. In 1901 he was elected councilman for the third ward and he has served as chairman of the committee on health and police. In 1907, being reelected, he served two terms as chairman of the committee on streets and public property. He is also a member of the accounts and current expense committee and the fire and water committee. Such is the life history of Gideon Stolz who is known as a dependable man in any relation and in any emergency. His right conception of things and his habitual regard for all that is best are notable assets in his career. His cordiality of address has gained him many friends while his genuine personal worth has won for him well merited confidence and trust.

REV. W. J. GARDNER has been actively identified with the moral progress of Oregon as the founder of the Methodist Episcopal church at Cottage Grove and the builder of the houses of worship used by the congregations of that denomination at Creswell and Goshen. While active in the ministry, he has also for ten years, from 1898 to 1908, followed farming and at the time of the Civil war he served actively in defense of the Union, for which service the government now grants him a pension. He is at the present time living retired, having entered into superannuated relations with his conference, and receives a pension from the same, his home being in Cottage Grove.

The Rev. W. J. Gardner was born in England, August 3, 1845, a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Spilsted) Gardner, who were also natives of that country. The family emigrated to the United States in 1849, settling in New York, while later they became residents of Illinois, their home being in the vicinity of Chicago. There the father was employed in railroad work until 1853, when he passed away at the age of thirty-four years. In the family were five children, of whom one son and two daughters, Edward, Elizabeth and Mercy, all died of cholera in Chicago in 1854. Another daughter, Mary, passed away in Iowa in 1907, and the Rev. W. J. Gardner, of this review, completes the family. After the death of the father, the mother married again, her second husband being H. W. Short. Subsequently they removed to Iowa, where both passed away, the death of Mrs. Short occurring when she was sixty-eight years of age. By her second marriage she became the mother of three children: Mercy, deceased; Edward; and Alexander, of Newton, Iowa.

W. J. Gardner was about four years of age when brought by his parents to America and was a lad of only eight years at the time of his father's death. He was then sent to live with a Mr. Piper, with whom he resided for three years, and from that time until he reached the age of seventeen years he was variously employed and attended school at Dixon, Illinois. With the outbreak of the Civil war his patriotic spirit was aroused and on the 15th of August, 1862, he enlisted for service as a member of Company A, Seventy-fifth Illinois Infantry, with which he served for about three years, or until the close of the war, being honorably discharged June 12, 1865. He participated in a large number of important engagements but was never wounded throughout the entire period of hostilities, although he took part in many important battles, including Perryville, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Ringgold, the first and second engagements of Buzzards Roost, Rocky Face, Resaca, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Pine Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, Snryna Camp Ground, Peach Tree Creek, siege of Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Franklin and Nashville.

With a most creditable military record Rev. Gardner returned to the north and settled upon a homestead in western Iowa, where he resided until 1873. While following farming there he prepared for the ministry and entered actively upon the work of preaching the gospel in connection with the Methodist Episcopal church. For fifteen years he was identified with the ministry of that denomination in northwest Iowa and Dakota Territory. He was licensed to preach and began his work on the home charge, The Maple Valley circuit, in February, 1873. In November of that year he was sent to Richland, Dakota, and during his two years' pastorate there had fair success in instituting new work. In 1875 he united with the Northwest Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church and was sent to Gayville, Dakota, Lodi also becoming a part of his charge the second year. He remained at Gayville for three years. In 1877 he was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrews and in 1878 was sent to Correctionville, Iowa, where a great revival was held and during the second year of his pastorate there he built the first church in the place. In 1880 he was ordained elder by Bishop Warren and went to Smithland. He held many revivals and built two churches, one at Lucky Valley, the other at Oto. Many were added to the church and one new charge named Palestine was organized and added to the Sioux City district of the North West Iowa Conference. In the fall of 1882 he was sent to Vail, Iowa, and held two revivals, one at Vail and the other at Deloit, building a church at the latter place. In 1884 he went to Rockwell City, where he received one hundred into the church, and in 1885 he removed to Lake City, where he held a revival, many being added to the church. During his second year there his health failed and he returned to his old home at Mapleton, Iowa. After being somewhat improved he supplied the Danbury pulpit for nine months and was in the midst of a good work when he had an opportunity to sell his home and follow the advice that had been given him to go to Oregon for the benefit of his health. He arrived in this state in April, 1888, and settled in Lost Valley, Lane county. By fall his health had so far improved that he asked for some home mission work. The church then organized what was called Dexter circuit, including most of the southern portion of Lane county. His appointments were Dexter, Cloverdale, Goshen, Creswell, Cottage Grove and Mosby Creek. There was not a dollar's worth of church property on the field when he took charge. He found fifty-three members of the church at these scattered appointments. He held his first revival meeting in Oregon, at Cottage Grove, and organized the society on Thanksgiving evening, November 29, 1888, with twenty-seven charter members. This society now has about three hundred members, has ten thousand dollars' worth of property and pays its pastor eighteen hundred dollars a year. Rev. Gardner held a meeting with good results at Goshen later in the year and the second year built a church at Creswell at a cost of three thousand dollars and a parsonage for five hundred dollars. Commencing with the third year he held an excellent revival with seventy-two additions to the church. At the close of his fourth year he built a church at Goshen at a cost of fourteen hundred dollars and bought the Presbyterian church in Cottage Grove. At the end of four years on this circuit there were three churches, one parsonage and a membership of over two hundred. In 1892 he was sent to Canby, Oregon, where he held good revivals, a number uniting with the church. He also spent much time in settling up old accounts for the church and after two years he went to Hubbard, Oregon, where the church was in a run-down condition. He held excellent revivals at Marquam and Molalla and started a church building at Glad Tidings, but his health was poor and he could not do what he desired. In 1896 he went to Brownsville, Oregon, where all of the churches united in a great revival, but Mr. Gardner's strenuous labors brought on an attack of apoplexy and paralysis while speaking in the pulpit. He had, therefore, to resign his work at the end of the first year. In 1897 he supplied Mehama, preaching once each Sunday. At the end of the conference year in October, 1898, he changed his Lost Valley property for property three miles below Cottage Grove, where he lived for ten years, conducting a small dairy farm and preaching in outside appointments on Sunday. The last two years he preached to his neighbors at Saginaw, giving his services and helping to build a small new church, costing about fifteen hundred dollars. In October, 1908, he removed to Cottage Grove, where he is now waiting the last roll call.

On the 14th of Feb., 1868, Rev. Gardner was married to Mrs. Susanna Smith, a native of Pennsylvania. Their marriage was celebrated in Iowa, where Rev. Gardner then lived, and to them five children were born: Myrtle M., who married L. H. Morgan, of Saginaw, Oregon, and who has six children; Leonard, of Salem, who is married and has four children; Alma, the wife of L. P. Bennett, of Salem, by whom she has two children; W. J. and Grace, twins, who are both married and each of whom has one child, the former residing in Sacramento, California, and the latter the wife of Ansel Wood, living in Cottage Grove.

In his political faith Mr. Gardner is a republican but has never given much time nor attention to politics. He belongs to Appomattox Post, No. 34, G. A. R., Department of Oregon, and thus maintains pleasant relations with his old army comrades. He is well known in his home city and has a large acquaintance through various sections of Oregon, where he preached for a number of years. During the time of his business and professional activity he was the means of accomplishing great good in Iowa and Oregon and his name is honored wherever he is known. He was a strong and eloquent speaker and, imbued with a firm belief in the doctrines which he taught, he influenced many into choosing the better path of life and his good work goes on in the lives of those who have come under his ministry.

BENJAMIN F. SCAIEFE, B. S., M. D., is a well known representative of the medical profession in Eugene, practicing as a member of the firm of Bartle & Scaiefe. He holds to high standards in his professional labors and manifests marked ability in the practice of both medicine and surgery. He was born in Effingham county, Illinois, September 22, 1865, and is a son of James M. and Harriet (Kitchel) Scaiefe. In the paternal line he comes of an old southern family while his maternal ancestors were from New York. The Scaiefes are of Scotch descent while the Kitchels come of German lineage. The Doctor's parents were pioneers of Illinois where they settled at an early date. The Kitchel family early established their home northwest of the city of Springfield. The Doctor's father engaged in stock-raising and became a well known and highly respected business man of the community in which he made his home.

Dr. Scaiefe was educated in the public schools, in the high school at Altamont and in the Washington University of St. Louis, Missouri. He read medicine under the direction of Doctor George Schlagenhuf of Altamont, Illinois, who directed his reading during 1883 and 1884. The degree of Bachelor of Science was conferred upon him by the Washington University of St. Louis in 1886. He then entered the St. Louis Medical College and was graduated in 1887 with the degree of M. D. He afterward took charge of a sanitarium at Saylor, Springs, Illinois.

DR. B. F. SCATENE

where he continued for seventeen years, doing valuable work there along professional lines. During the winter seasons throughout that period he engaged in active practice in St. Louis. In 1906 he removed to Eugene and purchased an interest in the business of Doctor Phillip Bartle, with whom he still remains in partnership. His pronounced ability has gained him recognition as a leading physician of Eugene and in addition to the large private practice which is now accorded him he is serving on the staff of the Eugene hospital. He belongs to the Lane County Medical Society, The Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and keeps in close touch with the advancement of the profession through the proceedings of these different organizations.

Doctor Sealefe was married to Miss Sarah E. Davis, a daughter of Henry and Martha Davis, of Altamont, and they have become the parents of five children: Ethel May, Marguerite A., the wife of John A. Farre, of Portland; Benjamin F.; Joseph W.; and Paul. Doctor Sealefe has always been interested in the cause of education and intends that his children have good advantages along that line. He was a trustee of Ewing College in Ewing, Illinois, and was also a member of the Baptist church while there. He was a director of the Clay County State Bank at Louisville, Illinois, but resigned when he came to Eugene. His fraternal relations are with Eugene Lodge, No. 11, E. & A. M.; Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M.; Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T.; and Al Kader Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. Doctor Sealefe exemplifies in his life the beneficent spirit of the Masonic fraternity and is loyal to its teachings. The greater part of his time and attention is given to his business and at all times he holds to a high standard of professional ethics. He is a constant student of the science of medicine and his labors have been attended by a measure of success that places him in a prominent position among the successful physicians and surgeons of Eugene.

JESSE G. HODGES is the owner of one of the most productive and valuable farms in Douglas county, comprising three hundred and seventy acres in Scotts valley. His birth occurred in Grande Ronde, Union county, Oregon, on the 4th of January, 1864, his parents being Calaway and Elizabeth (Belieu) Hodges, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Missouri. Calaway Hodges crossed the plains to Oregon with his parents in 1847, the journey being made with ox teams. Monroe Hodges, the paternal grandfather of our subject, took a donation claim in Benton county, on which the town of Wells has since been built. In 1848, at the time of the gold discovery in California, Calaway Hodges went to the gold fields and there followed mining for about three years. Returning to Benton county, Oregon, he took up a donation claim adjoining that of his father and was soon afterward married. At the end of several years he sold his claim and removed to Coles valley in Douglas county, while subsequently he spent several years in Linn county. He next took up his abode in Jackson county and has there remained to the present time, now residing in Phoenix at the age of eighty-three years. The period of his residence in the west covers more than six decades and he is honored as one of its pioneer settlers and one whose work has aided largely in its development. His wife was the daughter of Rev. Leander Belieu, a Methodist Episcopal minister, who in 1845 crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, locating with his family in Benton county, where he took up a donation claim. In 1849 he went to the California gold fields and, dying on the return voyage, was taken off the boat and buried on an island. Mrs. Elizabeth (Belieu) Hodges passed away in 1906 and was buried in Medford cemetery.

Jesse G. Hodges was reared under the parental roof and attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education. When fifteen years of age his father removed to the Spokane district of Washington, where the family home was maintained for twelve years. As a youth of nineteen Jesse Hodges began his career as a stage driver, driving from Spokane into Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and later from the old Catholic mission into Wardner, Idaho. He made the first track ever made into Wardner with a six-horse stage, the few families who had come into that place having used pack animals. At the end of five years he abandoned the stage route and purchased a horse ranch eighteen miles east of Spokane, raising horses for four years. In the spring of 1892 he removed with his family to Medford, Oregon, where for about eighteen years he was engaged in land speculation. In June, 1910, he brought his family to the country and purchased his present ranch of three hundred and seventy acres in Scotts valley, one of the most productive and valuable farms in Douglas county. In its operation he has met with gratifying success and well deserves recognition among the prosperous and representative citizens of his native state.

In 1888 Mr. Hodges was united in marriage to Miss Emma Lewis, of Wardner, Idaho, by whom he has nine children, namely: Terrence D.; Vineie, who is the wife of Benjamin Wetzel, of San Francisco, California; Clarence J.; Jesse J.; Mildred; Everett L.; Mary E.; and Thomas M. and Edna, twins. All are still at home except the daughter, Vineie. In politics Mr. Hodges is independent, supporting men and measures without regard to party affiliation and never seeking office for himself. His wife is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Throughout his life he has been actuated by laudable ambition and strong determination that has enabled him to overcome all difficulties and obstacles and make continuous advancement on the highroad to prosperity.

D. G. HORN. In the upbuilding of the towns of southern and eastern Oregon there has been little evidence of the lack of opportunities felt elsewhere. With the rapid building of railroads throughout the northwest it has been a comparatively easy thing to bring each new town into close connection with the outside world, thus enabling its population to obtain whatever must be purchased elsewhere and to ship its products to other markets. With the development of business there is ever a demand for the medium of exchange that a bank affords and, recognizing this fact, D. G. Horn became active in developing the banking interests of Bonanza, purchasing an interest in the institution known as the Bank of Bonanza in July, 1909. He has reorganized it and has since been active in its control and in formulating its policy. Thus he has come to be ranked with the progressive citizens of the northwest that have come to this section from the Mississippi valley. He was born in Fultonham, Muskingum county, Ohio, October 26, 1857, and is a son of John and Amanda (Moore) Horn, also natives of that county. From Ohio they removed to eastern Kansas, where both passed away, Mr. Horn at the age of seventy-two years, his wife at the age of sixty-seven. He had been a farmer and stock-raiser, thus supporting his family of seven sons and two daughters, of whom eight are yet living.

D. G. Horn was reared in the Sunflower state and afterward spent several years in traveling over the United States, working as a laborer and seeing the country. He was married in August, 1884, and then returned to Ohio, residing at the place of his birth and cultivating the old homestead for two years. He afterward spent two years in Iowa and about twenty years in Nebraska before coming to Oregon. Throughout his entire life he has been identified with farming interests and is still the owner of a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres of Langells valley, Klamath county. He resides, however, at Bonanza and in July, 1909, he purchased an interest in the Bank of Bonanza, with which his son John S. was previously identified. He then reorganized the bank, raised the capital stock to twenty thousand dollars and became president of the institution, his son, however, filling the position of cashier and being the active man of the bank. The other official is Jacob Rueck, of Yonma, who is the vice president. D. G. Horn is also treasurer of the Horsefly Irrigation District, which was the first district organized under the state irrigation law. He is actively interested in all that pertains to the welfare and upbuilding of his community, has been president of the Bonanza Commercial Club since its organization and is clerk of the board of education.

Mr. Horn was united in marriage to Miss Lucretia C. Horn, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Solomon S. Horn. They have had five children: John S., cashier of the bank; Stanley, who died at the age of two years; Gladys M.; Dorey; and Bernice M. In his fraternal relations Mr. Horn is an Odd Fellow and is faithful to the teachings of that society. In politics he has always been an earnest republican, believing that the principles of the party contain the best elements of good government. He is recognized as a self-made man, for at the age of fourteen years he ran away from home and has since made his own way in the world. He has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished, for he today occupies a prominent and honorable position in agricultural and financial circles. His record proves that industry will overcome obstacles and, combined with honest purpose, will win success.

RICHARD H. SHACKLETT has been a resident of Lane county since 1887 and has lived retired in Eugene since 1889. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served on the Confederate side in that conflict during the entire period of hostilities. He was born in Meade county, Kentucky, December 17, 1837, and is the son of Richard and Mahala (Allen) Shacklett. His family is of English extraction, dating back many generations, his ancestors being among the early English emigrants who established their place of residence originally in the state of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandparent of Richard H. Shacklett was a major in the War of 1812. Removing at a very early day to Kentucky, he settled in that portion of the state where the city of Louisville is now located, and at this place the father of the subject of this review was born. His paternal grandparent later removed to Meade county, Kentucky, and there established his home, on a farm where he lived throughout the remainder of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Shacklett were united in wedlock in Kentucky and in 1852 removed to Scotland county, Missouri, and at that place some of the family still maintain their residence.

Richard H. Shacklett was reared and educated in his father's home and on attaining his majority was engaged in farming until the opening of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company C, Martin Greene's Regiment, Confederate Infantry. He was later transferred to Pindell's Battalion of Sharpshooters and was on duty in Louisiana at the time of the surrender of his command. He received his parole at Shreveport, Louisiana, and was accorded free transportation by the Federal government to his home in Missouri. After the close of the war he resumed farming which he followed until 1887. In that year he disposed of his landed interests in that state and removed to Oregon, settling on a farm in Lane county. There he remained for two years and at the end of that time partially retired from business and established his residence at Eugene, of which place he has since been a resident.

Mr. Shacklett has been twice married. His first union was with Delena Woods, a daughter of Uriah Woods, whose family were natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Shacklett died in 1900, and Mr. Shacklett was again married, his second union being with Miss Amelia Smith of Lane county, this state. She was born, however, in Kentucky.

Mr. Shacklett is a member of Eugene lodge, No. 11, A. F. & A. M., having become a member of the Masonic order when twenty-two years of age. He is also a member of Eugene Chapter R. A. M., No. 10. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, he being one of the ruling elders. Time has dealt kindly with Mr. Shacklett and, notwithstanding the hardships through which his path of life has led, he has survived not only the march and camp and battle feats of war, but through all the vicissitudes of toil and business conflicts he is now, in the evening of life, in possession of all his natural powers, and is keenly alive to all the vital issues of interest to the public. He is ever ready to cooperate and lend his influence to the advancement of all issues seeking the improvement of the people throughout his state and county.

LLOYD SPIRES, well known in Coos county, where for a long period he has been connected with general agricultural pursuits, now makes his home near Myrtle Point and is one of the partners in the Spires Drug Company there. He was born in California, April 22, 1857, and is a son of Samuel and Sarah (Graves) Spires, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Indiana. The former came to Oregon in 1850 across the plains and settled on a donation land claim near Salem. In 1852 he went to the gold fields in California, where he remained until 1855. He then returned to Oregon and settled in Coos county, near Myrtle Point, making his home there to the time of his death, which occurred in 1896. His wife passed away in 1873. In their family were eight children, five of whom are now deceased. Two daughters still survive, Ella and Alice. The former is the wife of W. T. Lehnherr, living near Myrtle Point, Oregon. He was one of the early settlers of this state, coming to the northwest with his father, who founded the town of Myrtle Point. Unto him and his wife have been born five children. Alice Spires is the wife of F. S. Crouch, of Calistoga, California, where he follows farming, and they have two children.

Lloyd Spires, the only surviving son, has always lived upon the Pacific coast and the spirit of enterprise which has actuated the empire builders of the northwest is exemplified in his life record, for he has made good use of his time and opportunities and has also been a factor in the material development of the communities in which he has lived. He remained upon his father's farm until sixteen years of age and then started out in business life on his own account, being employed by other farmers of the locality and also assisting to some extent in the work of the home place. In 1880, when twenty-three years of age, he went to the gold mines, where he was employed for a year. He was then married, after which he returned to the farm, he and his father purchasing land with capital they had acquired in the mines. At length he disposed of his property in California in 1884 and came to Oregon, settling in Coos county. He purchased a preemption homestead of three hundred and twenty acres, of which only about five acres had been cleared. He has since cleared twenty acres and placed the entire amount under cultivation. His methods have been practical and the results gratifying. In addition to developing the tract he has engaged in stock-raising to some extent. He continued to make his home upon the ranch until 1899, when he removed to Myrtle Point in order to give his children good educational privileges. In the spring of 1912 he returned to the farm and is now devoting his energies to its further development. He also owns an interest in the Spires Drug Company, together with some residence property and vacant property in the town. His home is pleasantly situated about three miles northeast of Myrtle Point and just a half mile off the Dora road.

On the 24th of November, 1881, Mr. Spires was united in marriage to Miss Emma Lonkey, a native of Canada and a daughter of Xavia Lonkey, of California, who removed from that state to Canada. The family was a large one and all of the children are yet living with the exception of two, Xavia and Clara having both passed away. The others are: Mary, living in Massachusetts; Oliver, a resident of California; Obeline, of Nevada; Delian and Leon, both of whom are residents of Nevada; Mrs. Spires; Camille and Ogzilla, both of California; Lydia, of Nevada; and Edward, of California. Unto the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Spires have been born five children: Oliver R., a druggist of Myrtle Point; Fred L., an electrical engineer living at home; Winifred A., who is engaged in teaching school; Roy L., who is attending high school; and Elton C., also in school.

Mr. Spires gives his political support to the republican party and has held some local offices, to which he has been called by the vote of his fellow townsmen, who recognize his ability and appreciate his trustworthiness in citizenship. For four years he was county commissioner of Coos county and while living in Myrtle Point served as a member of the city council. He was also school director there for a number of years and has filled the office in his rural school district. Since 1881 he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is also a representative of the Improved Order of Red Men. He has always resided on the coast and the history of the west is largely familiar to him. Coming into a sparsely settled district on his removal to Oregon, he identified himself with those labors and activities which are proving dominant forces in the upbuilding and substantial improvement of this part of the state. His has been a well spent life, useful by reason of its continuous activity, and he is now reaping the benefits of his labors in a comfortable competence.

JOHN H. SCHAAP, the owner of one hundred and twenty-four acres of land situated in Marion county, on section 18, township 61, west, was born in Wisconsin, February 8, 1862. He is a son of John and Mina (Bloomer) Schaap, who were natives of Holland. Both parents, on coming to America, had settled in Michigan, where they were married and five years later removed to Galena, Illinois, residing there ten years. They then went to Platteville, Wisconsin, and there they remained twenty-five years. Subsequently they removed to South Dakota, where they passed the rest of their lives, the father dying in 1896 and the mother two years later. To them were born eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity. They were: Otto, who resides in Missouri; Albert, who died in Montana; Mrs. Hannah Bushnel, of Alberta, Canada; Mrs. Elizabeth Bushnel, of Salem, Oregon; George, of Pratum, Oregon; John H., of this review; Henry, of Ft. Pierre, South Dakota; Benjamin, who died in South Dakota; Mrs. Mina Foote, of Eugene, Oregon; and two children, who died in infancy.

John H. Schaap started out in life on his own accord at the age of twenty-one years, when he purchased a tract of land in Palo Alto county, Iowa. He operated this farm until 1890, when he sold it and removed to Oregon, settling in Marion county, on his present farm of one hundred and twenty-four acres, which is located thirteen miles northeast of Salem. He has improved this tract of land until he now has one of the best farms in the locality, one hundred acres of it being under a high state of cultivation.

On February 17, 1887, Mr. Schaap was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Oudyn, a native of Platteville, Wisconsin, and a daughter of Martin and Jennie (Boat) Oudyn, both of whom were born in Holland. Her parents came to America and settled in St. Louis, Missouri, later removing to Wisconsin, where the mother is yet living at the age of seventy-eight years, the father having passed away in 1897. In their family were six children: Marinus, of Greenville, Illinois; George, who died in Colorado; Hettie, who is the wife of Henry Wunn, of Wisconsin; Jennie, now Mrs. Schaap; Martin, of Platteville, Wisconsin; and Nellie, who is the wife of John Meyers, of Platteville. Mr. and Mrs. Schaap have become the parents of six children, the eldest of whom died in infancy. The others are: Florence, born February 11, 1891, who is the wife of Alfred Williams, of Silverton, Oregon; Martin, who died at the age of fourteen months; Dwight and Eugene, twins, born November 2, 1896, who are both at home; and Marinus, born February 14, 1901.

John H. Schaap is a republican but has never sought nor desired public office as a reward for party fealty. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In all his actions he is governed by a high sense of duty and by his integrity and worth he has gained the friendship of the best people of this section.

THOMAS HIRST, deceased, was one of the very early pioneers of Oregon and public opinion placed him among the most enterprising and valued citizens of his adopted state. He was born in England April 15, 1835, and at the age of fifteen years emigrated to America, settling in Ohio, where he continued to live for three years, and there received his education in the public schools. He then removed to Australia, where he kept his residence for five years and then returned to this country and spent one year in San Francisco, California, after which he moved to Oregon, settling in Coos county, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of heavily timbered land. There he established his home and engaged in general agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. Mr. Hirst wrote a most eloquent review of his early life in Oregon, which was published in the April number of "Pioneer Days," of that year and is here reproduced with acknowledgments to that periodical.

"I arrived in Coos county, Oregon territory, in January, 1859, by walking down the Umpqua beach to Coos bay, and thence by Indian canoe and mountain trail to the Coquille river, there to carve out a home in that beautiful garden of southwestern Oregon. A beautiful garden it was for, as I stood on the top of Sugarloaf mountain, with the broad expanse of the valley lying before me covered with the bright green of the maple and the dark green of the myrtle, with the snow-capped mountains in the distance, it formed as grand a picture as the eye could wish to see; but to turn this garden into a home the forest must be destroyed, and what an herculean task it would be! I have seen the oak and hickory forests of Ohio, the chestnut and sugar maple groves of Pennsylvania, gathered walnuts in the woods of Kentucky, traveled through the gum forests of New South Wales, but for density and number of trees to the acre the Coquille valley outclassed them all. In such a forest our stout-hearted pioneer carved out a home after many years of toil, and that he has been repaid for his labor the fine farms and happy homes fully attest. When our pioneer women wished to visit their neighbors they would frequently paddle their own canoe up and down the river, and some of them became quite expert. I remember a time when one of our bright young school teachers went down the river to purchase supplies. The trip down the river was easy enough, but the return trip was more difficult, in fact the young man had to accept the assistance of one of our brave pioneer women to steer his canoe to port. 'Never mind, Binger, if you could not handle a canoe you have proved yourself competent to work well and faithfully for your adopted state. Many years your voice has been heard in the halls of congress. All honor to you as a Coos county pioneer.' The early pioneer had much difficulty in marketing his products. Many a time I have left home at 2 o'clock in the morning and paddled twenty-four miles down the river and then four miles up Beaver slough, then carried my load three miles up the isthmus, put it into another canoe and traveled another fifteen miles to North Bend sawmill, arriving about 9 o'clock at night, there to exchange my various products for the articles needed at home, not forgetting the injunction to bring one paper each of needles and pins. Returning home, which always took two days, I had time to note the skill of the beaver in repairing the dams that I had torn open to pass through the day before. But alas, the trapper came, and thy beautiful coat was sent east, to be worn and admired by the people who knew thee not. Farewell, old friend. No more will my canoe glide over the placid waters held in check by thy labors. No more will the hardy trapper exchange thy coat for flour or sugar or fill his jug with such water as thou never dreamed of. Thy home is desolate and Beaver slough is now a thing of the past as a commercial highway.

"The pioneer had no cultivated or domestic fruit but there was a plentiful supply of wild fruits in their season, consisting of salmon berries, raspberries, blackberries, huckleberries and crabapples. Sunday was the day for gathering the fruit. The canoe Telephone (Edison was unknown to us), operated by our women, would send word to our neighbors to meet at a certain point or bend in the river. Then with lunch and pails our ever-ready canoe would glide down the river to the place of meeting. Having filled our pails with fruit and enjoyed a pleasant chat over our lunch, we would return home for milking time. For pleasure and recreation we had our barn raisings and log rollings. When a new settler had located his claim and building site, and cleared a small patch, he would select the most suitable trees for his log cabin or barn and then on an appointed day the neighbors for miles around would go to his place and roll, notch and fit the logs in position, and before night, would leave him with the framework of a good log cabin, having worked and feasted all day, returning to our homes contented and at peace with all the world. Nor did we forget to celebrate the glorious Fourth of July. How well do I remember when that great-hearted pioneer, William T. Perry, placed his flatboat at our disposal for a two weeks' trip to Whiskey Run, where the Schroeder boys, Henry and Gus, were mining. What a royal welcome they gave us, with music, feasting and dancing and exploring the beach, gathering agates and shells, nor did we forget to indulge in the various shell fish we found among the rocks. I will never forget that trip nor the various members who composed the party. Alas, how many of them have passed over to the Great Beyond. As memory carries me backward forty years how well I remember the generous, brave-hearted pioneers, the Hermanns, Schroeders, Perrys, Dements, Yoakams, Lockharts, Kenyons, good old Ben Figg, Ned Fahy, the Low brothers, the Rogers brothers, monarchs of industry on Coos river, the Hillborns, Hollands, Butlers, Captain Haris, the Aiken brothers, Dr. Hodson, the Rook brothers, W. D. L. F. Smith, generous B. F. Ross, the Stauff brothers, good old John Kronenburg, the Noble brothers, H. H. Luce, Empire City's pioneer mill man, Al Simpson, the man whose active brain has kept his mill and shipyards in active operation in good or bad times for forty years, P. Flanagan and S. S. Mann. Ah, these last two men are entitled to more than a passing notice. Pioneers of pioneers, their skill, judgment and enterprise made coal mining a success on Coos bay. Hospitable, generous and kind to their employees, their home was known far and wide as a place where the traveler would be royally entertained without money and without price. Both held positions of trust in Coos county. Their good deeds and works can never be forgotten by the old pioneer. C. H. Merchant, for many years a hard worker but by his business foresight and enterprise, his strict integrity and economy is now able to sit in the stern and steer while others paddle his canoe. Andrew Nasburg, a successful farmer and merchant, was the first postmaster in Marshfield, and his salary was twelve dollars per year. He held the office many years and when he resigned in favor of the writer, the commission on the business done amounted to about seven hundred dollars per annum. Mr. Nasburg was taken from us in the prime of life, but left behind a name and record of which his family may justly feel proud.

"The pioneer women, how nobly they have done their part! How well in our absence have they defended our homes! With their trusty gun they have slain the fierce lynx that stole our poultry, with the faithful dog by their side and ax in hand they have chased the prowling bear that would have carried off our hogs, they have braved the flood waist-deep to drive the cattle to the hills for safety, and in a thousand ways have proved their indomitable courage. All honor to our pioneer women! During the flood of 1861-2 I left Eastport at 7 o'clock in the morning with grub and blankets to last three days, expecting it would take me that time to reach my home. John Canyon and myself worked at the coal mines during the winter and improved our places in summer. Our wives lived together during our absence, that being convenient, as our farms joined. I started homeward, crossing the isthmus as usual, but the water of the Coquille river was so high that I left the regular trail, doubling Green Point, and made straight for Cedar Point. Crossing the river I made a beeline for Fishtrap, then crossed the stream again and came out at the Malcolm place—now Fred Schroeder's elegant home. I then entered the woods and proceeded to Perry's Prairie, arriving before sundown, having been but nine and one-half hours on my journey. If the water had been ten feet lower I should have had to follow the sinuosity of the stream, and no doubt it would have taken me three days to have reached my home. When I was at Cedar Point I saw a log cabin floating down the river. Then my heart sank within me and 'where is my home and how fares my neighbors,' were the questions that involuntarily came to my mind. The flood was so general and the current rushed so rapidly that it seemed as though the whole upper river was submerged, and the sweetest music that ever greeted my ears was the voice of good old lady Perry, when, in answer to my inquiry when I arrived at her cabin, she said 'yes, Tom, here is Lou; we are all right.' As before stated, my wife and Mrs. Canyon were living together for company. They had an intuition that there would be a great flood and had rounded up our cattle in the timber but couldn't make them cross a slough at the lower end of my clearings in order to drive them to higher ground, hence they were obliged to leave them to their fate. The next morning the water was still rising and they started what cattle they had in the clearing and followed them an eighth of a mile, wading waist-deep in the water and forcing the cattle to swim to higher ground. Having saved the stock they then began to think of their own safety. Their canoe was gone and they must reach Perry's, more than a mile away. They crossed a slough by climbing a myrtle, whose overhanging branches interlocked with the limbs on the opposite side. After their perilous climb they landed on the proper side and waded to the bank of the stream opposite Perry's place just as that grand old man was giving orders for a boat to go to the rescue of Nancy and Lou.

"Pioneers of the '50s, our voyage is near its end, our canoe trip has not always been one of pleasure nor yet of sorrow. Sometimes we have met strong floods to check our progress, sand-bars and shoals to contend with, rapids to shoot, snags and whirlpools to lure us to destruction, and often cold, wet and weary, our limbs aching with toil, and making little headway. Then again the tide would turn, favorable winds would waft us onward, giving us rest and renewed courage to face the dark canyons of adversity or the green fields of prosperity. To the pioneers who have been called hence, we bid you a kind farewell; to the pioneers who are still with us, you whose sun has passed the zenith, may peace and contentment be with you, may your canoe float gently down stream to pleasant lakes, and when you make the last landing on the shore of time, may you find the trail blazed to guide you to the great wigwam, and be welcomed by Sah-la-Tyee, or great spirit of the universe."

In 1873 Mr. Hirst removed to Marshfield and was there engaged in the general mercantile business until within a short time of his death, which occurred on November 14, 1903. He left to his widow an estate of one hundred and sixty acres near the city limits of Bandon, also a personal property interest in the merchandising establishment at Marshfield, and a beautiful residence in that city, now occupied by Mrs. Hirst as her home.

On November 12, 1855, Mr. Hirst was united in marriage to Miss Louisa A. Milton, who was born in New South Wales, Australia, November 29, 1838, and received her education in the public schools of Australia. Her parents, James and Ellen (Donahoe) Milton, were natives of London, England, and removed to Australia at an early period in life, their marriage being celebrated in that country. The father for some time conducted a shoe store and later was engaged in farming. The father and mother both died in Australia, the former at the age of seventy-seven and the latter at the age of seventy-four. In their family were eight children: Mrs. Ellen Johnson, of Australia; James, deceased; Louisa A., who is the widow of Thomas Hirst; William, deceased; Ruth, of Australia; Edward, whose death occurred in Australia; Thomas, deceased; and Elizabeth, of Australia. Mr. and Mrs. Hirst adopted a son, Milton E. Hirst, when he was a child two years of age. He was born in 1878 and now resides in Marshfield.

Mr. Hirst while a resident of Marshfield was for two years the regularly appointed postmaster of that place. He has a place in the history of Oregon on the honored roll of her early pioneers. He was a man of unusual intelligence and during life was ever to be relied upon to identify himself with every measure of public interest seeking the welfare of the people of his county and state. Mrs. Hirst is a devout and active member of the Episcopal church of Marshfield.

DR. E. D. HITCHCOCK is one of the younger representatives of the medical profession in Klamath county, practicing at Bonanza, yet he has gained a position and success that many an older physician might well envy. He was born in Pendleton, Oregon, July 31, 1884, and is a son of William H. and Etta B. (Barriek) Hitchcock, who were natives of Ohio, where they were reared and married. They came to the northwest about 1882 and resided in northern Oregon until a recent date, but are now living at North Yakima, Washington, the father being a retired merchant. In their family were three children: George W., also living in North Yakima; E. D.; and Edna, the wife of F. D. Peterson, of San Fernando, California.

Dr. Hitchcock was five years of age at the time of the removal of the family to The Dalles, and later he went with his parents to San Francisco. He pursued his medical education in Cooper College, the medical department of Stanford University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1909. He had a year's hospital experience in Alameda County Hospital and was therefore particularly well qualified to take up his work as a general practitioner, for his hospital service was of a most varied character. In 1910 he came to Bonanza and entered into partnership with Dr. W. S. Johnson for general practice and also for the conduct of a drug business, which is now carried on under the name of the Bonanza Drug Company. Dr. Hitchcock is very careful in the diagnosis of his cases and accurate in his application of the principles of medical science to the needs of his patients. The firm now enjoys an extensive practice which is steadily growing. In addition to his professional and commercial interests Dr. Hitchcock has holdings in timber lands.

In April, 1911, occurred the marriage of Dr. Hitchcock and Miss Eva Marie Lund, a native of Wisconsin, and a daughter of H. J. Lund. She is a graduate of the University of Pacific and the San Francisco National Training School. She is also a graduate of the Deaconess School and engaged in professional service in Eugene and San Francisco. Both the Doctor and his wife were in the latter city during the earthquake and he had a commission under the government and controlled a large sanitary district at that time.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Hitchcock hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and he also belongs to the Masonic lodge and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having served as noble grand of the latter. He is the secretary of the Bonanza Commercial Club and at the present time is serving as city recorder, to which position he was elected on the republican ticket, being a staunch advocate of the principles of that party. His activities have been of a varied nature and as a cooperant factor in many projects for the public good he has contributed in no small degree to the up-building and improvement of this district.

CHARLES ALBERT SCHROEDER, engaged in general farming and dairying, owns two hundred and fourteen acres of land on the Coquille road in association with his brother, Frank E. He is numbered among the worthy natives of Coos county, his birth having occurred on the original donation land claim of James G. Malcomb, which his father purchased in 1868. He is a son of J. Fred and Mary (Perry) Schroeder, the former a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and the latter of Oregon. Mary (Perry) Schroeder, who was a native of Clatsop county and the first white female child born in Oregon, passed away on the 13th of October, 1910. Thomas Perry, the maternal grandfather of our subject, came to this state with his wife and one child, making the journey from Portland, Maine, by ox teams. He took up land on the present site of Oregon City but found the location unpromising and sold out for five dollars. To J. Fred and Mary (Perry) Schroeder were born five children. Clara is the wife of Captain Levi Snyder, of Portland, Oregon, who is captain of the steamer Anvil, plying between Portland and the Coquille river. Frank E., who owns the old home farm in association with his brother Charles, our subject, cultivates rented land in California. J. Finley, who resides in Norway, Oregon, is successfully engaged in the conduct of a creamery. Eva resides with her father at Coquille, Oregon. Charles Albert, is the subject of this review.

Charles Albert Schroeder started out upon an independent career at the age of twenty-two years but remained with his father until the time of his marriage and for three years afterward rented the home farm. In 1903, in association with his brother Frank, he purchased the place from his father and has since been engaged in its operation. The property comprises two hundred and fourteen acres, and one hundred and thirty-five acres thereof is in a high state of cultivation. C. A. Schroeder devotes his attention to the pursuits of farming and dairying and in both branches of his business has met with success.

On the 5th of February, 1893, Mr. Schroeder was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Symons, a native of Coos county, Oregon, and a daughter of Thomas and Susan (Rackleff) Symons. Mrs. Schroeder is one of a family of four children, the others being as follows: Rose, the wife of Frank Sowash, of Woodburn, Oregon; Laura, the wife of Sylvester Huntley of Warrentown, Oregon, and George, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Schroeder have five children, namely: Eugene A., who was born on the 9th of December, 1893, and who obtained his early education in the district schools of Coos county, subsequently pursuing a course in the high school at Centralia, Washington; Mabel, born December 12, 1895, who is attending school and studying music; Marion, whose birth occurred on the 27th of June, 1898, and who is attending school and likewise studying music; Rosanna, who was born on the 17th of October, 1904, and attends school; and Ruth, whose natal day was December 8, 1908.

Mr. Schroeder is a democrat and was recently elected school director. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias. Both he and his wife have spent their entire lives within the borders of Coos county and have an extensive circle of warm friends here.

F. W. BROADSWORD, who in 1903 established a hardware store in Bonanza, has made continuous advancement along business lines and now has a large and gratifying trade. He was born in Jackson county, Oregon, in September, 1864, and is a son of Levi and S. M. (Erb) Broadsword, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. They were married in the latter state and came by way of the isthmus to the Pacific coast about 1862. After spending a year in California they removed to Jackson county, Oregon, and remained upon a farm during the greater part of their lives. In 1884 they took up their abode in Langells valley, where they lived until their removal to Bonanza. The father died here on the 11th of December, 1907, when he had reached the age of sixty-nine years and six months. Throughout his entire life he had followed farming and stock-raising. His widow still survives and now makes her home with her son F. W. Broadsword. They were married in November, 1862, and became the parents of but two children, the younger being a daughter, Edith May, now the wife of A. H. McClelland, of Montague, California.

F. W. Broadsword always remained with his parents and his filial devotion and care has rewarded them for their love and attention to him in the period of his childhood. He engaged in ranching until nine years ago, when he established his present hardware store in Bonanza. However, he is still the owner of a ranch, comprising a half section of land, in Langells valley, which he now leases. He carries a large and well selected line of shelf and heavy hardware and his enterprising business methods constitute the basis of his growing success.

Mr. Broadsword is likewise prominent in community affairs and has frequently been called upon to fill public offices. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and upon its ticket has been elected city recorder, which position he has filled for four years. He was county supervisor of roads in his district for one term and is now serving as deputy, in which connection important work devolves upon him as much is being done for the improvement of the highways in this part of the state. He is a member of the Klamath County Pioneers Association and of the Klamath Falls Chamber of Commerce and is in hearty sympathy with its efforts to exploit the resources of this part of the state and promote the growth and improvement of the district. He recognizes the opportunities here offered and knows that with the extension of irrigation projects this section of the state must become thickly settled, for its land when well watered is rich and arable and the section is capable of supporting a large population. He is, therefore, working earnestly to advance the interests of the locality and is recognized as one of the progressive citizens as well as successful business men.

JOSEPH DUNN BRADFORD LEE. During the seventy-two years which made up the span of his life J. D. B. Lee attained a great degree of prominence in farming circles of Coos county and his death deprived that district of a valued and representative citizen. He was born in Iowa, December 11, 1830, and was the only surviving member of a family of nine children born to his parents. He resided in the state of his nativity until he came to Oregon. His history is intimately connected with the early development of that state and he was among the many pioneers who crossed the plains with ox teams and were influential factors in the upbuilding of the American northwest. Mr. Lee located first in Polk county, Oregon, where he made his home with his brother for one year. At the expiration of that time he removed to Douglas county and later to Jackson county. He finally located in Coos county, Oregon, and made this section his home from 1874 until his death, which occurred December 24, 1902. He took up a homestead claim and was prominent in agricultural circles during his entire active life, with the exception of a short period when he operated a harness business. Even then he made this enterprise subservient to his farming. He was constantly adding to his holdings during his life and finally became the owner of four hundred acres of fine ranch land near Myrtle Point. His harness shop was still in operation at the time of his death but has since been sold by his widow. The agricultural interests of Coos county are the principal source of its wealth and prosperity and the life of Mr. Lee was a contributing factor in farm development. He was an expert agriculturist, keenly interested in modern ideas along this line and thoroughly versed in the details connected with his activities. His early days were spent among pioneer conditions but his later life was crowned with a degree of success which his labors justified. He served in the Indian war of 1855 and 1856 and his services merited the pension which his widow now receives.

On June 8, 1856, Mr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss Marilla Huntley, whose birth occurred in one of the central eastern states. Her father was among the pioneers of Oregon and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847. Her stepmother died during the journey and is buried near Willow Springs. By the father's first marriage nine children were born, of whom Mrs. Lee is the only one now living. By his second union was born a son, who is now living on a ranch on the north fork of the Coquille river. Mr. and Mrs. Lee became the parents of four children: Sylvia C., who passed away in the twentieth year of her age; Alva, born January 12, 1859, who is now managing and operating the home farm; Milton R., of Myrtle Point; and one who died in infancy.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Lee has disposed of his harness shop and given the homestead over to the management of her son. She herself has bought a very fine home in Myrtle Point and is now living in that district, where she is well known and widely respected.

Politically Mr. Lee gave his allegiance to the republican party and was always intelligently interested in the affairs of his community although he never sought public office. He was a member of the Christian church and an active worker in religious circles. He labored diligently during his life and his efforts were rewarded by continuous and rapid success. Since his death others have followed where he led the way, and the agricultural resources of Coos county have gained by his activities, and his many friends in the district are richer by the memory of the life he lived.

WILLIAM WIGHT owns and cultivates the farm of three hundred and twenty acres which was preempted and homesteaded by him and he now carries on general agricultural pursuits and stock-raising upon this place. He was born in Ontario, Canada, December 6, 1854, and is a son of James and Agnes (McKinley) Wight, the former born at Peterhead, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, June 22, 1822, and the latter in Campbelltown, Argyleshire, Scotland, in 1832. Both crossed the Atlantic to Canada in early life, the father being about nine years of age when he made the trip with his parents to the new world. Mrs. Wight died in Ontario when her son William was twenty years of age. Some time afterward the father removed westward to California, where his last days were spent. He had always followed the occupation of farming. In the family were seven sons and seven daughters, ten of whom reached years of maturity while eight are now living, four of the number being residents of Klamath county.

William Wight was about twenty-eight years of age when he left his native province and came to the United States, making his way to California in 1883. He had been reared to farm life and had pursued his education in the schools of Ontario. For five years he continued a resident of California and in 1888 came to Yonka valley, where he has since resided. He has always engaged in ranching and is now the owner of three hundred and twenty acres which he secured by pre-emption and homesteading. He carries on general farming and has made the raising of live stock a principal feature of his place for many years. Both branches of his business have proven profitable and his enterprise and determination are such that he carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

Mr. Wight has been married twice. In 1883 he wedded Margaret Jane Chisholm, who was born in Ontario and died in California in 1885, leaving one child, William Alexander, who after the death of his mother went back to Ontario, Canada, to make his home with his grandparents. In October, 1898, Mr. Wight married Jessie Anderson, who was born in Ontario in 1858, and became a resident of California in 1894. Her parents were Peter and Catherine (Ferguson) Anderson, natives of Scotland, where they were reared and married. They emigrated thence to the new world and spent their remaining days in Ontario. They had seven daughters, six of whom reached womanhood, while three are now living, including Mrs. Wight.

In his political faith Mr. Wight is a democrat and upon matters of public moment he keeps well informed. He was reared in the Presbyterian faith and for many years was identified with that church but now has his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. He has never regretted his determination to establish a home and seek his fortune upon the Pacific coast, for he has here found good opportunities and has gradually worked his way upward until he has won for himself a creditable and enviable position as a ranchman and stockman in the Yonna valley.

CREED L. CHENOWETH is the junior member of the firm of Stearns & Chenoweth, well known hardware merchants in Oakland, Douglas county. A native of Oregon, his birth occurred near Roseburg on March 18, 1866. He is a son of John and Melinda (Dixon) Chenoweth, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Indiana. The parents celebrated their marriage in Missouri into which state the mother had removed with her parents, and in which the father had settled during the early days of his manhood. In 1853 they crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon and located in Douglas county, east of Roseburg, where the father took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres to which he added at various times until he owned over sixteen hundred acres of farm and ranch land at the time of his death which occurred October 25, 1872. The mother died March 4, 1890. The father was for many years a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Creed L. Chenoweth was reared at home, received his early education in the common schools and was later a student in the University of Oregon. At the age of twenty years he established himself in the hardware business in company with A. F. Stearns, under the firm name of Stearns & Chenoweth. On December 11, 1886, the firm opened their hardware store in Oakland and have since prominently figured in the business circles of that city.

Mr. Chenoweth was united in marriage April 19, 1888, to Miss Minnie M. Smith, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Smith who came to Oregon from Missouri in 1852, the father being the first hardware merchant in the old town of Oakland. The store originally established by Mr. Smith was the parent of the one in which Mr. Chenoweth is now interested. To Mr. and Mrs. Chenoweth one child, Ruth, has been born. She has passed through the lower grades of the common school and is a graduate of the Portland high school and of St. Helen's Hall at Portland.

Creed L. Chenoweth is affiliated with the democratic party. He served continuously for nine years as mayor of Oakland, and, notwithstanding the urgent appeal of his constituency, refused longer to be an incumbent in that office. During President Cleveland's second administration he was appointed postmaster of Oakland and in that office served one term. He was at various times a member of the Oakland school board and is at present acting in that capacity. In May, 1912, he was appointed a member of the state board of education, in which office he is now serving. He is a member of Oakland Lodge, No. 16, F. & A. M., Oakland Chapter, No. 91, O. E. S., Umpqua Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F., Home Lodge, No. 24, A. O. U. W. and Oakland Lodge, No. 150, United Artisans. Mrs. Chenoweth is a member of the Episcopal church.

C. L. Chenoweth is a man whose business record and enterprising public spirit have placed him among the highly esteemed citizens of Douglas county, and he is known to be a man whose assistance is readily given to the advancement of every enterprise which tends to improve the conditions of the people in his county and state.

EDWARD L. DETLEFSEN, residing on the Coquille road, four and three-fourths miles from Myrtle Point, is widely known as a successful dairyman of Coos county. He was born in Germany in the year 1886, his father being Thomas Detlefsen, also a native of that country. His brothers and sisters are as follows: Martin, Mary and Emma, who reside in the fatherland; James and Herman, who live in California; Chris, of Portland, Oregon; and Paul, Nicholina, Henry and Thomas, all of whom make their home in Germany.

In 1901, when a youth of fifteen, Edward L. Detlefsen left his native land and emigrated to the United States, working for wages in California during the following four and a half years. He then rented a farm and conducted a dairy for four years. On the expiration of that period he came to Oregon, settling in Coos county and purchasing sixty acres of land near Norway, which he is now clearing. In the meantime, however, he also has cultivated a rented farm of four hundred acres and has been engaged in dairying, milking eighty cows, fifty-five of which he owns. These cows will bring him an average income of one hundred dollars each, this year, and in the future will average ninety dollars annually. He feeds all the grain which he raises and as a dairyman and farmer has already won a measure of success that augurs well for the future.

On the 20th of October, 1908, Mr. Detlefsen was married to Miss Margaret Reitz, a native of Germany and a daughter of John and Anna (Traboldt) Reitz, who reared ten children: Helen, Catherine and Jacob, residents of California; Marie, the mother of two children and the widow of Robert Dean of Norway, Oregon; George and Adolph, who live in California; Mrs. Margaret Detlefsen; and Hans, Bartlett and John, all living in California. Mr. and Mrs. Detlefsen have two children, namely: Paul Thomas, who was born on the 17th of April, 1910; and Raymond A., whose birth occurred April 23, 1911.

Mr. Detlefsen gives his political allegiance to the republican party but has never sought nor desired public office as a reward for party fealty. His religious faith is that of the Lutheran church. Coming to the new world so that he might take advantage of the opportunities offered in a land unhampered by caste or class, he has already won a creditable measure of prosperity for one of his years and has gained the esteem and goodwill of his fellowmen.

J. F. MASSEY. Seven miles beyond Myrtle Point, on the south fork of the Coquille river, is located the fine farm operated by J. F. Massey and owned by him in conjunction with his wife. He has resided upon this tract, which comprises six hundred and twenty acres of well improved and highly cultivated land, since 1904, and during the eight years of his occupancy has gained a reputation throughout Coos county as an expert agriculturist. He was born in South Dakota, in 1867, and is a son of George W. and Ann E. (Gipson) Massey, more extended mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work.

J. F. Massey received his education in the schools of South Dakota and Oregon. His residence in Coos county dates from 1878, in which year his father took up a tract of land and engaged in agriculture. This gave J. F. Massey the opportunity of assisting him and studying farming in all of its details. When he was still a child he was well acquainted with the best methods of tilling the soil, planting and harvesting the crops. He has been identified with this line of work during his entire active life. When he was twenty-three years of age he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Coos county and after he had proved up his title he began its cultivation. He was successful from the beginning, his land being productive because his methods are practical. He added to his holdings from time to time and now in conjunction with his wife owns six hundred and twenty acres highly improved and efficiently developed, which constitutes one of the most important farms in this section. He resided on his original homestead claim for eight years and for nine years afterward rented the farm which he now occupies. It then consisted of three hundred and forty acres and with this as a beginning he has built up his present large enterprise. He has never disposed of his original holdings and the homestead which he acquired in the early days of his career forms now one of the important sources of his income.

On December 9, 1890, Mr. Massey was united in marriage to Miss Lenora Wigant, a native of Coos county, Oregon, where her birth occurred on February 11, 1874. She is a daughter of Henry and Annie Wigant, the former a native of Germany, and the latter of Iowa. They were married in Coos county, Oregon, whither the father had come among the earliest pioneers. The mother's residence in this state dates from her girlhood, when she came to this section with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Wigant resided in Coos county for many years. The father followed farming near Rural, on the Coquille river, and was successful as an agriculturist until his death, in 1907. He had survived his wife since 1893, in which year her death occurred. Mrs. Massey is one of seven children born to her parents: William, who now lives in Coos county; George and John who are deceased; Lenora, the wife of our subject; Charlie, who is also a resident of Coos county; Etta, the wife of Leon Gregory, whose farm is near Coquille, Oregon; and Mary, who married Al Gartin, of Coquille City, Coos county. Mrs. Massey received her education in the public schools of her native section and remained at home until her marriage. She and her husband are the parents of five children: Sarah, born November 20, 1891, who was educated in the public schools of Coos county and who is now living at home; James A., born November 5, 1893, who is still with his parents; Elbert, whose birth occurred in 1897 and who is now attending school; Chester Storey, born in 1900, who is also pursuing his studies; and Edna L., whose birth occurred in 1906.

In his political affiliations Mr. Massey is a consistent republican but has never sought public office, preferring to devote his attention to his private affairs. He has advanced with the scientific progress of agriculture and by his prosperity in a modern enterprise conducted along progressive lines has proved the efficiency of system in promoting productiveness.

ANDREW J. RADABAUGH, the owner of two hundred and forty acres of land in Coos county, devotes his attention to general agricultural pursuits with excellent success. His birth occurred in Darke county, Ohio, on the 9th of December, 1860, his parents being John and Nancy (Mack) Radabaugh, both of whom were natives of the Buckeye state. In 1875 the family came to Oregon and took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of wild land near Norway, just halfway between Coquille and Myrtle Point, and our subject and his brothers assisted their father in clearing the land and digging out the stumps. The only road of any description was a narrow trail from the north fork of the Coquille river to Empire, which was then the county seat. Andrew J. Radabaugh and his brothers helped to build the only wagon road that the district boasted for many years. The home farm is now owned and operated by Henry Radabaugh, a brother of Andrew. John Radabaugh passed away April 3, 1898, while his wife was called to her final rest in 1900, the community thus losing two of its valued pioneer settlers. Their children were six in number, namely: Joseph H., a ranchman of Arago, Oregon; Andrew J., of this review; Albert S., who is deceased; Sarah M., the wife of Barney Owen, a ranchman of Walker, Washington; Henry J., who is a ranchman residing at Norway, Oregon; and Mary, deceased.

Andrew J. Radabaugh, who was a youth of about fifteen when he came to this state with his parents, remained at home until he had attained his majority and then started out to earn his own living and to assist in the support of the family. He was employed at farm labor for two years and subsequently worked in logging camps for eleven years. After the death of his parents he went to live with his younger brother, Henry, who resided on the home place. He now owns a well improved ranch of two hundred and forty acres and has forty acres thereof under cultivation, raising principally oats, barley and hay. It is his intention to raise both sheep and horses in the future and to be a stockman as well as farmer. In the community which has been his home for more than a third of a century he is well known and respected as a representative agriculturist and worthy citizen.

In politics Mr. Radabaugh is a staunch republican and for three years served in the capacity of road supervisor. He laid the foundation for the roadbed which is now being built with crushed rock throughout Coos county, having opened the rock pits and used the rock from the quarry now being worked. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Coquille Lodge. The salient qualities of his life have ever commended him to the confidence, good-will and friendship of those with whom he comes in contact and he has always enjoyed the warm regard of a host of friends.

L. L. BILLINGS. Six miles above Myrtle Point, Oregon, on the middle fork of the Coquille river is located the attractive and prosperous farm belonging to L. L. Billings, one of the prominent agriculturists in this region. It comprises one hundred and seventy-three acres of the most fertile and productive land in Coos county and is operated and controlled by a man who understands all the scientific principles which make for prosperity in the cultivation and tilling of the soil. Mr. Billings is a native of Missouri, in which state his birth occurred in 1856. His parents, John and Adelia (Snyder) Billings were born in Ohio and married in that state. They immediately afterward moved to Missouri and settled in Raleigh where the mother died. John Billings afterward came to Coos county in 1872 where he operated a productive farm until his death in the fiftieth year of his age. He was the father of seven children: L. L., the subject of this review; Katherine, who now resides in Oklahoma; John H. C., who has passed away; Stephen of Coos county; and three children who died in infancy.

L. L. Billings received his early education in the public schools of his native state and completed his studies in Oregon where he came with his parents when he was a boy. At the age of twenty he started to gain his livelihood, operating his father's homestead with gratifying success for several years and obtaining in this way a knowledge of the details of agriculture which was productive of good results because it was eminently practical. He worked at various occupations although he was principally engaged in farming until his marriage in 1881 and for three years later. In 1884 he proved up a homestead claim on the south fork of the Coquille river and was successful in the operation of a rapidly prospering enterprise for five years. At the end of that time he discontinued farming in order to take up his residence in Myrtle Point where he lived for some years before he bought another farm in the vicinity which he directed and controlled with practical skill for some time. He brought this tract of land to a high state of cultivation and then disposed of it at a good profit. He gave his attention to dairying for five years, operating a large ranch and keeping a high-grade herd of cattle for this purpose. Eventually he bought the farm which he now owns, comprising one hundred and seventy-three acres of highly cultivated and improved land located on the middle fork of the Coquille river six miles above Myrtle Point. He has given his entire time and personal supervision to the scientific cultivation of this property. He is interested in all modern developments along agricultural lines and has equipped his farm with the most approved labor-saving machinery. He believes in scientific methods and keeps himself abreast of the times in every way. His farm is one of the attractive features of the land and is a valuable addition to the resources of Coos county.

Mr. Billings' marriage occurred in 1881, in which year he wedded Miss Belle Major, born in New York city in June, 1864. Mrs. Billings is a daughter of George and Mary Major, the former a native of New York and the latter of New Jersey. They came to Oregon in 1861 and settled immediately in Coos county where they resided until their deaths. Mr. and Mrs. Major were the parents of nine children, five of whom are living: Belle, the wife of our subject; Minnie, now Mrs. Herman of Coos county; Christina, who married Mr. Colwell of Grant county, Oregon; Charles, who resides in California; and Edward, who is in business in Alaska. Mrs. Billings received her education in Coos county and has lived in this section since her early girlhood. She and her husband are the parents of eleven children: W. E., who lives at home; Hazel, the wife of James Lee of Riverton, Coos county; and Della, Walter, Clarence M., Alvin, Lester, Lena, Albert, and Ellis, all of whom reside at home. The youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Billings, George, died in infancy.

In his political affiliations Mr. Billings is a consistent republican and always votes the party ticket although he never seeks public office. His life is given up to the development of his farm along lines of scientific efficiency.

HON. OLIVER PERRY COSHOW, one of the foremost members of the Douglas county bar, is also a leading factor in financial circles as the president of the Umpqua Valley Bank of Roseburg and has other connections which indicate his prominence and splendid ability. His birth occurred in Brownsville, Linn county, Oregon, on the 14th of August, 1863, his parents being Oliver P. and Sarah E. (Cochran) Coshov, who were natives of Indiana and Missouri respectively and both of whom were pioneer settlers of this state. It was in 1851 that the father crossed the plains with ox teams in company with R. B. Cochran, who later represented Lane county in the state senate and became president of that body. The mother crossed the plains with her parents in 1847. Oliver P. Coshov, Sr., located near Brownsville, Linn county, where he took up a claim which he sold a few years later to his father-in-law and then purchased a farm of Riley Duncan near Harrisburg, Linn county, a part of which he still owns. In 1869 he removed to Brownsville to engage in merchandising and subsequently became identified with the woolen mill industry. Abandoning his milling interests after a time, he again embarked in the merchandising business and was prominently connected therewith for several years. During the past ten years he has lived retired, enjoying the fruits of his former toil in well earned ease. He is a Royal Arch Mason and a worthy exemplar of the fraternity. He has resided in this state for more than six decades and during his active business career was numbered among the foremost citizens of Brownsville. His wife's parents, on coming to Oregon, located a donation claim near Brownsville, which is still in possession of the family, being now owned by William T. Cochran, a brother of Mrs. Sarah E. Coshov. The latter passed away on the 6th of March, 1903, when sixty-six years of age.

Oliver Perry Coshov was reared under the parental roof and supplemented his early education by a course of study in the University of Oregon. Before the completion of his college course, however, he was called home to look after the interests of his father, who had become ill. One year later he was made secretary of the Brownsville Woolen Mills Company, in which capacity he served for three years. During that period he took up the study of law and in August, 1889, went to Albany to complete his studies, entering the law office of J. K. Weatherford, under whom he read until admitted to the bar in 1890. He remained with Mr. Weatherford for another year and in March, 1892, went to McMinnville, forming a partnership with O. H. Irvine for the practice of law under the firm style of Irvine & Coshov. This partnership was dissolved when, at the end of about five years, Mr. Coshov was appointed deputy district attorney, in which capacity he served for some ten months. On the 1st of April, 1897, he came to Roseburg, Oregon, where he has since been successfully engaged in the practice of his profession. As a lawyer he is sound, clear-minded and well trained. The limitations which are imposed by the constitution on federal powers are well understood by him. With the long line of decisions from Marshall down by which the constitution has been expounded, he is familiar, as are all thoroughly skilled lawyers. He is at home in all departments of the law, from the minutiae in practice to the greater topics wherein is involved the consideration of the ethics and the philosophy of jurisprudence and the higher concerns of public policy. But he is not learned in the law alone, for he has studied long and carefully the subjects that are to the statesman and the man of affairs of the greatest import,—the questions of finance, political economy, sociology,—and has kept abreast of the best thinking men of the age. He is felicitous and clear in argument, thoroughly in earnest, full of the vigor of conviction, never abusive of his adversaries, imbued with highest courtesy, and yet a foe worthy of the steel of the most able opponent. His attention, however, has not been confined altogether to his law practice. He was one of the organizers of the Umpqua Valley Bank and is now the president of that institution, and he is likewise a stockholder and director of the Thomas Kay Woolen Mill Company of Salem, Oregon.

On Christmas day of 1896 Mr. Coshov was united in marriage to Miss Libby Kay, a daughter of Thomas Kay, known as the pioneer woolen-mill man of the Pacific coast. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Coshov have been born five children, three of whom are still living, as follows: Minnie Hazel, who is the wife of K. H. Pickens, an agriculturist residing in Roseburg, Oregon; Leonore Dale and Bertha Leone, both of whom are yet at home; Elizabeth Kay, another daughter, passed away July 14, 1912. She was the wife of Dr. E. B. Stewart, a prominent physician of Roseburg, this state.

In politics Mr. Coshov is a staunch democrat. In 1904 he was elected to the state senate and after serving through two sessions or four years was tendered the nomination for reelection but declined to accept. In Masonry he has attained high rank, belonging to the following organizations: Laurel Lodge, No. 13, F. & A. M.; Roseburg Chapter, No. 8, O. E. S., of which he was grand patron during the Lewis and Clark fair; Laurel Chapter, No. 31, R. A. M.; Ascalon Commandery, No. 14, K. T., of Roseburg; the Council, R. & S. M., of Eugene, Oregon; and Al Kader Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Portland. He is also a member of Rising Star Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Roseburg and belongs to the United Artisans and the Woodmen of the World. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist church and he has served as Sunday school superintendent for fifteen consecutive years and is president of the Baptist state convention. At this point it would be almost tautological to enter into any series of statements as showing Mr. Coshov to be a man of broad intelligence and genuine public spirit for these have been shadowed forth between the lines of this review. Strong in his individuality, he never lacks the courage of his convictions but there are as dominating elements in this individuality a lively human sympathy and an abiding charity, which, as taken in connection with the sterling integrity and honor of his character, have naturally gained for him the respect and confidence of men.

WILLIAM G. KELSO is one of the enterprising citizens of Douglas county, living a retired life at Yoncalla. He was born in Lincoln county, Tennessee, on November 22, 1842, and is a son of John and Rebecca (Roden) Kelso, both of whom were natives of Alabama. In 1845 they removed from Tennessee to Missouri and there probably continued to live during the remaining years of their life. The subject of this review subsequent to leaving home was never able to locate his parents after the war or determine the time of their deaths.

William G. Kelso was a frail and sickly boy in early life and in 1854, at the age of twelve, he left the parental roof and came west with friends to California for his health. After his arrival in the Golden state he parted company with the man with whom he had made the journey across the plains on account of the latter's dissipation and Mr. Kelso was thrown upon his own resources in a strange, new land, having neither money nor friends to enable him to get a start in life. He first turned his attention to work of any kind within his reach and eventually became an employe on the ranch of one of California's stockmen. In 1862 he removed to Oregon and located in Salem. He was there engaged at teaming for a period of ten years, after which he went to Tillamook county, where he operated a dairy for thirty continuous years and was very successful. During that time he speculated heavily in farm lands and in that particular branch of his business operations he met with gratifying success. In 1905 he disposed of his holdings in Tillamook county and removed to Douglas county, where he purchased three hundred and ten acres of land adjoining the town of Yoncalla. That property he kept for two years, at the end of which time he sold it, realizing as a profit an amount equal to the original cost of the land. He now owns two small plots of ground near Yoncalla and is living a retired life in that city enjoying a well earned rest.

Mr. Kelso was united in marriage in 1870 to Miss Sarah I. Tomlinson, of Salem. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Tomlinson, who crossed the plains from Missouri to Oregon in 1852. To Mr. and Mrs. Kelso two children have been born: Arthur, a clerk in Yoncalla; and Edward, who resides in that town. Mr. Kelso is affiliated with the democratic party but is liberal in the exercise of his suffrage. While a resident of Tillamook county he was appointed county assessor and later elected county commissioner, but he resigned the latter office before the expiration of his term, the cause of his resignation being a desire to visit California. He is one of the enterprising men of his community and gives his support to every public movement which promises its further advance and greater development.

JOHN ROOT. On the 22d of November, 1887, when John Root died upon his Oregon farm the agricultural interests of Coos county lost a conspicuously successful representative, a man who was an influencing figure in making the occupation of tilling the soil honorable and worthy among the activities of man. Mr. Root was born in Ohio in 1826, and was a son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Broombaugh) Root. He was one of seven children born to his parents: Mary, Andrew, John, Jacob and Elizabeth, all of whom are now deceased; Sarah, the wife of George Hoxie of Josephine county, Oregon; and Susan, who also has passed away.

John Root was educated in the public schools of Ohio and began active work for himself at the age of twenty-one years. He was brought up upon his father's farm and became acquainted at an early age with the details of agriculture. When he was twenty-one years of age he bought a farm in Indiana and after his marriage took charge of his agricultural interests in that state and was successful and prosperous in the cultivation of the soil for seven years. At the end of that time he disposed of his holdings in Indiana and went to Illinois where he followed farming on a tract of land which he purchased. He was a resident of Illinois for seventeen years and was an active factor in its development. His residence in Oregon dated from 1874 in which year he settled in the Fishtrap, a county on the Coquille river where he bought the homestead of Oscar Sargent of one hundred and sixty acres and began its cultivation. He cleared his property, built new barns and outbuildings and cultivated the land along the most approved agricultural lines. He set out a portion of his land in fruit orchards. He was active and successful as an agriculturist and brought his tract of land which in the beginning was raw and undeveloped, to a high state of cultivation before his death which occurred November 22, 1887.

On the 6th of September, 1849, Mr. Root was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Noffsinger, a native of Montgomery county, Ohio, and a daughter of Eli Noffsinger. Mrs. Root is one of ten children born to her parents. The others are: Elizabeth, Daniel, Joel, John, Joseph, Uriah and Eli, all of whom are now deceased; Mary, the widow of C. C. Root, of Illinois; and Salome. To Mr. and Mrs. Root were born eleven children: Andrew and Eli, both deceased; Uriah, of Chico, California;

Daniel, who lives in Myrtle Point, Oregon; Jacob, who has passed away; John, who is now a resident of Arago, Oregon; Mary, deceased; Joel, who resides with his mother; Hezekiah, of Norway, Oregon; and Sarah and Abraham, both of whom are now deceased. After the death of Mr. Root his widow was united in marriage to David Brower, a native of Virginia. Their marriage occurred in 1892 and they immediately settled in Jackson county. Mr. Brower was a minister affiliated with the Baptist Brethren church and came to Oregon from Iowa in 1871 and died in this state in 1900.

In his political affiliations John Root was a consistent republican but never an office seeker. He belonged to the Baptist Brethren church and was a minister in that organization. His religion was of the everyday sort which influenced his life and molded his actions. His character was marked by an innate honor and integrity, by industry, enterprise and sincere labor along expansive lines, and these qualities influenced his career and had their effect upon his prosperity and success.

GEORGE A. SMITH, engaged in general farming as manager of his brother's holdings in Coos county, Oregon, was born in the section where he resides on August 9, 1883. He is the son of Samuel and Mary (Conner) Smith, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Iowa. The father crossed the plains to Oregon in the early '30s and was for many years prominently identified with all phases of life and activity. He served in the Indian war for more than a year and was well known as a progressive agriculturist in Coos county, where his death occurred in 1905. He was survived by his wife until April 25, 1912. Mrs. Smith was also among the pioneer settlers in the state of Oregon, crossing the plains with her parents when she was very young. Her marriage occurred in Josephine county and to their union were born eleven children, six of whom are living: B. S., who is engaged in farming at the head of Rock creek, six miles above Bridge, in Coos county; John H., who also resides in Coos county; Mabel, now Mrs. Chauncey Humphrey and a resident of the same section; Charles H., also of Coos county; George A., the subject of this sketch; and Ada A., the wife of W. H. McCulley, of California.

George A. Smith was reared at home and received his education, as did all his brothers and sisters, in the public schools of Coos county. He assisted his father in the various labors incident to the conduct of a large agricultural enterprise and early became acquainted with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the grain. He remained at home until his marriage in 1910 and in the same year started farming in Jackson county, where he was prominent as an agriculturist for one year. At the end of that time he returned to Coos county and settled on his brother's farm as its active manager. He now cultivates the soil with increasing success along modernly progressive lines and rich harvests pay tribute to his industry and intelligence. He is a large property owner in Bandon, Oregon, having invested judiciously in town lots. He is always eager to promote the welfare of his native section and his cooperation is freely rendered in any movement looking toward its further development.

On September 6, 1910, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Hazel May Smith, whose birth occurred in Lane county, Oregon, near Eugene. She is a daughter of Benjamin Franklin and Victoria (Jones) Smith, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Oregon. The father crossed the plains to Oregon with his parents when he was only two years of age and settled in Lane county in 1852. He was later married in this section and here his wife died in 1902. Benjamin F. Smith is still living upon his homestead. He is the father of three children: Marian T., now a resident of Lane county; Hazel May, the wife of our subject; and Clive, who is farming on a homestead claim in Lane county. Mrs. Smith received her early education in the public schools of her native section and later attended the high school at Bandon, Oregon. She and her husband are the parents of one daughter, Mildred Lucile.

In his political affiliations Mr. Smith is a republican but is liberal in his views on local and national issues. He never seeks public office, preferring to devote his time and attention to the cultivation and improvement of the large tract of land which he is managing, and by promoting the interests of his brother is in a fair way to achieve his individual success.

JUDGE JOSEPH B. DOAN has made continuous progress in the business world. He has successively engaged in carpentering, farming and the real-estate business and has also filled public offices, his service as judge of the county court covering several years. His birth occurred near Coatesville, in Chester county, Pennsylvania, May 24, 1842, and his education was such as the public schools of that county afforded. When seventeen years of age he entered upon a three years' apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade, receiving for his service during the first year five dollars per month, for the second, seven dollars, and for the third, nine dollars. He had to supply his own clothing but his board was furnished him. During that period of his indenture he gained thorough knowledge of the business in every particular, and later he opened a carpenter shop of his own, continuing in business for himself until after the outbreak of the Civil war, when the serious aspect of public affairs caused him to offer his services to the country in August, 1862. He enlisted as a private for three years in Company E, One Hundred and Fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry but owing to physical disability was sent home at the end of two months. Thinking to find better business opportunities in the middle west he left Pennsylvania in 1867 and removed to De Kalb county, Illinois, settling in Sandwich, where he followed the carpenter's trade in connection with the Sandwich Manufacturing Company for seventeen years.

No higher testimonial of efficient service could be given than the fact that he was so long retained in this employ. In 1884 he came to Columbia county, Oregon, and secured a homestead of one hundred and forty acres about two and three-quarters miles from Rainier. There he resided for about twelve years, during which period he successfully carried on farming and dairying and to some extent worked at the carpenter's trade. In 1895 he removed to Rainier and the following year was elected county judge. From 1886 until 1896 he had served as justice of the peace and during that period he had gained considerable knowledge of the principles of law and his decisions were ever based upon legal principles and the equity of the case. His term expired as justice when elected county judge of Washington county on the republican ticket in 1896. He presided over the county court for eight years and rendered opinions which were strictly fair and impartial, winning for him the commendation of the bar and the general public. Subsequently he was elected police judge, which office he filled for several years. He was also a member of the town council for several years and in 1910 was elected mayor of Rainier. He is now engaged in the general real-estate business in Rainier and has secured a good clientele in this connection, negotiating many important realty transfers which have been made in this city and surrounding country of late years.

On the 24th of October, 1862, while a resident of Pennsylvania, Judge Doan was married to Mrs. Hannah J. Gregg, the widow of Solomon Gregg, who had one daughter, Elizabeth, now the wife of H. H. Doan, of Portland. Judge and Mrs. Doan have one son, John H., who owns and cultivates a ranch in Crook county, Oregon. Mr. Doan belongs to the Knights of Pythias lodge, in which he has filled all of the chairs and also acted as representative to the grand lodge. He is also prominent in the Red Men's Tribe at Rainier, which he has represented in the grand council of that organization. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party and his position is never an equivocal one. He never hesitates to support a principle or project in which he believes. He has made good use of his time and opportunities as the years have passed by and in this is found the secret of the substantial success which he has won. Moreover, his fidelity to duty, whether of a public or private nature, has gained for him the high regard and good-will of all with whom he has been associated.

JOHN G. SAMLER is numbered among the influential citizens of Douglas county and is postmaster of Yoncalla, having received his first appointment to that office January 8, 1898. He was born in Fairview, New Jersey, September 7, 1854, and is a son of William and Catherine (Bartholf) Samler, the former a native of New York and the latter of New Jersey. The parents celebrated their wedding in New Jersey, in which state the father was engaged as a carpenter, which business he followed until the time of his death, in 1892. The mother is living and makes her home in Fairview.

John G. Samler was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Fairview. In 1876 he left home and started in life for himself in New York city. He was first employed as a driver of an express wagon and continued in that work for two years. In 1878 he came west and spent one year in Nebraska. In the spring of 1880 he came to Oregon by way of San Francisco settling in Yoncalla where he worked for the Applegate family. He later engaged in farming on rented land and in 1882 took up a homestead of a fractional one hundred and sixty acres near Yoncalla, which he still owns. A part of that land he has planted to well selected fruit trees.

John G. Samler was united in marriage in 1884 to Miss Lucy Burt, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Burt, who emigrated from Massachusetts to Oregon in 1850 and located in Douglas county. The father acquired extensive holdings of farm and ranch lands in the vicinity of Yoncalla and has the distinction of having given forty acres for the town site of Yoncalla. To Mr. and Mrs. Samler two children have been born, Hazel and Dolph, both of whom are at home. Mr. Samler is a loyal adherent of the republican party and on January 8, 1898, was appointed postmaster of Yoncalla, in which office he has since continued to serve. He has charge of the telephone station at Yoncalla and in this connection as in all others renders efficient and capable service. He is a member of Yoncalla Camp, No. 480, W. O. W., and also of Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F. He is one of the substantial citizens of his county and a man whose influence is always given to the promotion of every public enterprise which promises improvement of the business and educational interests of his city and county.

R. V. BEALL. After enduring all the hardships incident to a pioneer's life, including the hazardous experiences of early emigration to the west, R. V. Beall is today a prosperous farmer of Jackson county, Oregon, where he and his son own one hundred and sixty acres of highly improved land located near the city of Central Point. He was born in Maryland on the 15th of June, 1831. His parents moved to Springfield, Illinois, at an early date and after remaining in that city for some time they emigrated to Oregon, crossing the plains in 1852 with mule teams using less time in making the journey than all the pioneers who had preceded them. They crossed the Missouri river at St. Joseph and, continuing westward, reached Oregon City, July 18, 1852. After settling in this state R. V. Beall worked in the mines in Josephine county and subsequently was engaged in packing supplies to various mines and settlements throughout the mountains. This work was carried on with the use of the mules with which he had crossed the plains. Later Mr. Beall filed on a claim of three hundred and twenty acres in the Rogue river valley near the place where Central Point now stands. He there acquired a thousand acre stock ranch located in the mountains which he afterward sold. This land was fenced and otherwise improved and developed by him, while at the same time he continued in the pack-train business, buying flour and grocery supplies from Dr. John McLaughlin, which he sold to the miners and pioneers throughout Josephine county. He finally retired from this business and purchased a farm comprising one hundred and sixty acres near Central Point, which he improved and where he built his home.

In 1864 Mr. Beall wedded Miss Mary Riddle, by whom he has two children, Mary and R. V., Jr., both of whom reside in this state. Mr. Beall is a member of the Masonic lodge and intimately and actively identified with the social and business interests of his community.

JOHN TALBOT BLOOMFIELD for a period of more than a half century has been identified with the growth and development of Oregon. He is entitled to be enrolled among the early pioneers of this state and his whole life as a citizen of this commonwealth has been one which has contributed much to the enrichment and progress of this part of Oregon. He lives now retired and maintains his residence at Oakland, in Douglas county. He was born in Centerville, Wayne county, Indiana, August 26, 1825, and is a son of Lot and Elizabeth (Talbot) Bloomfield, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Virginia. They were married in Centerville, Indiana, to which place the mother when a child had removed with her parents. The father in early manhood engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business in New York city in company with his two brothers. One of the brothers while returning from Europe with a cargo of goods with which to stock their store was lost at sea with the vessel on which he sailed. The loss sustained by this accident resulted in the bankruptcy of the firm and the business with which the father was identified was at once closed out. Lot Bloomfield then came west to Indiana to retrieve his fortunes and located in Centerville, at which place he engaged in the general mercantile business. He later sold out and removed to Cambridge City, Indiana, where he established himself in business, and also had an interest in a store in Muncie. In 1847, while driving from Cambridge to Centerville, he was thrown from his buggy and the injuries sustained by that accident resulted in his death immediately afterward.

John T. Bloomfield was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools in Indiana. While not engaged in school he was employed in his father's store and there acquired a knowledge of the mercantile business. His larger experience in that line was in the Muncie store, at which place they also conducted in addition to their mercantile interests a tanyard, operated a stock farm and were interested in various enterprises.

They bought and sold leather and also bought stock in Illinois and Missouri and sold cattle and hogs. They found a market for their cattle in Pennsylvania and in that early day they drove the stock across the country to the far eastern state. Whenever it was possible for Mr. Bloomfield to leave the store he availed himself of the opportunity for work on the outside, which he not only enjoyed but also availed himself of the opportunities of study afforded by outdoor work and farm life. The firm known as Russey & Jack in which his father was equally interested owned a farm located about one-half mile outside of the corporate limits of the town and on that farm they kept their hogs. This farm is now in the heart of the gas belt of Indiana and is valued at many thousands of dollars per acre. They, however, disposed of the property at a mere trifle. In 1849 Mr. Bloomfield drove a six-mule team across the plains to California, making the last camp on the journey at Nevada City in September, 1849. At that place the wagon train, which consisted of sixteen wagons, disbanded and he turned his attention to mining on the Yuba river. In the fall of 1851 he removed to Marysville, California, where he continued to live until 1858. In that year the Fraser river gold excitement broke out and he at once went to the new gold camp, where he spent one summer. In the fall of that year he came to Portland and there remained for one year, after which time he located in Eugene and lived in that place until 1861. In the spring of that year he went with a prospecting party to the Blue Bucket gold diggings in Malheur county but, finding no gold, the company went north through Walla Walla to the Salmon river country, where Mr. Bloomfield staked a mining claim and spent the winter in Florence. In the spring and summer following he worked his claim out and was fortunate in cleaning up fifteen to sixteen hundred dollars. In the fall of 1862 he returned to Eugene and there engaged in carpenter work and also conducted a butcher shop. He later was employed in the United States surveyor general's office as head draftsman under General E. L. Aplegate for about two years. In 1869 or 1870, he left Eugene and took up work with the Oregon & California Railroad Company as draftsman. The company desired a complete set of maps of the state in which their land grants lay and he was placed in charge of that work, with offices at Salem, where he remained for about two years, after which time he was called by the company to the Portland offices and there was engaged in work as draftsman until 1876. He then left the employ of the railroad company and came to Oakland and lived for two years on his father-in-law's farm, located near that city. He then established his home in Oakland and engaged in the contracting and building business, in which he continued for some time. In those early days he served for a number of years as justice of the peace and in 1892 he took a contract from the United States government to go to

MR. AND MRS. J. T. BLOOMFIELD

Roseburg and straighten out their maps by making the necessary corrections and in addition to that work make new maps of the United States Land district in the place of the old and imperfect maps on file. He received as compensation for his services the sum of twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. Bloomfield was united in marriage October 19, 1862, to Miss Fannie M. Hall, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Dr. Langley and Sarah Alice (Ligo) Hall, the former a prominent physician of his time who crossed the plains from Illinois to Oregon in 1853 and located on a farm in Douglas county when his daughter was eleven years of age. Both her parents were natives of England and emigrated to America in 1836 locating in Stark county, Illinois. He was a farmer and imported sheep and was the first man to sell wool in Chicago off imported sheep. He also practiced medicine very successfully. Mr. Bloomfield is affiliated with the republican party but has never been an aspirant for political preferment. He is a member of Umpqua Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F., having been initiated in that order in Indiana in the winter of 1845-46, thus giving him the almost unparalleled record of having been an Odd Fellow for sixty-seven years. He is at present one of the oldest members of the order in this state. He has also been a member of the grand lodge for nearly forty-eight years and was grand master of the jurisdiction in 1867-68. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal church. Mr. Bloomfield has so lived during his life as to gain and maintain the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact and now in his advanced age is still a man of wide influence and is accounted as one of the desirable and most useful citizens of his part of Oregon.

I. N. LEWIS is one of the exemplary agriculturists of Jackson county. He is the owner of eighty acres of the best land in the rich agricultural state of Oregon and to the development of his beautiful farm he has for a number of years given his entire time and energy and has invested his surplus capital. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, on the 15th of August, 1860, and is one of ten children born to John and Polly (Turner) Lewis. He was reared in his father's home and received his education in the public schools. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time he started in life for himself. He engaged in mining at once on leaving the parental roof and continued in that business for fifteen years. On giving up the mining business he entered a government homestead of eighty acres, on which he built his home and where he has since continued to reside.

In 1885 Mr. Lewis was married to Miss Ettie Heckathorne, a native of California, by whom he has seven children, Irvin, Ola, Bessie, Elmer, Orpha, Trueman and Lydia. All are living and reside in Oregon. Mr. Lewis is affiliated with the republican party and is an enthusiastic advocate of both state and national issues indorsed by his party.

He is one of the industrious farmers of his community, and in his occupation as an agriculturist he is proving that the soils of Oregon, when well cultivated and intelligently cared for, are capable of producing gratifying incomes and remarkable harvests.

GEORGE C. MOREHOUSE is the owner of thirty-seven acres of rich farming land, three and one-half miles from Gravel Ford, near Fox bridge, on the Coquille river. It is a valuable property, well improved, and in its development the owner is giving evidence of a thorough understanding of the most modern and progressive principles of agriculture. He was born in Iowa and is a son of Cornelius and Melissa (Crawford) Morehouse, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Iowa. George C. Morehouse is one of six children born to his parents, the others being: Charley, who resides in Coos county; Albert, of Eugene, Oregon; Lysle, of Pasadena, California; Alice, deceased; and one who died in infancy. The father was a printer by trade and worked at this occupation in Iowa for some years. He died when his son George was nine years of age.

George C. Morehouse was educated in the public schools of Iowa until he reached his fourteenth year. He was then obliged to gain a livelihood for himself and in order to do this accepted a position in a restaurant, where he worked for five years. He later went to Kansas and engaged in the hardware business in the employ of others for a short time, before he went to New Mexico. He spent one year in machine shops in various parts of that state and then went to California, where he was employed in the lumber line in San Diego for some time. Subsequently he started in business for himself as the owner of a cattle ranch, which he operated with much success for four years. He bought and sold high grade cattle and horses and became known as an expert in that line of activity but later he went to the gold mines of California, and worked for wages and prospected on his own account for five years. At the end of that time he removed to Coos county, where he was married and immediately began logging, which he continued until he determined to devote his entire attention to cultivating the soil. He rented a large farm near Gravel Ford, Oregon, and was so successful as a practical farmer that in 1910 he was enabled to buy the land which comprises thirty-seven acres and has on it a prosperous dairy. Mr. Morehouse keeps fifteen cows for milking purposes. He has his entire farm under cultivation and plants it in the most suitable grains and grasses. He gives careful attention to the planting and harvesting and is known throughout Coos county as an enterprising and representative citizen. He engages also in stock-raising and his high grade horses and cows form a valuable source of income to him. His farm is well kept, the soil is productive, its buildings are modern and efficient and his stock is of good breeding.

On January 2, 1897, Mr. Morehouse was united in marriage to Miss Lulu Hall, a native of Oregon and a daughter of William S. and Martha (Lamb) Hall, both of whom were born in Missouri and were among the early settlers in Coos county. Mr. and Mrs. Hall were the parents of seven children: Annie, the wife of Riley Matheny, of Airlie, Oregon; Bertha, the wife of Leland Minard, of Fishtrap, Oregon; Lulu, the wife of our subject; James, of Coos county; Mrs. Mary Hervey, of Lee, Oregon; Thomas, of Gravel Ford; and Amanda, the wife of Thomas Weekly, of Gravel Ford. To Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse have been born seven children: Ermal, whose birth occurred July 21, 1898, and who is attending school; Lela, born November 5, 1899, who is also pursuing her studies; Lida, born November 29, 1901, who attends school; Eltice, born October 23, 1902, and Delta, born June 15, 1905, both of whom are pupils in the Coos county schools; Er-old, born November 2, 1908; and Nelda, born October 23, 1909. Mr. Morehouse affiliates with the Farmers Union, is a prominent member of the Grange and is also active in the Sons of Veterans. In his political views he is consistently republican but has never taken an active part in local affairs, preferring to devote his entire attention to his farming interests.

JAMES EDWARD METZGER is an enterprising young business man of Gresham, where he was born on the 2d of October, 1885, his parents being J. H. and Eliza E. (Winters) Metzger. The father was born in Illinois on the 19th of December, 1852, and is of Dutch extraction, being a direct descendant of Von Theobolt Metzger. The maternal grandfather was a native of Germany and the grandmother of Ireland, and they were married in New York, whence they migrated to Oregon when Mrs. J. H. Metzger was a child of nine years, settling on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres near Gresham. Here she was reared to the age of sixteen years when she married Mr. Metzger. Her parents are now both deceased, the father having died in 1903 while her mother passed away in 1886. They had three children, of whom Mrs. Metzger was the oldest, the others being as follows: Annie, the wife of R. W. Gibbs, of Gresham, and the mother of three children, Lela, Arlie and Dewey; and Roy L. also a resident of Gresham, who has seven children. J. H. Metzger was one of seven children born to his parents. Louis, who lives here, has three children: Louis, Jr.; Elma; and Genevieve now Mrs. Oswell. Daniel, who also lives in Gresham, has one child, Lucy, now the wife of S. E. Toepelman. Henry, who is a resident of Gresham, is the father of five children: Albert, William, Frank, Pearl and Elsie. Eli, who is now deceased, left the following children: Ford; Delbert, who lives in Honolulu; and Violet, a resident of Topeka, Kansas. Louise was the wife of Emanuel Underwood and both are deceased. Margaret is also deceased. The family of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Metzger numbered seven, as follows: Benjamin, who is living with his parents; James Edward, our subject; Cecil Eugene, of Gresham, who married Miss Hilda Gulekenson and is the father of one child; Floyd Sanford and Walter Willard, both of whom are attending school and living at home; John Frederick, who is deceased; and one who died in infancy. In early manhood the father crossed the plains to Oregon, settling in the vicinity of Gresham, and here two or three years later he was joined by his parents and the other members of his family. He had never been trained to anything but agricultural pursuits, and when he first came worked on a dairy ranch. Subsequently he purchased the J. P. O. Lonsdale farm now the Cotton ranch near Gresham, which he operated most successfully for several years. He then disposed of it and turned his attention to mercantile pursuits. He was actively engaged in business here for eight years, at the expiration of which time he retired, but he has since resumed his connection with commercial enterprises.

James Edward Metzger was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Gresham and a business college at Portland. At the age of twenty-two years he engaged in business as the proprietor of a livery stable which he operated for two years. He then withdrew from this line of business and has ever since been associated with his father-in-law, R. R. Carlson. Mr. Metzger has been successful and is now the owner of five thousand dollars worth of real estate which he has acquired through his own efforts.

For his wife Mr. Metzger chose Miss Mildred S. Carlson, whose natal day was the 18th of August, 1889, her parents being R. R. and Jenocqua S. (Jackson) Carlson, natives of Wisconsin. Mrs. Metzger, who is an only child, was educated at Willamette University, of which institution she is a graduate. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Metzger, Gwendolyn Jenocqua, whose birth occurred on the 18th of May, 1911.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Metzger are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and Mrs. Metzger belongs to the Women of Woodcraft. His political support he gives to the republican party. He is a young man of high standards of honor and an excellent record and his friends feel assured of his success.

JAMES H. McCLOSKEY, a native son of Oregon, has conducted a creamery near Norway, in Coos county, for the past seven years. He was born in Gravel Ford, a son of Solomon J. and Mary A. (Steward) McCloskey, who were natives of Pennsylvania and Canada respectively. The father purchased a ranch near Norway in 1882 and three years later embarked in the merchandising business. When he was appointed postmaster, the post-office was established in his store, and he discharged the duties devolving upon him in that connection until the time of his demise, which occurred on the 2d of June, 1909. Since that time his daughter Minnie has had charge of the office. His widow, who still owns the mercantile store as well as the home ranch, now resides in Norway. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Solomon J. McCloskey were born nine children, as follows: Agnes J., the wife of William Smith, of Gravel Ford, Oregon; Lucinda, the widow of Evan Morgan, who resides in Bandon, Oregon; Thomas William, who is a resident of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Anna S., deceased; Minnie E., the wife of J. L. Lester, of Angiola, California; Flora, the wife of P. W. Laird, of Coquille, Oregon; Clara, who lives with her mother at Norway, Oregon; James H., of this review; and Roy E., who has passed away.

James H. McCloskey began providing for his own support when twenty-one years of age, working on a steamboat for a brother who had a vessel plying between Myrtle Point and Coquille. He was thus employed for twelve years and on the expiration of that period, in 1905, purchased the creamery built by George Davis, which he has operated continuously since with gratifying success. In his business methods he is practical as well as progressive and his labors have been attended with excellent results.

In 1905, in Coos county, Mr. McCloskey was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Wagner, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Miller) Wagner, both of whom were born in North Carolina. They crossed the plains to this state in the early days, first settling at Rural, Coos county and later taking up their abode at Myrtle Point. Daniel Wagner passed away in 1884, while his wife was called to her final rest in 1890. They were the parents of eight children, namely: Emma E., the wife of E. W. Herman, a brother of Binger Herman, of Roseburg, Oregon; Robert L., who resides in Bandon, Oregon; James M., of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Ella, the wife of Z. C. Strang, of Coquille, Oregon; Lilly C., the wife of Max Dement, of Myrtle Point; Elizabeth, who gave her hand in marriage to J. C. Litt, of Norway, Oregon; Mrs. Sarah A. McCloskey; and Daniel Pugh, who is a resident of Eugene, Oregon.

Mr. McCloskey is a democrat in politics but has no desire for the honors and emoluments of office, preferring to devote his undivided attention to his business interests. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Grange. They have spent their entire lives in Coos county and enjoy an extensive and favorable acquaintance here.

EDMOND E. WEEKLY. A native son of Oregon and a man who has given his activities and energies to the agricultural development of the state since he was twenty years of age is Edmond E. Weekly, who is bringing his seasoned experience and his systematic agricultural knowledge to the cultivation of four hundred and twenty-seven acres of land in Coos county, comprising one of the most productive and skilfully operated farms in the district. Mr. Weekly was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on January 12, 1859, and is the son of William E. and Irene Weekly, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Missouri. Their marriage occurred in the last named state and they remained in that section until 1851, when they crossed the plains to Oregon, making the journey with ox teams. They settled in the Willamette valley and a year later came to Douglas county, where the father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, eighteen miles west of Roseburg. He improved and cultivated the soil of this tract of land until 1874, when he sold his holdings and came to Coos county, locating on the north fork of the Coquille river. Here he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land and lived upon this property until his death, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife survived him for a short time, dying when she was sixty-nine years old. They were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are still living: J. S., of Wheeler county, Oregon; I. T. and Ursula Rose, both of whom reside in Coos county, Mrs. Mary J. Turner, of Portland; Edmond E., of this review; and R. L. and W. M., both of Myrtle Point, Coos county. The two eldest children died in infancy and Jefferson D., the eighth in order of birth, is also deceased.

Edmond E. Weekly received his education in the public schools of Douglas and Coos counties and was active in assisting his father in the work of the farm during his boyhood. He married when he was twenty years of age and immediately started farming on a pre-emption claim which he proved up. He brought this land to a highly developed state and sold it eventually at a good profit. He then purchased a part of his father's original donation claim in Douglas county and for several years followed farming in that section. He then disposed of his holdings and came to Coos county, where he farmed for two years and met with his success. He spent six years operating a ranch in Klamath county before he eventually settled near Myrtle creek. In 1906 he bought a farm near Bridge, comprising one hundred and eighty acres of productive land. He gave his personal supervision to the operation of this property for two years but finally rented it in order to purchase the farm upon which he now resides. His holdings are located a mile and a half above the town of Bridge, on the middle fork of the Coquille river, and comprise one of the most extensive and prosperous agricultural properties in Coos county. Mr. Weekly brings to its cultivation a thoroughly scientific knowledge of the details of agriculture, which he learned in boyhood upon his father's farm and which he has developed and added to every year of his life. He has made extensive improvements upon his property, has added fences, barns and outbuildings and has made it one of the attractive and model farms in the state of Oregon. In addition to this extensive tract of land in Coos county he also owns one hundred and twenty acres of timber land in Douglas county and has made extensive and judicious investments in town property in Myrtle Point. He is a representative and loyal citizen of his state and actively interested in its agricultural development.

In 1879, when he was twenty years of age, Mr. Weekly was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Waterman, a native of New York state, who came to Oregon in 1876, when she was a young girl. She was accompanied by her grandparents and eight years later was joined by her parents, who settled in Coos county and were prominent residents of this section until they died. Mrs. Weekly is the eldest of five children born to her parents, the others being: Emma, who is married and lives in Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Loretta Young, of Coos county; and C. F. and R. A., also residents of the same section. To Mr. and Mrs. Weekly have been born the following children: Mrs. O. E. Laird, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Mrs. Opal Barker, of Fairview, Coos county; W. M., also residing in Myrtle Point; Smith A., of McKinley, Coos county; and Irene, Edwin and Edith, all of whom are living at home. All of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Weekly received an efficient education in the public schools of Douglas, Coos and Klamath counties. Their two eldest daughters taught school for some time previous to their marriages and Irene is still engaged in this occupation. The family affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal church.

In his political views Mr. Weekly gives a general allegiance to the democratic party but often votes independent of party affiliation on public questions of a local character. He takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of his community, but has never sought public office. He is now in the possession of one of the most productive and fertile farms in Coos county and each year of scientific and careful cultivation brings him more abundant harvests and adds to the value of his land.

B. H. HATHAWAY is the owner of three hundred acres of highly improved land in Tillamook county in the cultivation of which he met with such gratifying returns that he is now able to live retired. He is a native of the state of New York, his birth having occurred in Lewis county, on May 5, 1831, and is supposed to be the only living member of a family of eight born to I. and Rebecca (Higby) Hathaway. His parents were also natives of the Empire state, where they spent their entire lives.

Mr. Hathaway was reared at home, receiving his education in the common schools. When he was nineteen years of age he left the paternal roof, to seek, as did many others at that period the greater possibilities the west offered, and went to Wisconsin. After remaining there for three years he removed to Minnesota, where for twelve years he engaged in farming, with the exception of a period of service during the Civil war. When the call came for troops during the time of the nation's need in the '60s he responded, enlisting and going to the front with Company F, Fourth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted in 1861 and among the battles that his regiment was engaged in were Vicksburg; Jackson, Mississippi; Champion's Hill, Black River, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Altoona Pass, and many others. He served with General Grant until the latter was made commander of the Army of the Potomac, when he came under the command of General Sherman and took part in his march to the sea. He spent three years and three months in the service, participating in thirty-two engagements but was never wounded. Receiving his discharge at Savannah, Georgia, on December 22, 1864, he returned home, resuming life as a farmer. He continued to reside in Minnesota for some years thereafter and then again started westward, with Oregon as his destination. Upon his arrival here he filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, to the cultivation and improvement of which he immediately turned his energies. He met with such success in his agricultural pursuits that he was later able to increase his possessions until he ultimately acquired three hundred acres, all of which is well improved and in a high state of productivity. Mr. Hathaway always used intelligence in the direction of his undertakings and, a man of progressive ideas, was practical in his methods of application. Such success as came to him in the course of his active career was the direct result of capably and definitely directed effort. His plans were always carefully made and executed for the accomplishment of one purpose and his progress always permanent and orderly.

Mr. Hathaway has been married twice. His first union took place in New York state to Miss Nancy Smith and to them were born two children: Catherine, who is deceased; and J. H., who is a resident of Tillamook county. Mrs. Hathaway passed away in 1878 and in 1880 Mr. Hathaway married Mrs. E. R. Wilson, the widow of J. C. Wilson, who lost his life in the Civil war.

His political support Mr. Hathaway gives to the republican party, but he has never been an aspirant to office. Both he and Mrs. Hathaway hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, belonging to the lodge at Tillamook. He is now enjoying the ease and comfort assured by his comfortable competence and the income from his large ranch, both acquired by means of many years of hard work.

JOHN W. WISE. After many years of successful business life John W. Wise is living retired in the city of Yoncalla, Douglas county, Oregon. He was born in Audubon county, Iowa, October 27, 1855, and is a son of George and Lucy Ann (Crewson) Wise, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Illinois. The parents were married in Illinois and some time later removed to Iowa. In 1857 the father and his family crossed the plains with horse teams to California and settled in Sonoma county, where he maintained his residence for four years. In 1861 he removed to Oregon and purchased a farm located two miles east of Drain, in Douglas county. He lived on that property during the remaining years of his life and both he and his wife died there. Their son

B. H. HATHAWAY

MRS. B. H. HATHAWAY

William now owns and lives on the old homestead.

John W. Wise at the age of six years came to Oregon with his parents and in Douglas county received his early education, having had to ride from six to eight miles to reach the school where as a boy he took up the elementary studies. At the age of eighteen he started in life for himself, accepting any employment in which he could make an honorable livelihood. For three or four years he was engaged as a clerk in a store in Drain. In 1880 he purchased a farm of fifty-two acres adjoining the town of Yoncalla and engaged in the stock-raising business. He later added to that property by purchase until at one time he owned three hundred and twenty acres in a solid body adjoining the town. He afterward purchased seven hundred and twenty acres in Scotts valley, which some years later he gave to his sons. During his years of active life he ranked among the prominent and successful stockmen of his portion of the state. He recently sold all his land adjoining Yoncalla except forty acres which he has set out to select fruit. He is living a retired life in Yoncalla after many years of honorable and successful business.

Mr. Wise was united in marriage in 1877 to Miss Josephine Ambrose, of Yoncalla, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Ambrose. Here parents were among the early settlers of Douglas county. Both are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Wise four children have been born: John Alva, a stockman of Benton county, Oregon; Lloyd, who is engaged in farming and stock-raising in Douglas county; Mamie B., at home; and Claude, who is also at home. Mr. Wise is affiliated with the republican party but has never sought political preferment. He is a member of Alpha Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Drain, and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World. He is widely known throughout that portion of the state and by a consistent business life has gained the respect of his friends and associates, who place him among the influential and useful citizens of Douglas county.

ROBERT W. LONG, a leading agriculturist of the Yoncalla valley, owns a tract of land of six hundred and forty acres, comprising one of the most attractive and productive farms in Douglas county. It was on this place that his birth occurred on the 7th of January, 1862, his parents being John and Minerva (Smith) Long, who were born, reared and married in Tennessee. From that state they removed to Missouri and in 1846 crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, the journey consuming six months. Locating first in Polk county, the father there acquired a farm and built a log cabin which is still standing. In 1849 he came to Douglas county and took up donation claim No. 46, comprising six hundred and forty acres in the Yoncalla valley, three miles south of the town of Yoncalla, where he spent the remainder of his life. As the years passed he acquired other lands adjoining his claim and at one time owned over fourteen hundred acres, a portion of which he gave to his children prior to his demise. He passed away in 1890, when about eighty years of age, while his wife was called to her final rest in March, 1908, being at that time also about eighty years old. They were both consistent and devoted members of the Baptist church.

Robert W. Long was reared at home and received his education in the common schools. When not yet twenty-one years of age he began operating his father's farm as a renter and continued its cultivation until 1884. In that year he removed to Scotts valley in Douglas county, where he purchased a farm of two hundred and seventy-three acres, residing thereon for four years. On the expiration of that period he disposed of the property and bought two hundred and eighty-five acres of land a mile south of Yoncalla, remaining on that farm for nineteen years. He sold the place in 1907 and in the spring of 1908 purchased six hundred and forty acres of the old home farm, on which he has resided continuously since. He has erected a handsome modern residence and is justly proud of the fact that his is one of the most attractive and valuable farms in the county. In his undertakings as an agriculturist he has prospered from year to year and has long enjoyed an enviable reputation as a successful farmer and substantial citizen.

In 1883 Mr. Long was united in marriage to Miss Lena Ambrose. Her father, Alfred T. Ambrose was one of the pioneers of the Yoncalla valley, arriving here in 1851. He was born in Clark county, Missouri, September 6, 1822, and passed away at Yoncalla, June 20, 1912, at the age of almost ninety years. In May, 1846, he wedded Miss Virlena Woodson, who preceded him in death several years. Their union was blessed with seven children, two of whom are deceased. Those surviving are: Nathan Ambrose, of Portland; James Ambrose, E. Ambrose, Mrs. J. W. Wise and Mrs. Long, of Yoncalla. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Long were born four children, two of whom still survive, George Cody and Carl D., who are yet at home.

Mr. Long is a democrat in politics but has never been an aspirant for public preferment, though importuned to allow his name to be presented to the voters as a candidate for the office of county commissioner. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and both he and his wife are members of the Degree of Honor. His standing in both business and social circles well entitles him to a place among the representative citizens of the state in which his entire life has been spent.

EDWIN P. S. ABERNETHY, who lives on the old family homestead near Dora in Coos county, is the proprietor of a sawmill and has been engaged in business along this line since 1903. His birth occurred near Portland, Oregon, on the 29th of September, 1875, his parents being William and Sarah P. (Gray) Abernethy, the former a native of New York and the latter of this state. George Abernethy, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was the first provisional governor of Oregon. It was in 1891 that William Abernethy removed with his family from Portland and took up his abode near the old Dora postoffice, purchasing a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on the east fork of Coquille river. The family home was there maintained until 1906, when Mr. Abernethy removed to Forest Grove, where he has since lived in honorable retirement. He rents the old home farm to his son-in-law, M. C. Miller, who operates it in connection with an adjoining tract of three hundred and twenty acres which he owns. Unto Mr. and Mrs. William Abernethy were born ten children, as follows: Annie, the wife of B. W. Starr, of Tacoma, Washington; Caroline, who is the wife of H. F. Burges and resides at Sunnyside, Washington; William, Jr., of Washington; Edwin P. S., of this review; Violet, the wife of Bennett Swanton, of Marshfield, Oregon; Daisy, twin sister of Violet, who is the wife of Archie Hahn and resides at Monmouth, Iowa; Pearl, the wife of M. C. Miller, of McKinley, Oregon; Frances, the wife of A. T. Hahn, of Portland, Multnomah county; Camilla, who lives at Forest Grove with her parents; and Mizpah, the wife of Virgil Waterman, of Welches, Oregon.

Edwin P. S. Abernethy, who was a youth of sixteen when he came to Coos county with his parents, has remained within its borders continuously since. In 1903 he became the proprietor of a sawmill and has operated the same for the past nine years, cutting the timber from his father's place. His undertakings in this connection have been attended with success, and his reputation as one of the substantial and enterprising citizens of the community has been well won.

In politics Mr. Abernethy is a republican but his aspirations have not been in the line of office holding. A genial and kindly disposition has won him many friends and he has the regard and esteem of all with whom his business or social relations have brought him in contact.

CARY W. CULY is the fortunate owner of fifty acres of choice land near Bnncom, Oregon, on which he resides with his family. He was born in California on the 4th of July, 1883, and is one of nine children born to G. C. and Pamela (Faughn) Culy. When but a child of six months he was brought by his parents to Jackson county, Oregon, the family locating at Steamboat. Cary W. Culy was reared at home and received a common-school education. When sixteen years of age he was employed as a laborer on a ranch near his father's home for a few months and then returned home, where he remained working with his father in the development of the family farm for a period of two years. He afterward was employed in agricultural pursuits for two successive years.

As a companion and helpmate on the journey of life Mr. Culy chose Miss V. McKee, a native of Oregon, by whom he has three children, Omar, Helen and Louis. Mr. Culy takes pride in his beautiful home property, its location being one of the most desirable ones in the community and its soil being of the best and richest of Oregon's productive land. Confining himself to the growing of hay and grain, he has become an expert in taking from the soil the maximum amount of cereals and forage plant growth, and for these products he finds a ready market. Cary W. Culy is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Buncom, Oregon. He is enterprising and progressive and always quick to use his influence in support of social and political issues affecting the best interests of his county and state. He is a socialist and, in common with many representative men of this country as well as the members of his political party, he believes that the science of government has not yet attained perfection here but can develop and improve in many ways.

WARREN NEAL, a retired blacksmith and wagonmaker, residing in Monmouth, was born in Uniontown, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, April 2, 1842. He is a grandson of Barney Neal, who was a farmer, and a son of Henry and Mary (Williams) Neal, the latter of whom lived to be ninety years of age. The father, who was born in Jefferson, Greene county, Pennsylvania, was a blacksmith and followed that trade until he was killed by a horse in 1850, when at the age of forty-eight years. He had the following children, namely: Susan; William, deceased; Elizabeth; Hannah; Minerva; Benjamin; Thomas, who served in the Civil war; and Warren.

In 1862, at the age of twenty years Warren Neal enlisted for service in the Civil war, joining Company A, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, under Captain William C. Lindsey, at Waynesburg. He saw much active service and was very fortunate not only in that he was neither captured nor wounded and was never detained in a hospital, but also as he was one of only ten survivors of one hundred and thirteen who enlisted with him. Aside from fighting in many skirmishes he participated in the following battles, many of which were decisive: Hanover, Gettysburg, Franklin, Hunterstown, South Mountain, Boonsboro, Hagerstown, Williamsport, Arnettsville, Culpeper, Winchester, Brandy Station, Stevensburg, Wilderness, Mine Run, Spottsylvania, Strawberry Hill, Bottom Ridge, Hanover Court House, Cold Harbor, White Oak Swamp, Winchester, Summit Point, Charleston, Front Royal, Waynesboro, Limestone Ridge and Cary Station.

Upon his return from the front Mr. Neal engaged in blacksmithing in Virginia for three years and then removed to Kansas, where in addition to following his trade he also took up wagon building. He remained in that business until 1894, when he came to Oregon and located in McMinnville, Yamhill county, where until his retirement from active business fourteen years later, he successfully engaged in both blacksmithing and wagon building.

In 1881 Warren Neal was married to Elna Pickering, in Arkansas City, Kansas. Mrs. Neal was born in Fulton county, Illinois, March 13, 1863, and is a daughter of Joseph E. and Martha (Sparks) Pickering. Her father is a blacksmith by trade and in 1873 went to Kansas, where he still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Neal are the parents of four children, as follows: Mabel, born April 8, 1882, who married C. F. Grover; Joseph W., who was born August 25, 1884, and died in 1904; William, born July 22, 1887, who married Alma Atkins; and Clara, who was born July 11, 1899, and is a student at Mon. outh. Mr. and Mrs. Grover have both been engaged in teaching at Gaston, Oregon, for the last two years and previous to that time taught in the Philippine Islands.

Warren Neal is a stanch republican. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In his war service he was faithful and untiring and gave his country the substantial aid it needed to preserve its unity. Throughout his life he has been a diligent and persistent worker, giving his careful attention to the trade in which he has engaged and proving that, in that, as in all other occupations, success is the reward of intelligent and constant labor.

CHARLES EDWARD CREE, who is prominent in Fairview Station as a carpenter and contractor, was born in Kentucky, December 10, 1871, a son of Thomas and Fannie (Waite) Cree. The father's parents were of Scotch descent and the mother's of English lineage. The father's birth occurred in Ohio January 30, 1836, his parents being William and Phebe (Morris) Cree, both of whom were natives of Ohio. When Thomas Cree was but five years of age his parents removed to West Virginia, where for five years the father was engaged in operating a brickyard. After that he returned to Ohio where he lived for five years before removing to Covington, Kentucky, where his death occurred when he was sixty-eight years of age. The mother also died there when she was seventy-two years of age. To their union nine children were born, all of whom are deceased excepting Thomas. Thomas Cree began earning his own livelihood by working as a cabin boy on a steamer. Subsequently, in 1861, he was made pilot and served in that capacity for many years. He was very successful, never had an accident and never lost a life. He was obliged to give up this work because of failing eyesight and hearing. In 1885 he removed to Kansas and resided there for five years before coming to Oregon, which state he has since made his home. He accumulated considerable money and property and he and his wife live retired, making their home frequently with their children. The mother is a daughter of Dr. and Mary (Louis) Waite, also natives of Ohio, and the grandfather was founder and builder of Hillsboro College at Hillsboro, Ohio. She was the youngest of three children born to her parents, the others being Charles E. of Covington, Kentucky, and Mary, who is the widow of Martin E. Ellis of Scotts, Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cree, whose marriage occurred in 1867, ten children were born:

Frank, deceased; Charles E., who is the subject of this sketch; Kate, who is the wife of Charles Clark of Linn county, Oregon, and who is the mother of seven children; Dora, who is the wife of Harry Bartholomew of Pendleton; Arthur, of San Francisco, California; George, of Linn county, Oregon, who is married and has one child; Louis, deceased; Mabel, who is married to Harrison Hadley, of Linn county, Oregon, and has one child; Jessie, also a resident of Linn county; and Lottie, who is the wife of Jesse Matthis. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cree are affiliated with the Methodist church, and in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Cree is a member, he has filled all the chairs.

Charles E. Cree received a very meager education, being the eldest living son of a large family, and at the age of fourteen he found it necessary to aid in the support of the younger members of the family. He accepted work on a farm after his family had removed to Kansas and subsequently, when he was eighteen years of age, he came to Oregon and settled in Linn county, near Albany, where he rented a farm. He subsequently severed his connections with agricultural pursuits and took up sawmill work in which he was engaged for several years before entering permanently into the carpentering and contract business. He continued thus for a few years in Albany but after his marriage removed to Fairview where he went into business on his own account. He has been conducting this enterprise since, and the highly remunerative returns his labor has received are in some degree shown by quoting the figures which have marked his success. His business operations cover from thirty to forty thousand dollars annually and he owns twelve lots well improved, including a new house which was erected at a cost of four thousand dollars. He also owns a blacksmith shop, a carpenter shop and business property.

On the 13th of October, 1894, Mr. Cree was married to Miss Mary Ellen Downing, whose birth occurred May 5, 1873, and who is a daughter of George W. and Sarah C. Downing. She is one of eight children born to her parents, the others being: John, a resident of Kansas, who is married and has five children; William, who is residing in Mill City, Oregon, and is married and has seven children; Orville of Gresham, Oregon, who is married and has two children, Everett and Clarence; Minerva, who is the wife of Roy Davis of Kansas, and the mother of two children; Mattie, who is married to Ben Kingman of Delevan, Kansas, and who has two children; Georg Ann, who is the wife of William Boaz, a railroad engineer of Harrington, Kansas; and Ellie, who is the wife of George Rodgers, a prominent stockman of Linn county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Cree five children have been born, namely: Willis, who was born September 19, 1895, and is attending public school at Fairview; Louis, who died at the age of nine years; Ada, whose birth occurred June 16, 1902, and who is attending public school; Collin, who was born March 5, 1909; and Lois, whose birth occurred on the 15th of March, 1911.

Mr. Cree gives his political support to the republican party but has never sought office as a reward for party fealty. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In social, business and fraternal relations Mr. Cree has always shown himself to be a man of the most resolute and upright character, and the many friends he has made prove the general consensus of public opinion regarding him.

WILLARD J. JEFFERSON. Many of the agriculturists of Oregon who are giving the most valuable assistance to the development of its natural resources are natives of that state. Among these is Willard J. Jefferson, residing nine miles southeast of Gervais, whose birth occurred in Marion county on the 5th of September, 1857, his parents being Delos and Matilda (Apperson) Jefferson. The father was born in New York state on the 15th of April, 1824, and the mother's birth occurred in Missouri on February 20, 1830. They were married in Oregon on November 14, 1850, and made this state their home until their deaths. Mr. Jefferson took up a donation land claim near Salem shortly after his marriage, but a few years later traded it for three hundred and twenty acres of the Pitney donation land claim five miles northeast of Salem. Upon this property he and his wife resided until their deaths which occurred December 29, 1893, and November 9, 1907, respectively. To them eleven children were born, namely: Mrs. Jane Bell, a resident of Portland, Oregon; Mrs. Harriet Heninger, who is living in Oswego, Oregon; Willard J., who is the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Susan Prosser, also a resident of Oswego; John A., who is living in Salem; Julia Ann, who resided in Oysterville, Oregon, until her death on the 2d of April, 1901; Susanna, who was born August, 1854, and who died August, 1855; Anna S., whose birth occurred in December, 1856, and who died on the 21st of December, 1880; Clara V., whose birth occurred in 1860, and who passed away in 1863; Emma, who was born February, 1862, and who died September 24, 1863; Delos E., who was born March, 1865 and died March 20, 1885.

Willard J. Jefferson spent his boyhood and youth in a manner similar to that of the average country boy in the west; he attended the district school for a few years and then assisted his father on the home farm, but at the age of twenty years he started out independently by purchasing one hundred and sixty acres where, with the exception of three years, he has since resided. By hard work and careful study of the needs and possibilities of the soil he has improved fifty acres of this tract to such an extent that it is not only highly productive but also so cultivated that it will prove highly remunerative in the future. In addition to his home place he also cultivates fifty-one acres on the old homestead. He devotes the greater part of his time to general farming but has also been engaged in stock-raising to a considerable extent, and during the season does clover hulling.

On October 15, 1878, Mr. Jefferson was married to Miss Lavina M. Howland, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Howe) Howland, and who was born on the 20th of March, 1858. Her parents were both natives of England, but came to America before their marriage which occurred in St. Louis in the early '40s. Subsequently they removed to Oregon in 1842, and during the gold excitement in 1849 settled in California for a short time. However, the father returned to his donation land claim in Clackamas county and resided there until his death which occurred in 1887, his wife having died previously at the age of forty-four years. To them twelve children were born: Alfred, who is living in Oregon City on a part of the donation claim; Ella, who is married to Austin Newell of Clackamas county, Oregon; Mrs. Jefferson; Maggie B., of Uniontown, Oregon; Mrs. May Baultice of Union county, Oregon; John B., who is also residing on part of the homestead in Oregon City; Edward, of Oregon City; Anna, who was the wife of James Partlow, and who died at the age of thirty-three years; Lenora Sholts, whose death occurred when she was fifty-six years of age; Henry, who passed away at the age of eighteen years; Charles, who died at three years of age; and Cornelia, who died when an infant of but eighteen months. To Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson eight children were born: Clifford, who was born February 28, 1880, and who died in 1882; Raymond C., who was born November 24, 1883, and who is residing at home; Earl R., whose birth occurred on the 29th of October, 1885, and who is residing in Clackamas county, Oregon; Chester Clyde, born October 6, 1889, and living at home; Mabel, whose birth occurred June 3, 1891, and who is the wife of Lawrence W. Bower and the mother of one child, Henry Levi, born March 21, 1910; Bernice Leota, who was born July 18, 1893, and who is living at home; and Agnes Julia and Irene Viola, born June 14, 1900, and October 3, 1903, respectively.

Each community has many men among its citizens upon whom it can depend to conscientiously and honorably interest themselves in its civic development. In his district Mr. Jefferson is recognized as such a man, and is at the present time serving as road supervisor of the roads of district No. 16, and has also given his service as a member of the school board for a number of years. In politics he is a republican and is an enthusiastic advocate of the progressive policies of that party. He holds membership in Salem Lodge, No. 118, of the Woodmen of the World, and also in the North Howell Grange, and both he and his family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church where they hold membership. They number among their friends all the members of the community and are held in high esteem and regard by all.

GORDON GRANGER SHEPHERD, one of the enterprising and successful young agriculturists of Coos county, has spent practically his entire life within its borders. His birth occurred in Nebraska, in October,

MR. AND MRS. W. J. JEFFERSON

1885, his parents being Homer and Emeline (Chase) Shepherd, the former a native of Iowa, and the latter of Illinois. Homer Shepherd brought his family to Coos county, Oregon, in 1887, and purchased one hundred and twenty acres of partially improved land near McKinley. Twelve acres thereof are now under cultivation and are devoted to general farming. Mr. Shepherd now looks after his property interests in California. They had ten children, as follows: Alma, who is the wife of M. J. Terry, of Oakland, California, and the mother of four children; Mary, the wife of Manuel Cordozo, of Grants Pass, Oregon; Charles, who is an agriculturist residing in McKinley, Oregon, and has six children; Lillian, who lives with her brother Gordon; Bert and Walter, both of whom are deceased; Violet, the wife of Fred Dorman, of Oakland, California; Verna, who is the wife of H. L. Hanson, of Oakland, California, and has three children; Gordon Granger, of this review; and Archie, who also lives with our subject. All of the children were educated in Coos county, this state.

Gordon Granger Shepherd started out in life for himself at the age of twenty-one and spent three years in the logging business. He was also employed at other occupations, working for wages until he purchased a tract of eighty acres near his mother's place. He cleared a part of his land and also made some improvements thereon but disposed of the property prior to his father's removal to California. At that time he purchased the farm of eighty acres which he has since operated and which he devotes to the raising of grain. He also raises hogs for the market and intends to embark in the dairy business in the near future. His undertakings as an agriculturist have been attended with excellent results and his continued success is assured.

In 1906, Mr. Shepherd was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Summerlin, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of A. C. Summerlin. Mrs. Shepherd is one of a family of eight children, the others being as follows: David, who is a resident of Roseburg, Oregon; Joseph, living in California; John, residing at home in Lee, Oregon; Wiley and Michael, who are also still at home with their parents in Lee; Chelsea, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; and Arthur, who passed away in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd have four children, namely: Frances Ethel, who was born in 1907; Alvin Granger, whose natal year was 1909; Edith Lillian, whose birth occurred in 1910; and Vernon Keith, born in 1912. Mr. Shepherd is a republican in politics but has neither sought nor desired office as a reward for his party fealty. The circle of his friends is a wide one, for he has ever displayed those sterling traits of character which in every land and clime win confidence and regard.

PATRICK F. SWAYNE is a representative of the land of the shamrock and the shillalah, who cast his lot with many others who left their native land for the new world, and, arriving in America, by brawny arm and determination attained a degree of success which justifies their industry and sturdiness. He was born in Ireland, January 6, 1862, one of twelve children whose parents were Michael and Annie (Burns) Swayne. He emigrated to America in 1886 and landed at Halifax, Nova Scotia. After remaining there for a short time he went to Ontario, Canada, in the vicinity of which city he farmed for one year. He then removed to Massachusetts and learned the stone-cutter's trade, at which he worked until 1891. Being then convinced that the west afforded unusual opportunities he migrated to Oregon, where he purchased a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres. At the time when he obtained that property it was in a primitive state but he entered upon the work of clearing and improving it with great enthusiasm, and the result of his ardent labor is that he today has one of the most valuable agricultural properties of his community.

Mr. Swayne was married in 1899 to Miss Mary Barbara Herberger, who is a native of Jacksonville. To them four children have been born, Hazel, Josephine, Mildred and Lois, all of whom are at home. Mr. Swayne is a democrat. One of the faculties of most sons of Erin is that they readily adapt themselves to circumstances wherever they may be. Mr. Swayne's career serves to prove the correctness of that statement for in his daily life, though thrown upon his own resources in a land new to him, where none but unfamiliar faces are seen and strange environments surround, he performs his work with avidity, and is cheered by the thought that he is building a fortune which, though perhaps modest, will serve to ease for him in his declining years and prove a boon to his children when he passes into that land from which no traveler returns. By industry and integrity he has gained the respect of the community of which he is a member and is held in esteem by a large number of personal friends who have much confidence in him.

HON. OMER M. KEM. Perhaps no life history in all this volume indicates more clearly what may be accomplished through indefatigable energy and sterling worth of character than that of the Hon. Omer M. Kem, who for three consecutive terms was a member of the United States congress. He now makes his home in Cottage Grove, Oregon, where he ranks as a progressive, enterprising business man, being president of the Cottage Grove Electric Company, which is constantly reaching out along broadening lines in control of a business that is of marked value to the locality.

Mr. Kem was born in Hagerstown, Indiana, in 1855, a son of Madison and Malinda (Bulla) Kem. The father was a native of West Virginia, while the mother was born in Indiana. They became the parents of eight children: Melissa and Esther May, both deceased; Sophronia, the widow of Joshua Mellett, of Indiana; Mrs. Elmira Gray, of Indiana; Ellen, deceased; Edwin and Randolph, who have also passed away; and Omer M., of this review.

Inasmuch as the last named began earning his own living at the age of ten years his education was necessarily limited. He was reared on his father's farm, which he made his home until he attained the age of eighteen years. He then began farming on his own account by cultivating rented land, and was thus employed for five years. On the expiration of that period he removed westward and acquired a homestead claim of three hundred and twenty acres on the Nebraska frontier, eighty miles from a railroad. There he carried on farming for eight years and became one of the prominent and influential residents of that district. While living there he filled the position of deputy treasurer in Broken Bow, Custer county, and it was while discharging the duties of that office that he was elected to the lower house of the fifty-second congress. He proved to be a popular, capable and efficient representative of his district and was twice reelected. He left the impress of his individuality upon the legislation enacted during that period, seeking always the welfare of the majority rather than the benefit of the few. After his retirement from congress he left Nebraska and removed westward to a ranch near Montrose, Colorado, upon which he remained for twelve years. Again his worth as a citizen was recognized in his election to the state legislature, in which he served for one term. Mr. Kem believes he is the first man to introduce the initiative referendum and recall now commonly known as the Oregon system into a political convention in the United States. This occurred at the state convention in Lincoln, Nebraska, in 1891 or 1892. However, he did not advocate this as a proper method of general legislation but believed it to be a powerful weapon of self-defense to be used only in emergencies, when a public officer had committed some grievous wrong against the people, or when the legislature refused to do what the people wanted or did something they objected to. He still believes that any other use of the measure is an abuse of power.

In the fall of 1908 Mr. Kem came to Oregon, settling in Cottage Grove, where he purchased the electric light plant, taking into partnership with him his son-in-law, C. M. Shinn. Since obtaining possession of this plant Mr. Kem and his partner have doubled its capacity and have made extensive improvements, making it capable of serving a much wider territory than formerly. Moreover, at the present time improvements are contemplated which will more than double its present capacity. It is characteristic of Mr. Kem that in business affairs he has always readily recognized and quickly and wisely used his opportunities and this quality has brought to him a gratifying measure of success.

When nineteen years of age Mr. Kem was married to Miss Leonora Benson, a daughter of Noah and Nancy (Russom) Benson, whose family numbered five children, only two of whom are living. By her marriage Mrs.

Kem became the mother of five children: Edwin, deceased; Maud, the wife of C. M. Shinn, of Cottage Grove; Malinda and Earl, who have both passed away; and Claude J., who is a graduate of Columbia University of Washington, D. C., and is now a druggist of Cottage Grove. He is married and has one son, Julian. In 1882 Mr. Kem was called upon to mourn the loss of his first wife, who passed away on the 29th of October of that year. He later married Miss Alice Lockhart, a daughter of Robert and Rachael (Welch) Lockhart, all natives of Ohio. Mrs. Kem was one of six children of whom two died in infancy, the others being: Lilla, the wife of Dr. Crawford, of Paonia, Colorado; Irene, the wife of Jesse Fountain, of Nebraska; and Robert, of Denver, Colorado. Unto Mr. Kem's second marriage were born eight children: Albert, deceased; Huxley D., of Washington; Iris, the wife of G. B. Corey, of Olathe, Colorado; Myrtle, who is pursuing a four years' course in music in the University of Oregon; Marie, who has passed away; Victor and Kathleen, who are pupils of the public school of Cottage Grove; and Thelma.

Mr. Kem is a broad thinker, a sound reasoner and is liberal in his political views. He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters and while in Colorado was for six years a member of the school board. He is an active member of the Knights of Pythias and in religious matters is a non-sectarian, believing that righteous living and just treatment of one's fellowmen meets every requirement of this life or the life hereafter.

In addition to his home property in Cottage Grove Mr. Kem is the owner of a forty-acre farm in Indiana. Starting out in life a barefoot boy, working at farm labor, he may truly be said to be one of the self-made men of the country. Although deprived of many advantages which other boys enjoyed, he labored to broaden his knowledge and to promote his usefulness in various lines. Naturally a leader of men, inspiring confidence and good-will, he advanced steadily until he became a prominent figure in the legislative halls of the nation, where he acquitted himself with distinction, his course being highly satisfactory to his constituents. Passing through a strenuous political life, which was his life for many years and during which period he not only proposed but supported many bills which have found their way to the statute books of the country, he is now concentrating his energies upon industrial pursuits and is active in promoting a growing and profitable business in Cottage Grove.

OSCAR APPELEGATE. A native of Oregon who has for many years been identified with the agricultural growth of the state, is Oscar Applegate, who was born on September 21, 1863. He is a son of Robert and a grandson of Jesse Applegate, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this volume. Our subject's father was born in Missouri in 1839 and was eight years of age when he crossed the plains with his parents.

He was reared in the Yoncalla valley, Douglas county, Oregon, and upon reaching manhood located in the Ilayhurst valley on a portion of the William Hayhurst donation claim which had been acquired previously by his father, Jesse Applegate. Here he homesteaded an additional one hundred and sixty acres, bought school, railroad and other public lands and became one of the most extensive land owners. He died in 1893 but his wife is yet living in Douglas county. He was a republican and a prominent figure in his party's councils. He served as county commissioner of Douglas county for a number of years and was active and conscientious as a public official.

Oscar Applegate was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools of Douglas county. When he had attained majority he joined with his three brothers and his father in the operation of extensive farming lands belonging to Robert Applegate. In 1894 he established himself independently upon the homestead owned by his wife. This tract of land is located on Billy creek, Douglas county, and for eighteen years Mr. Applegate gave his entire attention to its improvement and cultivation, bringing it finally into a prosperous and flourishing condition. He removed in October, 1911, to the city of Drain, where he has since lived, retired.

On February 18, 1894, Oscar Applegate was united in marriage to Mrs. J. H. Turner, who was in her maidenhood Miss Matilda Peterson, and is a native of Lolland, Denmark, and a daughter of Peter and Trine Peterson. Mrs. Applegate has two children of her first marriage: Iona Lorena Turner, a graduate of the Central Oregon State Normal school and a teacher in the public schools of Klamath county; and Hiram C. Turner, a ranchman of Big Arm, Montana.

In his political affiliations Oscar Applegate is a consistent republican but never seeks public office. He is a member of Drain Camp, No. 259, W. O. W. and of the local Grange of Drain, Oregon, in the affairs of which he takes an active part. He learned farming by personal activity in various branches of agriculture and his early training has been supplemented by constructive experience gained in the course of a long life. He is ranked among the progressive farmers who are raising the standard and improving the methods of agriculture.

GEORGE BELLONI. Dairying is rapidly becoming an important industry in Oregon and modernly equipped and sanitary establishments of this kind in Coos county are making that section a valuable factor in state resources. Prominent among the men who are identified with this phase of activity is George Belloni who is now operating a large dairy farm four miles above Coquille, Oregon. Mr. Belloni was born in Switzerland in 1860, and is a son of James and Mary Belloni, both natives of that country where the father died and where the mother is still maintaining her residence. They were the parents of five children: Mary, who resides with her mother in Switzerland; George, the subject of this sketch; William and John, of Humboldt, California; and Fred, of Coquille, Oregon.

George Belloni remained in Switzerland until he was thirteen years of age and received his education in that country. He came to America in 1873 and settled first in San Francisco and worked upon the dairy farms in surrounding districts until 1879. He has thus been identified with the business in which he is now engaged since his boyhood and has acquired a thorough and scientific knowledge of its details. In 1879 he had accumulated sufficient money to start a dairy of his own and this he operated in California until 1896. In that year he came to Oregon, settling in Curry county, where he followed his chosen occupation, operating one of the largest dairies in that section of the state. His business constantly grew and expanded and at one time he was milking daily two hundred cows. He operated this enterprise until 1903 when he sold his stock and came to Coos county. Here he leased a large dairy farm, including fine pasture lands and barns, and stocked it with high-grade cows and is now operating a large and important enterprise. He milks forty cows every day and sells his products in the markets of the state. He also owns a large farm at Riverton known as the old Orchard farm. It comprises one hundred and fifty acres of fertile and productive land and is a valuable addition to Mr. Belloni's income. He has invested extensively in town property in North Bend and Marshfield and his real-estate holdings are constantly increasing in value.

In 1882 Mr. Belloni was united in marriage to Miss Celia Ottolini, a native of Switzerland and a daughter of Glon Antonia and Lena Ottolini, who lived and died in that country. Mrs. Belloni is one of nine children: Fred, of Humboldt, California; Joe, Victor, Peter and Maddie, all of whom reside in California; Celia, the wife of our subject; Rachel, who is still in Switzerland; one, who died in California; and one sister who passed away in her native country. To Mr. and Mrs. Belloni have been born eleven children: Cora, who is a typesetter and teacher and is living at home; Henry, who is married and follows the occupation of butter making in Coquille, Oregon; Lena, a teacher in the Coos county schools; John, who is married and follows the occupation of dairying and operates a creamery at Riverton, Coos county; Nettie, who is teaching school and makes her home with her parents; Thomas, George, Masie, Agnes, and Mamie, all of whom reside at home; and Hazel, who passed away when she was fifteen months of age. Mrs. Belloni received her education in the public schools of Switzerland and is a charming and hospitable woman. All her children have attended the public schools of Coos county and have made judicious use of their advantages in this line.

In his political affiliations Mr. Belloni is a republican but reserves his independence of judgment. He is a member of the school board and is interested in the cause of edu-educational expansion. He and his family are members of the Roman Catholic church. He is representative of a large class of farmers in Coos county whose experience and knowledge of agriculture have been directed to a special branch of the industry and whose intelligence and skill, controlled by business discrimination and judgment, are making their private enterprises public assets.

FRANCIS MARION WILKINS, former mayor of Eugene is one of the most highly esteemed residents of the city. Moreover, he is one of the oldest native sons of Oregon, his birth having occurred in Clackamas county, August 10, 1848. Throughout all the intervening years which have brought Oregon from its territorial position to a place among the leading states of the Union, he has been greatly interested in its progress and in all possible ways has aided in its improvement and development. His parents were Mitchell and Permelia Ann (Allan) Wilkins, more extended mention of whom is made on another page of this work.

Francis M. Wilkins attended the district schools in the acquirement of an education and afterward learned the drug business. He was graduated from the Portland Business College in 1869, and in 1877 embarked in business on his own account in connection with Dr. Shelton, under the firm name of Shelton & Wilkins. A brief period passed and Mr. Wilkins then purchased his partner's interest and continued alone in business until 1895. He had a well appointed store which he successfully conducted until the year mentioned, when he retired from active commercial pursuits. He has, however, been much interested in the Commercial Club and its possibilities and opportunities. For the past three years he has been president of its publicity department. In other public connections Mr. Wilkins has given equal demonstration of his worth and his loyalty to the best interests of the community. In 1905 he was elected a member of the city council for two years and was then elected mayor, in which connection he rendered to the city a public-spirited and beneficial administration that was characterized by many needed reforms and improvements. His best work during his term of office as mayor was signing an ordinance for the first paving ever done in the city, one for the purchase of the first land for park purposes and one for a gas franchise and street car, besides the first combination wagon for fighting fire which was purchased during his time. The city's start and uplift along civic lines was largely due to his earnest work and persistent effort. For the past three years he has been president of the promotion work of the Eugene Commercial Club, which has been largely instrumental in settling up the community in and around Eugene and in getting families "back to the soil" and promoting ways and means for them to pay for their homes. He is also a member of the board of the Lane County Agricultural Society, which has for its purpose the holding of fairs in Lane county, and he has been a member of the board of park commissioners for the past six years.

In 1872 Mr. Wilkins was united in marriage to Miss Emma Goltra, a daughter of Nelson Goltra. She was born in Lebanon, Linn county, Oregon, in the First Methodist church, which her parents were occupying while her father built the Santiam Academy. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins have been born five children: Maude, the wife of Herbert T. Condon, of Seattle, Washington, who is financial agent and manager for the State University there; F. L., living in Seattle; Nina, the wife of Lieutenant C. C. McCornack, surgeon of the United States Army; Lucia; and Gladys. The parents are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally Mr. Wilkins is connected with Spencer Butte Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F., and is also past chief patriarch of Wimawhala Encampment No. 6. He was a member of the first Knights of Pythias lodge organized in Eugene, and he belongs to Eugene Camp, No. 115, W. O. W., of which he became a charter member. Lodge No. 357 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks also numbers him among its valued members. He is actuated in all he does by a spirit of progress and advancement and his efforts have therefore been of material value to his state. The terms progress and patriotism might be considered the keynote of his character, for throughout his career he has labored for the improvement of every line of business or public interest with which he has been associated and at all times has been actuated by a fidelity to his country and her welfare.

JAMES H. ROOKARD is living on sixteen acres of land in Coos county near Bridge, and has been an active factor in the agricultural life of this section since 1903. He is a native son of Oregon, having been born in Douglas county on March 25, 1876, and is a son of Thomas and Catherine (Howell) Rookard, natives of Indiana, who later removed to Missouri and thence to California, where they were married. They came to Oregon in 1876, settling on the Coquille river where the town of Bridge now stands, and here they resided until the father's death in 1902. His wife is still living and makes her home with our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Rookard had the following children: Emma Margery, of California; Mrs. Elizabeth Bridenbush, of Douglas county, Oregon; Mrs. Eva E. Jenkins, who resides near Myrtle Point, Oregon; James H., of this review; Lena, the wife of Frank McNair, of Myrtle Point; and Louisa, Ida and Thomas, all of whom are deceased.

James H. Rookard was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Bridge, Oregon. He remained upon his father's farm and actively assisted in its operation until he was twenty-seven years of age. During these years he gained an expert knowledge of the many details connected with the tilling of the soil as it is carried on in the American northwest and became familiar with the science of farming in all its aspects. Following his marriage in 1904, he started farming for himself on a homestead claim to which he had previously proved title. His original land was located near Bridge, Oregon, and he was successful in its improvement and cultivation for one year. He then purchased his father's homestead near Bridge, comprising three hundred and twenty acres which he later sold and, in 1909 he purchased his present holdings, on which he has lived since that time.

In 1904 Mr. Rookard was united in marriage to Miss Lottie Belieu, also a native of Coos county and a daughter of M. M. and Martha Belien, of Bridge, Oregon. Mrs. Rookard's parents were both born in this state and they have made it their home all during their lives. They have five children: Wave, the wife of Charles Thomas, of Marshfield, Oregon; Carrie, the wife of George Brownson, of Bridge; Jessie, the wife of I. Houser, of Bridge; Lottie, now Mrs. James H. Rookard; and Bert, of Bridge. Mrs. Rookard received her education in the public schools of Coos county and made her home with her parents until her marriage. She is a charming and hospitable woman and has many friends in this section of the country, most of whom have known her since her childhood. She and her husband are the parents of five children: Freddie, born in 1905; James, born in 1906; Velma, born in 1908; Ardest, born in 1910; and Viral, born in 1911.

In his political affiliations Mr. Rookard is a consistent democrat but while he always votes the party ticket he has never sought public office. He has assisted in much of the improvement that has been made along agricultural lines in Coos county and is numbered among the substantial and progressive citizens of the state.

DR. GEORGE CHARLES KNOTT has been successfully engaged in the general practice of medicine as physician and surgeon since 1910 in Yoncalla, Douglas county, Oregon. He was born in Anna, Illinois, November 11, 1880, and is a son of John W. and Harriett C. (Starr) Knott, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Columbus, Ohio. The mother is descended from Revolutionary stock, her grandfather having been a colonel in the Revolutionary army, and having at the close of the war received a grant of several thousand acres of land on a part of which later was built the city of Columbus, Ohio. The mother removed to Iowa with her parents when a child. The father settled in that state as a young man and they were married in Tipton in April, 1862. The father was educated for the ministry in the University of Delaware and later completed a course in the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago. He has since devoted his time to ministry in the Presbyterian denomination and now at the age of seventy-six years occupies the pulpit every Sunday in the Yoncalla Presbyterian church. The mother died in 1910.

Dr. Knott was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Iowa. He completed a course in the high school of Holdrege, Nebraska, and some time later pursued a business course in the Salt Lake Business College, after which he took up office work with the Ingersoll-Sargent Drill Company, but on account of distaste for the work gave it up. Subsequently he spent one winter in Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana. He afterward entered Coe College at Cedar Rapids, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of A. B. in the class of 1905. The following fall he took up the study of medicine in the medical department of the Iowa State University at Iowa City and while in the pursuit of his medical studies he received his Master's degree from Coe College. In medical studies he pursued both the old school and the homeopathic courses and was graduated as a physician with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1909. While attending college Dr. Knott supported himself by working at various kinds of employment and received a compensation for his services sufficient to enable him to pursue his long period of study without extended intervals. Immediately following his graduation from the medical department of the University he served for nine months as interne in the state hospital at Iowa City. In 1910 he came to Oregon, located in Yoncalla and since opening an office in that city he has built up an enviable reputation.

Dr. Knott was united in marriage in April, 1909, to Miss Martha W. Fratzke, a native of Independence, Iowa, and they are the parents of one child, Helen W. Dr. Knott is affiliated with the republican party and is a member of Sunset Lodge, No. 144, A. F. & A. M., and of Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Brotherhood of America and the North American Institute of Homeopathy. He is one of the rising young physicians of Douglas county and is a man by nature and qualifications unusually adapted for the work of his profession and in his chosen vocation is meeting with well deserved and gratifying success.

JOHN McCaleb, who has been living in Monmouth since he retired from his ranch, was born July 6, 1839, in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania. He is a son of John and Martha (Kochenour) McCaleb, who spent their lives in Cumberland, Franklin and Clinton counties and engaged in farming. John McCaleb, Sr., however, died in Santa Barbara, California. He was the father of nine children, namely: Joseph H., deceased; Elizabeth; John; Catherine and Jennie, deceased; Francis; Albert; Anna, deceased; and William.

John McCaleb, as a youth, received such meager education as was provided at that time in the common schools of Pennsylvania near his home. Realizing that opportunities for success were greater in a new territory, he came west to the coast, settling first in Sacramento, California, in 1861, the year memorable as the one in which that city suffered from a flood. For a year he worked on a race track in Sacramento and then went to Nevada, where for five years he was employed on a ranch. Leaving there, he went back to Pennsylvania and was married, April 1, 1867, in Fayette county, to Mary Elizabeth Miller, a daughter of William and Harriet Miller. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McCaleb engaged in farming in Virginia for a time and afterward removed to the McCaleb homestead in Pennsylvania. For two years John McCaleb worked there before coming to Oswego, Oregon, where he was employed in the charcoal burning business for three years. He then removed to Polk county and purchased a farm of one hundred and five acres in Cooper Hollow, four miles west of Monmouth, and that was his home for the next twelve years. So successful had his various enterprises proven that he was then able to retire from active work and live comfortably in Monmouth. There Mrs. McCaleb passed away, October 10, 1909, at the age of sixty-six years, four months and twenty-three days. To Mr. and Mrs. McCaleb five children were born: Clarence Eugene, born January 24, 1868, who is living on a ranch; Ida Florence, born July 8, 1869; John Miller, whose birth occurred October 23, 1871, and who is residing with his father; Charles Newton, who was born February 16, 1873, and died February 3, 1904; and William L., who was born October 29, 1876.

John McCaleb never interested himself actively in politics, realizing that his agricultural and various commercial interests required all his time and energy. Adhering to the teachings of his youth, he is a member of the Reformed Mennonite church, which his family also attends. Mr. McCaleb has reached the age of seventy-three years and his has been a well spent life, in which he has done much to further the agricultural development of the northwest, while at the same time his efforts have brought him substantial rewards.

M. T. CLINTON, a prosperous and representative agriculturist of Coos county, resides upon a farm of forty acres and owns one hundred and ten acres of timber land, as well as an interest in a half section of land near Coquille. His birth occurred in Missouri on the 28th of May, 1870, his parents being J. W. and Eliza (Fortner) Clinton, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Iowa. More extended mention of the family is made on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of Jesse D. Clinton, a brother of our subject.

M. T. Clinton, who was but three years of age when brought to Oregon by his parents, obtained his education in Coos county. He began providing for his own livelihood on attaining majority, working for his father until the time of his marriage. Subsequently he managed a logging camp for his father for a period of ten years and on the expiration of that time took up his abode on a farm of forty acres near Arago, which he owns and on which he has since resided. He has one hundred and ten acres of timber land located in Coos county and has an interest in a tract of three hundred and twenty acres near Coquille. His undertakings as an agriculturist have been attended by success and he well deserves recognition among the substantial and representative citizens of his community.

On the 13th of April, 1898, Mr. Clinton was united in marriage to Miss Minnie M. Miller, a native of Josephine county, Oregon, and a daughter of Francis and Cerilda Miller, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Clinton have been born four children, as follows: Lester L., born on the 25th of March, 1900; Theresa M., whose natal day was March 30, 1903; Shirley D., who died at the age of eighteen months and Merlin, born on the 2nd of August, 1912.

Mr. Clinton is a republican but not strictly partisan, regarding the fitness of a candidate as of more importance than his party affiliation. He is serving as road supervisor of Coos county and also acts as state fire warden. He is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having been a member of the Coquille lodge of that fraternity for the past seventeen years. His religious beliefs are those of the United Brethren church. Practically his entire life has been spent in the Sunset state and he has watched its continued growth and development with interest and pride, personally doing everything in his power to promote the work of progress and improvement.

JAMES R. GARRETT, who was engaged in farming in Coos county from 1901 to the time of his death, in 1910, was about eighty-four years of age when he passed away. He was born in Ohio, on the 14th of November, 1826, a son of John and Sarah Garrett, who were married in that state and there resided for thirty years. They then removed to Iowa, purchasing land, and were identified with agricultural interests in that state throughout their remaining days, the father passing away in 1864 and the mother in 1866. In their family were ten children but only two are living: Cary who is a resident of Iowa; and Jennie, the wife of Alvin Bodwell, of Nebraska.

James R. Garrett acquired his education in the schools of his native state and with his parents removed to Iowa, where he remained until after his marriage. He became identified with the western country in 1875, in which year he arrived in California, where he engaged in farming until 1901, or for a period of about twenty-six years. He then disposed of his interests in the Golden state and came to Coos county, Oregon, purchasing two hundred acres of land near Myrtle Point. He took up his abode upon that property and there resided to the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of September, 1910. He had always carried on general farming and his labors were attended with good results, as he worked diligently and persistently and employed such methods as transformed his place into a valuable and productive property.

In 1866 Mr. Garrett was united in marriage to Miss Mary Porter, who was born in Iowa.

July 23, 1848, and is a daughter of Girard and Mary (Snider) Porter. Her father was educated by the famous Steven Girard, the founder of the well known Girard College of Philadelphia, of which city Mr. Porter was a native. The mother was born in Ohio. After their marriage they removed westward to Des Moines, Iowa, where Mr. Porter followed his profession of civil engineering to the time of his death, in 1852. His widow long survived him and was laid to rest in 1893, at Des Moines. In the family were five children, of whom Mrs. Garrett is the eldest, the others being: John, of Nebraska; Margaret, who is the wife of Henry Delong, of Oklahoma; Lydia, the wife of Mr. Osgood, of northwestern Iowa; and George Ewing of Des Moines. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett became the parents of eight children: Lewis, who was born in 1868, and who is married and lives in Humboldt county, California; Fred, born in 1870, who is married and lives in Myrtle Point, Oregon; Edwin, born in 1880, who is married and makes his home in Humboldt, California; Lillian, born in 1876, the wife of Ernest Davenport, of Coquille; Roy, born in 1878, who operates the homestead farm; Neva, who is the wife of W. C. Gearing, a civil engineer in the employ of the government in Coos county; Iva, born in 1886, who is at home; and Lina, who was born in 1888 and is the wife of C. Carl, of Portland.

Mr. Garrett was a member of the Presbyterian church, to which faith his family still adhere. In politics he was a staunch republican and held many local offices, the duties of which he discharged with promptness and fidelity. All who knew him esteemed him for his sterling worth, for they found him trustworthy in every relation of life. He was honorable and straightforward in business, reliable in citizenship and true to the ties of home and friendship.

GEORGE WILLIAM NORRIS, a representative agriculturist and native son of Oregon, was born in Oregon City, on the 5th of December, 1847, his parents being Thomas and Mary E. (Boon) Norris. The father was a native of Maryland, while the mother's birth occurred in Missouri. Unto them were born seven children, as follows: George William, of this review; Mary, who is the wife of J. L. Barker, a ranchman residing in Fairview, Oregon; Lucy Ann, the wife of R. C. Dement of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Louise S., the wife of L. A. Lawhorn, of McKinley, Oregon; C. L., who lives with his sister, Mrs. L. A. Lawhorn, at McKinley, Oregon; Thomas C., of Fort Klamath, Oregon; and Albert, who is deceased.

The parents of George William Norris crossed the plains in 1846 and settled at Oregon City. Thomas Norris took up a donation land claim four miles south of Corvallis and lived there for a time. Previous to this Thomas Norris established the first foundry at Oregon City. He also established the first plow factory in this state and did general machinery work. After a number of years he disposed of his interests in Benton county and removed to Douglas county, settling on Deer creek, ten miles east of Roseburg, where he bought out a number of other farmers and came into possession of a section of land. He resided thereon during the Indian war of 1855 and 1856, and in 1860 removed to the present site of Wilsonville, remaining there for two years. On the expiration of that period he returned to Douglas county and in 1868 came to Coos county, settling at what is now Fairview. That place was still unnamed, the country being yet wild and unimproved and the land unsurveyed. The Norris family had to pack all their provisions on mules and horses, for the famous Coos Bay wagon road was not built until after Thomas Norris and his son George took up their homesteads. Our subject still owns his original tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land, but the father's quarter section has been sold. George W. Norris has been actively engaged in general farming and in dairy farming in Coos county for more than four decades and has won a gratifying measure of prosperity in this connection.

On the 25th of October, 1884, at Sumner, Oregon, Mr. Norris was joined in wedlock to Mrs. Mary J. Dyer, a native of this state and a daughter of James and Patsy (Russell) Catching. By her first husband, Samuel Dyer, Mrs. Norris had two children: Carrie, the wife of Thomas Boon, of Fairview, Oregon; and Delma, who lives with Mrs. Patsy E. Catching, of Sumner, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Norris have five children, as follows: Mary L., born September 27, 1885, who is the wife of Otis Plitcroft of Fairview, Oregon, by whom she has four children, Brica, George B., Marvin O. and Emma A.; Walter Boon, whose natal day was February 20, 1887; George Ray, whose birth occurred on the 6th of February, 1889; Myrtle A., who was born on the 16th of October, 1892; and Olive Irene, whose natal day was June 14, 1895. The last four named are still at home.

In politics Mr. Norris is independent, holding himself free of party ties that he may support the men whom he deems most competent for office and the measures which he regards as the most beneficial factors in the life of the community. He has acted as election judge and has also served on the school board but has not cared for office other than that in which he could serve the people of his immediate vicinity. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In the community where so many years of his life have been spent he has gained an extensive circle of warm friends who entertain for him the utmost regard and esteem because of his excellent traits of character.

WILLIAM R. ADKINS. Living near Provo, where he has a forty acres fruit ranch, William R. Adkins, a veteran of the Civil war, is passing in comfort, though still actively engaged in business, the declining years of a well spent life. He was born in Kentucky, June 10, 1838, a son of Straley and Annie (Day) Adkins, both of whom were natives of Virginia.

William R. Adkins remained at home until he attained the age of eighteen years, receiving a good common-school education and helping his father with the work of the farm. He then went to Wisconsin, where he was employed in the lead mines until January 4, 1864, when he enlisted for service in the Civil war. He participated in many battles and fought all through the Red River campaign in which the Federal army lost about fifteen thousand men. He was mustered out of service on June 29, 1865. Returning to Wisconsin, he was again employed in the lead mines of that state but at the end of two years engaged in well drilling and also in farming. In 1900 he came to Oregon, where he purchased forty acres of land which he has finely improved, devoting the greater portion of his time to fruit culture. In consideration of his services in the Civil war he is drawing a pension of twenty-four dollars a month which, with his income from the farm, places him in comfortable circumstances.

On January 29, 1856, Mr. Adkins was united in marriage to Miss Tansy Peak and to them have been born eight children, George, Minerva, Stella, William, Dora, Annie, Jessie and Vesta. In his political views Mr. Adkins has always been republican and is much interested in the affairs of his party. He is prominently known among the honored residents of the community in which he lives and is held in high esteem by all who know him.

JAMES L. HANKS. In the latter part of the '40s and the decade of the '50s the trails extending westward from the central and eastern states were dark with caravans drawn by oxen and mules, driven by the numberless hardy pioneers who opened up the new and undeveloped country along the Pacific coast. James L. Hanks, now a venerable and honored resident of Glendale, was one of the early settlers of Douglas county, Oregon. He was born in Illinois, February 14, 1829, a son of John and Susan (Wilson) Hanks, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky. This is the same Hanks family to which Abraham Lincoln was related on the maternal side. In fact, the martyred president at one time lived in the home of John Hanks and James L. Hanks of this review was for several years his bedfellow. He relates many interesting incidents of the period when "Uncle Abe," as he was always called by the children, became a member of his father's household, being then a slender, beardless young man, working on the farm of John Hanks, with whom he also made twelve different trips down the Mississippi river to New Orleans. As land was plentiful, Lincoln took up a homestead about that time and John Hanks assisted him in building his cabin. It was while a member of that household that Lincoln began reading law, studying at night long after the family had gone to bed, pursuing his reading often by the light of blazing pine knots. His relatives did not consider him anything out of the ordinary at the time but were proud of him after he was admitted to the bar, for he was not long in giving evidence of his power and ability in practice.

James L. Hanks acquired his education in the public schools of his native state and remained at home until twenty-one years of age, when he started westward, making his way across the plains to California, driving a mule team, in 1850. For seven years he remained in that state and in 1857 came to Oregon, settling at Roseburg. After devoting two years to mining he bought a farm in Klamath county, which he operated with much success until 1910, when he retired from active life. Ere he started for the west he bade good-bye to his cousin, Abraham Lincoln, who was then practicing law in Decatur and who advised him not to come, reciting the fact that the country was almost wholly unknown, that the trip was hazardous and that it properly belonged to a later generation to develop Oregon. However, Mr. Hanks decided to carry out his plans. He returned to the east when Lincoln was president and the story which he told the chief executive made him have new views concerning this state. The president asked him if he would like to be a United States marshal or postmaster or hold some other federal appointment in Oregon, but Mr. Hanks informed him that he was still a democrat, and at the time he was sheriff of Lake county. He, therefore, did not care to resign his office to accept republican appointment.

In 1861 Mr. Hanks was married to Miss Mary Purdue, a native of Missouri, and they became the parents of ten children, John, Marion, Ella, Linna, Jessie, Emma, Affa, Louis, William and Edgar. The eldest son, John Hanks, is now living at home with his parents and is one of the prominent citizens of Glendale, where he is the owner of considerable real estate. He gives his allegiance to the democratic party and has always been an active political worker. He was elected to the office of city marshal three years ago and is still serving in that capacity. He also held the position of constable of Glendale for two years and has always been actively interested in any movement looking toward the municipal advancement of his native city. His father, James L. Hanks, is now in his eighty-fourth year, a successful, prosperous and active man who has spent his life since he became of age in developing and promoting the mining and agricultural interests of Douglas county.

JOHN S. ROOT is improving and operating a fine farm located eight miles below Myrtle Point on Fishtrap creek, Oregon, and has gained recognition as a successful and practical agriculturist. He was born in Illinois, on May 6, 1862, and is a son of John and Susanna (Noffsinger) Root, natives of Ohio. Their marriage occurred in Indiana and in that state the father followed farming until he moved to Illinois, where he engaged in the same line of activity until 1874. In that year he came to Oregon and settled on Fishtrap creek in Coos county. There he bought eighty acres of land and was successful in its management and development for a number of years. He eventually traded his original property for land on the Coquille river which he operated until his death, on November 22, 1887. His wife is still living near the old homestead and has reached the age of eighty years. She and her husband were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are still living: Uriah, of Chico, California; Daniel, of Myrtle Point; John S., of this review; Joel, of Coos county; and Hezekiah, who is farming near his father's homestead.

John S. Root received his education in a little log schoolhouse in Coos county. His advantages in this respect were extremely limited, owing to the primitive conditions of the section in which he resided. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age, and began his active life at that time. He worked in the logging camps in Coos county for three years and in 1886 married and started farming upon his wife's property in Coos county. He was successful from the beginning and was soon able to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land on Hall's creek, Coos county, which he developed and improved until 1910. In that year he moved upon a farm eight miles below Myrtle Point, on Fishtrap creek, and here he carries on general farming and stock-raising, specializing in the operation of a modern and sanitary dairy. He also owns a large amount of real estate in Bandon, Oregon, and is a representative and enterprising citizen of that section.

On April 4, 1886, Mr. Root was united in marriage to Miss Julia Ann Barklow, a native of Keokuk county, Iowa, where she was born January 14, 1868. Mrs. Root is a daughter of David and Elizabeth (Miller) Barklow, who were both born in Pennsylvania. Their marriage occurred in that state and they remained there for several years before they moved to Freeport, Illinois. After a short period of residence there they went to Iowa, where the father followed farming until 1872. In that year they came to Oregon and settled in Coos county, buying land in that district upon which they lived until the father's death, on February 5, 1889. His wife survived him for many years, dying on May 17, 1902. They were the parents of two children, the sister of our subject being Sarah E., who died in infancy. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Root have been born fourteen children: Sarah E., who lives at home; Naomi, who is teaching in the Coos county public schools and who resides with her parents; John D., Nettie E., Hezekiah, Samuel J., Bertha L., Elvina, Minnie L., Mary Z., Thomas L. and Julia D. L., all of whom make their home with their parents; and two who died in infancy. Mr. Root and his family affiliate with the church of the Brethren of which Mr. Root is an elder. He is independent in his political views and always votes for the man regardless of his party. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but has never sought public office, preferring to concentrate his attention upon the efficient development of his farm. His agriculture, based as it is, on personal experience, in the details of planting, cultivating and harvesting, has been productive of good results and his farm is one of the model and attractive features of Coos county.

WILLIAM J. BURCHARD is a native son of Oregon and during his active life has been identified with the agricultural development of Douglas county. He is now one of the most extensive land owners in the district in which he resides and, promoting his success along this line, has added to the resources of his state seven hundred and fourteen acres of highly improved and developed land. He was born four miles up the Umpqua river from Scottsburg on March 27, 1858, and is a son of Ephraim H. and Mary G. (Sawyers) Burchard, the former a native of Steubenville, Ohio, where he was born in 1828, and the latter a native of Pennsylvania. They were married in Ohio and in 1854 crossed the plains to Oregon, locating in the same year in Douglas county, where the father took up a donation claim and was active in the cultivation of the soil until his death, on August 19, 1900. He was for many years a member of the Masonic fraternity and was awarded all of the honors of this organization. He was a staunch member of the democratic party and served with ability and efficiency for one term as county assessor. His wife is still living and makes her home with the subject of this sketch. She is now in the seventy-sixth year of her age.

William J. Burchard was reared at home and acquired his education in the common schools of Douglas county. He has been identified with agriculture from his early manhood and practically had charge of the home farm since he attained his majority. In this way he early gained a personal experience in the details of tilling and cultivating the soil and in the best methods of caring for grain and stock. In 1897 he purchased from his father one hundred and seventy acres, constituting a part of the original donation claim. In 1902 the farm of two hundred and ninety acres upon which he now resides was willed to him and his mother conjointly by Job Hatfield, and he now owns and operates besides this extensive tract of land three other pieces of property, one of one hundred and sixty acres, a smaller farm of fifty acres and one of forty acres all of which adjoin his original donation claim. Mr. Burchard gives his personal supervision and his active labor to the carrying on of his extensive enterprises along the most modern and progressive lines. He has made improvements at various times in his career and has brought his property to a state of cultivation which entitles it to be ranked among the model and attractive farms in the county.

On November 11, 1884, Mr. Burchard was united in marriage to Miss Mamie Davis a daughter of James Davis who came to Oregon from San Francisco in 1877 locating on Paradise creek in Douglas county. Unto Mr.

and Mrs. Burchard have been born seven children: Marjorie, Harry, Margaret, Eula, Vera, Gard and Wilma, all of whom are still at home. Mr. Burchard is a republican in politics and is a member of Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F. Although he is deeply and intelligently interested in the modern developments of scientific agriculture he has not allowed his activities along this line to narrow his mind into a set groove. He is public-spirited and energetic and there is hardly a phase of activity in this section in which he is not prominent. His intelligent methods of farming, his energy and broad-minded characteristics have made him more than a successful agriculturist by influencing his career and by making him an honorable man and a worthy citizen.

J. H. LAMB is accorded the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens on account of his worthy activities as a pioneer in Coos county's settlement, a veteran of the Civil war, a prosperous farmer, an upright man and a sterling citizen. He now operates one hundred and thirty-five acres of land which he has been improving and developing since 1881, and has gained success as a general agriculturist. He was born in Alabama, August 10, 1840, and is a son of John and Ann Lamb, both natives of the southern states. In 1850 the parents of our subject removed to Arkansas where the father followed farming until his death. To them seven children were born, three of whom are still living: John J., of Coquille; David, a resident of Greene county, Arkansas; and J. H., the subject of this sketch.

J. H. Lamb was educated in the public schools of Alabama and Arkansas and came to Oregon in 1874. He settled immediately on the Coquille river where he bought fifty-five acres of land which he improved and developed for three years. He disposed of his holdings at the end of that time in order to purchase the farm upon which he now resides. He has been identified with the agricultural development of this tract of land since 1881 and has carried on general farming upon his one hundred and thirty-five acres since that time. He is now one of the prosperous and representative farmers of the county, and his enterprise has been increasingly successful with every year. When he located on the Coquille river there were no roads through Coos county, and he was obliged in his travels to follow the Indian trails. He has seen the development of the section from this unorganized state to its present condition of productive fertility, and he has himself been a vital factor in the advancement. He is well known in the district in which he lives as a veteran of the Civil war. His service was given to the Confederate government and he served from July, 1861, to May 25, 1865. He was wounded in the foot by a cannon ball which tore off the sole of his shoe and inflicted a dangerous wound. He served successively in two companies, one infantry and the other cavalry, and held the office of lieutenant in the Confederate army. He did able and useful service and was discharged with honor at the end of the war.

Mr. Lamb was married in November, 1866, to Miss Ann M. Drummond, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of William and Phoebe Drummond, both of whom were born in Virginia. They later removed to Tennessee where the mother died. The father afterward removed to Arkansas and there his death occurred. They were the parents of six children, of whom the wife of our subject is the only one living. To Mr. and Mrs. Lamb have been born four children: Phoebe A., the wife of George Henninger, of Coos county, by whom she has three children, Wallace, Milton and Chester; John B., who is farming on the Coquille river in Coos county; Mary N., the wife of George Robison, of Coos county, by whom she has three children, Rubie, Opal and Houston; and William David, who passed away when he was one year old.

Mr. Lamb and his family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He well merits the success which has come to him as a direct result of his earnest work, his knowledge of agriculture and his business methods which in all their phases have never sought nor required disguise.

FRANCIS M. MILLER is numbered among the farmers whose progressive work along agricultural lines has done much to promote the development of Coos county, Oregon. He was born in Missouri, on the 8th of May, 1844, and is the son of Madison and Mary Miller, natives of Tennessee. Their marriage occurred in Missouri and they lived in that state until 1852, in which year the father moved to California. In 1872 the mother moved to Oregon, arriving in Jackson county, where she was again married, her second husband being Z. Crabtree. They lived in Oregon for a number of years, where Mr. Crabtree was successful as an agriculturist. He and his wife went upon a journey to Kentucky and in that state the mother of our subject passed away. Her husband returned to Eugene, Oregon, where his death occurred shortly afterward. Francis Miller is one of four children born to his parents, the others being: William T., of Bandon, Oregon; Joseph, who died while in the army; and Eliza, who has passed away.

Francis M. Miller received his education in the public schools of Missouri and came to Oregon with his mother when he was about twenty-nine years of age. He worked at various occupations in Jackson county and remained at home until he was thirty-three. At that time he moved to Coos county, where he purchased forty-five acres of land and began its improvement and development. He has operated this farm since that time and has gained by his energetic labors a prosperity which is the natural result of his diligence and ability. He has made extensive improvements upon his property, has fenced his farm into fields and built suitable barns and outbuildings. He conducts his farm along modern and progressive lines and it is in its present prosperous and thriving ing state one of the model properties in Coos county.

In 1876 Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Cerilda Miller, a daughter of W. M. and Mary Miller, natives of Missouri who crossed the plains to Oregon and settled in Douglas county in 1852. Four years later they moved to Jackson county, where the father proved up a claim of government land upon which he lived until his death. Mrs. Miller is one of eleven children, all of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. Miller have eight children: Mrs. Minnie Clinton; Maud, who married Leon C. Pauli, of Bandon; W. F., who is farming on Fishtap creek; Mrs. Sadie Smith, of Bandon, Oregon; Mrs. Ettie McAdams, of Coquille; Robert, who is still at home; Jesse, who is also with his parents; and Grace, who is attending school. Mr. Miller is a devoted member of the United Brethren faith and to this religion his wife and family also give their allegiance. His politics are consistently republican and he has served with ability and efficiency as road supervisor. He is now acting as a member of the local school board and his labors along this line are doing much to promote educational expansion. His farm is located on Fishtap creek, nine miles below Myrtle Point, in Coos county. His genuine personal worth and his activity in a useful line of occupation have combined to make him one of the enterprising and representative men of this section whose careers have been influential factors in agricultural development.

GUSTAVE SCHROEDER owns an interest in an estate of two hundred acres but is cultivating a tract of leased land in Coos county. He was born at Arago, Oregon, in 1883, a son of John Henry and Emily Schroeder. His youthful days were quietly passed without any event of special importance. He gave much of his time to the acquirement of an education and remained at home until after his marriage. He learned the jewelry business and conducted a store at Myrtle Point for two years, but in March, 1912, began farming on rented land, located on the Coquille river, near Arago. His fields are well cultivated and he has made good plans for their further development and improvement.

In November, 1907, Mr. Schroeder was united in marriage to Miss Susie Smith, a native of Oregon and a daughter of W. B. and Ada (Lamb) Smith, both of whom are natives of Arkansas and are pioneer settlers of Coos county, where they have long resided. At present they make their home at Coquille. The father engaged in the hardware business for many years but recently retired, retaining the building in which his store was formerly located and a stock of goods. The business is now being carried on by his son. He also owns other property in the town and a good ranch of one hundred and sixty acres in the county. To Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Smith were born four children: Mrs. Lloyd Oddy, of Coquille; Mrs. Schroeder; Kennon, of Myrtle Point; and Ethel, who is at home. Mr. and Mrs. Schroeder have two children: Vivian G., born in December, 1909; and Irene E., born in 1910. The family reside about seven miles above Coquille on the river and are well known in that locality. They hold to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Schroeder gives his political allegiance to the democratic party. He is yet a young man but has already made for himself a creditable place in business circles and his ambition and energy will carry him steadily forward.

GEORGE F. ROBISON is one of the successful dairy farmers in Coos county and is contributing his share in making that industry important among the resources of his state. He was born in Cole county, Missouri, November 11, 1874, and is a son of George T. and Priscilla (Medlock) Robison, both natives of that section. They were married in Cole county and lived there until 1888. The father followed farming and was successful in the operation of a large agricultural enterprise. In 1888 he came to Oregon and settled on the Coquille river, four miles above the city of Coquille, where he proved up one hundred and sixty acres of land. He later purchased his parents' farm consisting of two hundred and eighty acres and added this to his homestead claim, owning in all four hundred and forty acres, comprising one of the finest tracts of farm land in the section. He had large pastures and made a specialty of the raising and breeding of high-grade stock. He gave his personal attention to this branch of his enterprise and was active in it until his death in February, 1912. His wife is still living with her youngest son upon the farm. To their union were born three children: George F., the subject of this sketch; Eva, the wife of John Hickam, of Coquille; and James, who resides on the old homestead.

George Robison received his education in the public schools of Coos county, and his early life was identified with agriculture in all its branches. He aided his father in the work of the farm and became acquainted with the various details connected with its operation. For some time he and his father were associated in the conduct of the homestead and Mr. Robison remained at home until one year after his marriage. He then rented land in the same section and for four years was successful as an independent agriculturist. At the end of that time he moved upon his wife's property of seventy-seven acres situated five miles above Coquille, and here he has since operated a model dairy. He feeds his own cattle, and the acres which comprise his farm are used as pasture land. His buildings are kept always clean and sanitary and are equipped with suitable machinery. The butter and cheese from his dairy rank among the finest products of their kind in Coos county, and their quality is the direct result of system and science in their preparation. He keeps a large herd of blooded stock, and his operations along this line add materially to his income. At the present time he owns, in conjunction with his wife, seventy acres of land aside from his dairy farm and a one third interest in the four hundred and forty acres which comprise the homestead of his father.

Mr. Robison was married on January 23, 1907, to Miss Mary W. Lamb, who was born on the Coquille river, Coos county. She is a daughter of J. H. Lamb, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Robison have been born three children: Ruby A., who was born in May, 1908; Opal, born on the 25th of June, 1910; and Houston T., whose birth occurred on February 20, 1912. Mr. Robison and his family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He has made a steady advance in life and his citizenship is of the kind which finds its most important outlet in quiet industry along a chosen walk of life.

JOHN KRONENBERG came alone across the Atlantic from Germany to America when he was a boy of about twelve, landing in Baltimore with no resources beyond his industry and his readiness to work. He obtained a position as a shoemaker's apprentice and labored diligently at this and various other occupations. He made his way to different parts of the United States, mining in California and farming in Oregon, working always diligently and intelligently until success and prosperity crowned his old age. He was one of the sturdy, reliable and upright sons of Germany whose careers have reflected credit upon the sections in which they settled and his death, which occurred on June 19, 1910, brought to a close a career which was in all its aspects upright, straightforward and honorable.

Mr. Kronenberg was born in Germany on the twenty-third of January, 1826, and came to America in 1837, landing in Baltimore, where he served as an apprentice to a shoemaker for some time. In 1849 he went to California, making the journey around the Horn and going to the gold fields, where he staked several claims. He was comparatively successful, acquiring during his period of residence nearly two thousand dollars. In 1859 he came to Oregon and took up a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres, to which he later added more than two hundred acres of school land on Hall's creek, near Arago. The property was undeveloped and most of it was covered with heavy timber. Mr. Kronenberg was obliged to fell the trees before he could begin the work of development and improvement, which, however, resulted in a short time in making his farm one of the most attractive and ably managed agricultural enterprises in the section. During this time he was identified with much of the upbuilding and progress of this section of the state and was well known for his ready cooperation in movements looking toward the public good. He lived upon his holdings until 1888, when he disposed of all the land which he had accumulated and moved to Coquille, where he purchased a hardware business which was already established and managed it successfully until his building was destroyed by a fire which completely demolished the entire business section of the town. Mr. Kronenberg at this time lost a twelve thousand dollar stock upon which he had no insurance. He, however, did not allow his misfortune to discourage him in any way and immediately rebuilt his enterprise and at the end of two years had one of the most prosperous and flourishing hardware establishments in Coos county. He eventually sold out his interests and retired, making his home in Coquille until his death on June 19, 1910. There was hardly a line of legitimate activity in which Mr. Kronenberg was not active and prominent. He was extensively interested in the Randolph Lumber Company at Parkersburg and also in the Bandon Tug Company, which operated on the Coquille river between Bandon and Coquille, handling the large ships which were constantly coming into Bandon harbor to load for their journeys into foreign ports.

On March 6, 1856, Mr. Kronenberg was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Buechler, a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and a daughter of Nicholas and Rachel (Horn) Buechler. Mrs. Kronenberg came to the Pacific coast in 1856 and was united in marriage with our subject in San Francisco on March 6 of that year. She came to Coos county with her husband and assisted him greatly in his early farming career. In 1906 they completed the fiftieth year of their married life, celebrating on this occasion the first golden wedding anniversary ever held in Coos county within the memory of the oldest inhabitants. Their many friends thronged to their home to tender their good wishes upon this occasion and were heartily welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Kronenberg, who during the forty years of their residence in this section have gained widespread respect and esteem. Our subject and his wife became the parents of five children, Emma, the eldest, is the wife of James Blakeley, of Lodi, California, and they have two sons, John and Frank. John, the second in order of birth is a banker and capitalist of Bandon, Oregon. He is married and has two sons, John and George. Fred is connected with the Parker Boiler Company of Denver, Colorado. He is married and has a son, James. Rachel is the wife of Alfred Marsh, a farmer of Port Orford, Oregon, and they have nine children, Mary, John, Louis, Donald, Dorothy, Frederick, Nicholas, Beatrice and Kate. Ida, who completes the family is the wife of Dr. W. C. Owen an oculist of St. Louis, Missouri.

In his political affiliations Mr. Kronenberg was a consistent democrat. He was ever intelligently and actively interested in the progress and growth of the section to which he came as a pioneer. The only public office he held was that of road supervisor, although he was constantly called upon by his friends and acquaintances to accept political positions. He, however, preferred to give his time and attention to the carrying on of his important private enterprise and did his public duty by making his private life useful and valuable. His parents were Roman Catholics but he did not affiliate with any church, believing in the doctrine of universal kindness and good-will. He belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a personal friend of the first member of the Baltimore branch of that organization. He was successful in the truest sense of the word, a man of unusually broad-minded and intelligent views, tolerant and with wide experience, never mercenary or grasping, believing in something greater in importance than material wealth, who in the course of a long life spent simply and unostentatiously was a factor for good in almost every phase of community development. His death was a distinct loss to the city of Coquille and to Coos county, since it deprived business circles of a successful, upright and able man, who during the course of his fifty years' residence gave his energies and attention entirely to lasting and worthy things.

CAPTAIN JESSE L. ROY, living about a mile above Coquille on the Coquille river, is a veteran of both the Mexican and Civil wars and is one of the few survivors of that earlier struggle whereby the interests of the country were maintained. He was born in Dixon county, Tennessee, August 28, 1830, a son of Abel and Sarah Roy, both of whom were natives of the central section of Tennessee, where they lived until 1840, when they sold that property and removed to Arkansas. There the father purchased land and also secured a claim from the government. Throughout his remaining days he followed farming, passing away at the advanced age of eighty-four years. He had long survived his wife, who died in 1845. In their family were but two children, the younger being Elizabeth, who is the widow of James Burk and resides in Arkansas. Following the death of his first wife the father married again and by that union there were eight daughters, all of whom have passed away with the exception of Mrs. Emily Turner of Arkansas.

Captain Roy was a lad of ten years when he accompanied his parents on their removal from Tennessee to Arkansas and in the schools of the latter state he acquired his education. At twenty years of age he left the parental home and began farming on his own account. In the meantime he had served for ten months as a soldier in the Mexican war, enlisting when but eighteen years of age. He continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits in Arkansas from 1850 until 1862, when he responded to the call of the Confederacy and enlisted as a member of Company H, of the Arkansas Infantry. Four months later he was promoted to the rank of captain following the death of Captain Byers, who was killed in action. With that rank Captain Roy served until the close of hostilities and although he was often in the thickest of the fight, leading his troops in the forefront of battle, he was never wounded or sustained an injury.

When the war was brought to a close Captain Roy returned to his farm in Arkansas and in connection with its cultivation he also operated a saw and grist mill until he came to the west in 1875, in which year he settled in Coos county, within the borders of which he has since made his home. His first purchase of land made him owner of fourteen acres, to which he has since added until he now has fifty-four acres a mile and a half above Coquille, bordering the river. He was actively engaged in the development and improvement of this place until 1906, when he retired from farming but still occupies his home farm. He also owns residence property in Coquille and real estate in Bandon.

In 1849 Captain Roy was married to Miss Emily Courtney, who was born in Arkansas in 1828. They became parents of five children, of whom two are living: Henry C., of Arkansas; and James B., living in Santa Rosa, California. The wife and mother passed away in California in 1874 and in 1875 Captain Roy wedded Delia A. Brown, who was born in Arkansas, September 10, 1841, a daughter of Miles A. and Mary (Myers) Brown, the former a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Indiana. They were married in Arkansas and some years thereafter removed to North Carolina. Later they were residents of Indiana and again of Arkansas, where the father died at the age of forty-five years, while the mother passed away in Missouri. They were the parents of eight children but only two are living: Mrs. Roy; and Mrs. Mary A. Garner, of Missouri. Captain and Mrs. Roy have two daughters: Mary E., who was born in 1876 and is the wife of George S. Robison of the Coquille valley; and Hulda O., who was born in 1881 and is the wife of Arthur Ellingson, a hardware merchant of Coquille. Captain Roy and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He belongs also to the Masonic lodge, chapter and the Eastern Star and has filled many of the offices in those organizations. Politically he is a democrat but the honors and emoluments of office have no attraction for him, as he has always preferred to do his public duty as a private citizen. He is now one of the venerable residents of Coos county, having reached the age of eighty-two years, and he looks back over a life in which have been many interesting and varied incidents, including service in two of the great wars of the country.

HARRY S. BRAWN is the well known and efficient cashier and business manager of the Yoncalla State Bank. He was born in Minnesota on December 28, 1886, and is a son of Summer and Lillis J. (Brace) Brawn, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Minnesota. The parents were married in Minnesota and immediately afterward made their home in Murray county, that state, where the father was successfully engaged in farming for twenty consecutive years. In 1900 he came with his family to Oregon and settled in Douglas county where he purchased a ranch of five hundred acres located two miles east of Yoncalla. On that property he has since lived and is today engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He is an adherent of the republican party.

Harry S. Brawn was reared at home, acquired his early education in the public schools and was for some time a student in the high school at Eugene. While in the midst of his high-school course he suffered an attack of typhoid fever which rendered him unable to continue his studies. In 1907 he accepted a clerkship in the Yoncalla State Bank and one year later was promoted to the office of cashier of that institution. At the time he received his appointment as cashier he was twenty-two years of age and probably the youngest bank cashier in Oregon.

Harry S. Brawn was united in marriage March 9, 1912, to Miss Helen G. Burt, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burt who are prominent residents of Yoncalla. Mr. Brawn is affiliated with the republican party and is a member of Sunset Lodge, No. 144, A. F. & A. M., Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F. and the Modern Brotherhood of America. He is in the midst of his active business career. By strict attention to business and integrity he has built up a reputation and is today a desirable and influential citizen of Douglas county.

T. S. EVERNDEN. Two hundred and eighty acres of land located on Rock creek, Coos county, Oregon, and almost entirely devoted to stock-raising in its specialized branches engages the attention of T. S. Evernden, one of the prominent and successful agriculturists of this section. He is a native of New York state where his birth occurred on November 11, 1851, and is a son of Thomas and Elizabeth J. (Turner) Evernden, natives of London, Kent county, England. They were married in their native country and came to America in 1847, settling in Rochester, New York, where they remained for five years. They spent the next seven years in Lafayette, Indiana. Hence they moved to Ashby's Mills in the same state where they maintained their residence for a short time. Later they removed to Victoria, Missouri, where they lived for a number of years. Thomas Evernden left this city to establish his residence in Gallatin, Missouri, and here he died in 1865. His wife survived him until 1872 in which year her death occurred. They were the parents of eight children: Henry, who is a resident of Missouri; T. S., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Westly Lee of Winston, Missouri; W. F., who resides in Canada; Alton A., a railroad conductor with headquarters at Memphis, Tennessee; and George, Emma and Alice, all of whom are deceased.

T. S. Evernden received his early education in the public schools of Indiana and began active life for himself at the age of seventeen. He worked at various occupations until his marriage in 1873 in which year he began farming on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres to which he had previously proved title and which he has occupied since that time. His original holdings now form only a part of his extensive farm. He has added to his property at various intervals and now owns two hundred and eight acres comprising one of the finest and most productive ranches on Rock creek. He makes a specialty of stock-raising and is known as an expert judge of horses and cattle and as a man eminently successful in this line of activity.

On August 27, 1873, Mr. Evernden was united in marriage to Miss Susan J. Appleton, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of James and Susan Appleton, who came to this state at an early date and were married here. They lived for some time in the Willamette valley and were also residents of Jackson county and Canyon City, Oregon. Mrs. Evernden's father died at Grants Pass, Josephine county, and his widow is now residing at Ten Mile. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are still living: J. W., who is a farmer in Coos county; S. E., of Bandon, Oregon; Malissa, now Mrs. William Coats of Ten Mile, Oregon; Harriett, who married Mr. Welch, of Washington; and Emma, who resides in Aberdeen, Washington. Mrs. Evernden died on March 26, 1910, and is buried at Enchanted Prairie, Oregon. She and her husband were the parents of ten children: James T., who is married and lives near his father's homestead; Ernie E., who is also wedded and resides three miles from the home farm; Fred, who makes his home in Coquille city; Charley, who is married and resides in the same place; Alice and Zoe, twins, the former the wife of L. M. Aasen of Argo, Oregon, and the latter the wife of S. S. Shields of Bandon, Oregon; Lessie L. and Jesse, also twins, the former of whom lives at home and the latter of whom is now dead; and Susie D. and Joseph L., both of whom reside at home. All the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Evernden received their education in the public schools of Coos county. They all affiliate with the Christian church which is the religion of their parents.

In his political convictions Mr. Evernden is a republican and has served as special road-master with ability and energy for two years. His record of twenty years of service as supervisor is an evidence of the quality of the work which he does as a public servant. His activities in this line are distinguished by the same thoroughness of system and progressive ideas which marked his farm life and which make his agricultural career as successful and prosperous as his political service is distinguished and efficient.

WILLIAM R. COLEMAN has served for three terms as county clerk of Jackson county, his reelection being unmistakable evidence of his ability, fidelity and the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens. He makes his home in Jacksonville and is a native of Jackson county, his birth having there occurred December 31, 1870. His parents were Matthew H. and Sabra A. (Goddard) Coleman, natives of Ohio and Missouri respectively. The father, who was born February 19, 1826, came to Jackson county, Oregon, in October, 1853, thus casting his lot with the early pioneer settlers. He afterward devoted his attention to farming and mining and lived in this locality to the time of his death, which occurred on June 28, 1908. His wife, who was born August 23, 1839, lives in Talent, Jackson county. In the family were seven children, of whom five yet survive: Elmer G., a merchant of Phoenix; Marcia, the wife of John R. Robinson, of Talent; William R.; James B., a mail carrier living in Talent; and Edith, the wife of Edward Cochran, a farmer of Talent. Those who have passed away are Edgar Earl and Arthur R.

William R. Coleman has spent his entire life in Jackson county. He acquired a common-school education, and after putting aside his text-books became connected with farm operation, to which he devoted his time and energies until about eleven years ago. He then left the plow to engage in commercial pursuits, opening a general store in Phoenix, where he also served as postmaster for five years. He was at that time called from private life to public office, being elected county clerk in June, 1906. He was installed in the position on July 6th of that year, and reelection has continued him in the office for three terms. He has discharged his duties promptly and systematically and his work has reflected credit upon himself and been highly satisfactory to his constituents. He is republican in his political views and was the first candidate who ever filed a petition under the primary law of Oregon.

On the 20th of January, 1891, Mr. Coleman was united in marriage to Mrs. Mattie A. Klippel, a daughter of Louis and Martha (Culver) Sisley, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Coleman is a native of Baker county, Oregon, and by this marriage has become the mother of three sons: Frank L., who was born September 23, 1893; Elbert, who was born April 2, 1900; and Russel, born April 26, 1902. Mr. Coleman is a charter member of Phoenix Camp, No. 438, Woodmen of the World, and is also a member of Oak Circle, No. 241, Women of Woodcraft. He likewise belongs to the Odd Fellows lodge at Medford and Rogue River Encampment, and to the Elks Lodge, No. 944. His social qualities render him popular, while his fidelity to duty commands the respect and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact. He is justly numbered among the progressive and public-spirited citizens of his native county.

DANIEL R. LEWIS. The agricultural career of Daniel R. Lewis dates back to the days of government preemption claims in the state of Oregon, and he has been identified with the modern and progressive features of farming since the early days of development in Coos county. He operates a flourishing property comprising one hundred and five acres of the most fertile and productive land in the district and has brought his holdings, through intelligent and practical activity, to a high state of cultivation. His farm is located on the north fork of the Coquille river and is one of the attractive features of the landscape there. Mr. Lewis was born in Carter county, Tennessee, in 1862, and is a son of William and Mary (Lewis) Lewis, the former a native of Wilkes county, North Carolina, and the latter of Tennessee. The father left his native state, went to the county where his son was born, at an early date, and was long identified with the development of that section. He had three children: Ida, who married T. R. Billings, farming on the south fork of the Coquille river, by whom she has one child, Permelia Irene; Joseph, who is living in Carter county, Tennessee; and Daniel R., of this review.

Daniel R. Lewis was reared upon the home farm and remained with his parents until his marriage, when he was twenty-one years of age. His education was acquired in the district schools of his native state. He followed the carpenters' trade for some years in Tennessee but gave it up in 1885, when he settled in Coos county, where he took up a government preemption claim and after cultivating and developing it sold his holdings at a profit and purchased the farm which he now owns. It is one of the model properties in the vicinity of Gravel Ford and comprises one hundred and five fertile acres highly improved and cultivated. Its condition is entirely due to the intelligent labor which Mr. Lewis has spent upon it. He has cleared almost his entire tract of land and has invested his money judiciously in farm machinery and equipment for his barns and outbuildings. His agricultural career in Coos county dates back to the time when there were no public roads and no conveniences for bringing provisions into the country districts. He is a practical and judicious farmer well versed in the breeding of live stock, the selection of seed and the rotation of crops. He plants his fields to the grains and vegetables best suited to the soil and climate and his activities have been productive because they are always practical. In addition to general agriculture Mr. Lewis specializes in dairying, raising his own jersey cattle for this purpose. He is identified on a small scale with the business of breeding thoroughbred horses.

Daniel R. Lewis has been married twice. In March, 1883, he wedded Miss Carrie C. Sumerlin, a native of North Carolina whose youthful days were spent in Tennessee. She was a daughter of John and Eliza (Lipps) Sumerlin, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of North Carolina. Mr. Sumerlin has passed away. His wife is yet living and makes her home in Myrtle Point. They had the following children: Alvin, who resides near Lee, Coos county; Rube, minister of the United Brethren church in Vancouver, Washington; Carrie C., the wife of our subject; Mike P., of Coos county, Oregon; Thomas, a resident of the same section; Cordie E., the wife of Ed. Llewellyn, of Myrtle Point; Sophronia, the wife of Walter Lawhorn, of McKinley, Oregon; John Cleveland, of Myrtle Point; Lester Lee, who is now in Alaska but whose home is in Myrtle Point; Henry Grady, a resident of Myrtle Point; and two children who are deceased. By Mr. Lewis' first marriage he became the father of three children: Bessie, the wife of Robert Goetz, a prominent attorney and principal of the high school in Milwaukie, Oregon, by whom she has one child, Robert H.; Butler Rayburn, a dairyman of Coos county, who is married and has two children, Walter and Ellis; and Ola C., who died at the age of eight years. All of Mr. Lewis' children were educated in the district schools of Coos county and attended Plymouth College near Corvallis. The son, Butler R., took a commercial course in that institution, while the daughter Bessie was graduated from a special department in music. Mr. Lewis' first wife passed away on December 12, 1907, and on November 26, 1910, he was again married, his second union being with Miss Nora B. Fletcher, a native of Tennessee, by whom he has one child, Oveda.

Daniel R. Lewis is a member of the United Brethren church and is an active worker in religious circles. In his political convictions he is republican and while he has never sought public office he served with ability and energy for seven years as clerk of the school board. His political life has been useful and worthy and distinguished by those intelligent and broad-minded qualities which mark alike his agricultural career and his private activities.

ORRIN E. BAILEY was born in Illinois in 1862 and is the son of Ira and Jane (Gearing) Bailey, both of whom were natives of Missouri and in that state were engaged in the pursuit of general farming until they removed to Illinois in 1850. To them six children were born: Harry, an editor and also a breeder of fine poultry at West Point, Mississippi; William and Ira, both of whom are residents of Parsons, Kansas; Jane and Agatha, both deceased; and Orrin E., of this review.

The last named was reared at home and educated in the common schools of Illinois. In 1893 he removed to this state and made his first settlement in Portland, where he remained but a short time and afterward went to British Columbia and there continued to reside for six years when he removed to St. Helen in 1904, at which place he was engaged as a master carpenter for a quarry company by whom he was employed for some time and later removed to St. Johns in this state, where he was engaged in work for one year, after which he removed to Florence in 1910. Upon reaching the city of Florence he engaged at once in the contracting and building business, during which time he purchased two valuable residence lots in that city, upon which he later built his beautiful and comfortable home.

In 1899 Mr. Bailey was united in marriage to Mrs. Marilla R. (Washburn) Woodworth, the widow of Andrew J. Woodworth, who was a contractor and builder of Portland. Her parents, Alford M. and Mary J. (Farrington) Washburn, were natives of New York and came of English parentage. In 1852 they crossed the plains from Illinois, settling in Portland, Oregon, on October 26 of that year. They remained, however, in that city but a short time and later removed to Olympia, Washington, where they spent their remaining days. To Mr. and Mrs. Washburn thirteen children were born, two of whom only are living: Brizilla of Alaska; and Mrs. Marilla R. Bailey. Before her marriage to Andrew J. Woodworth Mrs. Bailey had been married to Mr. Black and of this union were born ten children, as follows: Amanda J., the wife of Julius Fowl, of St. Johns, Oregon; Cilica, who is the wife of Thomas Mickle and resides in Washington; Elizabeth, who is the widow of Charles Mager and makes her home in Portland; Joseph and Alfred, both of whom are deceased; Carrie R., the wife of Harry Henderson, of St. Johns, Oregon; Isabelle M., the wife of W. F. Slaughter, of Portland, this state; Walter, who is a resident of Carson, Washington; John E., living in St. Helen, Oregon; and Charles, who has passed away.

Mr. Bailey is affiliated with the democratic party but has never been a seeker of political preferment in any sense. He is a member of St. Helens Lodge No. 117 Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Mrs. Bailey is a member of the Rebekahs, belonging to Laurelwood Lodge, St. Johns, this state. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Bailey is a useful and highly respected citizen of his adopted city and is identified with many of the business enterprises and social and educational organizations of the community in which he resides. He is regarded among all his acquaintances as a man of circumspect life, distinguished for his integrity in all business transactions and for his loyalty to every good cause seeking the betterment of the people of his state and county.

ELVARUS CULVER is improving and cultivating four hundred and twenty acres of land located on Roek creek near Bridge, Coos county, Oregon, and has gained recognition as a successful and practical farmer. He was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, on February 6, 1829, and is a son of Joseph Culver who lived in that section for many years before he moved to Ohio. Upon the death of his wife in that state he moved to Pennsylvania where he passed away. He was the father of six children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the only one now living.

Elvarus Culver received his education in the public schools of Ohio and early in his life learned the trade of millwright which he has never entirely abandoned. He followed it as a steady occupation for many years and was successful in all parts of the United States. He built a large mill in Arkansas and one of equal capacity in Saron, Texas. Fifty or sixty mills in different sections of the United States are due to his enterprise and labor and in this branch of activity he gained recognition as an expert workman. He has owned sawmills in various states and for some time operated rafts on the upper Mississippi river. In this section of the country he also followed the occupation of a pilot and was successful in this field of endeavor until he came to Oregon in 1899. He bought the land which he now owns on Rock creek near Bridge in Coos county. His holdings comprise four hundred and twenty acres of the finest land in the section and his operations are carried on along practical and efficient lines. He retains his identification with his old industry by operating in connection with his sons, a large sawmill upon his premises and this forms a valuable addition to his income.

Mr. Culver has been twice married. His first union occurred in Iowa where he wedded Miss Rubie Blaesdell. They became the parents of six children: Charles, who lives in Wisconsin; William and Warren, who are now deceased; Mahetable, the wife of William Lower of South Dakota; Nellie B., who married J. E. Skinner of Arkansas; and Mabel, who is the wife of O. Rogers of Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Mr. Culver's first wife died in Missouri and some time later he was again married. His second union was with Miss Lucy E. Monzingo, who was born in South Carolina, December 15, 1851, and is a daughter of Kinchen and Mary A. Monzingo, both natives of that state. In 1858 they moved to Louisiana where the father operated a farm for about twenty-seven years until his death in 1884. His wife survived him until 1890 and died in Texas whither she had moved in 1885. Mr. and Mrs. Monzingo were the parents of twelve children, only two of whom, Lucy, the wife of our subject and John L. of Arizona, are surviving. The present Mrs. Culver received her education in the public schools of Louisiana and came to Oregon upon her marriage. She and her husband are the parents of three sons: James E., born June 16, 1887; Clarence, born September 22, 1889; and Dwight E., whose birth occurred August 2, 1892. All three boys are still living at home.

In his political views Mr. Culver is a consistent republican and has served his fellow citizens as assessor in Iowa and Wisconsin. He affiliates with the Methodist church and his wife is a Baptist. His work along agricultural lines in Coos county based as it is on practical experience in the details of planting, cultivating and harvesting has been productive of gratifying results and places him among the representative citizens of a community in which farming is the principal and most flourishing industry.

WILLIAM J. J. SCOTT. On the long list of Oregon's honored pioneers appears the name of William J. J. Scott, who was a public-spirited and enterprising citizen and did much for the development and upbuilding of the Willamette valley. He was born in Morgan county, Illinois, October 15, 1824, his father being Levi Scott who married Miss Ennis and reared a large family of whom none are now living. Levi Scott made his way westward in pioneer times and became acquainted with all the different phases of frontier life. He took up a donation land claim in Douglas county and the town of Scottsburg has been built on the old homestead. He served as captain of a company in the Rogue River war and thus became acquainted with all the phases of Indian hostility. William J. J. Scott shared, too, in the hardships and difficulties of founding a home in the far west and his work was at all time of a progressive character that contributed to the public improvement as well as to individual success.

In 1850 Mr. Scott was married in Clackamas county, Oregon, to Miss Surena J. Robinson, who was born in Shelby county, Ohio, December 5, 1828, a daughter of William and Susanna (Cannon) Robinson who were natives of Kentucky and Pennsylvania, respectively. In their family were ten children: Mary A., who married G. W. Cannon; James C.; Elizabeth R., who was the wife of Asbury Barbur; Cecilia; Nancy, the wife of James Butler; Richard C., who married Ann Petree; Mrs. Scott; Clarinda, who was the wife of John Scott; William Platt; and Matilda S., who married Washington Riggs, and since his death has become the wife of James Haas, of Cloride, Arizona. By her first marriage she had three children: John, Roy and Ann, the last named the wife of George Hubbard of Polk county. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Scott were born ten children: Eliza S., the wife of David Trimble, of Condon, Oregon; Mary A., the widow of William C. Brown of Washington; Matilda J., the wife of R. H. Landers, of Creswell, Oregon, whose people crossed the plains to this state in 1847; William W. and John R., both residents of Creswell; Rose E., the wife of D. S. Brown, of Condon, Oregon; Dora C., the wife of C. C. Hazelton, of Cottage Grove; Viola S., who is living with her mother in Creswell; Ripley F., who is also a resident of that place, and Lillie M., the wife of Robert Dersham, likewise of Creswell. All of the children were given good educational privileges, attending high school and college.

In the family is a most interesting photographic group of Mrs. Surena Scott and representatives of four generations: her daughter, Mrs. D. B. Trimble, the latter's daughter, Mrs. L. B. Tuel, also her daughter, Mrs. H. Nash, and Raymond W. Nash, who is a great-great-grandson of Mrs. Scott. Mrs. Scott is a remarkably well preserved woman, now in the eighty-fourth year of her age. When eighty-one years of age she personally prepared a birthday dinner for her family of ten children, all of whom are living. The Creswell Chronicle said of her, "She has friends innumerable, all of whom hold her in highest esteem and look upon her as one who has fulfilled in every respect the highest type of American pioneer motherhood."

The death of Mr. Scott occurred in 1896. He was a public-spirited man and was instrumental in securing the location of the State University, at Eugene. When the first building of that institution was completed funds were lacking with which to pay for its construction. The building was to be sold to satisfy a labor lien when Mr. Scott assumed the indebtedness, saving the building from sale. He in turn was repaid by the board of directors in later years. He was a school director for many years and always took a most active and helpful interest in educational work. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which Mrs. Scott still holds membership. He was among the most highly esteemed of the worthy pioneer settlers of his district and did much to build up the Willamette valley which was a great wilderness at the time of his arrival. His life was ever characterized by progress and improvement and while he won a fair measure of success he left to his family the more priceless heritage of an untarnished name.

CHARLES AGER, a farmer and stockman of Klamath county, owns and operates a ranch of one hundred and sixty-one acres seven miles south of Klamath Falls. His birth occurred on a farm two miles south of Ager, Siskiyou county, California, on the 7th of October, 1865, his parents being Jerome Bonaparte and Lucy Jane (Axtell) Ager. The father was born near Alexandria Bay, on the St. Lawrence river, in New York, April 30, 1829, and remained in the Empire state until fourteen years of age, when he made his way to Wisconsin. He crossed the plains to the west on three different occasions—in 1851, 1852, and 1853. In 1858, at Yreka, California, he married Miss Lucy Jane Axtell, a native of Wisconsin, who came west with her parents via the Isthmus of Panama, riding a mule across the Isthmus. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ager spent the entire period of their married life in Siskiyou county, California, the former devoting his attention to farming and stock-raising interests throughout the greater part of his active business career. On coming to this part of the country Mr. Ager first settled in Oregon City and later began raising stock in the Umpqua valley, while subsequently he followed mining on the Rogue river. He homesteaded and preempted land and at the time of his demise owned fourteen hundred and thirty-six acres in the vicinity of Ager, which station was named in his honor when the Southern Pacific railroad was built through. In the early days he teamed and freighted from Redding, California, to Yreka, that state, being engaged in teaming in Siskiyou and Klamath counties during the Modoc Indian war. His demise occurred at Ager, California, on the 14th of November, 1900, while his wife passed away at that place on the 28th of January, 1911, when sixty-eight years of age. They and their children always enjoyed excellent health, and a physician was called into the home for the first time when Jerome B. Ager died. The eleven children of the family were as follows: Judson, who is a resident of Ager, California; Adelia, the wife of William Terwilliger, of Ager; Charles, of this review; Alice, who is the wife of Frank Parriott and resides in southern California; George of Klamath county, Oregon, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work; Mrs. Mittie Twilliger, who is deceased; Fannie, the wife of Frank Cornelius, of Ashland, Oregon; Mark B., a resident of Ager, California; Kate, the wife of Claude Freeman of California;

Jerome B., Jr., who makes his home at Ager, California; and Lucy Jane, the wife of Louis Van Zandt, of Ager.

Charles Ager remained under the parental roof until five years ago, being engaged as a rancher through California, Oregon and Nevada. In 1907 he settled on his present ranch of one hundred and sixty-one acres in the Klamath basin and has one hundred and twenty acres of land under cultivation, seventy-two acres thereof being under the government ditch. He devotes his time and energies to the cultivation of cereals and also raises some stock, meeting with success in both branches of his business.

On the 7th of February, 1912, Mr. Ager was united in marriage to Miss Augusta Kurt, a native of Germany. The salient characteristics of his manhood are such as have brought him the warm regard of those with whom he has been associated.

WADE LEE RAY, farmer, dairyman and expert mechanic, is operating a tract of land located within one mile of Myrtle Point, Oregon, and is adding to the agricultural resources of that locality one hundred and twenty-four and one-half acres of land which is in an improved and well developed condition. He was born in Cass county, Nebraska, March 13, 1866, and is a son of Wade Hampton and Mary E. (Clinkenbeard) Ray, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. Mr. Ray's parents were married in Missouri and made that state their home for a number of years before they removed to Nebraska where they were among the early settlers. The father helped haul the lumber used in the building of the first house ever erected in Lincoln and was one of the active forces in the pioneer development of that city. He homesteaded land in Cass county and farmed until 1879. He then removed to Decatur county, Kansas, and took up land in that section, becoming prosperous and well known as a farmer. He remained there until 1894 and after some years spent in Nebraska came to Coos county in 1901. Here he made his home with his son, the subject of this sketch, until his death on November 7, 1908. His wife survived him for nearly two years, dying on the 9th of March, 1910. To them were born twelve children, eight of whom are living: Sam, who resides in Colorado; John, of Coos county; Mollie, the widow of James H. Hirst, of Norton county, Kansas; Frank, of Coos county; Richard, who makes his home in Norton county, Kansas; Calvin, of Coos county; Sarah, the widow of E. F. Melton, of Weiser, Idaho; and Wade Lee, our subject.

Wade Lee Ray was educated in the public schools of Elmwood, Nebraska, and began active life for himself when he was fifteen years of age. Even at that early period he had become familiar with the details of agriculture by assisting his father in the work of the farm. He worked as a laborer for three years and gained valuable and necessary experience in that way. At the end of that time he commenced farming for himself in Nebraska meeting with success. He had mechanical talent. Thus it was that he operated machinery in connection with farming and was at one time in the employ of the Avery Manufacturing Company as an expert mechanic. In 1901 he came to Coos county, Oregon, where he bought one hundred and twenty-four and one-half acres of land located a mile below Myrtle Point. He has since lived upon that property and been successful in the cultivation of its soil. His farm comprises a large tract of rich and productive land, well equipped with granaries and other buildings, fenced and improved in every way, and its appearance manifests his progressive spirit and the energy which he always employs. He makes a specialty of dairying and keeps a large herd of cows for that purpose. This branch of his enterprise receives his personal supervision and attention. He keeps his dairy sanitary by modern methods, and his products gain a ready sale in the Oregon markets.

On January 1, 1890, Mr. Ray was united in marriage to Miss Nellie M. King, who was born in Nebraska on the 11th of September, 1874. She is a daughter of T. M. and Lydia (Dibble) King, natives of Iowa. Her parents were married in Nebraska and the mother died in that state. Mrs. Ray's father is living in Johnson county, where he is numbered among the earliest pioneers. He bought land in that section at an early date, farmed for several years and was active in politics, serving two or three terms as sheriff. He engaged in stock-raising here and was well known as a representative and enterprising citizen. He had three children, the eldest of whom died in infancy. The others are: Nellie, the wife of our subject; and Mrs. Lydia Grace Williams, of Nebraska. Mrs. Ray received her education in Talmage, Nebraska, and remained with her parents until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Ray have seven children: Maurice, born in 1892, who lives at home; John S., born in August, 1893, also at home; Floyd, who died in infancy; Nona May, whose birth occurred in 1893; Calvin, born in 1900; Ora, born in 1904; and Lois Grace, whose birth occurred in 1911.

In politics Wade Lee Ray is independent. He votes for the men and measures which he considers best adapted to promote the welfare of his section, and has never sought public office. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Myrtle Point, Oregon, and is active in the affairs of that organization. He has met with success which is constantly increasing and his present prosperity is well merited for it has come to him through his own well directed labors and close application.

ARTHUR C. LEWIS, general manager of the Farmers Implement and Supply House of Klamath Falls, which was incorporated in February, 1906, was born in Bedford, Taylor county, Iowa, September 5, 1871, and is a son of Leonard A. and Mary A. (Bruner) Lewis, the former a native of Indianapolis, Indiana, and the latter of Iowa. The father was a pioneer of Taylor county and was married in Bedford. In the spring of 1873, however, he left that locality and removed westward to Greenwood, Custer county, Colorado, where he lived for twelve years. He came to Klamath county, Oregon, in January, 1886, and his last days were passed in Eureka Springs, Arkansas, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. He had followed farming and stock-raising during the greater part of his life and was a man worthy of all respect. His wife passed away in Klamath Falls. In their family were seven children, of whom two died in infancy, the others being: Arthur C., of this review; Nellie F., the wife of James B. Moore, of Olene, Klamath county; Charles C., L. Alva and C. Leon, all of whom are residents of Klamath Falls.

Arthur C. Lewis resided upon the home farm with his parents until he reached the age of twenty years. He was only in his second year when the removal was made to Colorado and was fourteen years of age at the time of the arrival in Oregon. Anxious to acquire an education that would fit him for more than the most humdrum duties of life, he entered the State Agricultural College at Corvallis. At that time he had but thirty-eight dollars but he worked his way through college, spending four years as a student in that institution, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering in the class of 1895. He then returned to Klamath Falls and spent two years in the cattle business. He next went to Molalla, Oregon, where he remained for two and a half years, there raising teasels for woolen mills. He employed from thirty to one hundred and twenty-five men in the production of teasels but afterward returned to Klamath Falls and again began raising cattle, continuing in the live-stock industry for three years. He next entered the butchering business in connection with his cattle-raising, carrying on operations along that line until September, 1904. Then, in connection with A. W. Peil, he bought a small blacksmith shop, which they conducted for seventeen months, this leading eventually to the development and incorporation of the business in 1906, now conducted under the name of the Farmers Implement and Supply House. Mr. Lewis erected his present building, which is a two-story structure, ninety by one hundred and twenty feet, at the corner of Sixth street and Klamath avenue. Here he carries on general blacksmithing and woodworking and handles all kinds of farm implements, together with harness and shelf hardware. The business has grown rapidly, as is indicated by the fact that in 1905 its returns were thirty-eight hundred dollars and in 1911 one hundred and thirty thousand dollars. He employs on an average of from ten to twenty-two men at an average wage of four dollars per day. The business is now one of the most important commercial industries of this section, meeting a want in the development of this district by furnishing all needed supplies to those who are actively engaged in tilling the soil and promoting the work of improvement here.

In 1899 Mr. Lewis was united in marriage to Miss Iva M. Sawtell whom he met while both were students at the Oregon Agricultural College. She is a native of Molalla, Oregon, and a daughter of A. J. and Eliza E. Sawtell. The four children of this marriage are Rollin O. A., R. Ollis, Marian A. and Neta R. The family residence stands in the midst of six acres of ground and is one of the most attractive homes in this part of the state. Mr. Lewis found that he had hot water by digging only three feet. He built a hothouse, which is heated by nature, twenty-two by one hundred and thirty-eight feet, and for the past three years has engaged in raising lettuce as a side issue, supplying Klamath Falls. He also produces other vegetables and is fast bringing every inch of his ground under a high state of cultivation. His place is located in the Mills addition and he also has other real-estate interests here.

Mr. Lewis belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also to the Woodmen of the World. His life has been one of unflinching activity, enterprise and hard work, and intelligently directed labor has brought him his success. He now occupies a prominent position among the more capable and successful business men of southern Oregon, his record proving what may be accomplished when determination and energy lead the way. Moreover, the reliability of his business methods commends him to the confidence of all, proving that prosperity and an honored name may be won simultaneously.

HON. HENRY G. HADLEY was one of the early Oregon pioneers who came to the Pacific coast in 1851. He was born in Portland, Maine, June 24, 1815, his parents being Samuel and Margaret (Gibson) Hadley, who were natives of New Hampshire but subsequently settled in Maine. Samuel Hadley followed the practice of medicine as a life work. Henry G. Hadley remained with his parents until fourteen years of age, when he became self-supporting by peddling Yankee notions during the summer time and returning in the fall of each year for the purpose of attending school. This he continued for seven years, working in the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts. In 1838 he started westward, taking a supply of Connecticut clocks which he sold throughout the state of Michigan. In 1839 he settled near Shelbyville, Illinois, where, forming a partnership, he operated saw and flour mills and a distillery. This business he continued for several years until fire destroyed his plants, when he removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and there engaged in the manufacture and sale of confectionery. He was thus engaged until the California gold excitement of 1849, when, joining the tide of emigration which flowed westward, he crossed the plains to California with ox teams, in a train of fifty wagons. The journey was without notable incidents until the Humboldt river was reached when, in their eagerness to reach California, Mr. Hadley with three or four companions, taking their ponies, set out following a cut-off to the Golden state. The road was long, their food gave out and suffering seemed imminent until they were fortunate in purchasing a quarter of an emigrant ox. Thus enabled to continue their journey they at last reached the Sacramento valley, arriving there in the fall of 1849. They began mining on Feather river, but having no knowledge of such work and as the coyotes were stealing their beef, they were greatly handicapped, especially as their money was gone. They fortunately obtained supplies on credit at a trading post and continued their efforts, but shortly afterward secured employment at eight dollars per day and board, that being a small consideration as provisions were very expensive. They worked twelve days, thus securing valuable experience as well as money with which to settle for the supplies they had bought. They then went to the Tuolumne river where they earned a few hundred dollars, after which Mr. Hadley returned to Sacramento and spent the winter working at his trade of confectioner. In the spring of 1850 he again visited the mines but engaged in trading in the summer, returning in the winter to his home and family in Iowa. As glowing accounts of Oregon's resources continued to reach him he made arrangements in the spring of 1851 to again venture to the far west. He joined a wagon train composed of the families of Aaron Rose, subsequently the founder of Roseburg, Oregon, Arthur Denny and others. All were well equipped with horses and progress was made with comfort, their only mishap occurring in the Snake river mountains when Melville Hadley was shot through the body by Indians. He recovered, however, and lived many years afterward. The company crossed the Cascade mountains by the Barlow route, reaching the Willamette valley, and thence in the fall Mr. Hadley proceeded to Lane county and settled on a government claim on Spencer creek, where he began improvement and farming. He also engaged in rail-splitting, rather a severe experience, and in the spring of 1852 drove his four-horse team to Portland and purchased ten thousand dollars worth of goods, which he began peddling with success through the valley from Portland to Roseburg during the summer. In the fall he began trading in cattle and spent several years in that line of activity, remaining in that locality until 1878, when he moved to Eugene, Oregon, where he lived retired until his death which occurred April 2, 1906. His wife died July 12, 1904. At the time of his death he owned two thousand acres of land on Coyote creek known as the Hadley Settlement, where he had built a spacious residence and made other substantial improvements. On this ranch he engaged extensively in the cattle and horse-raising business, residing there until 1889, when he built a cottage in Eugene in order that his wife might be near her only daughter, Mrs. Eakin. Subsequent to that time and prior to his retirement he passed his summers on the ranch and his winters in Eugene. He was married, in Shelbyville, Illinois, in 1840, to Loretta C. Cox, born in Sandusky, Ohio, and to them were born four children: Eliza J., the wife of S. B. Eakin, deceased, of whom further mention is made in this work and who was vice president of the First National Bank of Eugene; Charles; Frank and George, who are operating the homestead farm. Mr. Hadley was the first justice of the peace of Lane county, appointed by the county commissioners in 1852, and held court under an oak tree before a courthouse had been built, the tree having been cut down in the summer of 1911, and in the following year was elected to represent his district in the territorial legislature. Through his efforts the borders of Lane county were extended by the addition of portions of Benton and Lincoln counties. Throughout his career both in public and private life he showed himself to be a gentleman of uprightness, integrity and high purpose and gained the respect and confidence of a large number of friends who greatly regretted his death. He was a member of the Masonic Fraternity.

PINKSTON W. LAIRD lives on a farm situated two and a half miles above Coquille on the Coquille river. He owns there one hundred and four acres of land and in addition to its cultivation is making a specialty of dairying and stock-raising. He was born in Modoc county, California, in 1877, a son of John C. and Janie Laird. The mother was a native of Ireland and the father of the state of New York, but they were married in Modoc county, where they resided until 1879, when they removed to Coos county, Oregon, settling on the Coquille river, about two miles from the town of Coquille. The father there secured a claim of three hundred and twenty acres and also bought other land until he owned six hundred and forty acres, largely covered with timber. In 1889 he sold that property and purchased the farm now owned by his son Pinkston W., comprising one hundred and four acres. There he made his home until February, 1904, when death called him. His widow still survives and is living in Coquille, at the age of sixty-nine years. In their family were six children: Eunice, who is the wife of George T. Schroeder, of Florence, Oregon; Mrs. Annie Von Pegert, of Coquille; James W., living near Coquille; Pinkston W.; Warren C., of Coquille; and George P., whose home is at Bandon, Oregon.

Pinkston W. Laird was educated in the schools of Coos county, supplementing the work of the grammar grades by two years' study in the high school. He remained at home to the time of his marriage and then took charge of his father's place. Two years later he bought this farm of one hundred and four acres, of which seventy-five acres is under cultivation. There are many excellent improvements upon the place and he makes a specialty of dairying and stock-raising, handling thoroughbred stock, both cattle and hogs. He also owns one hundred and sixty acres of timber land on Catching creek, in Coos county, and also five business lots in Richmond, California.

In 1903 Mr. Laird was married to Miss Flora M. McCloskey, a native of Kansas and a daughter of Samuel J. and Mary A. McCloskey, who lived in that state for a number of years and in 1880 came to Oregon, settling at Gravel Ford, Coos county, where they remained until 1894. They then sold their farm and purchased other land at Norway, Oregon, still owning their sixty-three acres. The father conducted a general mercantile store and a creamery to the time of his death in June, 1907. The mother still lives at Norway. In their family were nine children, seven of whom survive, namely: Mrs. Agnes Smith, who makes her home at Gravel Ford; W. T., living at Myrtle Point; Lucinda, who is the widow of Evan Morgan and resides at Bandon; Mrs. Minnie E. Lester, of Angiola, California; Clara, at home; Mrs. Laird; and James H., at home, who operates the creamery. Unto the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Laird three children have been born: Margaret J., who was born in 1905; Vernita M., who was born in September, 1909; and Elda B., October 20, 1911. The mother, Mrs. Laird, acquired her education in the public schools of Coos county and also attended the State Normal at Asbland, Oregon. She taught school for eighteen years previous to her marriage, beginning at the age of sixteen years. The family residence is two and a half miles above Coquille on the Coquille river. Mr. Laird usually votes with the democratic party, yet is liberal in his views. In matters of citizenship, however, he stands for progress and advancement and his cooperation may be counted upon to further many progressive movements.

JOHN N. SUMERLIN, whose demise occurred on the 24th of December, 1911, was for a quarter of a century actively identified with general agricultural pursuits in Coos county and gained an enviable reputation as one of its substantial and esteemed citizens. He was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, a son of Griffin Sumerlin, who was also a native of that state. John N. Sumerlin was reared to manhood in the Old North state and was there married at the age of twenty-two years. About 1857, shortly after the death of his first wife, he left North Carolina and spent a brief period in Tennessee. Returning to his native state, he there cultivated rented land for two years and on the expiration of that period again removed to Tennessee, where he made his home until 1884. In April of that year he came to Oregon, settling on the north fork of the Coquille river, in Coos county, where he purchased one hundred and seven acres of land and continued to reside until within a few years of his demise. By dint of unremitting toil and perseverance he brought the property under a high state of cultivation and improvement, and his labors were eventually rewarded in bounteous harvests. In the fall of 1908 he put aside the active work of the fields, bought property in Myrtle Point and there took up his abode, renting his farm, which is still being leased by his heirs. The last few years of his life were spent in honorable retirement at Myrtle Point, where his death occurred on the 24th of December, 1911. He was a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal church for forty years and his life was in consistent harmony with its teachings. He gave his political allegiance to the democracy but had no lodge or fraternal relations, being a man of domestic tastes and content in the companionship of his wife and children.

Mr. Sumerlin was first married to Miss Martha Richie, a cousin of Mrs. Eliza Sumerlin. By this union there were three children, as follows: Alvin, who is a resident of Lee, Oregon; Elizabeth, deceased; and one who died in infancy. For his second wife Mr. Sumerlin chose Miss Eliza Lipps, a native of Tennessee, by whom he had ten children, namely: Carrie, who is deceased; Reuben G., who is married and is a preacher of the United Brethren church in Vancouver, Washington; Michael P., of Coos county, this state; Thomas G.; Cordia Belle, who was drowned at the age of two years; Cordia Elizabeth, the wife of W. E. Lewellen, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Frona, the wife of Walter Lawhorn, of McKinley, Oregon; John Cleveland, of Myrtle Point; Lester, who resides in British Columbia; and Henry Grady, living at Myrtle Point, Oregon.

On the 22d of November, 1907, Thomas G. Sumerlin was united in marriage to Miss Florence Carter, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Isaac Carter, who came to Douglas county with his parents in the early '50s. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Florence Sumerlin fought in the Indian wars in this state. She is one of a large family of children and by her marriage has become the mother of a daughter, Verla, whose natal day was August 25, 1908. Thomas G. Sumerlin purchased twenty-five acres of the old Alex Jackson place, one mile east of Gravel Ford, and is there engaged in dairying. Mr. Sumerlin is a democrat in politics and takes an active interest in public affairs. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, while fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. A man of enterprise and ability, he has long been numbered among the representative agriculturists and respected citizens of his community.

J. W. LAIRD makes a specialty of dairying on a farm of twenty-two acres near Coquille, keeping ten head of cows for this purpose. He was born in Modoc county, California, August 25, 1873, and is a son of John C. and Jane (Norris) Laird, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of Pinkston W. Laird, a brother of our subject.

The removal of the family to Oregon during the boyhood days of J. W. Laird enabled him to pursue his education in the public schools of Coos county. In his youth he also became familiar with agricultural methods, remaining at home with his parents to the time of his marriage. He afterward served as engineer for the Johnson Lumber Company of Coos county for a period of ten years, and industry and careful expenditure during that decade brought him the capital that enabled him to purchase one hundred and eighty-two acres of land. Of this he has since sold one hundred and sixty acres, leaving him but twenty-two acres. This, however, constitutes a well improved although small farm near Coquille, which he devotes to dairying purposes, keeping ten head of cows. His well appointed dairy and the excellence of its products secures him a liberal patronage.

On the 29th of May, 1896, Mr. Laird was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Baxter, who was born at Santa Cruz, California, May 15, 1872, a daughter of F. M. and Linwood (Watson) Baxter, natives of Iowa and Missouri, respectively. They were married in Oregon, to which state the father came when fifteen years of age, while the mother was brought to the northwest by her parents when three years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Baxter were married in the Willamette valley and afterward removed to California, where they resided for several years. Five children were born to them in that state. In 1879 they came with their family to Oregon settling in Coos county, where the father took up the logging business, which he followed for twenty years. He then retired and has since lived at Coquille. Of the six children of the Baxter family four are still living: Charles E., who is a resident of Coquille; Mrs. Mabel Laird; George E., living at Coquille; and Harry, who makes his home in Bandon. Those deceased are Pearl and Cleveland.

Mr. Laird votes with the democratic party, believing that the principles of its platform contain the best elements of good government. He is a Mason and a Knight of Pythias and both he and his wife are connected with the Eastern Star and the Pythian Sisters. Mr. Laird has filled all of the chairs in the orders mentioned and is loyal to their teachings and purposes, so that his is a well spent life, commanding for him the confidence and good-will of all with whom he comes in contact.

EDWARD WATSON, M. D., was the first physician of North Bend, Oregon, and is today the most prominent practitioner in the town and its surrounding districts. He was born in New York, in August, 1868, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Myre) Watson, natives of Baden, Germany. His father came to America when a young man and settled in Ohio with his family where he lived only a short time before he removed to Des Moines, Iowa. He operated the first tannery in that city and was active in that line of business until his death, at the age of ninety-seven. His wife survived him but a short time, dying at the age of eighty-nine years. They were the parents of fourteen children, three of whom are yet living. Dr. Edward Watson was the only one of his family to leave Des Moines for Oregon.

Dr. Edward Watson received his early education in the public schools of Des Moines and was graduated from the high school of that city. He immediately entered the medical department of Drake University, of Des Moines, Iowa, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of M. D. He practiced medicine in Des Moines for four years and realizing the value of a thorough and efficient education as a foundation for a medical career he entered Belleville hospital in New York where he remained for two years, gaining practical experience in hospital work. He later spent two years in the medical department of the University of Michigan and attended Rush Medical College in Chicago for a like period of time. With this education as a foundation for medical practice he went to Aberdeen, Washington, where he remained for eight years. At the end of that time he moved to North Bend, Oregon, and has practiced his profession in Coos county ever since. He was the first doctor in North Bend and also conducted the first drug store in that town. During the nine years of his activity in Coos county Dr. Watson has accomplished more real good than any other professional man in the district. For many years he was the only physician in North Bend and was obliged to make numerous sacrifices of personal ease and comfort in order to attend the sick and suffering of the newly opened district. His patience and a constant endeavor have gained him the reward of a large and continually growing practice and he is today one of the foremost physicians in Coos county. He has amassed a comfortable fortune which he invests judiciously. He owns various properties in North Bend and a valuable ranch on the north lake front of Ten Mile lake, Coos county, where he makes his summer home. He has faith in the future of the district in which he lives and has always given his cooperation to any movement calculated to promote its growth and welfare. He owns some valuable properties in Aberdeen, Washington, and possesses an extensive timber claim in Louis county in the same state.

Dr. Watson is a democrat and takes an intelligent interest in political affairs, although his duties as a physician prevent his accepting public office. He belongs to Camp No. 264, Modern Woodmen of America in Iowa and is prominent in the affairs of the Owis. He is one of the physicians who believe that professional success can be attained only by constant endeavor and unremitting work. He is the pioneer doctor of North Bend and takes an almost fatherly interest in the health of the community. His professional career has been distinguished by personal sacrifice in the interest of his practice, a practical knowledge of medicine and surgery and a keen appreciation of the responsibilities which his calling entails.

JUDGE JAMES C. FULLERTON, one of the prominent and influential citizens of Douglas county, opened an office for the practice of law at Roseburg in 1885 and is still actively engaged in the work of the profession. He has served as circuit judge from the second judicial district for six years and also represented his county in the state senate during two sessions. His birth occurred in Butler county, Ohio, on the 16th of December, 1848, his parents being John and Jane (Rolf) Fullerton, who were born, reared and married in the Buckeye state. In 1851, in company with James F. Gazley, John Fullerton came to Oregon via the Isthmus route and for several years was associated with Mr. Gazley in mining ventures in California. The two gentlemen located donation claims in Douglas county, Oregon, on the South Umpqua river, Mr. Fullerton remaining in charge of both claims, while Mr. Gazley returned to Ohio for the purpose of bringing his family and also that of his partner to the west. The party left Independence, Missouri, with ox teams in April, 1853, and after a long and tedious journey across the plains arrived in Douglas county, Oregon, in the following September. The train was comparatively small and there were only twenty men in the party but the Indians did not molest them. John Fullerton remained on his donation claim until 1858, at which time he was elected sheriff of Douglas county and took up his abode in Roseburg, serving in his official capacity for five years. On the expiration of that period he returned to his farm and continued to reside thereon until within a few years of his death, spending his remaining days in honorable retirement at Roseburg, where his demise occurred in 1897. He was a valued member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which fraternity he had joined in Ohio sometime in the '40s. In his passing Douglas county lost one of its honored and respected pioneers and one who had aided materially in the work of upbuilding and development here. Mrs. Jane (Rolf) Fullerton was called to her final rest in 1896.

James C. Fullerton was reared under the parental roof and attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education. In 1873 he was made receiver of public moneys in the United States land office in Roseburg, ably serving in that capacity for twelve years. In 1876 he began the study of law and three years later was admitted to the bar. He did not begin the active practice of the profession, however, until after leaving the land office in 1885, in which year he opened an office at Roseburg. In 1889 he was elected to the state senate from Douglas county and during two sessions ably represented the interests of his constituents in that legislative body. In 1892 he was honored by election to the office of circuit judge from the second judicial district, remaining on the bench until 1898. The legal profession demands not only a high order of ability but a rare combination of talent, learning, tact, patience and industry. The successful lawyer and the competent judge must be a man of well balanced intellect, thoroughly familiar with the law and practice, of comprehensive general information, possessed of an analytical mind and a self-control that will enable him to lose his individuality, his personal feelings, his prejudices and his peculiarities of disposition in the dignity, impartiality and equity of the office to which life, property, right and liberty must look for protection. Possessing these qualities, Judge Fullerton justly merited the honor which was conferred upon him by his elevation to the bench. During the past fourteen years he has been continuously engaged in the general practice of law, being accorded an extensive and lucrative clientage.

On the 16th of December, 1874, Judge Fullerton was united in marriage to Miss Clara Bunnell, of Roseburg, her father being Dr. N. P. Bunnell, who came to Oregon from Wisconsin in 1872. Our subject and his wife have two children: Nathan, a prominent druggist of Roseburg; and Kate, the wife of Thomas W. Graham, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

In politics Judge Fullerton is a republican. He has served as a member of the city school board for several years and is now the president of the city council of Roseburg. His fraternal relations are with the following organizations: Laurel Lodge, No. 13, F. & A. M.; Laurel Chapter, R. A. M.; Roseburg Commandery, K. T.; and Philletarian Lodge No. 8 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Since he was brought to Douglas county at the early age of five years Judge Fullerton has remained within its borders and has become well known and highly esteemed as one of its leading and respected citizens.

ALEXANDER MATSON. The rich farming land that lies adjacent to Marshfield affords excellent advantages and opportunities to the progressive agriculturist. Alexander Matson is numbered among those who have made good use of their opportunities here and is now the owner of five hundred and seven acres of rich and productive land, much of which he has brought under a high state of cultivation. In addition to producing crops best adapted to soil and climate he is also engaged in dairying and in all of the farm work has ever had the assistance and cooperation of his family, who well deserve mention as among the representative citizens of Coos county. Mr. Matson was born in Finland, June 17, 1845. His parents both died in that country but one brother came to the new world, where some time later he was accidentally drowned. Another brother is still living in Finland, while the other children of the family have passed away.

Alexander Matson remained a resident of his native land until he reached the age of twenty-seven years. He then determined to try his fortune in the new world, hoping that the opportunities here offered would enable him to rise more quickly in business circles than he could hope to do in the land of his birth. He reached New York on the 29th of September, 1872, and for two years thereafter was a resident of Michigan. He next came to Oregon, settling on Coos bay. He was a ship carpenter, following that occupation from the time he reached the age of seventeen years. On coming to the Pacific Coast country he continued at his trade, being thus engaged until 1909. In the meantime he carefully saved his earnings until he was enabled twenty-three years ago to purchase a farm of five hundred and seven acres, upon which his family have since lived, cultivating the land and converting the place into one of the highly improved farm properties of the district. It is pleasantly and conveniently situated about nine miles from Marshfield and gives every evidence of the supervision of the owner and the care and labor which are bestowed upon the fields. General farming is there conducted and a dairy business is also carried on. Mr. Matson has concentrated his energies upon his farm since abandoning his trade and he employs the most progressive and scientific methods in his dairy and also in the cultivation of his crops.

On February 19, 1878, Mr. Matson was united in marriage to Miss Fredrika Rontjeroc, who was born in Finland and came to America in 1877. Her parents and the other members of the family all died in that country save two of her sisters who crossed the Atlantic, one now living in Astoria and the other in Portland, Oregon, and a brother and sister who are still living in Finland. Mr. and Mrs. Matson have become the parents of eleven children, of whom nine survive. Albert, born September 19, 1878, who is married and lives at Allegany, Oregon; A. August, born in August, 1881, John F., born May 23, 1882, and Elmer, born March 22, 1884, all of whom are at home; Esther J., who is the wife of Fred Stone, of Blue Mountain, Oregon; Selma, who died at the age of four months; Ernest, who was born June 18, 1889, and is still at home; Otto, who passed away when four months old; Carl V., born May, 15, 1892, Ira, born August 21, 1896, and Lena F., born in 1899, all of whom reside with their parents. To his children Mr. Matson has given good school advantages and the family are a credit to his name.

In 1903 Mr. and Mrs. Matson celebrated their silver wedding in J. O. O. F. hall in Marshfield, the Rev. E. F. Bengtson officiating. The worthy couple were surrounded by their nine living children and of the ten persons who had witnessed the ceremony a quarter of a century ago there were five present to see the silver anniversary observed. On this occasion Mr. and Mrs. Matson received the sincere wishes of the entire community in which they have made their home for so many years. The year 1912 was an eventful one of their lives, for on the 10th of May of that year they left on an extended trip to their old home in Finland and this was their first visit to their native land since they left its shores many years ago for America.

Mr. Matson is a republican and gives his allegiance to the Lutheran church. His has been an active and useful life, which demonstrates how forceful are the qualities of energy and determination in this land where opportunity is open to all. He is the owner of a valuable farm property and is justly classed with the representative agriculturists of this part of the state.

WILLIAM AHLKOG is one of the well known farmers on North Inlet in Coos county, Oregon, where he is successfully engaged in the cultivation of a ranch of two hundred acres of valuable Oregon farm land. He was born in Finland, April 17, 1869, and is a son of Marcus and Anna Ahlskog, both of whom were natives of Finland, the mother having died in her native land in 1901. The father is living and has reached the advanced age of eighty years. They were the parents of five children, four of whom are living, the subject of this review being the only member of his father's family who emigrated to America.

William Ahlskog came to America in August, 1887, and settled first on Coos bay, in Marshfield, and for four years was engaged as a farm laborer. He then rented a farm for two years after which he worked in a rock quarry for several years. He later purchased two hundred acres of land located one half mile from the upper landing of North Slough on which he established his home and has since continued in the cultivation of the soil. Fifteen acres of his land are highly improved and his place is one of the most advantageously located properties in his district.

Mr. Ahlskog was united in marriage May 11, 1901, to Miss Marie Dahl, who was born in Finland, May 13, 1869, and is a daughter of August and Brita (Liasa) Dahl. She emigrated to America in 1898, reaching the shores of the new world on the 11th day of October of that year. Her mother died in her native land many years ago. The father is living and has a family of three children of whom Mrs. Ahlskog is the only member who came to America. Two sisters are living in Finland.

William Ahlskog is a member of the Owls. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. He is one of the well known men in his part of Coos county and is in every way entitled to be numbered among the enterprising and useful citizens of the community in which he lives.

CLAUDE H. DAGGETT, serving for the second term as county treasurer of Klamath county and well known as a progressive and representative business man, figuring prominently in industrial, commercial and financial circles, was born in Lawler, Iowa, July 24, 1878. His parents, Morris H. and Rose E. (Pomeroy) Daggett, were reared and married in Iowa, and in 1885 made their way to Washington, settling at Ritzville. In 1888 they removed to California and in 1893 came to Klamath Falls, where Mrs. Daggett passed away in 1908 at the age of fifty years. Mr. Daggett, who has engaged in the drug business during the greater part of his life, is now living in Lake county, Oregon. In their family were three children; Claude H.; Edith, who is the wife of George Rockwood, of Yuma, Arizona; and J. F., living in San Francisco.

Claude H. Daggett resided with his parents until 1896 and was up to that time a pupil in the public schools, being graduated from the Klamath Falls high school in that year. He afterward worked for wages until 1899, when he formed a partnership with Fred Schallock for the conduct of a grocery business under the firm style of Schallock & Daggett. This was continued until 1909, when Mr. Daggett sold out. The previous year he had been elected county treasurer and so ac-ceptably did he fill the office that he was re-elected in November, 1910, and in 1912 was renominated for a third term. His personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him are indicated in the fact that he has been elected on the democratic ticket, although the county gives a normal republican majority of one thousand. His fellow townsmen have the utmost confidence in him and his loyalty and he is spoken of in terms of high regard in connection with his business career. He is one of the stockholders and the secretary of the American Bank & Trust Company of Klamath Falls, is a director and the manager of the Klamath Falls Warehouse & Forwarding Company and in connection with that company built the first ice and cold storage plant here. He assisted in organizing this company, which has been an important element in the business development and progress of the community.

In 1902 Mr. Daggett was married to Miss Floy R. Schallock, a native of Klamath Falls, Oregon, and a daughter of H. F. Schallock of Grants Pass. Mr. and Mrs. Daggett have a hospitable home always open for the reception of their many friends, and he is well known as a charter member of the Elks lodge of Klamath Falls, of which he was the first treasurer. He has spent much of his life in the northwest and is a thorough believer in the country and its future.

CHARLES CROSBY, who passed away in Coos county in 1903, was a factor in the pioneer development of this state along agricultural lines and his name therefore figures in its early history. He was born in New York in the year 1837, and in 1855 when eighteen years of age, came west across the plains. He spent three years in the gold mines of California and accumulated considerable wealth. Coming to the Willamette valley, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in Linn county and there carried on general agricultural pursuits for a number of years. Subsequently he took up his abode near Woodburn in Marion county, purchasing a farm of one hundred and thirty acres which he operated for ten years. On the expiration of that period he disposed of the property and came to Coos county in 1884, settling near Elk Creek on the east fork of the Coquille river. A short time later he removed to Spokane, Washington, and resided in that vicinity for five years, while subsequently he made his home in Sacramento, California, for several years. Returning to Coos county, Oregon, he spent the remainder of his life with his daughter, Jennie, in whose home he passed away in 1903. He gave his political allegiance to the democracy but neither sought nor desired office as a reward for his party fealty. His religious faith was that of the Christian church, while fraternally he was identified with the Masons.

It was in Linn county, this state, that Mr. Crosby wedded Miss Jennie Florince, a native of Virginia, by whom he had eight children, as follows: Albert, who is a resident of Woodburn, Oregon; Charles, living in Fairview, Oregon; Mary, deceased; Mrs. Martha Bly, of Portland, Oregon; Arthur, also of Portland; Walter, who makes his home at Heppner, Oregon; Jeff Lee, of Gravel Ford, Oregon; and Jennie, the wife of William Cotton, of Fairview, Oregon.

Jeff Lee Crosby, who owns and operates a farm of two hundred and fifteen acres four miles from Gravel Ford, near the home of his father-in-law, Isaac T. Weekly, is one of the enterprising and representative agriculturists of Coos county. He was but five years of age when his mother died. As a companion and helpmate on the journey of life he chose Miss Ona Weekly, a daughter of Isaac Taylor Weekly. Unto them have been born five children, as follows: Arthur M., whose birth occurred on the 5th of February, 1896; Iva, who is deceased; Mertie, whose natal day was December 24, 1900; Clifford, who was born on the 2d of January, 1905; and Zelma, born March 19, 1907.

JOHN H. BARR, SR., is the owner of a well cultivated ranch located two miles southeast of Springfield, which he has been operating for about five years with success. He was born in Georgia in 1834, and is a son of James H. and Nancy (Anthony) Barr, who were likewise natives of Georgia, where they always lived, the father passing away in 1883 and the mother in 1885. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Barr numbered six.

Reared on a farm, John H. Barr laid the foundation for an agricultural career while still in his boyhood by assisting with the work of the fields and care of the stock. He received a common-school education and remained a member of the parental household until he had attained his majority. When he left home he began farming for himself and for two years thereafter engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state. At the end of that time he went to Alabama and farmed until the breaking out of the Civil war. He enlisted as a private in the Confederate army and went to the front as a member of the Twenty-second Alabama regiment, remaining in the service until the close of hostilities. He participated in a number of notable conflicts, received one slight wound and was discharged with the rank of second sergeant. When mustered out he returned to Alabama and resumed farming, continuing to reside in that state until 1869, when he removed to Texas. From there he went to Washington in 1886 and four years later became a resident of Oregon. He located in Eugene, where he bought some property, but as he had always been in the country he was not satisfied to reside in town and the following year, in 1891 he traded his city property for a ranch on the Mohawk river, in Lane county. He lived on this land for several years, then selling it and buying seventy-five acres two miles south of Springfield where he has ever since made his home. Mr. Barr has attained the venerable age of seventy-eight years but has always led an active life and continues to look after his property and business interests.

In Texas, in 1874, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Barr and Miss Caroline E. Price, whose birth occurred in Arkansas. She is a daughter of Joseph and Jane (Waits) Price, the mother a native of Georgia and the father of Illinois, but they were married in Arkansas and moved from there to Texas in 1863. In 1887 they came to the northwest, locating in Clatsop county. After residing there for three years they returned to Texas, where the mother passed away in 1901. The father is living at the venerable age of ninety-one years and continues to reside in Texas. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Price, five of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Barr have six children: Adelia, the wife of A. W. Dugan,³ of Marcola, this county; Georgie C., who married Curtis Hayden, of Springfield, Oregon; John H., Jr., who is a resident of Cloverdale, Oregon; Joseph R., who is a physician of Springfield, Oregon; William C., who is engaged in the mercantile business in Springfield; and Lola E., who is living at home and attending high school.

The family are members of the Baptist church and the political support of Mr. Barr is given to the democratic party. He enjoys a wide and favorable acquaintance among the citizens of his community, where he has always conducted his transactions in such a manner as to entitle him to the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has had dealings.

JOHN R. SCOTT is now living retired in Creswell, although for many years he was closely identified with farming interests in Lane county. He today occupies a commodious and beautiful residence in the town and derives a substantial income from carefully placed investments. He was born near Creswell and is the son of W. J. J. and Surena J. (Robinson) Scott, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work. He was reared to farm life and during his youthful days remained on the old homestead with his parents, assisting in the cultivation of the fields and the care of the crops. After his marriage he removed to a home of his own, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land to which he afterward added a tract of one hundred acres. Upon this he lived and farmed until 1908, when he sold it to parties who subdivided it in small tracts. He removed to Creswell, where he is now enjoying rest from further labor. He had developed his farm according to modern progressive methods and as the country became thickly settled the land became very valuable. In Creswell he erected a large and beautiful residence of modern style of architecture, which stands in the midst of well kept grounds covering four lots. In addition to this he was the owner of the Central hotel and also owns twenty acres of timber land.

On the 24th of December, 1886, Mr. Scott was married to Miss Mae Parsons, a daughter of W. W. and Phoebe (Walton) Parsons, who were pioneers of Oregon. Their family numbers six children: C. L., who is living in Eugene; W. E., a resident of Creswell; Mrs. Scott and Belle, who were twins, the latter being now the deceased wife of R. W. Veatch of Cottage Grove, Oregon; and R. H. and W. W., both of whom are living in Creswell. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have become the parents of four children. Louise, who is a telephone operator in Creswell; Surena, the wife of E. C. Phillips, of Montana, by whom she has two children, Loyal and Frank; Loyal who has a business college education and is now an employe of the Southern Pacific Railway Company at Creswell; and Belle, at home. Liberal advantages for intellectual progress have been given the children, all of whom have been students in the Creswell high school.

In his political views Mr. Scott is a republican and for two years held the office of supervisor, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. He has done good work for education as a school director and at all times is interested in behalf of progress and improvement. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. A lifelong resident of Lane county, his sterling traits of character have gained for him the confidence, good-will and high respect of all who know him.

JOHN WESLEY REED, who is a well known contractor and builder in Estacada, Clackamas county, was born near Cleveland, Ohio, November 11, 1863, a son of Aaron and Elizabeth (Calhoun) Reed. The parents, both natives of Ohio, were married in that state, and a few years later removed to Iowa settling in Mahaska county, where the mother passed away in 1874. About eight years later the father removed to Norton county, Kansas, where he resided until his death in 1907. In their family were eight children, the two eldest of whom died in infancy. Those who grew to maturity are: Florence, the wife of David Rowley, of Norton county, Kansas; Albert Clinton, who died in Kansas, at the age of thirty-five years; John Wesley, of this review; Ida, the widow of Edward Dobbe of Norton, Kansas; George P., of Billings, Montana; and Charlie E., of Norton county, Kansas.

John Wesley Reed acquired a common-school education, and at the age of eighteen started out in life on his own account by working on a farm in Iowa, for three years. He then moved to Wisconsin, where he took up the carpenter and contracting business, which he followed ten years. Subsequently he operated a barber shop for a number of years, and afterward returned to the contracting and building business, remaining in the same until 1901. He later farmed for two years, and in 1903 came to Oregon, settling at Estacada, where he purchased the two first lots of the city, and built its first building. He has erected one third of the buildings now in the town of Estacada, which has a population of over five hundred. At one time he operated a furniture store there and also was interested financially in a general merchandise store. He erected and stocked the largest general merchandise store in Clackamas county and opened and conducted a drug store in Estacada. He was one of the charter members of the State Bank of Estacada and was president of that institution until it changed owners in 1906. He was one of the active organizers and is the manager and leading shareholder of the Estacada Telephone and Telegraph Company. He owns much real estate in Estacada, some timber land and several tracts of farm land adjoining the town.

In 1893 Mr. Reed wedded Miss Lucy M. Oakley, who was born in Monroe county, Wisconsin, a daughter of Henry and Lucy (Barlow) Oakley. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania, and her mother of Wisconsin, and they were married at La Crosse, Wisconsin, where the mother passed away, and where the father is yet living. In their family were seven children: Nola, who is a school teacher; Mrs. Reed; Clinton and Affa, of Wisconsin; Mary E., a teacher; Milton G., of Newburg, Oregon; and June, who is also a school teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have become the parents of five children: Rachael, who was born in 1895, and is attending high school; Russell, born in 1899; a child who died in infancy; Mary Alice, born in 1906; and Florence June, born in 1908. Mrs. Reed is an educated lady, and for nine years previous to her marriage taught school.

In his political views John Wesley Reed is republican, has always taken an active part in local party affairs and served as mayor for three terms. He has given active and helpful service in educational movements, and has been a member of the school board for six years. Both he and his family are earnest workers in the Congregational church. Mr. Reed has led a busy and useful life and is accounted one of the good substantial residents of Estacada.

F. L. BEARD, enjoying an enviable reputation as one of the leading merchants of Yoncalla, is successfully engaged in business as the junior member of the firm of Holdredge & Beard. His birth occurred in Seio, Linn county, Oregon, on the 16th of February, 1879, his parents being Andrew F. and Rachel (Prior) Beard, who were born, reared and married in Davis county, Iowa. In 1865 they crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, locating on a farm in Linn county. Andrew F. Beard subsequently removed to Seio, where he was variously engaged in business. He conducted a livery stable for a time, later was known as the proprietor of a hotel for a number of years and also engaged in merchandising. At the present time he is living retired in Seio, having won a comfortable competence during the years of his active business career. He gives his political allegiance to the democracy and, though not an office seeker, has been an active worker in the local ranks of the party.

F. L. Beard remained under the parental roof until seven years of age when he resided with his sister, Mrs. Holdredge. His education was acquired in the common schools of Seio. In 1897 conditions were favorable for an appointment to West Point Military Academy but no vacancy occurred until two years later and at that time he did not care to go. When twenty-one years of age he began his career as a locomotive fireman on the Southern Pacific railroad. Six years later, in 1906, he was promoted to the position of engineer, running an engine for two and a half years. Soon after assuming his duties as engineer the Southern Pacific installed their heavy engines and to him was assigned the task of running the new locomotives. He was in the service of the railroad at the time of the San Francisco earthquake and pulled the first train of soldiers from the north into Roseburg, their destination being San Francisco. In 1906 he bought a third interest in the mercantile establishment of O. E. Holdredge, of Yoncalla, and in 1907 obtained a ninety days' leave of absence, came to Yoncalla, and acquired a full half interest in the concern. Since that time he has devoted his attention to merchandising as a member of the firm of Holdredge & Beard and in this connection has won a gratifying measure of prosperity, being widely recognized as a man of excellent business ability, reliable, straightforward and up-to-date.

On the 22d of May, 1901, Mr. Beard was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle B. Spaugh, of Looking Glass, Oregon. He is a democrat in politics and was a candidate for nomination to the office of sheriff in 1910 but failed to secure the nomination. In 1912, though importuned by his friends and party to allow his name to be used for the office of sheriff or for representative, he declined to again become a candidate. He has served as a member of the town council and for one term acted as mayor of Yoncalla. Fraternally he is identified with the following orders: Laurel Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.; Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F. of Yoncalla; Union Encampment, No. 9, of Roseburg; Yoncalla Camp, No. 480, W. O. W.; and Yoncalla Lodge, No. 1331, M. B. of A. Of the last named lodge he was the first president. His wife is a devoted and consistent member of the Baptist church in Roseburg. Mr. Beard was appointed a delegate to the Northwest Development Congress, which met at Seattle, June 5th to 8th, 1912, but was unable to attend on account of the pressure of business cares. He has done a great deal of journal work for advertising circulars which are sent broadcast through the United States. He has qualities which win enduring friendship and is a young man who has already made a creditable record in business circles by his consecutive and honorable progress.

WILLIAM JOHN MASSEY. The well improved and highly cultivated farm belonging to William J. Massey comprises two hundred acres of land located on Catching creek, Coos county, Oregon, and in its productiveness and fertility ranks among the important agricultural enterprises of the district. Mr. Massey was born in South Dakota, March 14, 1871, and is a son of George Washington and Ann Eliza (Gipson) Massey. The father was a native of Indiana and the mother of New York. They were married at Strawberry Point, Iowa, and went at once to South Dakota, where the father bought land and engaged in agricultural pursuits for twelve years. At the end of that time, in December, 1878, they came to Oregon and settled in Coos county. Here George W. Massey bought one hundred acres of land and upon this he resided until his death in June, 1891. His wife is still living and resides upon the old homestead. They became the parents of five children: Fred, who is a resident of Coos county; Charles, who lives in the same section; William J., the subject of this sketch; George, who is the owner of seventy-five acres of land near his father's farm but who makes his home with his mother; and May Jane, the wife of Charlie Pendleton, the owner of two ranches near Coquille, Oregon.

William J. Massey was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Coos county. He became acquainted with agriculture by working on his father's farm. He now owns two hundred acres located on Catching creek in Coos county, and to this he gives his energies and activities and has at present brought it to a high state of development and cultivation. He farms along the most progressive and modern lines and pursues a constant policy of expansion and improvement. Besides the farm which he operates he also owns an interest in his father's homestead and is a member of the Farmers' Cooperative Educational Organization & Union of America.

Politically Mr. Massey is a republican but takes little active interest in affairs of a public nature, preferring to devote his time and attention to his farm. He and his parents affiliate with the Christian church. He is numbered among the enterprising and representative men of Coos county and is well known as a farmer who is interested in agriculture as a scientific occupation and successful in it along practical lines.

LEWIS S. FULLER, who has retired from his fruit farm and is residing in Monmouth, was born May 23, 1848, in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, his parents being Jacob and Catherine (Shank) Fuller, who were born in Maryland and Indiana respectively and both of whom died in Pennsylvania after residing there for the greater part of their lives. The father was a mason and bricklayer by trade. To him eight children were born, namely: Mary Ann; William, who enlisted for service in the Civil war in a Pennsylvania regiment and was killed while at the front; Lewis S.; Andrew; Sarah Jane; Alex; Archibald, deceased; and Elinor.

Lewis S. Fuller spent his youth in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, and attended the common schools there. When the troops were enlisting for service in the Civil war, in 1864, although he was only sixteen years of age, he joined Captain John Wilson's independent company and remained at the front until the close of the war. After being mustered out he immediately returned to Pennsylvania and engaged in agricultural pursuits, an occupation in which he continued until 1898, when he removed from his native state to Oregon and purchased a fruit farm of thirty-eight acres, southwest of Monmouth. He cultivated that farm successfully until he retired from active business and took up his residence in Monmouth.

In 1869 occurred Mr. Fuller's marriage to Senith Smith, who was born in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, August 14, 1848. She is a daughter of John and Martha (Borland) Smith, natives of Pennsylvania, and is one of eleven children born to them, all of whom died in infancy excepting Senith, Mary Elizabeth, Milton B. and William H. To Mr. and Mrs. Fuller eleven children have been born, namely: Ida C. and Luetta, deceased; Nora A.; John S.; Millie Delphina, deceased; Edward Jennings; Alpa, Merle and Stella, deceased; Cleopatra; and Cecil Pansy, deceased.

In politics Lewis S. Fuller is a staunch republican and has often been elected to office by that party, having been justice of the peace in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, for six years and having served as a member of the school board for several years. In these offices he discharged his duties in accordance with his high standards of right and justice and for the general welfare of the community which he served. He is a member of the Indiana county post of the G. A. R. and both he and his wife are members of the Evangelical church, through which organization they find many opportunities to give vent to their friendly and benevolent inclinations. Mr. Fuller has always enjoyed the regard and esteem of his fellow citizens, who find him conscientious and trustworthy and who enlist his support to any uplifting project, knowing that his cooperation is both actively and passively effective.

ROBERT E. CAMPBELL, the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of well improved and highly cultivated land located three miles east of Eugene, where he is now living retired, has passed sixty-one of the eighty-one years of his life in Lane county. He was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, September 4, 1830, and is a son of Henry and Nancy W. (Ashburn) Campbell. The father was born in 1799 and the mother in 1797, both natives of Kentucky where they were also married. They later removed to Missouri and were numbered among the pioneer settlers of Lafayette county. There the father acquired one hundred and sixty acres of government land and engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life. He prospered in his undertakings and extended his holdings until he held the title to nine hundred and sixty acres, the greater portion of which he acquired for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. It was all brought under cultivation and highly improved, being one of the valuable properties of that section. The father passed away at the age of seventy-five, but the mother survived him for many years and had passed the ninetieth anniversary of her birth at the time of her death. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, five are still living, as follows: Henry, who is a resident of Lafayette county; Aaron, who lives in Lexington; Robert E., our subject; Grace Elizabeth, who married Givens Mastison of Lafayette county; and Nancy, the wife of Alfred King, also of Lafayette county. Those deceased are as follows: Joshua, who died in 1856; George T., whose death occurred in 1884; William, who died in 1886; Susan, who was the first wife of Givens Mastison, and who was twenty-three when she passed away in 1862; Boshann, who died in 1865; John, who was twenty-four at the time of his death; Nancy, whose death occurred in 1847; and Melinda Harriet, who married Alfred Mastison.

The boyhood and youth of Robert E. Campbell to the age of twenty years was passed on the farm where he was born. He left the parental roof in 1851 and began his independent career as an agriculturist. He followed farming in his native state for about one year, and at the expiration of that time, in 1851, he came to Oregon, locating in Lane county. During the first year of his residence here he worked in a mill race, but in 1852 he purchased a donation right from Jerry Sweet. Under this he acquired three hundred and twenty acres of land and once more engaged in farming and stock-raising, diligently devoting himself to the further improvement and cultivation of his ranch during the remainder of his active life. He has given his children tracts from his original holding and still retains the title to one hundred acres. This has all been brought into a high state of productivity with the exception of twenty acres that is in timber. His ranch is well improved and equipped and is numbered among the valuable properties of the county, while he is known as one of the prosperous citizens of his community. In the early days of 1852 Mr. Campbell hauled goods from Portland to Springfield and in 1859 together with John Bovard and Alexander King built a flat boat and took thirty-five tons of flour to Portland receiving two dollars and seventy-five cents per barrel for the same.

Mr. Campbell has been married three times. His first union was with Miss Ruth Campbell, a native of Missouri. They were married in 1850 and Mrs. Campbell passed away in 1858. Two children were born to them: Harvey V., who was born in 1850 and died in Oregon at the age of forty-two years; and Eliza, whose birth occurred in 1853, the wife of Isaac Stevens, of Eugene. In 1861, Mr. Campbell married Martha Delzell, who was born on the 13th of May, 1840, and died in 1865. They were the parents of one child, Henry D., who died at the age of two years. Mr. Campbell was married to his present wife, whose maiden name was Rebecca Hutchison, in May, 1867. Mrs. Campbell was born in Grundy county, Missouri, in 1848, and is a daughter of Jackson and Theodosia (Snelling) Hutchison, the mother a native of Kentucky and the father of Missouri. They were married in Kentucky but subsequently removed to Missouri and in that state the father died in 1867 while the mother passed away in 1870 in Lane county, Oregon. She is the eighth in order of birth in a family of nine, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of one sister, Gertrude, the wife of Elias Williams, of Trent, Oregon, and herself. Those deceased are as follows: Sarah J., the wife of Alexius Miller, who died at Florence, Oregon; Jemina, who became Mrs. Hines; Robert and William; Isabelle, who became Mrs. Joseph Meador; one who died in infancy; and Mary A., who was living in Missouri at the time of her death. To Mr. Campbell and his third wife there were born two sons, George E., who was born on February 22, 1876, is married and lives at Oregon City. He also has two sons: Wells O., whose birth occurred on November 5, 1898; and Robert G., whose natal day was the 1st of July, 1908. Ernest E., whose birth occurred on the 22d of July, 1878, graduated from Kimball College at Salem and entered the ministry. He married Miss Bertha Walker of Salem and they now live at Randall, Washington.

Mr. Campbell is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mrs. Campbell affiliates with the Baptist denomination. In politics he is a democrat, but often casts an independent ballot at local elections. For many years Mr. Campbell applied himself tirelessly to the cultivation of his vast holdings, thereby accumulating a substantial competence and in addition to his fine ranch he is the owner of residence property in Oregon City and has various other financial interests. He is one of the highly respected pioneer citizens of this section and has many friends throughout the county of long years standing.

LLOYD T. LITTLEPAGE, who is one of the younger business men of Gresham, Multnomah county, owns and operates a garage there. He was born in that county, March 2, 1890, a son of Clarence and Maud (Holt) Littlepage, the father a native of Kansas and the mother of Maine. The parents were married in Oregon, in which state they are yet living, the father having been brought here by his parents when he was eleven years of age. In their family are three children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the eldest. The others are: John, of Portland; and Basil, of Nevada.

Lloyd T. Littlepage received his education in the common schools and at the age of sixteen started out in life for himself by becoming engaged in electrical work. He remained at work in that occupation until 1911, when he started in Gresham the garage which he is now operating.

In 1910 Mr. Littlepage wedded Miss May Alder, who was born in Oregon in 1891, a daughter of George and Marie Alder, who reside in Multnomah county. Mrs. Littlepage is the third in the order of birth, of four children, born to her parents. The others are: Mrs. Pearl Hayden, of Bridal Veil, Oregon; and Alta and Carl, of Troutdale. Lloyd T. Littlepage is practical and systematic and although yet a young man, is very capable and reliable in his business relations, always displaying those traits of character which everywhere awaken respect and admiration. Both he and his wife are representatives of well known families in that section of the country and are much esteemed there.

A. C. WRENN has throughout the greater part of his life been identified with the printing business, starting in that line when but fourteen years of age in connection with the Corvallis Gazette. He was born in Benton county, Oregon, May 1, 1866, and is a son of George P. and Frances (Caldwell) Wrenn. The family comes of English ancestry, tracing the line back to Sir Christopher Wrenn, and the American branch was founded in Virginia during colonial days. George P. Wrenn was born in Washington, D. C., in 1822, and in early childhood removed with his parents to Columbus, Ohio, where he resided until 1848, when he came to Oregon by way of the water route around Cape Horn. He settled in Portland, becoming owner of one hundred and sixty acres of land now included within the present boundaries of that city. There he remained until 1852, when he returned to Ohio and the following year brought his wife and two children to Oregon. They were also accompanied by his brother John, who settled in Linn county and there reared a large family. George P. Wrenn drove ox teams to Ohio and back again to the northwest and soon his family was comfortably established in Portland. When he first settled in that city he engaged in the manufacture of plows. Before leaving for the east he gave a lawyer the power of attorney to sell a portion of his property at a certain figure. On his return to the northwest he found that the lawyer had disposed of his entire holdings and had left for parts unknown. It was necessary, therefore, that Mr. Wrenn begin business life all over again. About 1854 he removed to Benton county and took up a homestead of three hundred and twenty acres ten miles west of Corvallis. It was upon that place that A. C. Wrenn was born. The family remained upon the ranch until 1870 and then removed to Corvallis, where the father engaged in contracting and building, following that pursuit until 1878. He also served as sheriff of Benton county for one term and was filling the position of justice of the peace for the second term at the time of his death, which occurred in February, 1880. He had been the organizer and was the chief of the fire department of Corvallis, and was killed while attending a fire. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party and for much of his life he held membership in the United Brethren church but later he became a member of the Presbyterian church. He was very active in the former in early years and was one of its local preachers. Fraternally he was a Mason, holding membership in Corvallis lodge and attaining the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in the consistory. George P. Wrenn was twice married. About 1843 he wedded Frances Caldwell, who was born in Ohio, about 1822, and died in Benton county, Oregon, in July, 1866. She was the mother of six children, as follows: Eugene, Ernest and Belle, all of whom are deceased; E. F., a resident of Fruitvale, California; Alice M., who has passed away; and A. C., of this review. In 1867 Mr. Wrenn wedded Miss Lizzie Freele, who died in 1881, and the five children of that marriage are Eva, Myrtle, R. E., Rena and W. A.

A. C. Wrenn spent his youthful days on the old home ranch and in Corvallis, where he attended the public schools. He began working at the printer's trade here when a youth of fourteen years, being employed on the Corvallis Gazette, with which he was connected for two years while attending school. For six months he received a salary of only a dollar and a half per week as a printer's devil. In 1881 he took a position with the Southern Pacific railroad during its construction between Roseburg and Redding. He then went to California, where he again took up the printing business, which he has followed most of the time since. For eight or ten years he was an editor in California, being thus connected with the Pleasant Times, the Clovis Herald and the Madera Mercury. He also held the position of foreman and of superintendent in large printing offices in California. For the past two years he has resided in Klamath Falls, where he first accepted a position with the Klamath Chronicle, soon afterward becoming editor and manager of that paper. Later he took charge of the Morning Express, which at that time had eighty subscribers. He changed its name to the Pioneer Press, under which style he conducted the paper until March 1, 1912, when the paper was sold to Samuel M. Evans, who soon changed the name to the Klamath Falls Northwestern. Mr. Wrenn remained as superintendent of printing in both job and newspaper departments and in this responsible position is thus closely associated with the business interests of the city.

On the 10th of June, 1893, Mr. Wrenn was united in marriage to Miss Eleanor Esther O'Connor, a native of California, born April 21, 1867, and a daughter of James and Ellen O'Connor. There are three children of this marriage: Harold, Frances and Kenneth Caldwell. In his political views Mr. Wrenn is an earnest democrat, stanchly supporting the principles of his party. Fraternally he is connected with the Elks and the Eagles and for the past twenty years he has been a member of the Typographical Union. He has worked long and earnestly at his trade in various connections and whatever success he has achieved is the merited reward of his own labor.

ROBERT S. AND MELVIN SMITH. The proprietors of an excellent blacksmith shop in Sandy are Robert S. and Melvin Smith, who are numbered among the worthy citizens of Clackamas county. They were born near Clay Center, Kansas, Robert S., August 2, 1886, and Melvin on August 3, 1888, their parents being Alexander and Eliza (Ross) Smith, the father a native of Ireland and the mother of Pennsylvania. The parents were married in Kansas, where they have since resided, the father being one of the early settlers and the owner of eighty acres of rich land there. In his family were twelve children: William, of Roseberry, Idaho; David, of Broughton, Kansas; Mary, of Seattle, Washington; Robert S.; Melvin; Kenelm of Boring, Oregon; Oliver, Sarah, Jennie and Alexander, Jr., all of whom are at home; and Elizabeth and Edward, deceased.

Robert S. Smith was reared under the parental roof, dividing his time between his studies in the district school in winter and working on his father's farm in summer. He afterward obtained a business college education. He remained at home until he was eighteen years of age, when he started out in life for himself and went to British Columbia, where he was employed for two years in a flour mill. He then took up the trade of blacksmithing, which he followed for two years there, and afterward continued in different kinds of work until 1909, when he started a shop at Boring, Oregon, which he operated until November 1, 1911. At that time he came to Sandy and opened a shop with his brother Melvin, which they still conduct.

On the 17th of April, 1911, Robert S. Smith wedded Miss Vera Cross, who was born in Washington, September 14, 1890, a daughter of John L. and Sarah Cross, the mother a native of Missouri and the father of New York. Her parents were married in Washington, where they resided until 1903, when they removed to Oregon. The mother is now living in Boring, the father having passed away March 28, 1911. In their family were four children, of whom Mrs. Smith is the youngest. The others are: Mrs. Effie Little, of Fruitland, Washington; William H., of Spokane; and Claude F., of Boring, Oregon. Mrs. Robert S. Smith was educated in her native state, having completed a high-school course there.

Melvin Smith grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his early education in the district schools, and at the age of sixteen started out on his own account, working on a farm in Kansas, where he was employed for two years. He then went to Alberta, Canada, but after a short time removed to British Columbia, remaining there one year. He later attended school in St. Paul, Minnesota, for one year, subsequent to which time he came to Oregon, settling at Pleasant Home, where he resided for over a year. He afterward took up the trade of blacksmithing in Portland, being employed there for seven months, when he went to Boring. Here he continued in his trade for a short time and then came to Sandy, entering into partnership with his brother in the shop which they are now so successfully operating.

In politics the brothers are republican, and fraternally Robert S. Smith is identified with the United Artisans of Sandy. Melvin Smith is a member of the Triple Tie Benefit Association of Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Smith belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, while Melvin is affiliated with the Presbyterian church. The brothers are progressive and enterprising and work in the utmost harmony in the development and control of an extensive and growing black-smithing business. They are always reliable in both their business and social relations and during their residence here have won the friendship and high regard of all with whom they have been associated.

C. M. SKEELS. Coos county lost one of her most successful and upright business men and one of her most liberal and charitable citizens when C. M. Skeels died at his home in Coquille on March 6, 1911. For twenty-four years he had been in the general merchandise business in Coos county and had built up a substantial business by reason of his progressive policies and his unquestioned honesty and his death closed a career which had been useful and valuable as well as upright and worthy. He was born in Ohio in 1848, a son of Thomas B. and Rebecca (Smith) Skeels, natives of that state. They were the parents of seven children: C. M., the subject of this sketch; Thomas W., a resident of Ohio; Ella, the wife of Rev. Leggith, of Ohio; Oreta, who is the wife of John Beemer, of the same state; Ernest M., also of Ohio; Teresa, who has passed away; and one child, who died in infancy.

C. M. Skeels was educated in the public schools of Ohio and spent his childhood and early manhood in that state. In 1887 he came to Oregon and eventually settled in Coos county, establishing himself in the general merchandise business at Bandon. After one year he sold his enterprise and came to Coquille where he operated a general store. His success was rapid from the beginning and he soon became well known by reason of his attractive, complete and tastefully arranged stock, the fairness of his prices, the quality of his goods, and his honorable business methods, and a fine patronage soon repaid his care in all directions. At the time of his death his prosperity was evident, ranking him among the most important merchants in Coquille.

In 1873 Mr. Skeels was united in marriage to Miss Nellie J. Henry, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of James and Nancy (Durbin) Henry, both of whom were born in that state. Her father died when Mrs. Skeels was ten years of age and her mother passed away in 1893. In their family were fourteen children, six of whom are still living: Isaac H., and Vincent H., both of whom reside in Ohio; Izora, the wife of Jacob Brown, of Ohio; Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Lunsford, also of Ohio; Sarah C., who is the wife of Columbus Evans, of the same state; and Nellie, the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Skeels were born eight children: Charles T., who resides in Coquille, and is a partner in the business which his father left, and who is married and has one daughter, Marvel, aged eleven years; Mary, the wife of Charles Lorenz, who is engaged in the merchandising business in Bandon, by whom she has four children, Marjorie, George, Harry, and Dorothy; Oreta, who became the wife of Fred Nozler of Bridge, by whom she has three children, Gladys, James, and Fred; Grace, who married George Baxter of Creswell, and who is the mother of two children, Nellie and Clay; Portus and Nellie, twins, who have passed away; Dolly May, who resides at home with her mother; and Paul, who resides at home and who is a partner in the merchandise business with his mother and brother. All of the children in this family completed their education in Coos county, and Paul took a business course in a business college at Salem.

Mr. Skeels gave his allegiance to the republican party but was never an office seeker. He was a devout adherent of the Methodist Episcopal church, North, and well known in religious circles. Although successful as a merchant his truest claim to remembrance does not rest upon his business attainments. It lies in his broad and liberal charity and his deep religious spirit which made his life one of constant giving to worthy causes. The poor of Coos county hold him in memory as a man who did his utmost by personal kindness and material aid to lighten their burdens and lessen the hardships of their lives.

ALOIS GASSNER, who is one of the successful orchardists of Washington county, is the owner of a fine ranch of sixty acres, located four miles southwest of Beaverton. He was born in Austria, on the 15th of December, 1847, and is a son of Christian and Catherine Gassner, both of whom spent their entire lives in Austria, the father passing away at the age of forty-six and the mother at sixty. In their family were six children, three of whom are living, those beside our subject being Edward and Josephine, who have remained in the old country.

The first twenty years of his life Alois Gassner spent in his native land, where he obtained a good common-school education, after which he learned the stone-mason's trade. A dissatisfaction with the meager opportunities for advancement afforded in his own country early decided him to seek his fortune in the United States. He arrived in this country in 1869 and first located in Detroit, Michigan, where he followed his trade for a few months and then removed to Freeport, Illinois. There he continued to work at the stone-mason's trade until 1870, when he decided to come to the Pacific coast, having heard many remarkable stories of California. He located in that state for a time, but not liking the climate he subsequently removed to Portland. Working during the next eight months in various capacities about the hotels of that city, he took a position as sausage maker in a packing house. He next filled a position as driver on an ice wagon, but he withdrew from this occupation at the end of a year, to work for a wholesale liquor firm. In this position he continued for three years and resigned the same to engage in building sidewalks and fences, and afterward undertook gardening for a period of seven years. At the expiration of that time he came to Washington county and bought sixty acres of railroad land at six and a half dollars per acre, and here he has ever since resided. Mr. Gassner's ranch is located on section 25, township 1, south, of range 2, and contains sixty acres of most fertile land that he has brought under a high state of cultivation. When he purchased, his place was covered with a heavy growth of timber, the trees averaging from one to eight feet in diameter, but he has cleared all of his land and erected thereon a comfortable residence, large barns and other substantial buildings. He has a fine orchard containing fourteen hundred bearing apple, pear, prune, cherry and peach trees, while six acres of his ranch are devoted to hop-raising, for which industry he has provided a drying house, press and all other necessary equipment. Mr. Gassner is realizing substantial returns from his various activities and is recognized as one of the prosperous ranchmen of the county. His prosperity is the result, however, of years of close application, intelligent supervision and tireless energy, which qualities constitute the main asset in any undertaking.

On the 4th of November, 1873, Mr. Gassner was married to Miss Justina Lampert, who was born in Austria on the 7th of July, 1848, and is a daughter of John and Josephine Lampert. The parents spent their entire lives in Austria, where the mother passed away in 1855 and the father in 1861. They were the parents of six children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of Mrs. Gassner. She came to the United States in 1868, locating in Freeport, Illinois, where she subsequently met and married Mr. Gassner. They are the parents of five children, as follows: Xavier Antone, who was born on the 2nd of October, 1874, now married and living in Reedville, this county, where he and his brother conduct a mercantile business; Alois, born on January 11, 1877, who is married and engaged in business with his brother in Reedville; Carolina, the wife of William Taylor, a farmer of the county; Julius, who was born on June 27, 1885, still at home; and Justina, born on the 1st of April, 1887, who married Ernest Livermore and has one son Ernest W., who was born on the 29th of November, 1909. Mr. Gassner gave all of his children the advantages of a good common-school education, thus well equipping them for the responsibilities of life.

The family are all communicants of the Roman Catholic church, and fraternally Mr. Gassner is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being identified with Lodge No. 19. His political views coincide with the principles of the democratic party. Governmental matters have never engaged much of his attention not being an aspirant to public office, but for the past seventeen years he has served on the local school board, the cause of education having always found in him an ardent supporter. A gratifying measure of success has been accorded Mr. Gassner in his undertakings, but it has been the well merited reward of thrift and tireless energy, as he arrived in this country in his early manhood without capital or influence to assist him in his pursuits. The position he holds today has been attained through his own unaided efforts, and he is justly entitled to the esteem and respect he is accorded in the community where he has so long resided.

ALVA E. RINGO, who was born in Marion county in 1868, resides on his father's old homestead, which is situated three miles southeast of Gervais. He is a son of Hamilton H. and Rispa (Stevens) Ringo. The father was born in Missouri, August 29, 1832, and died in Marion county, May 2, 1892. He received his education in Missouri and during those hours in which he was not occupied with school work assisted his mother. In 1851 he came with his mother and a brother, W. H. Ringo, to Oregon. On October 18, 1860, he married Rispa Stevens, a daughter of Hanson and Levina (Wickert) Stevens, born May 17, 1843. Her father was married in Indiana and from there removed with his wife to Iowa, where they lived about seven years before they came to Marion county, Oregon, where he acquired a claim of six hundred and forty acres. Mr. Stevens passed away in Portland in 1884, long surviving his wife, who had preceded him in death, dying on the old homestead on North Howel Prairie, Marion county in 1859. There were ten children in the family of Hanson and Levina Stevens: one who died in infancy; Emma Jane, who passed away when fourteen years of age; Isaac; Mrs. Rebecca Mount; Mrs. Ringo; Mrs. Christina Esson; Mrs. Sarah McKubbins; Mrs. Mary Smith; Mrs. Mattie Cahill; and Millard. Mrs. Sarah McKubbins and Mrs. Mattie Cahill make their home at Dayton, Washington, and the others live in Marion county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton H. Ringo went through the hardships of pioneer life and the father served for a time in the Indian war in eastern Washington. Hamilton H. Ringo and his brother, W. H., soon after their arrival in Oregon purchased one-half of the tract of land which is known as the John T. Smith donation land claim, which part consisted of two hundred and ninety acres and is located twelve miles north of Salem, on the French prairie. Our subject's father operated his portion of this farm until the time of his death, owning at that date one hundred and forty acres. His wife, having reached the age of sixty-eight years, and her son Alva, of this review, are living on the old homestead. In the family of Hamilton H. and Rispa (Stevens) Ringo were fourteen children: Mrs. Roxie A. Groschong, of Albany, Oregon; Emma, deceased; Alva E., of this review; Mrs. Effie Richie, of Salem; Steven D., of Livermore, California; Mrs. Katie McKee, of Albany; Mrs. Mary I. Galoway, deceased; Byron H. and Guy E., both of whom reside on the homestead; Mrs. Dollie Buchner, of Albany; Jessie, at home; Robert, of California; and two children who died in infancy. Hamilton H. Ringo gave his support to the democratic party. He was an industrious man, energetic, thrifty and highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was engaged in farm work during all the time he lived in Oregon. His belief was that of the Baptist church.

Alva E. Ringo was reared under the parental roof, received a good business education and at the age of twenty-three years, the time of his father's death, took charge of the old homestead, which he has since operated, except for one year which he spent in California and one summer in eastern Washington. Residing with his mother and giving her the support of a faithful son, he operates the farm on shares.

Mr. Ringo maintains an independent position in regard to political parties and votes for such men and measures as he deems best fitted to serve to the greatest benefit of all the people irrespective of party lines. His time has been largely occupied with the duties of farm life and he has found no time for active participation in work of a public character, although he takes that righteous interest in all matters undertaken for the public welfare. He and his mother adhere to the faith of the Church of God. Having resided all his life in Marion county, he has a host of loyal friends of long standing and is held by all who know him in the highest regard. He has gained a reputation which ranks him among the prominent and loyal citizens of the community in which he lives.

ERNEST F. CRUSE, who is one of the prosperous young business men of Estacada, Clackamas county, being a member of the mercantile firm of Duncan & Cruse Brothers, was born in Schleisingerville, Wisconsin, on March 30, 1882. He is a son of William P. and Mary (Doerenbecher) Cruse, the father a native of Westphalia, Germany, and the mother of Kewaskum, Wisconsin. The parents were married in Wisconsin and resided in that state nearly all their lives, the father having been engaged there in the mercantile business for over twenty-nine years. Previous to that time he was in the mercantile business in Germany, although he came to America when he was yet a young man. The mother passed away December 19, 1891, and the father October 17, 1903. In their family were five children: William, who is a traveling salesman residing at Brainard, Minnesota; Edward, who is in the mercantile business at Osakis, Minnesota; Clara, the wife of F. J. Pelzel, a railroad agent at Barnesville, Minnesota; H. M.; and Ernest F., of this review.

Ernest F. Cruse was reared and educated in his native state, and on coming to Oregon, with his brother, H. M. Cruse, engaged in the mercantile business. He is one of the enterprising young business men of Estacada, and the firm of Duncan & Cruse Brothers carries on an extensive mercantile business. Besides his interest in this store, Mr. Cruse also owns a share in his father's estate at Rice Lake, Wisconsin.

On the 18th of July, 1911, Mr. Cruse wedded Miss Sadie A. Mooney, who was born in Wisconsin in 1886, a daughter of William and Isabel (Stevens) Mooney, the mother a native of Wisconsin, and the father of Canada. The mother passed away in 1909, and the father is residing in Superior, Wisconsin. In their family were two children: James, of Superior; and Mrs. Cruse. Fraternally Mr. Cruse is identified with the Knights of Columbus, belonging to the lodge at Portland, and both he and Mrs. Cruse are members of the Catholic church. He is a progressive citizen, public spirited and an enterprising merchant, and is considered one of the rising young business men of Estacada.

ADAM BARR arrived in Oregon nearly sixty years ago, and throughout this entire period he has been identified with agricultural pursuits in Columbia county, owning and developing a farm which he has made one of the valuable properties in the northern part of the state. He was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, November 23, 1835, a son of Andrew and Lucretia (Carter) Barr, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of the state of New York. The parental grandfather was a native of Germany, while his wife was born in the Dutch colony of New Jersey. The marriage of Andrew Barr and Lucretia Carter occurred in Ohio and in that state the father died in 1841, after which the mother came to Oregon, making the overland trip with an emigrant train and settling in Columbia county. She was accompanied by her five sons, while a married daughter remained in Ohio, where she has since passed away. Two other daughters had died previous to the removal of the family to the northwest. The mother married again, her second husband being John Barr, a brother of her first husband, but he was drowned a month after their arrival in Oregon. Mrs. Barr passed away in 1876, survived by four of her children: Adam; George, living at La Center, Washington; William, a resident of Columbia county, Oregon; and James, also of this county.

Being the oldest member of his mother's family, Adam Barr largely devoted the period of his boyhood, youth and early manhood to aiding his mother in the work of the farm and providing for the support of the younger children. He was but a young lad when he crossed the plains and was here reared amid the wild scenes and environment of pioneer life, sharing with the family in all the privations and hardships which are incident to the establishment of a home on the frontier. In 1864 he returned to Ohio, where he was married and a year later he again came to Oregon, where he started in business on his own account. At that time he purchased a farm known as the James Hill donation claim, which he has since owned and improved. When the land came into his possession it was covered with a heavy growth of timber and brush. This he has largely cleared away and has transformed the land into very productive fields, having now one of the finest farms in this section of the state. It is situated a mile and a half from the town of Clatskanie and he has admitted his sons to a partnership in the business. All of the evidences of progressive agriculture are here found and the fields annually yield golden tribute for the care and labor bestowed upon them.

On the 21st of March, 1865, Mr. Barr was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Sagle, who was born in Virginia and went to Ohio in her childhood days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Sagle of the Old Dominion. The Sagle family numbered eleven children, all of whom are deceased with the exception of Fenton Sagle, of Illinois. The death of Mrs. Barr occurred January 11, 1898, and three sons and one daughter, as well as her husband, were left to mourn her loss. These were: John A., who owns and operates a valuable farm of three hundred and twenty acres in Columbia county; Joseph William, who is associated with his father in business; James A., who is also the owner of a good farm in Columbia county; and Mary, the wife of Albert Seffert, of the same county. Another daughter, Lucretia, who was the wife of Daniel Rice passed away previous to the mother, her death occurring in 1897.

In his political views Mr. Barr has long been an advocate of democratic principles. He has held the office of county commissioner and was also justice of the peace, for one term. But while he has ever been loyal to the duties which have devolved upon him in a public connection, he has never sought nor desired political preferment, wishing rather to give his undivided attention to his business affairs. His residence in Oregon covers a period of almost sixty years. He has witnessed the marvelous development of the northwest as towns and cities have been founded and developed and as the wild land has been reclaimed and converted into splendid farms and ranches. Faithfully doing his duty day by day, he has assisted materially in the improvement of Columbia county and in this section of the state is held in high regard.

JAMES L. MCCOLM is residing on a forty acre farm which he owns, in Josephine county, near Wilderville. He was born in Iowa, January 28, 1862, a son of James H. and Emily (Thompson) McColm, in whose family were twelve children. The parents removed from Iowa to Kansas and there remained for four years, after which they went by rail to Oregon, settling near Grants Pass, where the father took up a homestead. He resided on that farm for a considerable period of time but later disposed of it.

James L. McColm acquired a common-school education and remained at home with his parents until he attained the age of twenty-two years. He then engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own account, purchasing an eighty acre farm on the Applegate river. He improved that property but later sold it and bought the place on which he now lives, which comprises forty acres of well improved and fertile land.

In early manhood Mr. McColm wedded Miss Mary A. Jones, a native of Kansas, and to them four children have been born, Edith, Bessie, Laverne and Freda. One of the daughters is engaged in teaching school in Klamath Falls.

James L. McColm is a republican, has held the position of road overseer for one year and has been school director of the local school board for several terms. He is highly regarded in the community in which he lives and he takes an active interest in matters which concern the public welfare. He is progressive, affable by nature and possesses good business judgment, with the result that he has an extensive acquaintance and is greatly esteemed by those who know him.

SILAS HOLMES HAZARD for a number of years maintained a position of distinction as a leading lawyer of western Oregon. He practiced in Coos county, being located for some time at Empire and later at Marshfield, and that he was an extremely well read lawyer is indicated by the fact that he had one of the most complete law libraries in the state outside of Portland. He was a representative of a family that won distinction in connection with American affairs—a family probably of English extraction. He was born in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, June 16, 1838, a son of the Rev. Silas Holmes Hazard, Sr., who was a minister of the Presbyterian church. The son acquired his education in the public schools and in 1855 entered the University of Iowa, in which he remained as a student for two years. During his youth and early manhood he was identified with merchandising for eighteen months in connection with his brother-in-law, G. D. Palmer, of Iowa City, Iowa. He then turned his attention to farming, which he followed in that state until 1860, when he began the study of law with the firm of Patterson & Robinson, of Iowa City. In 1864 he was admitted to the bar and then crossed the plains to San Francisco, California, but the following year returned to Iowa. He then purchased a tract of land near the old home and in connection with farming practiced law for a time. At length he entirely abandoned agricultural pursuits and concentrated his time and energies upon the profession, which he followed until 1873. In that year he again came to the Pacific coast, settling at Empire, which was then the county seat of Coos county. There he at once opened an office and soon became a popular lawyer, winning a large and distinctively representative clientele. In 1876 he was elected district attorney and discharged the duties of the office so capably that he was reelected in 1878. He gave good satisfaction in that connection and more and more firmly established himself in public regard as a lawyer of superior ability. He was connected with much of the important litigation tried in the courts of Coos county. His handling of his cases was full and comprehensive, indicating his thorough knowledge of the points involved and of the law applicable thereto. On the 25th of July, 1900, he removed to Marshfield, where he continued to make his home until his death, although continuing his practice in Empire. His large law library enabled him to inform himself concerning any precedent or principle of law, and when he entered the court room he was ever well prepared not only for attack but for defense.

Mr. Hazard was married three times. On the 27th of January, 1867, he wedded Miss Margaret Shireliff, who passed away on the 24th of February, 1869, leaving one son, Louis Holmes, who is now a banker of Coquille, Oregon. On the 3d of July, 1876, Mr. Hazard married Miss Emma Watson, whose demise occurred on the 4th of December, 1880. On the 1st of January, 1883, he wedded Miss Frances Adele McKnight, a daughter of William and Mary Ellen (Wright) McKnight. Mrs. Hazard is a lady of prominence and culture, occupying a leading position in social circles in Marshfield and Coos county. She is a native of Oregon, having spent her entire life in this state. She now belongs to the Eastern Star and to the Episcopal church—membership relations that indicate much of the character of her interests and activities. Mr. Hazard was a most progressive and public-spirited man, cooperating in all movements for the welfare of the community, honorable and upright in all his dealings. He was devoted to his family and faithful in his friendships and his loyalty to the interests of his clients became proverbial. In a word, he was true to every trust and thus merited and enjoyed the confidence and good-will of all who knew him.

DONALD CAMPBELL is one of the well known and highly respected citizens of Coos county, where he has engaged in the development of a fine ranch consisting of two hundred acres and also in the operation of a very large and successful woodcutting outfit which he has built near Marshfield and to which he gives his personal oversight and supervision. He is a native of Scotland, having been born in that country in 1839, and is the son of Malcolm and Jane Campbell. His parents were both natives of Scotland where their ancestors for many generations back had lived, his ancestors on the paternal side having originally been identified with the historic Campbell clan of old Scotland. In the family of Malcolm and Jane Campbell were eight children, namely: John, who is married and lives at Seattle, Washington; Angus, who has passed away, leaving a large family; Donald, of this review; Ronald, who resides in Canada and has a family; James, also married and residing in Seattle; Mary, the widow of Charles McEochen, of Canada, and the mother of a large family; Elizabeth, the widow of William Blair, of Canada, who also has a large family; and Margaret, the deceased wife of James Kelley, a Canadian. The father of this family passed away during the period of the Civil war.

Donald Campbell was reared in his parents' home and was educated in the public schools in the districts in which he lived. With his father and mother he emigrated from his native land of Scotland to Canada in 1854, where the family home was established upon an uncleared tract of land in a portion of the Dominion which at the time of the coming of the Campbells was but sparsely settled. Upon that farm Donald Campbell continued to reside under the parental roof and devoted his entire time to the clearing and developing of the land and working for the support of the family, contributing all of his labor and means to that end during the earlier years of his life. At the time of the breaking out of the Civil war his sympathies were wholly on the side of the southern cause and with great energy he determined to persuade his father to permit him to become a volunteer in the Confederate service. He was not successful in getting the parental consent, however, and like a true Scotch son he remained with father and mother and the bairns at home and to their keep and comfort he gave his strength and loyal care. He continued thus to devote himself until the time of his father's death, which occurred during the Civil war period, while his mother passed away in 1871. Immediately following the death of his mother he removed to the Pacific coast and for a short time remained in California. Later he went to Oregon and spent one winter at Portland. In the opening of the spring he cruised along the Oregon coast and while on that tour of sight-seeing and inspection he saw for the first time the modern but none the less marvelous hand saw at work in the great lumber mills, through whose hungry maws the virgin forest was making its way to the commercial lumber markets of the world. He continued his journey as far as Westport and at that place secured employment, for a very short time only, in a cannery establishment, and from there he traveled to Astoria, where he remained for some time. While there he became one of the employes in the excavation work required to be done in laying the foundation for the present customs house. After this he worked at different occupations for many months and later started on an independent prospecting tour down the coast and, at this time, paid a visit to his brother who owned a beautiful farm in the Willamette valley his property being situated at Hubbard. He stayed for a brief period only at Hubbard and then returned to Portland and from that city started on a long overland tour through the mountainous territory and finally arrived at Eugene, where he remained for some time, and then became interested in the lumbering business, taking independent contracts in logging in the timber belt of this state. After completing a number of long contracts he removed to Roseburg and from there to Coos bay in 1873, where he remained for some time, during which period he was engaged in work in many of the large lumber mills in that district. Later he entered into the logging contract business but his last venture in that line was not successful and he turned his attention to the business of supplying ship timber and in that work he continued for seven years, meeting with gratifying success. During the time he was engaged in the ship timber business he purchased a timber claim on Coos river from Dan Davis. He later proved up on this property and received a certificate of ownership direct from the government. Some years later he disposed of that property at a satisfactory advance and engaged in the logging business, in which he continued for some time, and then removed to Marshfield, where he established himself in the fuel supply business, owning a large wood yard in connection with that enterprise. This business was established in 1890 and since the time of its establishment he has built a very large and complete wood-cutting outfit which he erected upon a large float, with which he is enabled to prepare his own wood for the market and in addition as necessity and opportunity present themselves uses his outfit for commercial purposes at various points along the river frontage. In addition to this business he is also the owner of two hundred acres of very fine land on the Coos river and owns a number of fine business properties in Marshfield and a considerable amount of personal property of various kinds.

Mr. Campbell is liberal in his political views and has never been ambitious for political preferment. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Labor and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He inclines to be liberal-minded as regards religious matters. He takes a commendable interest in the social development and well-being of the community in which he lives and has been successful in the main in his business adventures and, notwithstanding he devoted a very considerable portion of his early manhood to the care of his father and mother and their family he has secured for himself a competence which has made him one of the independent citizens of his adopted state. Among his associates and friends he is known as a man of integrity in business dealings and of upright character in his social intercourse with his fellows.

MRS. SARAH M. APPLGATE, of Yoncalla, has spent practically her entire life in the Sunset state. Her birth occurred in Ogden, Utah, on the 5th of September, 1851, her parents being Caleb E. and Lilly M. (Minar) Tracy, who were born, reared and married in Jefferson county, New York. In 1851 they came west, crossing the plains with ox and horse teams and spending the winter of 1851-2 in Ogden, Utah. In the spring of 1852 they journeyed on to Oregon, locating in Clackamas county, ten miles from Oregon City, where they took up a donation claim. In 1872 Caleb E. Tracy left the farm in the care of his son, James M., and took up his abode in Drain, Douglas county, where he engaged in merchandising. Two years later, in 1874, he came to Yoncalla, where he continued in business as a merchant for several years. He passed away on September 29, 1897, when in the eighty-seventh year of his age, the community thus losing one of its honored pioneer settlers and representative citizens. His wife survived him until March 20, 1911, and was in the ninety-fourth year of her age at the time of her death.

Sarah M. Tracy was reared under the parental roof and acquired a good education in the common schools. On the 20th of February, 1878, she gave her hand in marriage to Milton Applegate, who was born on the old Applegate donation claim near Yoncalla, Douglas county, October 14, 1854. His parents were Charles and Melinda (Miller) Applegate, more extended mention of whom is made in connection with the sketch of George Applegate, which appears on another page of this work. Milton Applegate was reared to manhood on the home farm and devoted his time and energies to general agricultural pursuits throughout his entire business career, becoming one of the successful farmers as well as substantial and highly esteemed citizens of the Yoncalla valley. His demise occurred on the 23d of June, 1889, when he was thirty-five years of age. In politics he was a staunch republican but never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Applegate were born eight children, five of whom still survive, as follows: Adelaide, who is at home; Mildred, the wife of J. E. Hobbs, of San Francisco, California; Minar and Aubrey, both of whom reside in Scotts valley, Douglas county; and Bertram C., living in Portland, Oregon. The mother of these children resides in Yoncalla, where she has an extensive circle of warm friends. She has witnessed the growth and development of this state for more than a half century and is largely familiar with its annals from a pioneer period down to modern times.

WILLIAM LINDSTROM is one of the well known farmers of Cooson, Oregon, where he is successfully engaged in the conduct of a highly improved ranch comprising one hundred and sixty-four acres. He was born in Finland in 1861, and is a son of Nick and Susan (Abrams) Lindstrom, both of whom were natives of Finland and died in that country many years ago. They were the parents of one child, William, who is the subject of this review.

William Lindstrom was reared at home and at an early age in life took upon himself the burden of self-support. When he had attained his fourteenth year he was engaged as a laborer on a farm in Finland and continued in that occupation until 1890, at which time he emigrated to the United States, settling in North Bend, Oregon. On reaching the western hemisphere he first found employment in the ship yards of A. M. Simpson and continued in that work for eleven consecutive years. He then purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land upon which he established his home and lived for five years. Later he sold that property and bought one hundred and sixty-four acres of land located near Cooson which he has since cultivated and improved with modern buildings. He engages principally in dairying.

William Lindstrom was united in marriage, April 14, 1889, to Miss Sophie Jacobson, a daughter of Jacob and Annie (Monsin) Jacobson. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson were the parents of six children: Anne, John, Sanna, and Marie, all of whom reside in Finland; Sophie, the wife of the subject of this review; and Eric, a resident of Finland. The father of Mrs. Lindstrom died in 1896 and the mother died at the age of eighty-six years in 1911.

To Mr. and Mrs. Lindstrom five children have been born. Annie married John Carlson, of Marshfield, Oregon, and they have one son, William. Victor, who was born May 2, 1891, took a course in dairying in the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis. He resides at home. Carl, born December 27, 1892, in North Bend, Oregon, died April 24, 1899, in the same city. Hilda, born September 19, 1894, is a graduate of the North Bend high school, where she pursued studies with special reference to a business career, resides at home. Francis William was born February 23, 1904, and is a pupil in the public school.

William Lindstrom is affiliated with the republican party and for the past three years has been a member of the board of directors of the school district in which he lives. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. He ranks as one of the leading and representative farmers of Coos county and is a man who takes a lively interest in all enterprises of a public nature which tend to improve the condition of the people in his county and state.

JOHN HAGELSTEIN is numbered among those who are actively engaged in the reclamation of marsh lands in the vicinity of Upper Klamath lake. His home is beautifully situated with a splendid view of the mountains and the broad expanse of the lake before him. His present place of residence is far separated from his birthplace, for he is a native of Wurtemberg, Germany. He was born July 22, 1870, a son of John and Barbara (Striffler) Hagelstein, who are still residents of Wurtemberg, where the father follows the occupation of farming. In the family were three sons and two daughters, of whom John is the eldest and the only one that has ever come to the United States. He arrived in America on the 8th of November, 1893, and made his way direct to Klamath county, Oregon, settling about three miles from his present home. He has resided at Naylor, now Algoma, for nineteen years. He has always followed farming both in the fatherland and in the new world. Soon after his arrival here he secured a homestead, which he still owns. He now has two ranches, his home place comprising five hundred and forty acres, while a mile and a half to the north he still retains possession of one hundred and twenty acres of the tract which he homesteaded. Both places are well improved and he is now successfully carrying on general farming and stock-raising. He is reclaiming about two hundred acres of marsh land adjoining his home place on Upper Klamath lake. The view from this place is one which would delight the soul of an artist, for it looks out upon Mount McLoughlin as well as upon the waters of the "inland sea."

Mr. Hagelstein was married in Germany in 1889 to Miss Mary Bauer, a native of Wurtemberg, born in 1865. They have four children: John R., who owns and operates a ranch adjoining his father's; George; William, who is a junior in the high school of Klamath Falls; and Fred. All of the sons still reside at home.

Mr. Hagelstein votes with the republican party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He has served as road supervisor and is now his party's candidate for county commissioner. He and his wife are consistent Christian people, holding membership in the Pre-byterian church. His has been a well spent life, honorable and upright in every relation, and he and his family have many friends in Klamath county.

DR. J. L. WOODEN, resident physician of Clatskanie, is a worthy representative of the medical profession in Columbia county, where his ability is recognized in an extensive and growing practice. He is yet a young man and the future undoubtedly holds in store for him greater success. He was born at Ness City, Ness county, Kansas, February 22, 1882, his parents being William F. and Alice H. (Yeager) Wooden, the former a native of Indiana, and the latter of West Virginia. The parents were married in Kansas, where they resided until 1891, when they came to Oregon. They first settled in Portland and have since remained residents of this state, their home being now at Mount Tabor. The father followed farming for a few years after his marriage but since that time has given his attention to railroading in different capacities. Unto him and his wife have been born seven children, of whom Dr. Wooden is the eldest. The others are: Mrs. J. A. Wilson, of Portland; Roy L., who is engaged in business in Portland; Mrs. Eva Herman, whose husband is a contractor of Portland; Willie, who died in infancy; one who died unnamed; and Mary Ida, whose death occurred when she was ten years of age.

Passing through consecutive grades in the acquirement of his education, Dr. J. L. Wooden was finally graduated from the high school of Ashland when nineteen years of age, after which he spent a year as a student in the State University, at Eugene, Oregon. He completed his professional course in the medical department of the Oregon State University, at Portland, Oregon, from which he was graduated with the class of 1906. For a year thereafter he practiced in the Good Samaritan Hospital of Portland and in that connection gained wide and beneficial experience. On the expiration of the year he came to Clatskanie, where he is still practicing. He is conscientious in the performance of all professional duties and is accorded a liberal patronage, which is indicative of the confidence and trust entertained for him in his professional capacity by his fellow townsmen.

On the 24th of September, 1907, Dr. Wooden was married to Miss Mary Etta Rawlings, who was born in Park Hill, Ontario, February 28, 1883, a daughter of Mrs. Ellen (Crawford) Rawlings. Her father died when she was only eight years of age and her mother now lives on Portland Heights, the most attractive residence district in the city of Portland. Mrs. Wooden was the second in a family of four children, the others being: George, who is now engaged in the live-stock business in Canada; Mrs. Minnie Byers, of Los Angeles, California; and Ella, who is a graduate physician. She resides with her mother in Portland.

The Doctor and his wife both hold membership in the Presbyterian church and are interested in all that pertains to good work and to public progress. While Dr. Wooden usually votes with the republican party, he is yet liberal in his views and somewhat independent in his affiliation. He belongs to Clatskanie Lodge, No. 133, A. F. & A. M., and also to the Odd Fellows lodge, the Modern Woodmen camp, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Foresters court and the Macabees lodge, all in Clatskanie. His brethren of these fraternities hold him in high regard and wherever he has gone he has won the friendship and good-will of those with whom he has been associated. Much of his life has been passed in the northwest and is an exemplification of the enterprising spirit of this section of the country.

WILLIAM HELLIWELL, a capitalist of Yoncalla, is well known as one of the substantial and influential citizens of that town. Since March, 1892, or for the past two decades, he has resided continuously in Douglas county. His birth occurred in Yorkshire, England, on the 20th of August, 1849, his parents being Thomas and Mally (Horsefall) Helliwell, who spent their entire lives in that country. The father was a wood turner by trade.

At the early age of eight years William Helliwell began working in the cotton mills, spending a half day in the mills and the remaining half in school. When a youth of thirteen he laid aside his text-books and devoted his entire time to work in the mills. In 1869, when twenty years of age, he crossed the Atlantic to the United States, locating in Minnesota with Greenwood, Charles and John Nuttall, three brothers, whose sister he married in the following year. The three Nuttall brothers were awarded contracts in connection with the building of the Great Northern railroad out of St. Paul, and Mr. Helliwell was employed at railroad construction work for about four years. On the expiration of that period he purchased a tract of land in McLeod county, Minnesota, there residing until March, 1892, when he came west to Oregon and located in Yoncalla, Douglas county. He purchased seventy acres of land adjoining the town and planted twelve acres thereof to fruit. Subsequently he bought an adjoining tract of thirty-six acres, twenty-five acres of which had already been planted to fruit.

About two years ago, however, he disposed of all of his land and now retains his town residence only. His record is an excellent illustration of the power of industry and perseverance in the attainment of success, for he came to this country empty-handed and has since worked his way steadily upward to a position of prosperity and prominence in the community where he resides.

In July, 1870, Mr. Helliwell was united in marriage to Miss Evina Nuttall, a native of Yorkshire, England, by whom he has eight children, as follows: Frank J., who is engaged in business in Portland, Oregon; Ernest, a business man of Cottage Grove, this state; Clara, the wife of L. A. Daugherty, of Portland; Barton, assistant cashier in the State Bank of Yoncalla; Sidney, who is in the service of the John Clark Saddlery Company at Portland; Albert, who is employed by his brother Ernest at Cottage Grove; Ruth A., a trained nurse in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Portland; and Lena, who is the wife of H. T. Hartley, a stockman of Crook county, Oregon.

Mr. Helliwell is a republican in politics and has served as a member of the town council of Yoncalla, while for six years he served on the Yoncalla school board. He is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Alpha Lodge, No. 170. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Presbyterian church, in which he serves as an elder and to which his wife also belongs. He has risen through concentrated efforts intelligently directed, and the success which has rewarded him is well merited.

GEORGE SYLVESTER DAVIS, the owner of a ranch comprising two hundred and eighty-eight acres and situated six miles from Myrtle Point, on the Coquille road, is engaged in dairying on an extensive scale. He has been a resident of Coos county since 1900 and has gained an enviable reputation as a successful and enterprising agriculturist. His birth occurred in Wisconsin on the 11th of May, 1863, his parents being J. B. and Polly (Wolfe) Davis. The father was born in Ohio in 1836, while the mother's birth occurred in that state in 1843. In the spring of 1876 the family home was established in Humboldt county, California, where J. B. Davis purchased property and engaged in contracting. He now makes his home with his son George, his wife having passed away in 1902. His children were four in number, namely: Xenia L., who is engaged in the teaming business at Oakland, California; Will O., a building contractor of Ferndale, California; Isaac W., who died in Ferndale, California; and George Sylvester, of this review.

George Sylvester Davis, who was a youth of thirteen when he accompanied his parents on their removal to California, began providing for his own support at that early age and worked for others at various occupations during a period of sixteen years. At the end of that time he was married and rented a dairy farm, operating the same successfully for a number of years. In the meantime, however, he purchased a ranch of three hundred and sixty acres in Coos county, Oregon, but has since sold a part of that property so that it now comprises only two hundred and eighty-eight acres. He first came to this state in 1900 and settled on a farm in Coos county which he rented from R. C. Dement. He likewise conducted the Norway Creamery for five years but in 1905 sold the same to the present owners. As above stated, he conducts a dairy ranch on a large scale and in this connection has won a measure of success which entitles him to recognition among the substantial and representative citizens of the community.

On the 11th of May, 1892, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Lucy E. Trigg, a native of Canada and a daughter of William and Mary Ann (Edwards) Trigg, both of whom were born in England. The father passed away in 1907, and the mother survives and makes her home with our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. William Trigg were born the following children: Marie, deceased; John, of California; William, who also lives in California; Sarah, the wife of C. A. Pettengill of Coquille, Oregon; Robert, who lives in Canada; George, who makes his home in Washington; Mrs. Lucy E. Davis; Charlotte Ellen, the wife of W. L. Kistner of Coquille, Oregon; and Mary Jane, the wife of G. W. Kistner of California. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two children: Harold Warren, who was born on the 20th of June, 1893, and is pursuing a course in electrical engineering; and Otto Loyal, born December 3, 1897, who is attending school.

Mr. Davis is liberal in his political views and in exercising his right of franchise is not bound by party ties, ever placing patriotism above partisanship. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, while his wife belongs to the Women of Woodcraft. They are widely recognized as being of genuine personal worth and have an extensive circle of friends. Mr. Davis' life has been one of intense and wisely directed activity, crowned with well deserved success, and his record may well serve as a source of inspiration to others, showing what may be accomplished when ability is coupled with determination.

HON. ALBERT GALLATIN HOVEY.

Those forces which have contributed most to the development, improvement and benefit of the state of Oregon have received impetus from the labors of the Hon. Albert Gallatin Hovey, whose life record has been a credit and honor to the state which has honored him. He was distinctively a man of affairs and one who wielded a wide influence. Persistency of purpose and unfaltering energy enabled him to accomplish his purpose where men of less resolute spirit would have failed, and in all that he undertook he was actuated by high ideals that sought the benefit of his home locality or of the state at large. He was a native of Londonderry, New Hampshire, born July 11, 1824, and was descended in both the paternal and maternal lines from old and prominent American families closely identified with the history of New England. The earliest American ancestor of Mr. Hovey arrived here from England about 1637 and finally settled at the town of Ipswich, Massachusetts, where he left numerous descendants. One of these, Joseph Hovey, removed from that state to the southern part of New Hampshire about 1783. Here was born to him a son, John, at the town of Londonderry, in 1786, who was later known as Captain John Hovey and was the father of the subject of this review. Although he had received no material inheritance from his ancestor, nature had gifted him with an observing eye and a retentive memory. He had comparatively little opportunity to attend school and at an early age was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, which he so thoroughly mastered that in time he became most proficient along that line. Moreover, he was a citizen of value in the community where he lived, meriting and enjoying the respect of all. He died in 1851 at the age of sixty-five years, and for some time was survived by his wife. In early manhood he had wedded Abigail Duston, of Manchester, New Hampshire, who was a descendant of Mrs. Hannah Duston, who witnessed the slaughter of her husband and infant by the Indians who then made her a captive. With one other prisoner, however, she succeeded in escaping one night after scalping several of her captors with their own tomahawks, and then made her way through the wilderness back to a settlement. She was a splendid type of courageous Puritan womanhood, strong and intrepid in spirit, yet gentle and kind in manner. Mrs. Abigail Hovey, mother of Albert G. Hovey was afforded liberal advantages for higher education and possessed, moreover, an innate culture and refinement which made her noted for her general intelligence and her influence. She survived her husband for a long period, passing away in 1883 when nearly ninety years of age. In the family were eight children, the eldest and the youngest being daughters.

When quite young Albert G. Hovey accompanied his parents on their removal to Marietta, Ohio, where he pursued a public-school education. He was about twenty-five years of age when, in 1849, he joined a company of twenty men that crossed the plains with ox teams to California, attracted by the discovery of gold in that state. They left St. Joseph, Missouri, in April, and while en route four of their party died of cholera which raged among the emigrants. They proceeded by way of the North Platte, South Pass, Bear river, Sublett's cutoff, Humboldt and Carson valleys to Sacramento, where the party arrived in October. Mr. Hovey there secured a mining outfit and went to Rhoades's bar, where the fall months were passed. The company, however, spent the winter in the diggings at Long's Hollow in the Weaver district. Mr. Hovey did not meet with the success in the mines which he had anticipated and the fact that congress had passed the donation land claim act for Oregon led him to make his way northward to this state. He proceeded from San Francisco by steamer to Portland, where he arrived in October, 1850, and thence made his way up the Willamette valley, stopping at Oregon City, Salem, Albany and Brownsville, and at length settling at Corvallis, which was then known as Marysville, becoming the first school teacher there. He began his work as an educator in December, instructing the children of the Dickson, Stewart, Avery, Stout, Alexander, Baker, Knott, Trapp, Mulkey and Newton families. He was afterward in the employ of the Hon. Wayman St. Clair, a pioneer merchant, and early in 1851 was appointed clerk of the United States district court for Benton county by O. C. Pratt, one of the judges of the territory. Later he was elected as clerk of the county and while thus serving in the courts he took up the study of law, being admitted to practice in 1853 by Hon. George H. Williams, then United States district judge, while later he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the state. However, he really never entered the profession, preferring business pursuits which made heavy claim upon his time and energies and which were successfully conducted, owing to his careful and systematic management and sound judgment.

Mr. Hovey was twice married. In 1853 he wedded Miss Mary Ellen Mulkey, the eldest daughter of the Hon. Luke Mulkey, a Benton county pioneer. She died in 1861 at the age of twenty-five years. Some years previous to this, or in 1853, Mr. Hovey declined longer to serve in the county offices which he had held and took up his abode upon his donation claim near Corvallis, where he successfully carried on farming until his wife's death. On September 8, 1864, he married again, his second union being with Miss Emily Humphrey, the eldest daughter of the Hon. George and Cynthia Ann (Bristol) Humphrey. Miss Emily Humphrey was born in Ontario, Canada, April 3, 1842, and removed to Illinois and Iowa with her parents about the year 1844 and remained in Iowa until 1854 at which time she emigrated with her parents to Oregon, crossing the plains in ox trains. It took six months to make the trip, and she rode a good part of the way on horseback. Upon their arrival in Oregon they first settled on a farm near Jefferson, in Marion county, where they remained during the first winter, her father, subsequently taking up a donation land claim about eighteen miles west of Eugene. Here she spent her early years bravely withstanding the hardships of pioneer life. She taught school for a short time and afterward attended the public schools of Corvallis, Oregon, and in 1862 for one year a private school in Portland. She has always been a great lover of home and devoted to the interests of her household and family. She is still living and enjoying the fruits of a life of activity, which had its share of hardships. Mr. and Mrs. Hovey became parents of a daughter, Carrie May, and two sons, A. G.

and Blaine H. Both sons are graduates of the University of Oregon and in 1890 A. G. Hovey entered the bank at Eugene as a successor of his father.

Politically Mr. Hovey was a supporter of the republican party and in fact was one of the organizers of the party in this state. At the first state convention he was chosen one of three delegates to the republican national convention held in Chicago in 1860 and instructed for Mr. Seward. None of the three delegates, however, could attend and their proxies were sent to Horace Greeley, of New York, without instructions, who cast their votes for Abraham Lincoln. In 1884 Mr. Hovey was made one of Oregon's six delegates to the national republican convention which again met in Chicago, and there he supported James G. Blaine and John A. Logan. In the meantime he had done excellent service for the state as one of its law makers, having been elected to the senate in 1862, his services continuing through three sessions or until 1866. In that year he established the family home at Portland but after a year removed to Springfield, Lane county, where he carried on milling and merchandising for about twelve years and served as postmaster from 1867 to 1879. He then became a resident of Eugene and was one of the organizers of the Lane County Bank, conducted under the firm style of Hovey, Humphrey & Company. He remained as its president to the time of his death and made it one of the strong financial institutions of the county. In June, 1893, at the time of the wide-spread financial panic, the Lane County Bank suspended payment for a year and again opened its doors for business in June, 1894. During that time there was no demand for a receiver and Mr. Hovey remained in charge, managing the affairs of the institution while all depositors were paid dollar for dollar. He continued actively at the head of the bank until his life's labors were ended. He always took a deep and abiding interest in the welfare of his community and gave earnest and generous support to many measures for the public good. In April, 1889, he was elected mayor of Eugene by a vote of two hundred and eighty-three to fifty-nine and served for two years. He was very active in promoting the building of the railroad from Eugene to the coast and the cause of education found in him a stalwart champion. In the spring of 1893 he was appointed regent of the University of Oregon and so continued until his death, serving as a member of the executive committee of the board and for many years was treasurer of this institution. Again and again Mr. Hovey was called upon to fill positions of public honor and trust. He served on Governor Gibbs' staff, the war governor of Oregon. In 1892 he was made a delegate to the national republican convention to Minneapolis and was also appointed by President Harrison a member of the board of visitors to the annual examinations at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York. He attended there on the 1st and at Minneapolis on the 7th of June, 1892. His was indeed an honored name which malevolence or envy dared not to assail. He stood for high ideals yet utilized practical methods in their attainment and at all times his work was a source of benefit to the state. He died November 27, 1898, and Oregon thereby lost one of its foremost pioneers and honored citizens—a man who had left his impress upon the history of the northwest and its upbuilding.

ALBERT GUY HOVEY is a native of Oregon, having been born in Springfield, June 18, 1869. He is the son of the Hon. A. G. and Emily (Humphrey) Hovey, of whom further mention is made in the preceding sketch.

He was educated in the public schools of Springfield and Eugene and the University of Oregon, from which institution he graduated in the class of 1890. He studied law under A. E. Gallagher of Eugene and was admitted to the bar in October, 1892. However, he never practiced law preferring literary and business pursuits. He accepted a position in the Lane County Bank, a private banking institution of which his father was president and owner with Mr. H. G. Humphrey. He remained there until the bank was transferred to the Chambers-Bristow Banking Company, which took place January, 1904. During the panic of 1893 the bank was closed one year but no receiver was appointed and none was demanded and the depositors were paid in full. Since that time, he with his brother have had a private office for the purpose of attending to their own property and the estate of their late father, Hon. A. G. Hovey.

He is a member of Spencer Butte Lodge, I. O. O. F. of Eugene and is also a valued member of the Eugene Commercial Club. He takes great interest in literary, research and historical work.

BLAINE H. HOVEY, who succeeded to an interest in the banking business of which his father was one of the founders and owners, was born in Springfield, Oregon, and was educated in the public schools of Eugene and the Oregon State University from which he was graduated in 1899, with the B. A. degree. He then went into the banking business with his brother and the two after the father's death took charge of the bank, continuing to manage the institution until January 1, 1904, when they sold out. Blaine Hovey is now engaged in the fire insurance business and also has the care and supervision of his mother's real-estate interests. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a progressive republican but does not seek office. He believes in supporting measures for the welfare of the community and state regardless of politics.

MICHOR E. PAGE is filling the position of postmaster at Clatskanie and is also proprietor of a general mercantile establishment which he has conducted since 1893. His birth occurred in Illinois, in 1860, his parents being Orsamus and Mary (Ross)

Page, the former a native of the state of New York, and the latter of Pennsylvania. They were married in Ohio, where they lived for some years, after which they removed to Macon county, Illinois, where they resided until 1866. In that year they established their home in Will county, Illinois, where the father carried on general agricultural pursuits until his retirement, when he removed to Joliet, Illinois, where he and his wife yet reside, the former at the age of one hundred and three years and the latter at the age of ninety years. Theirs is a remarkable record for longevity. In their family were seven children, of whom five still survive: Ada, the wife of Samuel Fishbeck, of Kansas; Hannah, the wife of Richard Holdsworth, of Ohio; M. E., of this review; Violet, who is married and lives in Texas; Lydia, who is married and resides in Joliet, Illinois; and two who died in infancy.

The youthful days of M. E. Page were spent upon his father's farm in Illinois until he had reached the age of fifteen years, when he started out in life for himself, driving a team and doing other general work for eight years. He then came to Oregon, in April, 1884, settling at Clatskanie, where he secured a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres. This he sold two years later, after which he was employed in a general mercantile store owned by his father-in-law. He spent two years in that way and next worked in the timber woods for two years, after which he went to Alaska. He did not meet with the conditions that he had anticipated in the north and nine months later returned, since which time he has been engaged in business on his own account in Clatskanie. In 1893 he opened the general mercantile store of which he is now proprietor and in the intervening period of eighteen years he has built up a large and profitable business, basing his success upon strictly honorable methods and earnest effort to please his patrons. He is likewise the postmaster of Clatskanie, which office he has filled for nine years. He owns one of the fine business blocks of the town together with residence property here, including the home in which he now lives.

In May, 1889, Mr. Page was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Edgerton, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of William A. and Mary (Gardner) Edgerton, who were natives of Vermont and Kentucky, respectively. Their family numbered five children, of whom three are yet living, namely: Mrs. Page; Nellie, the wife of Ed McClure, of Shelton, Washington; and E. L., living in Clatskanie, Oregon. The father makes his home at Longbeach, California, and is now sixty years of age. The mother passed away in 1878.

Mr. and Mrs. Page have become the parents of four children. Lela, who was born in 1892, is a graduate of the high school of Clatskanie, also of the normal school and has a musical education. She is now engaged in teaching and she makes her home with her parents. Leroy was drowned at the age of ten years. Nellie, born in 1896, is a high-school student and is also studying music. Mary, born in 1902, is attending the public schools. Both Mr. and Mrs. Page hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and their well spent lives have gained for them the high regard of all with whom they have come in contact. They have many friends throughout Columbia county and their own home is justly celebrated for its warm-hearted hospitality. Mr. Page belongs to Clatskanie Camp, No. 5241, M. W. A., and also the Odd Fellows lodge. His political support is given the republican party and while not a politician in the sense of office seeking, he has served for nine years as a member of the school board and also as city treasurer for six years. As a custodian of public funds he has proved himself most faithful and his record as both a man and citizen is one which has gained for him the high regard and confidence of all with whom he has been associated.

JOSEPH HUGILL, who resides on his farm six miles southeast of Gervais, was born September 26, 1853, in Yorkshire, England, his parents being Thomas and Mary (Rigg) Hugill, both of whom spent their entire lives in England. Throughout his active career the father engaged in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred on December 12, 1878, and the mother passed away in 1858. Five children were born to them: Betsy Ann and Sarah, who are residing in England; Mary Jane, who is living in Virginia and is the wife of Thomas Swayles; Margaret, living in England; and Joseph, the subject of this sketch.

Joseph Hugill received a common-school education in England and started out upon his independent career at the age of twenty-four years while he was in his native country. After being employed on a farm for three years he came to America, settling first at Brantford, Ontario, Canada. He remained there for only a short time before removing to Hamilton, where he was employed as a farm hand for two years previous to his removal to the United States. When he left Canada he came direct to the Dakotas, where he took up three hundred and twenty acres of land, upon which he resided for six years previous to coming to Oregon and settling in Salem for a period of two years. At the end of that time he rented land near Parkersville for two years and then in Clackamas county for a similar length of time before removing to Fairfield, Marion county, where he remained five years. Subsequently he purchased one hundred and thirty-six acres of land located six miles southeast of Gervais and has made that property his home ever since. Although he has disposed of part of the land, he has at present fifty-seven acres of well improved property, forty-five of which he has brought to a high state of productivity. His farming interests are carefully managed and his sound judgment and untiring industry are manifest in the prosperity which has come to him.

In September, 1877, Joseph Hugill was married to Miss Mary Wrightson, whose birth occurred in Ingleby, England, on the 18th of March, 1855, her parents being Charles and Hannah (Elliott) Wrightson, who remained in their native country until after their marriage. Upon leaving England they came to America in 1855 and settled in Ontario, Canada, where they remained two years before returning to England and residing in that country until 1882 when they again came to America. They then located and remained in Hamilton, Ontario, for two years previous to removing to North Dakota, where they resided until 1891, the year in which they came to Oregon. After living in Marion county for a short time they removed to Polk county, where they have since remained. Mr. Wrightson was gamekeeper in his native land and since coming to America has followed farming. He purchased land in Polk county, which is now owned by his son Frank. At present, at the age of eighty-two years, he is living with Mr. Hugill the death of his wife having occurred in 1910. Eight children were born to him: Mrs. Hugill; Charles, of Alberta, Canada; Henry E., of Portland; Annie, residing in Manitoba; Jane, the widow of Hugh Cosgrove, of Woodburn; Frank, living in Alberta, Canada; Emma, the wife of Thomas Kinchin, of Alberta; and Elizabeth H., the deceased wife of William Henderson, of California. To Mr. and Mrs. Hugill six children have been born: John Charles, whose birth occurred July 27, 1878, and who is at home; Joseph H., born in England, December 21, 1880, a resident of Portland; Mary Anna, born in Canada, September 13, 1882, who is the wife of John Imlah, of Fairfield, Oregon; Alex. William, who is residing in Portland and was born May 12, 1886, in Dakota; Lizzie, who was born January 23, 1888, and taught school for several years previous to her marriage to Omer Hastie, of Monitor, Oregon; and Emma F., whose birth occurred on the 30th of November, 1889, and who taught school several years previous to her marriage to John C. Sheppard, of Silverton, Oregon.

Although a republican Joseph Hugill is liberal in his views and casts his ballot for candidates rather than for party. He has never been an office seeker nor desired political preferment. He is a man of determination and force of character who carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. In manner he is modest and unostentatious and those who know him speak of him in terms of praise. He is a member of the Modern Brotherhood of America, in which he has held many offices, and he is also a member of the Grange.

P. A. BROWNELL is superintendent of the Gardiner Mill Company and one of the early settlers of Gardiner. Wherever known he is spoken of in terms of high regard, for in every relation of life he manifests sterling qualities of manhood and citizenship. He was born in Tiverton, Rhode Island, February 20, 1843, a son of Cornelius and Frances B. (Almy) Brownell, both of whom were natives of Rhode Island and both members of old New England families. The grandfather, Cornelius Brownell, Sr., was a soldier of the Revolutionary war. His son and namesake lived but a comparatively short time in Tiverton, removing thence to Little Compton, Rhode Island, where his after life was spent. His time and energies were devoted to agricultural pursuits until his later days, when he passed away at the age of eighty-four years, while his wife reached the age of eighty-five years.

P. A. Brownell remained at home until his nineteenth year and was educated in the common schools. In 1865 he shipped aboard a whaling vessel with the privilege of leaving the vessel at the Sandwich islands if he so chose. He decided on that course and sailed from the islands to California. For two years he worked in the sawmills at Humboldt and then spent about a year in the mining regions of Idaho, where he was engaged in searching for the precious metal. He next made his way to Portland, Oregon, where he worked in a mill for about a year. On the expiration of that period he built a mill in Portland which he operated for about three years, and on selling out he made his way to British Columbia, on a timber cruise. In that district he worked for some time as a millwright in Vancouver but later returned to Oregon and in 1873 took up his abode in Gardiner, where he has remained continuously for thirty-nine years. He has been identified with the same mill throughout the period of his residence here, although it has been owned by three different companies. He has served in the important position of superintendent of the mill all the time and his capable and excellent work in that connection gives entire satisfaction to those whom he represents.

In 1878 Mr. Brownell was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Balderree, a daughter of George Balderree, who came to Gardiner from Arkansas in 1871 or 1872. He followed the occupation of ranching and passed away in 1874. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Brownell have been born four sons, as follows: Mark A., engaged in the stationery business in San Francisco, California; Edward A., a ranchman of Powder River valley, in Oregon; Philip A., a civil engineer, who is at present associated with the Oregon Electric Company; and Austin A., a student of the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis, Oregon.

In politics Mr. Brownell is a republican but without ambition for office. He served, however, for ten years on the Gardiner school board and the cause of education has found in him a warm friend. He is prominent in fraternal organizations, belonging to Aurora Lodge, No. 59, A. F. & A. M., and to Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., while both he and his wife are connected with Martha Chapter, O. E. S., and with Riverside Lodge, No. 100, of the Daughters of Rebekah. Mrs. Brownell is also a member of the Baptist church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brownell are widely and favorably known in this part of the state, for excellent traits have won them warm friendships. Mr. Brownell has been found to be thoroughly reliable under all circumstances and his work in connection with the Gardiner Mill Company has been most satisfactory.

HON. MITCHELL AND PERMELIA ANN (ALLAN) WILKINS. The name of Wilkins is one which will always attract the attention of the student of the history of Oregon, for it was borne by one of the early settlers of the state, one whose high character and conscientious efforts have left their impress upon the progress of events. This pioneer, the Hon. Mitchell Wilkins, was born in Orange county, North Carolina, in 1818. His father, who was descended from a Scotch family of the colonial period, died in North Carolina when the son was but nine years of age. Early in life Mitchell Wilkins started out in the world to seek his own livelihood and for several years engaged in boating and boat-building on the Mississippi river. He afterward settled in Andrew county, Missouri, near St. Joseph, which was then little more than a pioneer camp on the outskirts of civilization. He performed the first carpenter work of any note in that embryo town, erecting the first substantial buildings there.

In April, 1847, Mr. Wilkins and his wife became members of a party of seven hundred people who started overland from St. Joseph for the far west—a long trip fraught with many dangers and privations in those days. Mr. Wilkins met with his full share of trial and tribulation. While crossing the plains he lost his team, this necessitating the abandonment of the wagon upon reaching the Cascade Mountains, and the journey to the Willamette valley was completed with one horse, one ox and two cows. Mr. Wilkins and his young wife, their hopes and ambitions high despite the drawbacks with which fate had handicapped them, walked all the way across the mountains, following the old Barlow route and reaching their destination in safety, on the 25th of October, 1847. They spent the winter of 1847-48 near what is now Marquam, Clackamas county, where Mr. Wilkins erected a small log cabin. In the spring of 1848 they resumed their journey toward the south. Arriving in what is now Lane county, Mr. Wilkins took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres located ten miles northeast of the site of the city of Eugene. Here he set about erecting a temporary log cabin, into which he moved his family in the fall of that year. During the following year he constructed a more substantial house of hewed logs and in 1854 erected a frame house of a much more pretentious character, which still stands in fairly good repair. It is covered with ivy and is pictured in the historical part of this work.

Mr. Wilkins had barely become established in his pioneer home in the wilderness before news of the discovery of gold in California began to attract the attention of the inhabitants of the western frontier. In the hope of bettering his financial condition he started for the Eldorado on horseback in the fall of 1849. He arrived in the Sacramento valley without incident of note and at once engaged in placer mining on a small scale; but after fourteen days he and the party associated with him in the work were driven out by the snow and the depredations of the Indians, and Mr. Wilkins returned to his home in Oregon. From that year until the time of his retirement from the active responsibilities of life Mr. Wilkins devoted his energies to stock-raising, in which he met with most gratifying success.

Mr. Wilkins was never selfishly interested in his work toward his personal success, but always cheerfully and capably aided in the promotion of all worthy causes, the tendency of which was to advance the welfare of the people at large. In politics he was a republican from the time of the Civil war and served as a member of the Oregon state legislature in 1862. For some time prior thereto he had taken a prominent part in the political undertakings of the county and state. During the historical triangular fight for governorship of the state in 1878 he was nominated for the office on the independent ticket but was not able to overcome the republican majority. He always manifested a deep and abiding concern in the general welfare of agricultural interests in Oregon. He became one of the chief organizers of the State Agricultural Society and for many years served as its president. In 1876 he visited the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia as commissioner from Oregon, acted in the same capacity at the New Orleans Exposition in 1884 and the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. It was in the fall of that year that he was stricken with paralysis, which caused his retirement from active pursuits and from which he never wholly recovered. His death occurred January 31, 1904.

On Christmas day of 1844, in Platte county, Missouri, Mr. Wilkins was united in marriage with Permella Ann Allan, by the Rev. John Low. Miss Allan was born in Bates county, Missouri, April 7, 1827, and was a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Morrow) Allan. In 1847, following the death of his wife in Missouri, Robert Allan crossed the plains in the same train with his daughter and son-in-law. Mr. and Mrs. Allan were both natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Wilkins passed away in the faith of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, on the 10th of June, 1909. She was a lady possessed of many excellent traits of character and enjoyed the regard and esteem of all who knew her. She bore herself with cheerful fortitude during the early days of hardship and privation, overcoming the many difficulties of life in a frontier region by an optimistic energy that was at once encouraging and inspiring. She became the mother of seven children, of whom three are living: Francis Marion, Angeline and Amos. Those deceased are Jasper, Eliza Jane, Henrietta, and Mary Rose.

Mitchell Wilkins belonged to the highest type of the pioneer citizen. The characteristics which contributed most to his success, as shown by the record of his life, were his indomitable energy and perseverance, his integrity in all business transactions and the liberal, broad-minded manner in which he conducted all his operations. His record in public and private life was above reproach and free from all suspicion of dishonor. Honesty, courage, enterprise and fairness toward his fellowmen endeared him closely to all who were favored with his friendship. He and his estimable wife were pioneer settlers of the Sunset state whose names figure on the pages of its early history among those whose labors made possible the wonderful transformation that has here been effected.

BENJAMIN HUNTINGTON, Sr., one of the substantial and influential citizens of the Yoncalla valley, is a worthy representative of an honored pioneer family of this state. His holdings comprise nine hundred acres of land, and for over a quarter of a century he has resided on his present ranch situated a mile and a half southwest of Yoncalla. Oregon numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred in the Yoncalla valley, in Douglas county, on the 3d of September, 1859. His parents were John W. P. and Mary (Applegate) Huntington, the former a native of Norwich, Connecticut, and the latter of Missouri. At the time of the gold excitement, in 1849, John W. P. Huntington sailed around the Horn to San Francisco and shortly afterward made his way north into Oregon, taking up a donation claim which is now the J. T. Miller place in the Hayhurst valley, Douglas county. He settled at the head of this valley and his portion was later known as the Huntington valley. Sometime in the early '60s he removed to Salem, Oregon, and for a number of years owned and edited the Statesman. Subsequently he was appointed superintendent of Indian agencies of the state of Oregon under President Andrew Johnson, serving in that capacity for about four years, or until his death in 1869. He was a Royal Arch Mason and enjoyed an enviable reputation as one of the foremost citizens of this state. His wife was a daughter of Charles Applegate and in 1843 came to Oregon with the Applegate Company, more extended mention of which is made on another page of this work. Mrs. Mary (Applegate) Huntington was called to her final rest in 1879.

Benjamin Huntington, Sr., was reared under the parental roof and obtained his education in the common schools. In 1880, when twenty-one years of age, he started out for himself as an agriculturist, cultivating land of his own and also rented land, farming at one time as high as twelve hundred acres. In 1886 he took up his abode on a ranch a mile and a half southwest of Yoncalla, where he has since remained and where he makes a specialty of raising sheep and goats. His holdings embrace nine hundred acres of land and his undertakings as an agriculturist have been attended with highly gratifying results.

In 1880 Mr. Huntington was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary Miller, a daughter of James Miller, who crossed the plains from Missouri to this state in 1852 and took up a donation claim which now forms a part of our subject's home place. Mr. and Mrs. Huntington have thirteen children, as follows: Benjamin, Jr., who is a druggist of Drain, Oregon; Webster, living in Portland; Perit, a resident of Mahanomen, Minnesota; Phillip, who is engaged in the drug business at Yoncalla, Oregon; McKinley, a student in the Oregon Agricultural College; James; Thomas; Retta; Anna; Sarah; Mary; Ruth; and Rachel. The last eight named are still at home with their parents. In politics Mr. Huntington is a staunch republican, having supported the men and measures of that party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. During the period of his residence in this state, covering more than a half century, he has not only witnessed but also aided and rejoiced in the work of progress and improvement and richly merits recognition as a prominent and representative citizen.

OLE O. LUND is the nominee on the republican ticket for sheriff of Coos county, Oregon. He was born in Norway in 1862 and is a son of Ole Oleson and Christina (Christiansen) Lund, both natives of that country. They were the parents of nine children: Chris. and Nels, both of whom are living in Wisconsin; Bennie, who makes his home in St. Paul, Minnesota; Alfred, who resides in Wisconsin; Christina, Clara and Gulog, all of whom are living in their native country; Varda, who resides in Wisconsin; and Ole O.

Ole O. Lund was educated in the public schools of Norway and pursued his studies until he was twelve years of age. He was reared on a farm and became thoroughly familiar at an early age with the details of practical agriculture. When he left home he worked in the employ of others on farms for four years. He then learned the shoemaker's trade in Norway and followed this occupation for two years before he came to America. When he crossed the Atlantic he settled in Wisconsin and worked at lumbering for one year. He went to Minnesota at the end of that time and realizing his disadvantages in an educational way and feeling hampered by his foreign training he entered the public schools of that state where he studied for one year and a half. He spent the next three years working at the butcher's trade and after a short residence in South Dakota returned to Minnesota and worked in various capacities for eighteen months. His principal occupation during this time was along the shoemaking line which trade he had learned in Norway. He later spent three years in Minnesota working as a harness and shoemaker. After his marriage in 1890, he spent some time in the shoemaking business and was for three years a member of the police force attached to the sheriff's office in Bayfield, Wisconsin. After his service in that capacity he came west and located on a timber claim in Oregon. He finally settled on Coos bay in Marshfield in 1907 and took up his old trade of shoemaking to which he added a harness and a retail shoe business. He previously had spent five years in Grants Pass, Oregon, where he carried on a successful fuel enterprise.

In 1890, Mr. Lund was united in marriage to Miss Anna Oleson, a daughter of Peter and Oliva Oleson, natives of Norway. Mrs. Lund is one of four children born to her parents: Martin, a resident of the state of Wisconsin; Anna, the wife of our subject; Julia, who lives in Marshfield, Oregon; and Hilda, a resident of Washington. Mrs. Lund received her early education in the Wisconsin public schools and remained at home until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Lund are the parents of four children: Lula, who was educated in the public schools of Wisconsin and Oregon and took a commercial course in Portland, and who is the wife of Mr. F. C. True, a bookkeeper of Coquille, Oregon, by whom she has one son, Frank; Perlie Oliver, who was educated in Wisconsin and Oregon and took a commercial course in California and who is residing in Marshfield, Oregon; Myrtle, who attended the public schools in Wisconsin and Oregon and received a commercial education, and is at home; and Margaret, who is attending school in Marshfield, Oregon.

Fraternally Mr. Lund holds membership in the Improved Order of Redmen and in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also prominent in the affairs of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Royal Neighbors, the Equitable Fraternal Union and the Sons of Norway. He is a devout member of the Lutheran church and to this faith, his wife and children also give their allegiance. He is a progressive republican and is a firm believer in the principles of that party, and a strong supporter of its policies. Mr. Lund is eager for the welfare of his section of the country and has firm belief in the future of Coos county.

IVAN D. APPLGATE is one of the early pioneers of Oregon, and during a long and useful life he has been identified with the political and business development of his adopted state. He was born January 25, 1840, in Saint Clair county, Missouri, and is a son of Lindsay and Elizabeth (Miller) Applegate. In 1822 the father settled in Missouri where he later celebrated his marriage. In 1843 he crossed the plains to Oregon and settled in the Willamette valley at a point where now stands the city of Dallas in Polk county. He and his brothers were the first settlers in that part of the state. Since that time the Applegate family has been distinguished for their activities in the development and progress of Oregon. Lindsay Applegate and his brother Jesse located the south road through the Tule lake country to the Willamette valley in 1846, and thus became the first pioneers of Klamath county. In 1861 Lindsay Applegate was captain of volunteers, and in the course of his duties he passed through that same territory again. He died at Swan Lake in 1891 at the age of eighty-three years,

Mrs. Applegate's death having occurred six years previously.

Ivan D. Applegate with his parents came to Oregon and received his early education in the primitive schools of the district in which he lived. In 1850 the family removed to Douglas county and later settled in Jackson county. In 1862 he enlisted in the militia as captain and in 1864 was appointed recruiting officer by Governor A. C. Gibbs and stationed at Eugene. In 1868 he was appointed by Superintendent Huntington to take charge of the commissary in the Indian department of the state. While in this position he acted as interpreter of the Snake River Indians and was placed in charge of the transfer of that tribe to its present reservation, and in 1869 he established the Yianax agency. In 1870 he retired from active public life and settled in Swan lake valley and there engaged in stock-raising. The following year, however, he received an appointment from the government as special representative to the Modoc Indian camp on Lost river, and while in the discharge of his duties participated in the first battle of the Lava Beds. During his service in that campaign he was one of six men who, with great danger to their safety, secured the bodies of citizens who had been slain by the Indians.

Mr. Applegate was united in marriage on July 14, 1871, in Jackson county, to Miss Margaret Hutchinson, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Richard and Anna (Armstrong) Hutchinson. She came west in 1869. To Mr. and Mrs. Applegate five children have been born. Alice is a graduate of the State Normal School at Monmouth. Following her graduation she became a member of the faculty of that institution in the training department and later was transferred to the Ashland Normal School as principal of one of its departments. She later became the principal of the Klamath Falls public school and later assistant principal of the Klamath Falls high school. She is now the wife of C. E. Piel, of Ashland, Oregon. Ada F., deceased, was the wife of J. G. Pierce and a graduate of the State Normal School. Moray Lindsay who graduated from the State Normal School at Monmouth with the class of 1896, later matriculated at the State University at Eugene. In 1898 he enlisted in Company C, Second Oregon Volunteer Infantry, and served for eighteen months in the Spanish-American war. During his time of service his command was engaged in continuous fighting from February 4 until the following June. In 1899 he returned to the university at Eugene and from that institution was graduated with honors with the class of 1900. In the fall of that year he returned to Manila and was appointed assistant superintendent of public instruction in that city. He continued in that capacity until 1902, after which he served for some time with the ethnological survey. He then accepted the position as collector for the Philippine exhibit of the World's Exposition and directed that work until the exposition was ready to be opened to the public and then returned to Klamath Falls. Lena L., who was educated at the State University, is now the wife of Dr. Hargiss of Klamath Falls. Jessie, the fifth child, is residing at home.

Ivan D. Applegate, as a pioneer of his adopted state, has done his full share as a patriotic citizen in the development of the political and industrial interests of Oregon, and his name is a synonym for all that stands for the progress and advancement of business, educational and moral improvement.

MARSHALL A. SWEETMAN maintains his office at No. 156 Broadway, Marshfield, Oregon, where he carries on a flourishing real-estate business. His activities in this line are marked by an experienced knowledge of land values and a firm belief in the future progress of Coos county. He was born in Iowa in 1871, and is a son of John P. and Tabitha (Leach) Sweetman. His father and grandfather followed the contracting business and were well known builders. John P. Sweetman was born in Ohio and his wife's birth occurred in Illinois. They were married in Iowa and became the parents of five children: Martha A., the wife of R. B. Hughes, of Oklahoma, by whom she has four children; Marshall, the subject of this review; George A., a resident of Enid, Oklahoma; Sena, who married D. Wyrick of Mountain View, Oklahoma, by whom she has one child; and Ivy, the wife of D. Jennings of Oklahoma, and the mother of one child.

Marshall A. Sweetman was reared at home and educated in the public schools of his native state. He lived on a farm in Iowa until he was fourteen years of age, when his parents moved to Kansas where the father engaged in farming and in various other occupations. Mr. Sweetman assisted his father in the work of the farm and was active along other lines of business in Kansas for four years. At the end of that time he removed to Oklahoma where he engaged in farming in the employ of others and worked in various other capacities for fifteen years. He was active in the real-estate line during that time and had built up a flourishing business before he left Oklahoma. He then lived in Wichita, Kansas, and Kansas City, Missouri, for a short time and in 1906 came to Oregon and settled in Marshfield on Coos bay. Mr. Sweetman has been engaged in the real-estate business in this city during the entire period of his residence here and is well known throughout Coos county as a discriminating judge of land values. His business is increasing every year and is founded on well known and well tested commercial principles. He has accumulated a moderate fortune which he has invested in Coos county property. He built two houses in Marshfield, one of which he occupies. His home is situated on one of the most beautiful sites in the city, commanding a fine view of the bay and of the surrounding country. The other residence which Mr. Sweetman erected he rents. He is contemplating an increase in his activities in the home-building branch of his business.

Marshall A. Sweetman has been twice married. His first union was with Miss Clara Martin, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of John T. Martin, whose birth occurred in that state. She was one of four children. The others are Walter, Edgar, and Oscar, all of whom are residents of Kansas. Mr. Sweetman became the father of two children by his first marriage: Beulah E., born December 26, 1897, who is attending school in Oklahoma; and William J., born April 16, 1900, who is pursuing his studies in the same state. Some time after the death of Mrs. Clara Sweetman our subject was again married. His second union was with Mrs. Louise (Trego) Helm, a daughter of Dr. Trego, a prominent physician of Mound City, Kansas. The second Mrs. Sweetman was one of nine children, eight of whom are still living. Her father died in August, 1905, and her mother is living at Mound City, at the age of eighty-one years. Mrs. Sweetman was the widow of William Helm and had one child by her first marriage, Eleanor, who is the wife of Warren H. Painter, of North Bend, Oregon, by whom she has two children, Warren H., Jr., and William John.

Politically Marshall A. Sweetman is a staunch republican but has never sought public office. He holds membership in the Improved Order of Red Men and the Order of Moose. He and his wife are devout members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Sweetman is an upright and honorable business man, keenly alive to the interests of his clients. He never takes advantage of their inexperience in business dealings and has attained a reputation throughout Marshfield and Coos county for thorough reliability and for perfect honesty and fair dealing.

JUDGE JOHN F. HALL is rated among the most accomplished and successful jurists of Coos county, having been first elected to the office of county judge in 1906, and upon the expiration of that term was reelected and is now in the midst of a four years' term, to which he was elected in 1910. He was born in Polk county, this state, in October, 1856, and is a son of William and Martha (Cox) Hall, of whom more extended mention is made in another part of this work. He was reared at home and received his elementary education in the common schools of Polk county and later pursued his studies for a short time in California. In addition he received a very careful training under the tutelage of his father, who himself was a college-bred and very accomplished man. Judge Hall early in life began the study of law in the office of T. G. Owens of Marshfield, where he pursued his legal studies for three and one-half years, and later spent one year with Judge Kelsay of Corvallis. Having thoroughly prepared himself for the practice of his profession, he was accordingly admitted to the bar in 1887 and immediately thereafter opened an office and at once engaged in the general practice of law, to which he devoted his entire attention and in the course of his legal duties has practiced in all the courts of the state and also in the United States district and circuit courts. In addition to the requirements of his legal profession, to which he has been constantly devoted, he is also a director of the First National Bank of Marshfield and a director of the First National Bank of North Bend, this state, and is the owner of the very fine residence property in which he lives, it being located on one of the most exclusive residence streets of Marshfield. He has other large real-estate holdings both in city property and acreage in Coos county, among which is numbered a piece of valuable timber land consisting of eighty acres.

Judge Hall was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Strickling on July 27, 1892. Mrs. Hall is a native of Burnet county, Texas, where her birth occurred on the 29th of December, 1859. She is a daughter of Marquette Strickling, who died many years ago in Burnet county, Texas. Later, in company with her mother, Mrs. Hall removed to Oregon in 1889 and settled in Roseburg, where the family remained for one year, after which they removed to Coos Bay and at that place maintained their home for some time, when the mother removed to California, where she is still living at the advanced age of seventy-six years. To Mr. and Mrs. Strickling seven children were born, five of whom are still living: Annie, now the wife of Henry Tuberville, of California; John and Dee, both of whom reside in California; Rose, who is the wife of W. B. Simpson, also of California; and Mary E., the wife of Judge Hall. To Judge and Mrs. Hall two children have been born, the eldest of whom died in infancy. Roxie M., born October 1, 1894, is a pupil in the high school at Marshfield. Mrs. Hall and her daughter are members of the Christian church.

Judge Hall is loyal to the democratic party and has served in the office of county surveyor for a period of four years, after which he was first elected to the office of county judge in 1906 and in that office he has since continued to serve the people of Coos county, his last election having occurred in 1910, which includes the succeeding quadrennium from that date. He has served as city treasurer for five years and is at present a member of the school board of Marshfield. Judge Hall is one of Oregon's most respected and useful citizens. During the early years of his life he received a thorough and careful training for the profession of his choice and his record of success in the practice of law is proof of his ability and integrity in dealing with the tangled and perplexing problems of justice and equity such as always present themselves for investigation and adjustment to the legal profession. His abilities have been recognized by his fellow citizens and by them he has been honored and rewarded for the unremitting attention to all matters of business committed to his care.

CHARLES F. APPLGATE, a representative and successful agriculturist, making a specialty of stock-raising, is the owner of six hundred acres of land comprising one of the best farms in Scotts valley. This place has remained his home from his birth to the present time, his natal day being June 27, 1876. His parents were Albert and Nancy J. (Johnson) Applegate, both natives of Polk county, Oregon. The father was a son of Charles Applegate, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. In early manhood Albert Applegate located on the present Applegate homestead in Scotts valley, which he acquired at that time. This farm had been taken up as a donation claim by John Scott and comprised six hundred and forty acres. As his financial resources increased Mr. Applegate extended the boundaries of his place until it embraced more than a thousand acres. He devoted his attention principally to stock-raising and in that branch of activity won a gratifying measure of success. In politics he was a republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. His demise, which occurred in 1888, was the occasion of deep and widespread regret, for it was generally recognized that the community had lost one of its valued and substantial citizens. His widow afterward gave her hand in marriage to J. M. Shelley, with whom she resides in Eugene. She is the mother of seven children, as follows: Mercy, the wife of Dudley Holland, of Portland, Oregon; Nellie, who is the wife of A. S. Sence and resides in San Diego, California; J. Grant, living in Duns-muir, California; Charles F., of this review; Lulu, who is the widow of James Bartley and makes her home in Eugene; and Irene and Albert D., who live with their mother in Eugene.

Charles F. Applegate was reared to manhood under the parental roof and obtained his education in the public schools. He was married at the age of twenty-four years and brought his bride to the home farm, which he operated as a renter. Subsequently he purchased a portion of the estate from the other heirs and now owns a farm of six hundred acres which he has carefully cultivated and improved until it is one of the best in Scotts valley. He makes a specialty of raising sheep, cattle, horses and hogs and his undertakings in this connection yield him an excellent annual income.

In 1900 Mr. Applegate was united in marriage to Miss Maud Bassett, of Halsey, Oregon, by whom he has one child, Charles Calvert, who was born on the 9th of December, 1902. He gives his political allegiance to the republican party and fraternally is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Alpha Lodge. As a citizen he is public-spirited and whatever tends to promote the best interests of the community receives his indorsement and hearty support.

LAWRENCE MARION HALL, living at Monmouth, has resided in Oregon since pioneer times and has been a witness of the growth and progress which have brought this region into its present prosperous condition. He was born in Bureau county, Illinois, November 20, 1839, a son of Reason B. and Martha (Wright) Hall. The grandfather, Edward Hall, was a native of Georgia. He served in the Revolutionary war under General Greene, enlisting at the age of eighteen, and remaining in service until the surrender of Cornwallis. Reason B. Hall was born in Atlanta, Georgia, and reared in Kentucky. In later years he went to Louisiana, where he was married and then removed to Bureau county, Illinois. In 1846, with two ox teams, he joined a large wagon train which moved over the plains, crossing the Missouri river and taking a route which led through the Platte river country. They had many interesting and exciting as well as arduous experiences on their journey. The buffalo were often so numerous that they had to stop and drive them away in order that they might proceed on their course, and they had many skirmishes with the Indians, who, on the Sweetwater river, shot some of their cattle and gave them a great deal of trouble. When they came to what was known as the Applegate cut they were forced to take their wagons apart and convey their luggage across the canyon by hand. The company wintered at Elkton, at the mouth of the Elk river, and in the spring of 1847 they proceeded to Polk county, Oregon, where Mr. Hall located on a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres, where Buena Vista was later built and where he spent the remainder of his life. He took part in the War of 1812 and also served in the Black Hawk war, under General Dodge. He died on his donation land claim in 1869 and his wife passed away in Marion county in 1887. They were the parents of ten children: Eliza, who died in 1846; Mary, the widow of Henry Croisan, of Salem, Oregon; Henry D., deceased; Sarah, the wife of Joseph Smith, of St. Johns, Oregon; Lawrence Marion, of this review; E. C., a resident of Moscow, Idaho; William R. and Reuben, twins, the former a resident of Buena Vista, and the latter of whom was killed in 1907 by a falling tree; Andrew Jackson, of Buena Vista; and Benjamin Franklin, of Woodburn, Oregon.

Lawrence M. Hall had little opportunity for education in youth and he remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage. In 1856 he served in the Indian war for one hundred and ten days, with the First Regiment, under Captain E. J. Hardy. In 1859 he located on the old home place near Buena Vista, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. In 1891 he sold that property and in the following year removed to Monmouth.

In October, 1859, Mr. Hall was united in marriage to Miss Laura E. Watson, of Missouri, who died in 1863, at Buena Vista, leaving two children: James E., who died at the age of eighteen years; and Laura, who is the widow of Jasper Miller and resides at Portland, Oregon. On the 20th of October, 1864, Mr. Hall was again married, his second union being with Mrs. Rachel May, the widow of S. L. May, who came from Illinois to Oregon in 1846 and settled in Clackamas county, where he died in 1863. By her first marriage Mrs. Rachel Hall had one son who died in infancy. Mrs. Hall is a daughter of Jonathan B. Howard, of Maryland, and Margaret (Virden) Howard, of Kentucky. Jonathan B. Howard removed as a small boy with his parents to Shelby county, Illinois, where he was reared and married. He was a cabinet-maker and carpenter by trade. In 1853 he came to Oregon and located eight miles south of Oregon City, on a donation land claim of three hundred and twenty acres, where he died in 1865. His wife passed away in 1886, at Buena Vista, Oregon. He served in the Black Hawk war and his wife's paternal grandfather took part in the Revolutionary war. In the family of Jonathan B. and Margaret (Virden) Howard were twelve children: John, Amos, Rebecca, De Kalb, Polaski and Nancy, all of whom are deceased; Baltimore, who makes his home in Oregon; Madison, deceased; Rachel, now Mrs. Hall; Rudolph, of Oklahoma; and Thomas and George L., deceased. By the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hall eight children were born: Adda, who became the wife of H. Davidson and died at the age of twenty-five years; Ellis; Clara, the wife of Joseph Stover, of Weisser, Idaho; Annie, the wife of C. E. Herren, of Monmouth, Oregon; Dora, at home; Opal, an art teacher in New York city; Ethel, now Mrs. Claude Skinner, of Independence, Oregon; and Irma, a teacher, Clara, Opal and Irma are graduates of the State Normal School and have been teachers for twelve, ten and eight years respectively. Ethel also was a teacher.

Lawrence Marion Hall is a democrat and has been very active in local party work. He served as sheriff of Polk county from 1878 to 1882. He was justice of the peace for several years and is the present marshal of Monmouth. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Buena Vista Lodge, No. 24, and is identified with Logan Lodge, No. 29. A. F. & A. M., at Independence, Oregon, and also Royal Arch Chapter, No. 17, at Dallas. He enjoys a wide circle of acquaintances and is familiarly known as Lark Hall. He is straightforward and upright in all business and social relations and his genial disposition has won for him the highest regard of all with whom he has come in contact.

H. B. STEPHENSEN. At the early age of nine years H. B. Stephensen left his father's home and began life for himself. He was engaged by his grandparents, for whom he worked for wages at farming and teaming in and around Jacksonville. His birth occurred in Jackson county on the 2d of August, 1862, his parents being Hank and Mellie (McKee) Stephensen, natives of Oregon. At nine years of age Mr. Stephensen of this review became an employe of, and remained as a laborer on his grandfather's farm for a period of one year. He then engaged as a hired laborer in the work of teaming and freighting and continued in this business for the succeeding twenty years of his life. He is now the owner of eighty acres of excellent farm land, which he has brought to a very high state of cultivation and which is located near Buncom in Jackson county. This splendid property manifests the industry and economy which he practiced with the ambitious desire to rise from a poor boy without experience or means to an independent life Long years of hardship, with the practice of rigid and constant economy, together with ceaseless toil, have yielded Mr. Stephensen the reward of prosperity which he so truthfully deserves.

On the 8th of April, 1904, Mr. Stephensen was married to Miss Kate Anderson, by whom he has four children, Homer, Verine, Earl and Ernest. He is a well known and influential citizen of Buncom and contributes his full quota to the advancement of all meritorious matters which come to his attention, and make for the good of the community in which he has his home. He gives his political allegiance to the republican party and was formerly identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

SHERM SWANK. The flour mill at Aumsville, Oregon, is ably and profitably conducted by Sherm Swank, who is also the owner of considerable land in Marion county. His birth occurred in Fulton county, Ohio, on the 21st of January, 1865. His parents were David E. and Elizabeth (Fensell) Swank, both of whom were natives of Ohio, the mother's death occurring in that state in June, 1911. The father had engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state for many years before removing to Oregon in 1885, when he located in Aumsville and purchased one of the first flour mills operated in the county. This mill is known as the Aumsville Flouring Mill. He was thoroughly familiar with all the details of milling, and because of his knowledge and his close attention to business he met with more than ordinary success and is today one of the prominent industrial men of Aumsville. Mr. and Mrs. David E. Swank were the parents of two children: a daughter, who is deceased; and Sherm, the subject of this sketch.

Sherm Swank received his education in the grammar schools of Ohio and at the same time gave assistance to his father in the daily duties on the home farm. At an early age he went to Missouri to learn the milling business under the direction of the Kansas City Milling Company. For three years he remained there before he came to Oregon with his father. Upon arriving in this county they immediately engaged in the milling business, and in 1905 the son purchased the mill and conducted it alone until 1912, when he disposed of a half interest to J. E. Fitzpatrick. Mr. Swank is one of the best millers in this section, and has not only brought his own mill to a highly profitable state, but has also done much to further milling interests throughout the country. In business dealings he is honorable, in his relations with his employes fair, and in his knowledge of the milling business unusually proficient. He is the owner of several valuable tracts of land which he is improving as fast as his time permits.

In 1904 Mr. Swank was married to Miss Ada M. Murphy, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of J. B. and Polly Murphy. To Mr. and Mrs. Swank one child has been born, Elizabeth, whose birth occurred in October, 1905. She is living at home and attending school.

Sherm Swank gives his support to the republican party, and although he takes a citizen's interest in its welfare he has never desired to hold office. He holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Aumsville and has filled all the chairs in that lodge. He is also a member of the Encampment at Stayton, Oregon, and is chief patriot, and holds membership in the Royal Arch Chapter of Masons of Salem, in which organization he has also filled all the chairs. In fraternal and social relations Mr. Swank has been found honorable and helpful, and among his friends who are almost as numerous as his acquaintances, he is held in high esteem and regard.

JOHN V. HOUSTON is devoting his entire time to the theatrical business, owning the Houston Opera House, which he built in 1897. He was also the first to introduce moving pictures into Klamath county and now controls five moving picture houses. He has become well known as a wide-awake, alert and energetic business man, to whom opportunity always spells success. His birthplace was a little log cabin near South English, formerly Houston's Point, in Keokuk county, Iowa. His father, James H. Houston, was a native of Indiana but was married in Iowa and established his home in Keokuk county, where he lived until coming in his lot with the pioneer settlers of Oregon. He participated in the Rogue River Indian war and afterward returned to the east, conducting a hotel in South English, Iowa. Again, however, he came to the west and with his sons purchased an interest in business enterprises of Klamath Falls, where he made his home until his demise. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth J. Tate, was a native of Indiana.

John V. Houston accompanied his parents to Nodaway county, Missouri, where his mother died, and he afterward went with his father to Leadville, Colorado, in 1878. There he engaged in mining. He had acquired a good common-school education, after which he began to learn the newspaper business, serving first on the Leadville Herald. For eight years he was connected with that paper, at the end of which time he and his partner, the Hon. James Little, established the Meeker Herald at Meeker, Colorado, in 1885. They secured a good circulation for the paper and made their venture a very profitable one, in which Mr. Houston was interested until he sold out to his partner. He was then appointed postmaster at Meeker but later returned to the printing business, in which he continued until ill health caused him to dispose of his entire interests and he came west, finally reaching Klamath Falls, where he engaged in business with his brother, J. A. Houston, under the firm style of Houston Brothers. This was in 1894. At a later date his father joined them and, purchasing the interest of J. A. Houston, the business was reorganized under the style of J. H. Houston & Son. In 1897 they erected the Houston

Opera House and on the death of the father, on the 18th of December, 1901, John V. Houston took entire charge of the business, which he has since successfully conducted. He has excellent property interests in the center of the town and other real-estate holdings and is now successfully engaged in the theatrical business. He owns the opera house and did all of the mechanical work upon the place. It was erected in 1897 and was at that time the finest building in the city. Mr. Houston was also the pioneer in introducing moving pictures in Klamath county. This was in 1908 and he has since conducted business along that line. He controls five moving picture places at the present time. He is most careful in the selection of films and gives to the public a high-grade entertainment. It was through his instrumentality that nine camera men came to Klamath Falls to secure films of the first annual rodeo given by the Elks here. The pictures taken included many views of Klamath Falls and its attractive surroundings and no better advertisement of the town could be given than in sending these films throughout the country to feature in the moving picture shows which are everywhere held. Mr. Houston has always taken great interest in the annual mask ball, which has been one of the features of the town during the past sixteen years—since the opera house was built. Its fame, under the name of the Houston Mask Ball, has gone far and wide and draws to the city a large number each year. In 1892 Mr. Houston invented and patented the "novelty scrapbook." He is justly classed with the most prominent citizens of Klamath Falls and has been very active and helpful in the upbuilding of the city and the advancement of prosperity throughout this region. He is a most public-spirited man and in his private interests has greatly promoted public projects.

On the 24th of December, 1882, Mr. Houston was married in Leadville, Colorado, to Miss Mae McLarren, a native of Ohio. They have become the parents of three children: Thomas Merle, Edna Mae and Elizabeth Ellen. Mr. Houston is well known in the fraternal circles of Klamath Falls, being a charter member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and also a member of the Elks lodge. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and while residing at Meeker he served as postmaster during President Cleveland's first administration. He also served for two terms on the city council of Klamath Falls, during which period the light and water systems were installed. He was one of the organizers of the first volunteer fire department, served as its president and is now an honorary member. He aided in organizing the Klamath County Fair Association, is one of its stockholders and does much to advance the interests of its annual exhibits. He was a member of the orchestra when it was first organized and later was its leader for ten years, during which time the organization was known as Houston's Orchestra. It is difficult to name any public project which has been of real value to the community that has not benefited by the cooperation and support of John V. Houston, and Klamath Falls honors him as one whose worth is widely acknowledged. He is indeed public-spirited and his efforts have been of far-reaching and beneficial effect in the permanent upbuilding of the community.

SAMUEL H. REDFIELD was born on a ranch on Cow creek, April 14, 1861, and has never left the old homestead on which his birth occurred. His parents were J. W. and Adelia H. (Hall) Redfield, the father a native of Connecticut and the mother of Illinois. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1853 and in the following year the father took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, which he cultivated and improved until his death in 1909. On this tract of land his wife died in July, 1907. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: T. G., a resident of North Yakima, Washington; W. H., who lives in Glendale, Oregon; Emma, who is now deceased; J. H., who makes his home in Denver, Colorado; Samuel H., of this review; E. E., who lives in Glendale, Oregon; Boone, a resident of Douglas county; Nettie, also a resident of Glendale, Oregon; and James, who is deceased.

Samuel H. Redfield assisted his father in the work of the farm during his boyhood and youth, leaving school at an early age to engage in this occupation. He became thoroughly familiar with the various details of ranch life and learned by personal experience how to operate and improve a large tract of land. On attaining majority he took charge of the old homestead.

Mr. Redfield is a staunch supporter of the democratic party. He takes no active interest in public affairs, preferring to devote his time and attention to the cultivation of his land, and he has never sought public office. He is a member of Glendale Lodge, No. 119, F. & A. M., and is also prominent in the Order of the Eastern Star. He has been a rancher for many years and during that time has improved his holdings, added to his buildings, acquired modern equipment and has materially increased his wealth.

CHARLES HAMILTON is one of the successful agriculturists of his community, owning, at Rich, eighteen acres of select land, on which he is raising choice fruits and alfalfa, the richest forage plant known to agriculture. He was born in Jackson county on the 1st of May, 1865, his parents being Samuel B. and Mary C. (Martin) Hamilton. They had a family of six children, three of whom are yet living.

Charles Hamilton was reared under the parental roof and educated in the common schools. He remained with his parents until he was thirty years of age. In early life he was engaged as an apprenticed carpenter and continued as such until he became a thorough and competent master carpenter. His experience in that line of work has always proven of great financial value to him. He lives on his beautiful farm of eighteen acres, and devotes his entire time and energy to the selection and care of extra choice fruits and the growing of alfalfa. The success he has attained in the development and management of this land justly entitles him to defend the claim that intense farming on a small acreage, providing location and soil are properly selected, often yields greater returns for labor and money expended than can be realized on a greater number of acres insufficiently cared for.

As a companion and helpmate on the journey of life Mr. Hamilton chose Miss Mary G. Matney, a native of Oregon, by whom he has five children, Bryan, Hazel, Ruth, Boyd and Louise. Mr. Hamilton is affiliated with the democratic party. He has the reputation of being an industrious, reliable and successful agriculturist.

MICHAEL WILLIAM KENNEDY. For well over a quarter of a century Michael W. Kennedy was identified with the agricultural development of Coos county, Oregon, and as a progressive and scientific farmer did able work in promoting the growth of this section. His death on January 22, 1893, deprived all who knew him of a loyal and worthy friend, and agricultural circles of his district of a conspicuously successful representative. Mr. Kennedy was born in Canada in 1841, and is a son of Michael Kennedy, a native of that country. His father was prominent in business circles and died in Canada.

Michael W. Kennedy was one of a large family of children born to his parents. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age and was educated in the public schools of Canada. He was reared on a farm and early became acquainted with the details and methods of agriculture. In 1862 he came to the Pacific coast where he followed the carpenter's trade and also worked at ship-building. He took up a homestead claim near Bandon, Oregon, and was successful in the cultivation of the soil. He improved his property and operated it along progressive lines, and at the time of his death he was the owner of one of the model farms of his state.

On April 1, 1878, Mr. Kennedy was united in marriage at Libby, Oregon, to Miss Margaret Golden, a native of England and a daughter of Thomas and Bridget (Earl) Golden, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Mrs. Kennedy is one of thirteen children born to her parents, only two of whom are living: John, who is engaged in the real-estate business in Marshfield, Oregon; and Margaret, the widow of our subject. Mrs. Kennedy is one of the best known women in Bandon today. She is managing the property left her by her husband and has attained a reputation for her careful administration of her holdings. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy became the parents of seven children: Mary M., who was born in 1879, and who is the wife of Harry Nelson, of Bandon, Oregon, by whom she has three children, Marguerite, Howard and Johnnie; John Alexander, born February 22, 1880, who is following the blacksmith trade in Bandon, and who married Miss Mary Hodges, a native of Oregon, by whom he has two children, Grace M. and Gladys M., their mother being a daughter of Marion and Polly (Anderson) Hodges; Martin, born December 23, 1883, who resides in Bandon, Oregon; Thomas D., who was born June 10, 1885, and is deceased; Michael and Theresa, both of whom have passed away; and Rosa C., who was born April 14, 1893, and is attending school in Portland, Oregon. After the death of her husband Mrs. Kennedy lived upon her farm until 1902 in which year she came to Bandon where she purchased the home in which she now resides.

Mr. Kennedy was a democrat in his political views but never an office seeker. He affiliated with the Roman Catholic church, to which faith his wife also gives her allegiance. She is one of the prominent women in the city in which she resides. She has invested her money judiciously and now has three houses and three lots in Bandon. She makes her home with her son, John Alexander, and has many friends in the city. Her husband was, during his life, a representative of the most modern and progressive ideas in agriculture. He labored earnestly to make his career successful, bringing his farm to a state of improvement and development which ranked it among the factors of state expansion. His death brought to a close a life which was in all its relations upright, straightforward and honorable.

GEORGE S. WILSON, one of the highly esteemed citizens and representative agriculturists of Douglas county, owns a farm of three hundred and six acres in association with his father. It was on this farm that his birth occurred on the 17th of July, 1874, his parents being John D. and Sarah I. (Staley) Wilson. The father is likewise a native of Oregon, having been born on the same farm where he now resides, December 11, 1850. The paternal grandfather of our subject was William H. Wilson, who is now deceased and of whom an extended review is given on another page of this work. The mother of George S. Wilson was born in Lee county, Iowa, on the 27th of August, 1852, her parents being George W. and Fannie V. (Washburn) Staley, who were natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia respectively. George W. Staley passed away in Iowa when his daughter Sarah was still but a small child. In 1864 his widow crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams and with her four children settled in Portland, where she later became the wife of Dr. Henley, with whom she subsequently removed to San Francisco. Sarah I. Staley made her home with an uncle, Stephen Hefleman, who had come to Oregon with her mother. On the 3d of July, 1871, in Roseburg, Oregon, she gave her hand in marriage to John D. Wilson. She was the first woman over the road built from Drain to Elkton in 1875 and cooked the meals for the men who built the road.

After his marriage John D. Wilson took up a homestead a half mile east of the Wilson donation claim and resided thereon for five years. On the expiration of that period he took up his abode in Drain and a short time later removed to Walla Walla county, Washington, where he remained for seven years. At the end of that time he returned to the Yoncalla valley, bought one hundred and fifteen acres of the old place and has since re-sided on a part of the original donation claim. In the spring of 1908, in association with his son, George S., he purchased the present home farm of three hundred and six acres, which is that part of the homestead on which stood the old residence. In politics Mr. Wilson is a stalwart democrat. In 1906 he was appointed deputy state game warden, but resigned in the spring of 1907 to accept the appointment of deputy state fish warden. The latter office being not to his liking, however, he resigned the same in the fall of 1908 and was again appointed game warden, in which capacity he has served to the present time. In 1865, when not yet fifteen years of age, he enlisted in the Union army and served on the frontier in the Indian wars for about thirteen months, or until mustered out in 1866. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and his wife belongs to the Christian church. John D. Wilson is well known as a native son of Oregon who has always done his full share in the work of up-building and development here, and his wife also deserves mention among the valued pioneer residents of the Sunset state. They had eight children, five of whom still survive, namely: George S., of this review; Fannie E., the wife of George M. Wilcox, of Douglas county; Mabel C., a graduate of the State Normal School at Drain, who is now a teacher in the Roseburg schools; David C., at home; and Olive I., who is a student in the Yoncalla high school and is also under the parental roof.

George S. Wilson, whose name introduces this review, is a graduate of the State Normal School at Drain and during the past four years has operated the home farm, his father's time being occupied by his official duties. He owns a half interest in the home place and is widely recognized as one of the progressive, energetic and prosperous agriculturists of the county. He belongs to the Modern Brotherhood of America, at Yoncalla, and is also a member of Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F., and Yoncalla Camp, No. 480, W. O. W. A man of sterling worth and exemplary character, he is known throughout his native county as one whose influence is always found on the side of right, progress and improvement and in social circles is welcomed as a faithful and valued friend.

J. C. EVANS, M. D., a rising young physician of Salem, is a member of the faculty of the medical department of Willamette University and is also the attending physician of the Asylum Institute. A native of Marion county, he was born November 8, 1881, a son of W. G. and Letitia (Savage) Evans. The family came from Wales, his great-grandfather being a native of that country. The father was born near Nashville, Tennessee, and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1849, locating in California, where he worked for a time in the mines. In 1857 he came to Marion county, Oregon, and bought the Swick donation land claim, which he improved and developed into an excellent farm. He still resides there, having reached the advanced age of eighty years. He has been very successful. He is progressive and deeply interested in the welfare of his community and has served as justice of the peace for several years. During the Civil war he joined a California regiment but never was called into active service. His father, the grandfather of Dr. J. C. Evans, was a veteran in the Mexican war and as a soldier on the Northern side, was killed in the Civil war. The mother of our subject, Letitia (Savage) Evans, is a native of Marion county, Oregon, and a daughter of John Savage, one of the early pioneers of the county and a man who rendered valiant service in the Rogue River Indian war. He took up a donation land claim near Salem but later went to California and engaged in gold mining, at which he was very successful. He returned to Oregon and became quite wealthy, owning at one time a part of the fair grounds of Salem. His wife, Miss Presley, was the daughter of an old pioneer family in Oregon. The mother of Dr. Evans is still living. In her family were seven children, of whom the subject of this review is the youngest. The others are: Clifton, a farmer of Willow Valley, Oregon; Nellie, deceased; Theresa, the wife of J. W. Fruit, of Brooks, Oregon; Frank, an agriculturist of Willow Valley, Oregon; and Minnie and Lena, deceased.

Dr. Evans completed his education in the medical department of Willamette University, graduating from that institution in 1906. Soon afterward he received an appointment at the Asylum Institute and has been there engaged ever since, having three hundred patients under his charge. In business the Doctor has also been successful and he is the owner of two farms in eastern Oregon.

In 1908 Dr. J. C. Evans was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth L. Westley, a native of Oregon, and they have become the parents of one child, J. Westley, two years old. Both Dr. and Mrs. Evans belong to the Evangelical church. Socially the former is connected with the Ilihee Club of Salem. Dr. Evans keeps in touch with the progress made in the medical world through his membership in the County, State and American Medical Associations. He is a man of great enterprise and marked force of character and is making an excellent professional record, as is indicated by the responsible positions he is now holding and the fact that his alma mater soon after he was graduated made him a member of its faculty.

F. L. ARMSTRONG has been a permanent resident of Klamath Falls since 1894. The experiences of his life have been varied, taking him into many sections of the country. He was born in Rochester, New York, January 10, 1849, and is a son of J. J. and Alta A. (Clemons) Armstrong, both of whom were natives of the Empire state, being born and reared in the Genesee valley, where they resided until 1850, when they went to Detroit, Michigan, and thence started for St. Clair.

In the spring of 1867 they came to Oregon by way of the Panama route and settled in Polk county, where the father died in August, 1868, when about forty-seven years of age. During the Civil war he enlisted for active service in the Michigan cavalry and such were the hardships and rigors of war that his health was undermined and his early death followed. He was a bootmaker by trade and conducted a shop in Detroit and previously worked with his father in Baltimore. He died in Polk county, Oregon, and in 1869 his widow became the wife of J. G. Campbell, one of the early pioneers of the state. She spent her last days in the home of her son, F. L. Armstrong, passing away March 9, 1899, when seventy-three years of age. In the family were five children, J. W., living in Walla Walla, Washington, was a soldier of the Civil war, serving with Mulligan's Brigade until captured and paroled at Lexington, Missouri, in November, 1861. He was then discharged but afterward enlisted a second time in the Army of the Potomac. At the battle of Lookout Mountain he was wounded and later was again discharged. The second of the family was Mrs. Emma E. Wolfe, deceased. F. L. was the third in order of birth. Amelia E. died at Klamath Falls in June, 1895. C. W. is living at Salem. The only child of the mother's second marriage was J. B. Campbell, of Winberry, Oregon.

In 1865 Mr. Armstrong went to California, where he was engaged as a cowboy at intervals until 1871. In December of that year he arrived in Salem and was employed as a guard at the state penitentiary until 1873, when, owing to ill health, he gave up his position and went east. On his way back he stopped at Virginia City, Nevada, and again engaged in driving cattle. In the fall of 1875 he went to Humboldt county, California, where he made his home until the fall of 1885, although during that period he engaged in shearing sheep from Oregon to Montana. In 1886 he arrived at Klamath Falls and in January, 1887, went to Salem, where he again worked at the state penitentiary. In August, 1890, he fitted out a prospecting train and went into the mountains, prospecting and mining until the fall of 1894, when he joined his sister at Klamath Falls and has since made this his place of residence. Here he engages in horticultural pursuits and he has an exceptionally fine garden on the west side of Link river. His experiences have been many and varied as he has traveled back and forth between the east and the west and has labored in various ways that have closely connected him with the upbuilding of the Pacific coast country. He has witnessed great changes here and has ever borne his part in bringing about results that have been beneficial in opening up the west and utilizing its natural resources.

WILLIAM L. BARTON, a prominent and prosperous farmer of Douglas county, was born in that section July 15, 1866. His parents were William and Rebecca (Smith) Barton. The mother was a native of Iowa, in which state her birth occurred on May 1, 1842. The father was born in Indiana, January 22, 1830. He lived in his native state until 1852, when he crossed the plains with ox teams in company with his father, Edward Barton, and located in Portland, Oregon. William Barton, the father of our subject, then came direct to Douglas county and settled on Cow creek, where he took up a donation claim which he improved and cultivated until 1872, when he sold his land and drove his cattle to eastern Oregon, near Fort Harney. He was a volunteer in the Rogue River and Cow Creek Indian wars in 1853 and in 1856, and saw much service during that time and many exciting fights. He was also in the Piute-Bannock Indian war of 1878, in which William L. Barton, our subject, when a boy of only twelve years, made bullets for the volunteers. The father was engaged in stock-raising in eastern Oregon in 1872 and remained there until 1881. He had sent his family here in 1880 for better educational facilities for his children. He lived in Douglas county upon his holdings until his death, in 1882. He was the father of eleven children, six of whom are deceased. Those who survive are: Lucy, the wife of Fletcher Edwards, of Bend, Oregon; William L.; Wright S., who married, has eight children and is now a resident of Douglas county; Frank, also living in this district; and James, who was married on May 8, 1912, and makes his home in Humboldt county, California. William L. Barton also has a half-brother, Carroll Smith, who is a resident of Douglas county.

William L. Barton was educated in the common schools of his native district and was brought up on his father's farm. He learned the details of agriculture and became thoroughly versed in the labors incident to farm life. When he grew to maturity he engaged in the cultivation of the soil and has been for many years a scientific and progressive farmer in his native district. He also engages as contractor and does a great deal of road building, tunnelling, railroad building and work of a similar nature. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and although he has never been an office seeker he nevertheless takes an active and intelligent interest in public affairs and is a firm believer in democratic principles and policies.

GOTTLIEB MEHL was born in Wittenberg, Germany, in 1823 and died in Coos county on the 24th of April, 1893, in the seventieth year of his age. During his long life he made many claims to the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. He was an early settler in Oregon and prominent in mining, stock-raising and business circles. His death was widely and deeply regretted for his upright life and high standards of conduct had gained him many friends. He came to America, landing in New York in 1849. He obtained work as a cooper's apprentice and followed that occupation until he went to Philadelphia, where he worked at his trade of brewer, which he had learned in his native country. He later went to St. Louis, Missouri, where he obtained a position in a brewery, which he held for a number of years. He was among the earliest pioneers in California, going to San Francisco when that city was little more than an unorganized settlement. After a short time he came north to Oregon, where he took up a homestead claim on the Umpqua river, which he operated and improved for some time. He also worked in the mines of this section and acquired enough money in that way to buy cattle and hogs, with which he stocked his farm. He rented his property and during his absence on one of the trips to the gold fields his tenant took possession of all of his stock and burned his home. Mr. Mehl was obliged to abandon farming for some time. In 1861 he went to Roseburg, where he purchased a brewery which he operated with a partner until the Southern Pacific Railway was built into the city. At that time he sold his interests and moved to Oakland, building a brewery there and conducting it for three years, when he sold out and came to Coquille and established himself in a similar line of occupation, gradually attaining success. His plant, however, was destroyed by fire and he then came to Bandon in company with his eldest son. Here they engaged in brewing, building up an important and rapidly increasing trade. Mr. Mehl was identified with the conduct of this enterprise until his death, which occurred on the 24th of April, 1893.

Mr. Mehl was united in marriage in Roseburg on September 29, 1867, to Miss Mary Hervey, a native of Green county, Tennessee. She went to Missouri in 1851 and crossed the plains to Oregon with her parents in 1864, making the journey with ox teams. The family settled in the Willamette valley and after one year spent there went to Douglas county. Mr. and Mrs. Mehl became the parents of seven children, two of whom died in infancy. Those who survive are: Fred, who was born August 8, 1868, and who is the owner of a planing mill at Bandon; Mary Louise, who was born April 2, 1870, and who is the wife of James Whetstone, of Klamath Falls, by whom she has one child, Agnes; William G., who is engaged in farming near Coquille and is married and has one child, Gretchen; George, who was born November 2, 1876, and who makes his home with his mother in Coquille, where he is conducting a plumbing business; and Thomas H., who was born November 27, 1882, and is engaged in the operation of a sawmill at Coquille, where he resides with his wife and two children.

Gottlieb Mehl affiliated with no political party, preferring to keep his judgment unbiased and to preserve his independence of conviction. He never accepted public office although many important ones were offered to him by his fellow citizens. He belonged to the Lutheran church and was widely known as a man of exemplary character. His death was the occasion of widespread regret, for his life had been in all its relations both useful and upright. He attained success gradually and worked his way upward until he occupied an enviable position in the business circles of his section, his life proving conclusively that success is the result of determination and honorable methods.

M. J. CRANDALL. For almost a half century M. J. Crandall has been identified with Oregon and its development and manifests an enthusiastic devotion to his adopted state and a firm belief in its future. He still has important business interests although he has practically retired from their active management, for he is now well advanced in years, having passed the eighty-third milestone on life's journey. He was born in the state of New York, February 22, 1829, a son of Jesse and Harriet (Dudbridge) Crandall, natives of New York and New Jersey respectively. His great-grandfather was a native of England and came to America when this country was still numbered among the colonial possessions of Great Britain. When an attempt was made to throw off the yoke of British oppression he joined the American army and served throughout the Revolutionary war as an officer. His death occurred in New Jersey after the close of the war. The parents of M. J. Crandall spent their lives in the Empire state, where the father followed farming until accidentally killed when sixty years of age. His widow long survived him, passing away at the age of eighty-five years. In their family were nine children of whom five are still living: Adaline, who is the widow of J. J. Davis and resides in Detroit, Michigan; Mary, the widow of Stoten Prior, living in Cincinnati, Ohio; M. J., of this review; Eliza, the wife of Samuel Burwell, of Fingal, Ontario, Canada; and Harriet L., the wife of Luther Carpenter, of London, Ontario. The deceased members of the family are: Mrs. Samantha McClure, who lived in Canada; Reuben D., of Belydere, Illinois; John, who also died in Illinois; and Loretta, the wife of William Marshall, of Detroit, Michigan, who is also deceased.

When a youth of seventeen years M. J. Crandall began to learn the cabinet-maker's trade in his native state, and followed that pursuit until 1862, when, thinking that he would have better business opportunities on the Pacific coast he set out for the west. He followed mining in British Columbia, prospecting in 1863-64. From there he went to Idaho for a few months and then came to Oregon in 1865, settling near Linton in the neighborhood of Portland. There he developed a farm which he continued to cultivate until the time of his retirement, when he sold his property, comprising one hundred and forty-four acres. He still, however, owns several pieces of real estate at Linton, including a residence, and has residence property in Portland. He is president of the Willamette Box & Lumber Company of that town and a stockholder in the Linton Savings Bank. He worked diligently and persistently, knowing that industry is the basis of success, and as the years passed by, he gained a comfortable competence that now enables him in his later years to enjoy all of the comforts and some of the luxuries of life.

In 1876 Mr. Crandall was married to Miss Johanna M. Richards, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, a daughter of Solomon and Sarah (Johnson) Richards. Her father's birth occurred in 1820 and he passed away in 1897, while his wife died when thirty-two years of age. Mrs. Crandall was one of three children but all have passed away, her death having occurred in 1898. By her marriage she became the mother of eight children: Commodore F. Crandall, who was born at Jacksonville, Oregon, March 28, 1877; Martha J., born February 11, 1879; Jessie E., who was born in May, 1882, and is the wife of Daniel S. Southmayd of St. Johns, Oregon; Solomon R., who was born May 10, 1884, and lives in Linton; Rose B., who was born July 10, 1886, and is a high-school student; Maybelle V., born July 22, 1894; Seth Chase, born July 3, 1896; and Ida A., who died when twenty years of age. The family attend the Baptist church and Mr. Crandall gives his political support to the republican party. He has served as a member of the school board and for more than twenty years was a member of the election board. His influence has always been on the side of progress and improvement and he has labored to promote the material, intellectual and moral progress of his community. He is today one of the venerable citizens of Linton and his years rest lightly upon him, his interests and activities being those of a man of much younger age.

J. P. TUPPER is living retired in Coquille after an active career in Oregon of over forty years. During that time he has been well known in business circles in many part of Coos county, having owned and operated at different periods some of the most important hotels in the section. He purchased a farm in 1883 at the present site of the town of Bandon and made use of the opportunities which the rising land values offered by selling his property in town lots, contributing thus to his own prosperity and to the progress and development of the community. He was born in Nova Scotia in Colechester county, on August 24, 1833, a son of James S. and Margaret Tupper. He received his education in the public schools of his native country and afterward learned the carpenter's trade at which he worked until 1857. In that year he came to the United States and settled at Bucksport, Maine, where he continued at his trade. After four years he returned to Nova Scotia and resided in that country until 1868, coming back in that year to the United States and settling in California where he obtained a position in a shipyard at San Francisco. Shortly afterward he came to Coos county and followed the ship carpenter's trade in Marshfield for many years. He established his residence in Bandon in 1882, moving to that vicinity in order to work on the government breakwater. After one summer he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land upon the present town site and he built a hotel at Tupper Rock which he called the Ocean House. He sold this property at a good profit and purchased the Lewis Hotel at Bandon, which is now known as the Gallier Hotel. This he operated until the death of his wife, which occurred in 1895, at which time he disposed of his interests and moved to Coquille where he bought the Curan Hotel, which he managed with efficiency and ability for seven years, finally selling it to the Baxter Brothers. He is now living in retirement although he is still interested in many business enterprises in Coquille.

J. P. Tupper married in October, 1862, Miss Martha A. Lynch, who was born in Nova Scotia. Her parents were of Irish ancestry, although her mother was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and her father in Nova Scotia. To our subject was born one son, Benjamin F., who passed away when he was forty years of age. Mrs. Tupper died on June 3, 1895, and is buried in the Bandon cemetery.

J. P. Tupper gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never been an office seeker. He affiliates with the Owls and is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is a devout adherent of the Episcopal church. He is living retired at the Baxter Hotel in Coquille, giving his attention only to the management of his important interests. He still owns property at Port Orford and has invested heavily in real estate in Lake county, California and in Richmond, that state. He is well known in commercial and social circles of Coos county and has, through his activity in business, been an influence in promoting industrial development. He deserves great credit for what he has accomplished as a promoter of local enterprises and Coos county is the richer in citizenship and resources by reason of his honorable, successful and upright life.

JOHN J. LONG, one of the well known and substantial citizens of Douglas county, has devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits throughout his entire business career and is the owner of a ranch comprising four hundred and eighty acres of valuable land. His birth occurred in Polk county, Oregon, on the 8th of June, 1848, his parents being John and Minerva J. (Smith) Long, who were born, reared and married in Tennessee. From that state they removed to Missouri and in 1846 crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, the journey consuming six months. They made their way into Klamath county via Fort Hall and Goose lake, crossed the Cascade mountain range and came up through the Rogue river valley, the trail they followed being about the same as the present road, but no wagon had ever passed through before this emigration and they had to build the road as they proceeded. Being unable to get through with their wagons, partly because of the high water, and making the roads during the rainy season, they left them in a big canyon in Douglas county and returned for them in the following spring. Arriving in Polk county in November, they spent the winter on Waldo Hill and in the following spring built a log cabin on a donation claim. It was their intention to take up the claim but water overflowed the land and they came to Douglas county in 1849. Here Mr. Long took up donation claim No. 46, comprising six hundred and forty acres in the Yoncalla valley, three miles south of where the town of Yoncalla now stands, where he spent the remainder of his life. As the years passed he acquired other lands adjoining his claim and at one time owned over fourteen hundred acres, a portion of which he gave to his children prior to his demise. He passed away in 1890, when about eighty years of age, while his wife was called to her final rest in March, 1908, being at that time also about eighty years old. They were both consistent and devoted members of the Baptist church.

John J. Long, who was but a year old when brought by his parents to Douglas county, was here reared to manhood and attended the common schools in the acquirement of an education but his advantages in this direction were limited. He was married at the age of twenty-five years and following that important event in his life located on his present home farm, which was then a part of his father's place. In the fall of 1873 he acquired one hundred and sixty acres of the same and in the intervening years has added three hundred and twenty acres to his farm, so that it now embraces four hundred and eighty acres. He keeps and raises high-grade cattle and sheep. In the work of the fields he has won success and well deserves recognition among the prosperous and representative citizens of his county.

In July, 1873, Mr. Long was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Applegate, a daughter of Jesse Applegate, who was captain of the Applegate Company, which crossed the plains to Oregon from Missouri in 1843. An extended review of Jesse Applegate appears on another page of this work. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Long were born three children, all of whom are deceased.

In national politics Mr. Long is a republican, but at local elections votes independently, supporting men and measures rather than party. His entire life has been spent in Oregon and he is a worthy representative of an honored pioneer family. Mrs. Long is one of the best informed persons in the state concerning the early history of Douglas county. She is a gifted writer and has contributed numerous articles to various publications.

B. L. DARBY. A native of Oregon and a man for many years actively connected with the drug trade in the city of Glendale is B. L. Darby, who has been prominent in this line of activity since 1902. He was born in Marion county, June 11, 1877, a son of W. H. H. and Lydia (Read) Darby, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of New York. The father came to Oregon at an early date and in 1865 located in Marion county, where he has resided continuously since. W. H. H. Darby has been three times married. On the 2d of September, 1866, he wedded Miss Jemima Moppen, by whom he had two children. On the 6th of October, 1872, he wedded Lydia Read, who bore him six children, as follows: Della S., who is deceased; Laura, who married H. Crass; B. L., of this review; Bertha, the wife of Ray Logan; W. H.; and Lucy B., now Mrs. Elbert Strum. The second wife and mother passed away on the 26th of July, 1884, and eight years later W. H. H. Darby married Miss Mary A. Rankin.

B. L. Darby received his early education in the public schools of Marion county and this was later supplemented by a course in college. After he was graduated he taught school for some time and later took up the study of pharmacy. In 1903 he opened a drug store at Glendale, where he has since conducted the same. He has been successful in business and has acquired a moderate fortune, which he invests judiciously in local enterprises. He owns his home and a number of the most important business buildings in Glendale, and has a large interest in a gold mine of the Union Leader Mining Company.

On June 1, 1905, Mr. Darby was united in marriage to Miss Cathryn McGregor, a daughter of Peter McGregor, whose sketch appears on another page of this work. They have one daughter, Louise, who lives with her parents in the beautiful home which Mr. Darby erected in Glendale. He is a staunch democrat and is actively interested in local affairs. He has served as a member of the council, has held the position of city treasurer and has been a member of the school board at Glendale. He is a member of the Commercial Club of this city and is prominent in the affairs of Glendale Lodge, No. 119, F. & A. M. He belongs to Lodge No. 172, I. O. O. F. Mr. Darby is a keen and intelligent business man with a rapid grasp of details and a shrewd discrimination in investment. In the drug business he unites the qualities of an accurate business sense with an expert knowledge of the details of pharmacy and his success since the beginning of his career has been continuous and gratifying.

ROBERT ROY BOOTH, one of the successful and prominent representatives of livestock interests in Douglas county, is associated in business along that line with his brother, Floyd W. Booth, in partnership with whom he also owns nineteen hundred acres of land six miles east of Yoncalla. His birth occurred in that town on the 3d of May, 1885, his parents being Robert A. and Clintona (LaRaut) Booth, likewise natives of Oregon. Robert Booth, the paternal grandfather, was a native of England, came to the United States as a young man and was married in the east. In 1849 he made his way to the California gold fields, crossing the plains with an ox team. After three years spent in the mines he came north to Oregon in 1852, locating in Yamhill county. He was a circuit rider of the Methodist Episcopal church and preached in all parts of this state during the early pioneer days. Robert A. Booth, the father of our subject, was reared in Douglas county, where his father had removed after a short residence in Yamhill county. On reaching manhood he opened the first store ever established in Yoncalla and operated a sawmill as well, becoming prominently identified with merchandising and lumber interests. During his residence in Douglas county he secured all the tunnel and bridge timbers for the railroad which was built through the valley, as far south as Tunnel 9. In 1886 he went to Grants Pass, where he was identified with the organization of the Sugar Pine Door & Lumber Company, and while there was president of the First National Bank of southern Oregon and also the chief executive officer of two other banks. Later he became president of the Douglas National Bank, at Roseburg. He resided in Grants Pass for thirteen years and in 1899 went to Eugene, where he organized the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company and for eight years acted as manager of the concern. He still retains his stock in the enterprise but for the past five years has practically lived retired. He is a heavy landowner as a member of the Oregon Land & Live Stock Company, which holds thousands of acres of ranch and timber lands in eastern Oregon, and as manager of this important enterprise he is recognized as a potent factor in the present-day affairs of the state. His entire life has been spent in Oregon and he is widely known as one of its prominent and wealthy citizens. He is a staunch republican in politics and has served in the state senate for four terms.

Robert Roy Booth was reared under the parental roof and obtained his early education in the Grants Pass public schools and the Eugene high school. Subsequently he attended the University of Oregon and likewise pursued a commercial course in the Eugene Business College. He was employed by the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company for about three years and on the expiration of that period, in 1908, came to Douglas county, where he has since been successfully engaged in the stock business. In association with his brother, Floyd W. Booth, he owns nineteen hundred acres of land in Scotts valley, six miles east of Yoncalla. He is also a director of the Douglas National Bank, of Roseburg, Oregon.

On the 15th of May, 1911, Mr. Booth was united in marriage to Miss Edna May Hoeflein, of Lane county, Oregon. He gives his political allegiance to the republican party and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias, belonging to Eugene Lodge, No. 33. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, while his wife belongs to the Christian Science church. He has won a creditable place in business circles for one of his years and his future will undoubtedly be one of continued and growing success.

WINFIELD S. BOOTH is one of the prominent citizens of the Cow creek valley, where he operates one hundred and sixty acres of the finest ranch land in the district and is also interested in the development of twenty-six acres of mining lands which he has recently added to his holdings. He was born in Lake county, Ohio, November 12, 1853.

His parents were Albert H. and Margaret (Markell) Booth, both natives of Ohio, who lived and died in that state. They were the parents of three children: James A., a resident of Ohio; Virginia, who married C. W. Root, of Ashland, Oregon; and W. S., of this review.

Winfield S. Booth received his education in the public schools of his native state and remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age. At that time he came to Oregon and located on Cow creek. Here he bought the ranch upon which he now lives, comprising one hundred and sixty acres of land. He has built many fine buildings on that property, erected barns, sheds and fences, has improved the fertility of the soil and acquired modern equipment every year. He makes a specialty of raising cattle. He recently added to his holdings twenty-six acres of mining land and is now engaged in its operation and development.

In 1878 Mr. Booth was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Barber, a daughter of Leonard and Virginia (Williams) Barber of California. Mr. and Mrs. Booth are the parents of fourteen children: Ida M., the wife of Samuel Hutt of this state; Ivy V., the wife of Alfred Sackett; Eugenia, who married Frank Helms; James A.; Flora A., who is taking a course in nursing at Spokane, Washington; Glenn B.; Ellen R., a resident of Portland, Oregon; Lola D., the wife of Matthew Dahl; Edith V. and Agnes M., who are attending school; Halbert W.; Ruth C.; Genet D.; and Clinton C.

Mr. Booth gives his political allegiance to the republican party and has been active in its affairs in this district for many years. He is interested in the cause of education and has served for fifteen years as school clerk. He is postmaster of the town of Booth and has been active in that capacity for the last five years. He is in all respects a public-spirited citizen and brings to his various duties in life the keen mind and the broad intelligence which are the basis of his success.

W. L. NELSON. Among the successful business enterprises of Salem is the general merchandise store which is conducted by W. L. Nelson. He was born in Goodhue county, Minnesota, May 11, 1881, a son of Laurance and Annie (Anderson) Nelson, the former a native of Denmark and the latter of Sweden. The father was an agriculturist and, settling in Minnesota when eighteen years of age, remained there until he removed to Washington in 1900. Later he came to Marion county, Oregon, where he passed away October 29, 1910, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife resides with her son, the subject of this sketch. To Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Nelson, the following children were born: A. C., who resides in Washington; Elvira L., the wife of E. C. Rice, of Salem; Clara, who resides in Vancouver, Washington, is the wife of J. E. Edwards; W. L.; Ralph G., a resident of Washington; Maynard L., a mail clerk working between Spokane and Seattle; F. E., the wife of Rolly Vose, of Washington; and Herbert, Florence and Winnie, all of whom are at home.

W. L. Nelson received his education in Minnesota and at the age of sixteen years started to earn his own livelihood by accepting employment in the baggage room of the Great Northern Railroad Company's station, a position which he occupied for three years, until he gave it up to become a brakeman running between Red Wing and Rochester. After he had been thus engaged for a year he drove a hack for two years for J. E. Allus before being employed for about a year by the Great Northern Railroad Company. Subsequently he went to Washington, where he remained with his father until 1904. After three years spent in Aberdeen he again returned to his father's home remaining there for a year. In 1910, however, he entered upon an independent enterprise when he came to Marion county and living on his mother's twenty acres of land which he had purchased he opened the general mercantile store which he is now conducting. Although this business is comparatively new, it has already proven that it fills a vacancy which had long been a drawback to the community and it is proving equally advantageous to its owner. Mr. Nelson is aggressive and painstaking and through his personal management this store is one of the best conducted in the district.

Mr. Nelson gives his support to the democratic party. He lives in accord with the teachings of the Methodist church. His mother also held membership in a church of that denomination. He is a member of the Moose lodge in Salem. In social as well as in business relations Mr. Nelson is always courteous and considerate and these qualities make for popularity in an extensive acquaintance.

JOHN M. THRONE, one of the leading factors in financial circles of Roseburg, was the principal organizer of The Umpqua Valley Bank and has served in the capacity of cashier since the institution opened its doors for business. His birth occurred in McElhattan, Pennsylvania, on the 16th of March, 1883, his parents being James R. and Arabella (Deise) Throne, who were born, reared and married in the Keystone state. The father began his domestic life on the homestead on which he had been reared to manhood, continuing to reside thereon until 1898, when he came west to Oregon, locating at Anchor, Douglas county, where he has since been successfully engaged in farming.

John M. Throne was reared under the parental roof, obtaining his early education in the public schools and subsequently attending the Central State Normal School, at Lock Haven, Pennsylvania. In the year 1900 he removed to Charleroi, Pennsylvania, and there secured a position as shipping clerk for the McBeth-Evans Glass Company, with which concern he remained for two years. In 1902, turning his face toward the setting sun, he came to Oregon and took up his permanent abode in Roseburg, here securing employment in the abstract office of F. E. Alley, in whose service he remained for about two years. On the expiration of that period he accepted the position of assistant cashier in the Douglas County Bank (now the Douglas National Bank), ably serving in that capacity for four years. At the end of that time, in association with J. H. Booth and W. H. Fisher, he bought out the abstract business of F. E. Alley, resigning his position as assistant bank cashier to undertake the management of the abstract company. In the fall of 1908, however, he disposed of his interests in the concern to Robert E. Smith. While an employe in the Douglas County Bank, Mr. Throne became a very warm friend of Mr. Benson, the president of the institution, who in 1906 was elected secretary of state and in the spring of 1909 became governor of Oregon owing to Governor Chamberlain's election to the United States senate. Through Governor Benson Mr. Throne was appointed chief clerk of the department of insurance of the state of Oregon, remaining in that capacity until April, 1911, when, on the death of Governor Benson, our subject was removed from office by S. A. Koser, his superior, at the request of Governor West, because of his too active part in the campaign against the latter. Mr. Throne being a staunch republican. On the 18th of May, 1911, in association with B. W. Strong and Hon. John A. Carson, Mr. Throne organized The Umpqua Valley Bank and busied himself in securing subscriptions. On the 13th of April, 1912, the new institution opened its doors for business and it was wholly through his exertions that its organization was effected. Mr. Throne has since served as cashier of the bank and his efforts are proving a potent element in its continued growth and success. He has already won an enviable position in financial circles for one of his years and his splendid ability will doubtless lead him on to greater prosperity and prominence.

On the 12th of September, 1905, Mr. Throne was united in marriage to Miss Susan A. Ollivant, of Douglas county, her father being William H. Ollivant, deceased, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Douglas county. They have one child, John Frederick, who was born on the 3d of December, 1911. Mr. Throne gives his political allegiance to the republican party and fraternally is connected with Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E.; Oak Camp, No. 125, W. O. W., and Roseburg Lodge, No. 1037, Loyal Order of Moose, of which he is treasurer. He is well known as a popular, enterprising young man, his friendly spirit winning him recognition in social circles proportionate to his advancement in the business world.

JOHN McKINNEY, who owns and operates a general machine shop and foundry at Woodburn was born at Dunbarton, Scotland, March 28, 1846. He is a son of Peter and Catherine (Redington) McKinney, the father a native of Scotland and the mother of Ireland. The parents were married in Ireland and six months later removed to Scotland, where they resided until 1847, when the father came to America, settling at New Orleans, Louisiana, in which city he was accidentally killed the following year. The mother came to America in 1852 and settled in Bloomington, Illinois. In 1853 the mother married again, her second union being with Michael Mooney, who was born in England, of Irish descent. After her marriage the mother went to Chicago and resided there until her death, passing away at the age of eighty-four. In the spring of 1861 Mr. Mooney enlisted in the Civil war and while in service was captured and placed in prison at New Orleans, where he died. By her two marriages Catherine Redington became the mother of four children. Of her first marriage were born: John, of this review; and Mary, who died at Pueblo, Colorado. By her second marriage she became the mother of two children: Alice Mooney and Mrs. Nellie Veronica Gallagher, both of whom are residents of Chicago.

On the removal of the mother to America John McKinney remained in his native country, where at the age of nine years, he started out in life for himself by working in Denney's Shipyard, where he was employed for fourteen months. His mother then sent him money from Chicago, with which he came to America under the captain's care, arriving in New York with only a half crown in his pocket. From there he went to Albany, where through sympathy he was provided with money and finally arrived in Chicago. In that city he became bell boy at a hotel and worked at the same for eighteen months. Subsequently he served an apprenticeship of three years at the molder's trade and six months in a molding and core-making foundry and then worked for a time as a journeyman. At the age of twenty-five he went to Mishawaka, Indiana, where he was employed in the St. Joseph Iron Works for nine years, during which time he became head molder. He then worked at South Bend and later in Wisconsin. He was afterward connected with the Holland Radiator Company at Chicago, being a stockholder and also general superintendent of the same until he came to Oregon in 1905, settling at Woodburn. Shipping his machinery from Chicago, he started a foundry here and also a general machine shop, of which he is the sole owner, and he is now carrying on an extensive business. He has been very successful financially and also owns an excellent residence in Woodburn, has business property in Portland, and also real-estate interests in Chicago and Michigan.

On October 23, 1879, Mr. McKinney wedded Miss Margaret E. Kerr, who was born in Ohio, the daughter of James W. and Cyrenia (Harman) Kerr, the father a native of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and the mother of Ohio. The parents lived in Ohio for several years, or until 1860, when they moved to Columbus, Indiana, where the father passed away in 1883, the mother surviving him until October, 1898. In their family were six children: Esther; Chloe; Martha; Margaret E., now Mrs. McKinney; Millard F.; and Laura, who is deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. McKinney have been born five children: Mrs. Maud E. Moehl, a university graduate and the wife of a Presbyterian minister at Albany, Oregon; Mrs. Helen C. Guiss, of Woodburn, also a college graduate; John R., who attended university, graduating from the mechanical engineering department, and is now living at home; Avon, who is now attending high school; and Alice, who died in infancy.

In politics Mr. McKinney is a republican but he has never sought or desired office, preferring to give his entire time to his business interests. He has always been an active and industrious citizen, a man of excellent business ability, and has commanded the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has been associated. He may truly be called a self-made man, for he started in life empty-handed and now is the owner of a thriving foundry and general machine shop and much valuable real estate.

CARL D. SHOEMAKER, active and prominent in newspaper circles of Roseburg, with which he has been connected through his paper, the Evening News, since 1911, is well known in that city as an able and conscientious journalist. He was born in Napoleon, Ohio, June 20, 1882. His father, Milton Shoemaker, was born in Mount Blanchard, Ohio, November 1, 1857, and is in the dry-goods business in Napoleon. The mother, Jemema (Kuhn) Shoemaker, was born in Heinsheim, Germany, October 12, 1859. To the parents of our subject four children were born: Carl D.; Samuel J., in business with his father in Ohio; Dr. Bertram R., a practicing physician, of Athens, Ohio; and Hildegard, living at home.

Carl D. Shoemaker received his early education in the common schools of Ohio and later attended the Napoleon high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1900. He then attended the Ohio State University and received his degree of B. A. in 1904. He was graduated from the law department of the same institution in 1907 with the degree of LL. B. and practiced the legal profession in Columbus until December, 1911. At that time he purchased the Evening News in Roseburg and has been operating it since. In the course of a year of his residence in this city he has gained a reputation for ability and fearlessness in the journalistic field.

On July 27, 1907, Carl D. Shoemaker was united in marriage to Miss Loa E. Turney, a daughter of Dr. Charles F. Turney, of Columbus, Ohio, and they have one son, Milton F. Mr. Shoemaker is a republican and his position at the head of the largest newspaper in Roseburg makes him a power in political circles. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs and is well versed in local and national matters of government. He holds membership in the Presbyterian church of Roseburg, in which faith he was reared. He is a member of the Delta Tau Delta and Acacia college fraternities, belongs to the blue lodge, the chapter, commandery and shrine of the Masonic order, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Loyal Order of Moose. Carl

D. Shoemaker never abuses the power which his position as owner of a newspaper gives him and he never uses his influence for paltry or unworthy purposes.

HARRY WEAVER WALKER is successfully engaged in the operation of his father's improved ranch, located three quarters of a mile from Cooston in Coos county, Oregon. He was born May 10, 1888, in Coos county, and is the son of W. L. and Alice R. (Weaver) Walker, being an only child. The father settled in California at an early day and in 1885 removed to Coos Bay and established his home on Coos river, at which place he had his residence for three years and then removed to Coos Bay where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of valuable agricultural land.

Harry Weaver Walker received his education in the public schools of Oregon and remained under the parental roof until twenty-one years of age at which time he rented his father's farm and engaged in general farming, to which he has since continued to give his entire attention, making a specialty of dairy farming and also of raising potatoes which he sells in the open market.

Mr. Walker was united in marriage July 3, 1909, at Cooston, to Miss Jeanette E. Nass, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Nass, who became the parents of thirteen children: Louis, a resident of Washington, who is married and has two children; William, a resident of Washington, who is married and has one child; Laura, who is the wife of W. E. Homme, postmaster of Cooston, Oregon, by whom she has three children; Gustave, a resident of Washington; Mamie, who is the wife of Clarence Botts, of Tacoma, Washington, by whom she has one child; Otto, a resident of Washington; Richard, who makes his home in Coos county with Harry W. Walker, of this review; Herbert and Grover, both of whom reside in Wisconsin; Jeanette E., the wife of our subject; Ella and Esther, both of whom reside at home with their parents in Wisconsin; and Ellen, who is deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker are the parents of one child, Herbert, who was born May 9, 1910. Mr. Walker is liberal in the exercise of his franchise, having no definite affiliation with any party. He is a director of the school board of the district in which he lives and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Walker has been in full charge of his father's farm since 1909 and as the superintendent of that property he has made a very creditable success. He is highly respected in the community in which he resides and is one of the well known and useful citizens of Coos county.

GEORGE MELVIN MILLER. To George Melvin Miller more than to any other individual is due the development of Florence, the seaport of Lane county. His labors have directly and indirectly benefited this part of the state and the consensus of public opinion places him with the leading citizens of Eugene. He was born in Lane county, Oregon, May 22, 1857, and is a son of Hulings and Margaret B. (Witt) Miller. His paternal grandfather, Hulings Miller, Sr., laid down his life on the altar of his country while serving as a soldier in the War of 1812 under command of General William Henry Harrison. His son and namesake was born in Ohio, whence he removed to Liberty, Indiana. He was a well educated man for his day and engaged in teaching school in Indiana, in which state he married and there four of the older children were born. After living for a time on the Indian Reserve in western Indiana, where he also engaged in teaching, he emigrated to Oregon in 1852, with his family, settling at Coburg in the foothills, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1884. Unto him and his wife were born five children: John D., who was a dentist and practiced in Philadelphia but lost his health through his service in the Civil war; James, living at Creswell, Oregon; Joaquin, who is far famed as the poet of the Sierras; Ella, who became the wife of John Luckey but is deceased; and George Melvin.

The last named attended the public schools and afterward took up the profession of teaching. Desirous of advancing his own education, he later entered Monmouth (Oregon) College and also attended the University of Oregon in the year in which it was opened. He began reading law with Judge Walton and following his admission to the bar practiced at Eugene and at Independence but has given most of his time to real-estate dealings, in which connection he has become very widely known. On the 26th of May, 1887, he purchased the original town site of Florence, becoming owner of ninety acres, for which he paid ten dollars an acre. He had first visited this site in 1883, driving a wagon to a point twenty-five miles from Eugene and then walking the remainder of the distance, carrying his blankets. He was accompanied by D. P. Thompson, S. W. Condon and Professor Lee, who was superintendent of schools of Eugene. At Mapleton they found an Indian, who had a boat and took them down to what is now the site of Florence. At that time there was only a board house there and one white family—about a half dozen inhabitants in all. There was a small store in a shanty conducted by A. J. Moody. On that trip of two days Mr. Miller saw the possibilities for the building of an attractive seaport town there. Mr. Moody had obtained title to his holdings of ninety acres and when this was put on sale after his death nobody bid for it and the sale was continued until the following year. In the meantime a wagon road had been opened between Eugene and Mapleton and settlers began to move in and take up government land. Biggar Herman was attorney for the administrator for the Moody estate and through him Mr. Miller learned that the property could be bought but only through public sale at auction. Mr. Herman also said that the land would not be put up for sale again without a guarantee of at least one bid and Mr. Miller guaranteed the bid. He proved to be the only bidder and secured the title to the property. Later he secured a homestead claim adjoining the site and subsequently purchased a half interest in the Chicago addition and one hundred and fifty acres in another tract. He has since been selling lots and buying acreage, and has dealt extensively in that district. His sound judgment and keen prescience were manifest in his purchase of the land at Florence, for he recognized its possibilities and wisely used the opportunity that came to him. Operating extensively in real estate there through the intervening years, he has derived therefrom a handsome and well earned fortune.

He was the pioneer in cutting up the large donation claims into small tracts for higher tillage, beginning in 1887 with the Solomon Zumalt donation claim near Eugene. Mr. Miller spent the greater part of four years, from 1898 to 1902, in southeastern Alaska, following various occupations from practicing law to stampeding for mining claims in close proximity to the disputed boundary line between Alaska and Canada, and naturally, as an American citizen, took a deep interest in the settlement of the question pending between the British and American governments. He happened to be in Skagway on a morning in June, 1901, when the Canadian customs officials raised the British flag over their improvised customs house in that town. Mr. Miller, seeing the flag floating over what he knew to be American soil, promptly cut the halyards and lowering the British colors, carefully folded them and laid them aside. Asked by what authority he did this, he replied, "By the authority of an American citizen," and added that the British flag could not be raised again in Skagway unless the flag of the United States floated above it. The incident very nearly led to international complications. The government sustained Mr. Miller in his action and the British government repudiated the act of its officials in Skagway. President Roosevelt sent out a body of soldiers and established a post at Haines Mission on the Chilkat peninsula. A commission was appointed and a boundary line established substantially as claimed by Mr. Miller, and Skagway remained in American territory.

Mr. Miller was one of the organizers of the Presbyterian church in Florence, and was for a time one of its elders.

In 1885 he married Lischen Coggsell, a daughter of John Coggsell, of Eugene.

THOMAS APPLGATE, a well known and respected resident of Yoncalla, is a native son of this state, his birth having occurred in Polk county on the 27th of August, 1847. His parents were Charles and Malinda (Miller) Applegate, who are mentioned at greater length on another page of this work, in connection with the sketch of George Applegate, a brother of our subject. Thomas Applegate was but three years of age when brought by his parents to Douglas county and it was here that he was reared and educated, attending the public schools and also Wilbur Academy, in which institution he pursued his studies during a short term. At the time he reached his majority his four older brothers had married and left the farm and his father was approaching old age, so that the management and operation of the home place necessarily fell to his lot. When twenty-six years of age he rented land from his father and began farming on an extensive scale. In 1878 he removed to Grant county, Oregon, but at the end of a year returned to Yoncalla. While living in Grant county he had purchased about three hundred acres of land in Douglas county and after his return resided thereon for two and a half years. On the expiration of that period, in the spring of 1882, he sold his ranch and removed to Jackson county, returning to Yoncalla, however, in the spring of 1883 and turning his attention to the sawmill business. In 1888 he removed to Oakland, California, and spent the following sixteen years in the Sacramento valley, being employed on the large ranches of that valley. In 1905 he once more returned to Yoncalla, Oregon, where he has remained to the present time.

In 1875 Mr. Applegate was united in marriage to Miss Hortense Reed, a daughter of Dr. Calvin Reed, who was the first practicing physician of Douglas county. In 1850, while crossing the plains from Anamosa, Iowa, to Oregon with ox teams, he was one of the victims in the epidemic of cholera then raging but survived the dread disease. After arriving in Douglas county he took up a donation claim where the town of Winchester now stands and built thereon a gristmill and also a sawmill, these being the first mills erected in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Applegate have eight children, as follows: Agnes, who is the wife of Edward Kaehler, of Glenn county, California; Carl R., who is engaged in ranching in Glenn county, California; Beatrice, the wife of Dallas Crouch, of Springfield, Oregon; Audley E., who is a contractor and builder of Portland, Oregon; Homer G., who is the proprietor of a hotel at Butte City, California; Harriett, the wife of C. Ray Beekley, who is in the service of the firm of Toft & Company, commission merchants of Portland, Oregon; James E., living in Marshfield, Oregon; and Vivian, who is employed in an office in Portland. In politics Mr. Applegate is a staunch republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. His wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. He has always been a hard worker and it has been through his unrelenting energy that he enjoys his present comfort and prosperity.

WESLEY A. BEAN is a native son of Oregon and has been identified with various representative enterprises since he began his active life. At the present time he is successful as a general merchant in Riverton, having built up a flourishing business from a humble beginning. He was born in Douglas county, November 5, 1862, and is a son of Stephen and Martha (Allen) Bean, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Kansas. The father came to Oregon in 1844 and settled in the Willamette valley, while the mother came to the Umpqua valley with her people in the early days of the settlement of that district. Both crossed the plains with ox teams and were among the pioneers in Oregon. Stephen Bean was a machinist by trade and after settling in the Willamette valley he followed that line of occupation for a number of years, finally buying land in Douglas county, which he operated until his retirement. He moved to Coos county and established his residence at Lampa, on the Coquille river, where he died in March, 1906. His wife survived him until 1910. They were the parents of eleven children: Clara, the widow of A. Burns, of Portland; William S., a merchant of Newburg; Susan, who has passed away; Mary, the wife of C. E. Hasard, postmaster of Drain, Oregon; Wesley A., the subject of this sketch; James L., postmaster and general merchant in Lampa; Annie, the wife of J. H. Timon, of California; Myrtle, who married T. L. Rendle, a ranchman of Tacoma, Washington; Albert S. and Edgar, both of whom reside in Lampa; and a child who died in infancy.

Wesley A. Bean was educated in the public schools of Douglas county and learned his father's trade of carpentering. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age and assisted in the operation of the farm. When he attained his majority he entered a normal school and after a three years' course was engaged as teacher in the district schools of several counties in Oregon, following this line of occupation for six years. At the end of that time he became identified with coal mining in Riverton. He formed a partnership with J. H. Timon and opened the first mine of this character in the village, which has since been known as the Timon mine. Mr. J. H. Timon was the discoverer of the vein and both he and Mr. Bean were active in the development of the enterprise for a number of years, finally selling out his interest to his partner, who employed him as superintendent and manager. He acted in these capacities for eight years, abandoning mining at the end of that time in order to resume carpentering. He worked at this occupation and at sawmilling for several years and then established himself in the merchandise business in Riverton, being still connected with this line of activity. It was a very small enterprise when it was purchased by Mr. Bean but it has grown rapidly and expanded along modern and progressive lines. The store has been enlarged twice to accommodate the growing patronage. Mr. Bean carries a stock worth about five thousand dollars and this he keeps complete and up-to-date in every particular, his rapidly increasing trade being an evidence of his prosperity. He has invested in local property, owning his own residence and several business lots in Riverton. When the postoffice was reestablished he was appointed postmaster and has acted in this capacity since that time, gaining success in the conduct of the office by reason of the same qualities of painstaking care and conscientiousness which have made his commercial career a valuable factor in expansion.

On December 27, 1897, Mr. Bean was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Martin, a native of California and a daughter of J. E. and Ella (Hensley) Martin. The parents came to Oregon in 1892 and after two years settled in Riverton, where they purchased a home. The father is well known as a painter in the village. He and his wife had seven children: Archie, a resident of Riverton; Mabel, the wife of our subject; George, also a resident of Riverton; Clifford, who is in business with our subject and who married Miss Mabel Sanford, a native of Oregon; Robert, who is engaged in the stock business in Riverton in partnership with his brother Archie; Nellie, who has passed away; and Joseph, also a resident of Riverton. Mr. and Mrs. Bean have two children; Bernice, who was born May 28, 1904, and who died a short time afterward; and Dorothy S., whose birth occurred on July 28, 1905, and who is now attending school.

In his political views Mr. Bean is independent and never seeks public office. He holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and in the Woodmen of the World. He has sought success along commercial lines and has gained the reward of his industry and activity in increased efficiency. He is energetic, straightforward and honorably ambitious and measures up to the highest standards of personal honor and present-day business ethics.

TILLO M. COLLVER is one of the successful farmers of Coos county located at Catching inlet on his highly improved ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of dairy farming. He was born October 21, 1869, on Coos river, and is a son of A. B. and Ruth (Rice) Collver. The parents celebrated their marriage in Iowa and in 1852 crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon, settling in Douglas county on a donation claim where they continued to live until 1857, at which time they removed to Coos bay and purchased a farm of two hundred and forty acres located on Coos river where they spent the remainder of their lives, the father passing away in 1902 at the age of eighty-two years and the mother's death occurring in 1903 when she was seventy-six years of age. In their family were eleven children: Philura, deceased; Henrietta, who makes her home with the subject of this review; A. M., who resides in Forest Grove; Adelia, who is the wife of Isaac Powell of eastern Oregon, by whom she has ten children; Orace G., who resides in Culver, Crook county, Oregon; William A., of Coos county, who is married and has two children; John T., of North Bend, who is married and has two children; Sarah D., now deceased, who became the wife of William H. Church, by whom she had five children; Andrew F., of Newport, Oregon, who is married and has eight children; Howard, of Coquille, who is married and has seven children; and Tillio M., of this review.

Tillo M. Collver was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of Oregon. At the age of fourteen he started in life for himself, taking up work with his brothers, with whom he continued for five years and then purchased a small number of cattle and some time later rented his brother's farm of two hundred acres and engaged in general farming. He afterward held the position of lighthouse keeper at Cape Argo for a short time but continued to give the necessary attention to his farming interests on his brother's place, where he remained for a period of ten years engaged in stock-raising, truck-farming and dairying. He then, in company with his older brother, A. M. Collver, purchased a place of one hundred and sixty acres and in 1904 he bought his brother's interest in the property and since that time as sole owner and proprietor has devoted his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his ranch. Twenty acres of his property he has brought to a high state of cultivation and uses in his dairy business fifteen well selected cows, each of which nets him eighty-five dollars per annum, which is a maximum record in the dairy business.

On June 15, 1898, Mr. Collver was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Moore, a native of Wasco county, this state, and a daughter of William H. and Elmira (Towne) Moore, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Illinois. The parents removed from Iowa to Oregon, settling in Wasco county in 1891. To them six children were born. Marshall, who is filling the office of postmaster at Fort Collins, Colorado, is married and has two children. Frank, residing at The Dalles, Oregon, is married and has two children. Carrie is the wife of Tillo M. Collver of this review. Anna married Ed Coffelt, of North Bend, and they have two children. Jennie is the wife of Clarence R. Collver of Douglas county, Oregon, and she has two children by a former husband. Arthur, who completes the family, resides with his sister, Mrs. Tillo M. Collver. Mr. and Mrs. Collver are the parents of six children: Chester A., born August 12, 1899, who is now attending school; Vernon W., born August 17, 1901, who is a pupil in the public schools; Gladys L., born August 31, 1903, who is also attending school; Gordon M., born August 28, 1905; Enid R., born September 10, 1907; and Marshall M., born May 5, 1911.

Mr. Collver is a loyal adherent of the republican party and has for the past three years been one of the officers of the school district in which he resides. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Pythias and the Grange, and he and his wife are members of the United Brethren church. Mr. Collver is one of the well known agriculturists of his portion of the state and is interested in every movement intended to advance the interests of his community. He is a man respected by his friends and associates and in every way one of the substantial and desirable citizens of the county in which he resides.

JOSEPH McD. HAYES owns and operates two farms in Coos county and as an expert agriculturist is ranked among the representative citizens of the district. The tract upon which he lives comprises eighty acres of fertile land, most of which is in a high state of cultivation. He is also the proprietor of a farm of thirty-two acres in another part of Coos county and divides his attention between the operation of the two properties. He was born in Watanga county, North Carolina, in 1868, and is a son of John and Susan (Wagner) Hayes, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. Joseph Hayes received his education in the public schools of Coos county, whither he had come as a child, and gained expert agricultural knowledge by assisting his father upon the work of the farm. He began his independent career at the time of his marriage, when he was twenty-two years of age, and farmed a tract of land consisting of eighty acres which he purchased at that time. This property is located on the south fork of the Coquille river, twenty-five miles above Myrtle Point, and upon it Mr. Hayes has resided continuously with the exception of three years. He has operated his farm along modern and scientific lines during this time and has brought it to a high state of cultivation. He has improved his outbuildings, granaries and barns; fenced his fields and planted his acres to the grains most suitable to soil and climate. He has made a success because he has founded his activities upon personal experience and efficiency. He has added to his holdings and now owns eighty-seven acres in the tract upon which he resides, twenty acres of which are highly improved and developed. He also owns another farm in Coos county comprising thirty-two acres.

In 1892 Mr. Hayes was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Hartley, a native of North Carolina, who came to Oregon with her parents when she was a child. She is a daughter of Harrison and Margaret Hartley, who were among the pioneers of this state and who settled first in Myrtle Point, where the father purchased land and cultivated the soil. He has brought the farm to a highly improved state and now makes his home in Myrtle Point. Mrs. Hayes is one of a large family, nine of whom are still living: William, who resides in Coos county, Oregon; Reuben, who makes his home in North Yakima, Oregon; Benjamin, who is a resident of Idaho; Alice, the widow of Walter Bennett, of Myrtle Point; Leonard, whose farm is in Coos county; Jack, who maintains his home in Idaho; Annie, the wife of Zac Grant, residing near Myrtle Point; David, of Bandon, Oregon; and Finley, deceased. Mrs. Hayes died in 1902 and was buried in Norway cemetery, Coos county. She left to mourn her three children: Adolphus, born in 1893, who received most of his education in the public schools of Coos county and is at home; Harrison, born in 1895, who lives with his father; and Jesse, whose birth occurred in January, 1897, and who is attending school. Mr. Hayes and his sons are members of the Dunkard faith and are well known in the organization of that church. In his political affiliations Mr. Hayes is a socialist and held the office of road supervisor for one term. He is public-spirited and interested in the growth and progress of this section and lends his influence principally to educational matters. He has been serving on the school board for a number of years and in this capacity has done efficient work along those lines.

JOHN GEIDER, well known as a fruit-grower of the Yoncalla valley, resides on a tract of forty acres two miles south of Yoncalla, which has been in his possession for almost a quarter of a century. His birth occurred in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, on the 20th of May, 1856, his parents being Franz and Margaret (Engman) Geider, who passed away in that country. The father was a farmer and liveryman in the town of Kastell, on the Rhine.

John Geider spent the first seventeen years of his life in his home in Germany. He obtained a good education in the public schools of the fatherland and after coming to this country continued his studies in Sacramento, California. It was in 1873 that he crossed the Atlantic to the United States, landing in New York city, where he spent about two months. On the expiration of that period he crossed the continent to California, locating in Sacramento. He had learned the blacksmith's trade in Germany and worked at that occupation in Sacramento for about three years. At the time of the construction of the Southern Pacific railway he was employed as a smith by that corporation for three years. During the following eight or ten years his was a varied career. He followed the sea for about three years, working on a coasting vessel, and subsequently was employed as a blacksmith to assist in the construction of the Oregon & California railroad and also the Canadian Pacific. He next conducted a blacksmith shop in Dillard, Douglas county, for four years, and in 1888 came to the Yoncalla valley. On the following New Year's day he was married and later established his home on a farm two miles south of Yoncalla, where he has remained to the present time. The place comprises forty acres and was purchased by him prior to his marriage. He has won success in his undertakings as a fruit-grower and his is one of the attractive little homes of southern Oregon.

On the 1st of January, 1889, Mr. Geider was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Rice, a daughter of Harrison Rice, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Dillard, having crossed the plains with ox teams from Maine in 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Geider have four children, namely: Harrison R., who is a resident of Sherlock, Washington; John F., at home; Margaret K., who is employed in the city of Portland; and Edith G., who is still under the parental roof.

In politics Mr. Geider is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party. He is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Laurel Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M. His wife is a devoted and consistent member of the Baptist church. He has never regretted his determination to seek a home and fortune in the new world, for here he has not only won prosperity but also the esteem and good-will of his fellow townsmen.

E. M. HOFFMAN owns and operates one hundred and sixty acres of fertile and productive farm land located three miles above Myrtle Point, Oregon, where he is carrying on general farming, making a specialty of stock-raising and dairying. He was born in Douglas county, Oregon, January 29, 1858, and is a son of Abraham and Jemina (Filett) Hoffman, the former a native of Dearborn county, Indiana, and the latter of Winnipeg, Canada. Abraham Hoffman came to Oregon in 1850 and was married in that state, his wife having been a resident of Oregon since 1841. She came to the northwest in her infancy traveling overland with her parents in an emigrant train, comprised of thirty-six pioneer families. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Hoffman settled on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres on the Coquille river, three miles above Myrtle Point. The father cultivated the land, and developed and improved it with gratifying success until his death on October 17, 1862, when he was forty-two years of age. His wife is still living on the old homestead and has reached her seventy-second year. E. M. Hoffman is one of three children born to his parents. The others are: G. F., of California; and Rachel, the wife of Joseph J. Marcus, also of California.

E. M. Hoffman was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Coos county. He became acquainted with the details of farming as carried on in the state of Oregon and gained a practical experience in the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the stock and grain. He remained with his parents until his marriage when he was twenty-six years of age at which time he abandoned farming for work in a logging camp. He was also engaged in ranching at this time and was successful as a stock-raiser. He eventually took up a homestead claim in Coos county and lived for some years upon his holdings cultivating and improving them along progressive and modern lines. He later bought his father's old homestead and at the present time is the proprietor of one hundred and sixty acres located three miles above Myrtle Point, Oregon. He is making a specialty of raising high-grade stock and engages extensively in dairying. He has equipped his farm with all modern conveniences, has remodeled his barns and outbuildings and has made his property one of the attractive and model features of the agricultural development of his section.

In his political convictions Mr. Hoffman is a republican and while he never seeks public office he takes an intelligent interest in local affairs. He belongs to the Seventh Day Adventist faith and with this religion his family is also affiliated.

On November 7, 1883, Mr. Hoffman was united in marriage to Miss Henrietta Williams, whose birth occurred in Atehison county, Kansas, on November 2, 1862. She is a daughter of Henry C. and Martha W. (May) Williams, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Arkansas. The marriage of Mrs. Hoffman's parents occurred in Kansas in 1857, and they made this state their home until 1866. In that year they removed to Jasper county, Missouri, where they remained five years. Their residence in Oregon was established in 1873 when the father took up a homestead claim in Coos county near Myrtle Point and was successful as an agriculturist until his death in 1887. He had survived his wife for five years, her death having occurred in 1882. To their union were born eleven children, five of whom are still living: Henrietta, the wife of our subject; Nancy, now Mrs. Brooks of Lents, Oregon; Joseph W., of Myrtle Point; Mrs. Maggie Newington of San Francisco, California; and Mrs. Elsie Moore of Coos county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman have been born seven children: Mary, now Mrs. Parry of Coos county, whose birth occurred on August 17, 1884; Edward F., born February 18, 1886, who resides at home; Walter, born March 2, 1890, who also resides at home; Milton E., born August 28, 1892; George W., whose birth occurred on the 23d of March, 1896; Charles H., born in 1901; and Nellie M., whose natal day was January 18, 1906.

Mr. Hoffman is an example of the modern type of farmer. He follows his occupation along enterprising and progressive lines and is efficient and up-to-date in his methods. His life has been devoted to raising the standards of agriculture and in promoting the growth and development of the resources of Coos county by promoting his individual prosperity.

ALEXANDER MARTIN. The history of financial activity in Klamath Falls would be incomplete and unsatisfactory were there failure to make prominent reference to Alexander Martin, who is the president of the First National Bank and is still an active and valued factor in business circles, although he has now reached the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was born in Scott county, Illinois, March 17, 1835, and is a son of Samuel and Susan (Sisson) Martin, who were natives of West Virginia and Baltimore, Maryland, respectively. They were married in the former state and in 1832 removed to Illinois. The father died on the old home farm in Scott county. He had erected a large brick residence upon his place but was not long permitted to enjoy his new home, for in the succeeding fall—the fall of 1844—he passed away at the age of fifty-six years. He was a stock farmer and was closely identified with the early development of his part of the state. His widow survived him until 1866 and died in the old home there. In their family were three sons and six daughters: Maria and Francis, both deceased; George, who was a captain of Company H, of the One Hundred and Twenty-Ninth Illinois Infantry and went with Sherman to the sea, while his last days were spent in Kansas City, Missouri, where he died in 1911, at the age of eighty-four years; Sarah and Eliza, who have passed away; Alexander; Mrs. Martha Horace of Nebraska; Samuel of Nebraska, who served as a lieutenant in the same company with his brother George; and Mrs. Susan Cornelia Cann, of Abilene, Kansas.

Alexander Martin resided in Scott county, Illinois, until the spring of 1853, when he joined the hundreds of emigrants to the northwest, crossing the plains with ox teams to the Rogue river valley of Oregon. He spent the winter in Jacksonville and in the fall of 1854 went to Sacramento, California, but in the fall of 1855 he returned to Jacksonville, where he followed blacksmithing which he had previously learned in Illinois. He engaged at the trade there until 1863 and then turned from industrial to commercial pursuits, operating a store under the firm name of Glenn, Drum & Company. He was in this business for two or three years. He acted as outside business man for the firm and furnished supplies for the government corporation being with the army when they selected the site of Fort Klamath. In 1866 Mr. Martin returned home by way of the isthmus route for a visit with family and friends in Illinois. He continued to reside in Jacksonville till he disposed of his mercantile interests about 1872, when he assumed the management of the Overland Stage Route between Sacramento and Portland. He was thus engaged until the railroad was built. He then bought the mercantile business at Jacksonville which was owned by one of his former partners, Major Glenn, and after a few months admitted J. B. White to a partnership. They continued in this business until 1873 and then sold out to Reams Brothers & Company. On the 4th of March, 1878, Mr. Martin removed to Oakland, California, and since May, 1879, has been a prominent resident of that place. In 1880, however, he became identified with business interests at Klamath Falls. He was engaged in merchandising for a number of years, or until 1900, when in connection with his eldest son, Alexander Martin, Jr., and E. R. Reams, he organized the Klamath County Bank, of which he was president until December, 1911, when this bank was merged with the First National Bank, of Klamath Falls, and Mr. Martin became president of the latter, with his son as cashier and Mr. Reams as a director.

Mr. Martin has been married twice. In 1857 he wedded Miss Elvira M. Gass, a native of Iowa, and unto them were born five children: Ida, the wife of G. H. Aiken, of Fresno, California; Alexander, living in Eugene; William, who is engaged in the practice of dentistry in Klamath Falls; George, a dentist of Berlin, Germany; and Elvira, the wife of F. H. Woodward of Oakland, California. In 1882 Mr. Martin was again married, the second union being with Miss Mary F. Gass, a sister of his first wife. While Mr. Martin resides in Oakland, California, he spends most of his time in Klamath Falls, where his business interests are located. He is an elder of the First Presbyterian church of Oakland and since 1859 he has been identified with the Masonic fraternity in Jacksonville. He served for six consecutive terms as master of Warren Lodge, No. 10, F. & A. M., of Jacksonville. During the winter of 1873 he furnished government transportation and supplies, sending the latter from the department of Columbia to the army in the field. During the occupation of Fort Klamath he practically furnished all the supplies and transportation facilities. He has been an interested witness of the growth and development of the northwest and has been an active factor in its progress. In all the years which have come and gone since he came to the Pacific coast he has enjoyed an unsailable reputation in business affairs and his labors have been an element in public prosperity as well as in individual success. Wherever known he is held in high regard and most of all, where he is best known.

JAMES W. MAST has been a prominent figure in political and business circles of Bandon, Coos county, for a number of years. He has served his city and county in various capacities with ability and success and has promoted the commercial progress of the city by his intelligent management of a growing grocery establishment. He was born in Sugar Grove, North Carolina, in 1866, and is a son of William P. and Charlotte H. Mast, both natives of North Carolina. His parents came to Oregon in 1872, locating immediately in Coos county, where the father purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land and acquired the twenty-three acres adjoining this tract as a preemption claim. This now constitutes the Mast homestead. A more extended mention is made of William P. Mast on another page of this work. He followed agriculture for many years and was a successful and prosperous farmer at the time of his death, on December 10, 1889. His wife survives him and is living upon the farm which he improved and developed. In their family were five sons, the brothers of our subject being: Reuben L., cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille, Oregon; William L., a diver in the employ of the government, located at Bandon; Webb, who operates the old homestead near Myrtle Point, and who is mentioned at length on another page of this work; and Hardy W., who assists his brother Webb in the operation of the farm.

James W. Mast was educated in the public schools of Oregon, whither he came with his parents when he was a child. He supplemented his primary course by attending the Monmouth Normal School at Monmouth, Oregon, from which institution he was graduated. He taught for several terms in the public schools of Coos county, following this line of occupation from 1898 to 1901. He worked for some time in the assessor's office in Coquille and during the winters aided in the work of the home farm. In 1903 he obtained a position in the employ of the Prosper Mill Company, at Prosper, Oregon, and held the office of bookkeeper for two and a half years. At the end of that time he returned to the old homestead and resided with his mother, taking an active part in the operation of the farm. He engaged in the logging business for a short time but later became identified with the R. H. Rosa Company, as secretary and manager. He remained in Bandon and followed his duties in this capacity for four years, but eventually abandoned it and sold out his interests in order to establish himself in the grocery business, which he has operated since that time. His store is one of the largest of its kind in Bandon, Oregon, and his commercial methods are above reproach. His stock is always attractive and tastefully arranged and his patronage is constantly increasing as the quality of his goods becomes better known.

Mr. Mast's identification with political life in Bandon and in Coos county forms one of the vital interests of his life. He has served his fellow citizens in various capacities and has always done able and faithful work. His father established the postoffice at Lee, Oregon, in 1886, and after his death Mr. Mast was appointed to succeed him and he has held the office continuously since that time, having been appointed every four years since he first became connected with this line of activity. Mr. Mast now holds this position but as he has established his residence in Bandon his mother has been appointed deputy in the postoffice. Upon his first arrival in Bandon Mr. Mast was elected to the city council and served for one year, beginning his term in 1909. He made such a successful and honorable record that he was elected mayor at the end of his first year. He has been three times reelected and is now serving with ability and efficiency. His popularity and talent along political lines are evidenced by the fact that each time he defeated experienced politicians who had been active in public capacity for many years and who were well acquainted with local conditions. After his first term he was the successful opponent of C. R. Wade, the former city recorder, and at the next election defeated Stephen Gallier, former sheriff of Coos county. In June, 1911, he opposed George P. Toppington and was elected by a large majority, qualifying for office on the first Wednesday in July. Mr. Mast has served his county in various other capacities. He served for two years as clerk of the school district, holding this office before he had established his residence. He was also active in educational affairs when he lived in Lee, Oregon, and was an influencing factor in the building of the large school in that city which is one of the best country educational institutions in Coos county. In 1908 he was elected school clerk in Bandon and has since served, being reelected every year. During this time he has handled the finances for the erection of the new schoolhouse in that city and has been an active figure in the enlarging of the school district. Under his able and honest administration the funds at the disposal of the school board have increased from eight thousand dollars a year to eighteen thousand, and this increase is steadily growing larger.

Mr. Mast is prominent in fraternal circles of Bandon, where he has maintained his residence for the last six years. He is a Royal Arch Mason and holds membership in the Order of the Eastern Star. He is a prominent Knight of Pythias and is identified with the Pythian Sisters. He also belongs to the Elks and is well known in the affairs of that organization. Mr. Mast regards a man in public life as a servant of the people and he is using his influence to carry out the will of his constituents, having made a record in his political career for ability, never using his natural talents unworthily nor supporting dishonorable causes.

FRANK L. LOWE is one of the active and successful business men of Marshfield where he has lived during the greater portion of his life and is among the most highly respected citizens of this part of the state of Oregon. He was born where Parkersburg is now located, on the Coquille river, the place being a homestead claim taken up by his father in 1856, the ranch being known as the Myrtle Grove Farm. There Frank L. Lowe first saw the light of day on January 1, 1868. He is a son of David J. and Urilla (Slayback) Lowe. The father was a native of Baltimore, Maryland, having been born near that city on November 10, 1823, while his wife was born in Montgomery county, Illinois, her birth occurring on the 9th of April, 1834. Mr. Lowe emigrated to California in 1849, making the journey across the American desert with ox teams. Crossing the Mississippi river on the 9th of May of that year, he continued his westward journey without accident and arrived in California, his objective point, in September, 1849. He reached the Golden state during the very height of the gold excitement and at once engaged in mining and also operated successfully a stage line and conducted a mercantile business, in which he continued until 1856. During that year he removed to this state and settled at Roseburg, remaining, however, at that place but a very short time. He later located in Coos county, on the Coquille river, where he took up a homestead and there established his home and at once began the development of his property, in which he was highly successful and continued to give his entire attention to its improvement and cultivation until 1897, when he removed to Bandon, where he lived a retired life until 1907, when he removed to Marshfield to make his home with his daughter, Mrs. Annie Wolcott, and there his death occurred on April 13, 1911, leaving an estate for his family consisting of the old homestead of three hundred acres, together with all of the improvements thereon. His widow, who is still living at the age of seventy-eight years, resides with her daughter at Marshfield. Unto Mr. and Mrs. David J. Lowe six children were born, namely: Mrs. Annie Wolcott, of Marshfield, Oregon; Frank L., of this review; Maggie, who passed away in early life; Mary, also deceased; Alice, who married J. W. Hammerburg and died at the age of twenty years; and David John, of Coquille. David J. Lowe was affiliated with the democratic party and had served as school clerk for twenty-one years and as justice of the peace for four terms, and was county commissioner for two terms, after which he was elected county judge and in that office served the interests of the people of his county for four years. During his incumbency in that office he had the distinction of having married a great many couples. He was also recorder of Bandon for one term.

Frank L. Lowe was reared in his parents' home and educated in the public schools of the district in which he lived, and later was a student at college for one year. At the age of sixteen years he became an apprenticed shipbuilder and continued in that employment until he had become a master of the craft. At the age of twenty-three he removed to Bandon and there worked at his trade as a shipbuilder for eight years. In the spring of 1890 he had purchased a fine property in that place which he still owns. At the time of his settlement in Bandon the place was comparatively new and Mr. Lowe became one of the first town trustees. During all the years of his residence at Bandon he has constantly been engaged in the pursuit of his trade and at present is so engaged, being one of the employes of William Holland, of Marshfield, with whom he has been identified as master shipbuilder since 1899. He is the owner of considerable property at Bandon.

Faternally Mr. Lowe is associated with the Knights of Pythias and is one of the charter members of the lodge at Bandon and has filled all of the chairs therein. He is also a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is one of the highly respected citizens of the community in which he lives and is regarded throughout the county in which he is widely known as a man of trustworthiness and high ideals.

MINAR APPLGATE, one of the progressive and enterprising agriculturists of Scotts valley, devotes his attention to diversified farming, operating a tract comprising three hundred acres and also owning another of one hundred acres a mile southeast of the former place. His birth occurred in Yoncalla, Douglas county, Oregon, on the 10th of January, 1884, his parents being Milton and Sarah M. (Tracy) Applegate, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work. Minar Applegate was reared at home and attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education. In 1903, when not yet twenty years of age, he started out as an agriculturist on his own account, taking charge of and operating the home farm as a renter until the fall of 1907. In the spring of 1911, in partnership with his brother Aubrey, he purchased three hundred acres in Scotts valley from his uncle, John Applegate, and has given his time and energies to its further cultivation and improvement continuously since. He is engaged in diversified farming and in former years operated a threshing machine for five or six years. Though still a young man, he has already made substantial progress in his chosen field of labor and is recognized as one of the representative and successful citizens of his native county.

On the 31st of October, 1907, Mr. Applegate was united in marriage to Miss Linna Wertz, her father being Benjamin F. Wertz, deceased, who was a prominent farmer of Elk creek, in Lower Scotts valley. Our subject and his wife have two children, Tracy W. and Beulah Juanita. Mr. Applegate gives his political allegiance to the republican party and fraternally is identified with Yoncalla Camp, No. 480, W. O. W. He and his wife are people of the highest respectability, enjoying in large measure the friendship of those with whom they have been brought in contact.

A. L. THORNTON. Among the towns of rapid and substantial growth in southeastern Oregon, Lakeview is prominent and its business men are of the class whose labors promise well for the future of the district. Among them is A. L. Thornton, a druggist, whose well appointed store would be a credit to a city of much larger size. He was born in Roseburg, December 2, 1878, a son of Samuel Isaac and Mary Jane (Singleton) Thornton. The father, who was a native of St. Joseph, Missouri, crossed the plains with ox teams in 1864 and made his way to Roseburg by way of The Dalles and Portland. Later he was married there to Mary J. Singleton, a native of that place, and they still reside in the town. Samuel L. Thornton, who was formerly engaged in ranching, is now living retired. Of their family of five children A. L. Thornton is the eldest, the others being: Lena, the wife of John Atterbury, of Roseburg; Edward, Lane and Clifford, all of that place.

A. L. Thornton remained with his parents in Roseburg until 1894, and in early life secured employment in a drug store there. He afterward attended the Corvallis State College, where he studied pharmacy, being graduated from that department with the class of 1902. He afterward worked for W. L. Delano, of Eugene, and D. J. Fry, of Salem, and from Eugene removed to Lakeview on the 5th of August, 1905. Here he purchased the drug store of Lee Beall and for a year was in partnership with Alexander Patterson, whose interest he afterward took over. He has since been alone in business and practically his entire time is devoted to the store, although he also has ranching interests in this locality. He carries a large stock of staple and fancy drugs and druggists' sundries, and the progressive policy which he pursues and his business methods are such as commend him to the liberal support of the public.

Mr. Thornton is pleasantly situated in home life. He married Kathleen Canfield, a native of McMinnville, Oregon, and a daughter of F. J. Canfield. They have two children, Lane and Lee. Mr. Thornton is an exemplary representative of the Masonic fraternity and a past master of his local lodge. He also holds membership with the Elks and the Woodmen of the World and he gives his political support to the democratic party. For four years he has served as a member of the board of education at Lakeview and is now its president. The cause of education finds in him a stalwart champion who believes that the public school is the bulwark of the nation and therefore deems it right that children should be afforded the best educational advantages possible.

GEORGE W. MAGILL. The occupation of stock ranching which forms one of the influential and rapidly growing industries of Coos county finds a worthy representative in George W. Magill, who has operated a farm of one hundred and eighty-seven and one-half acres in Coos county for a number of years and has made gratifying progress in a financial way. He was born in Hancock county, Iowa, May 4, 1859, and is a son of Thomas and Jane E. Magill, natives of Illinois. Their marriage occurred in Iowa and they resided in that state for a number of years before they moved to Minnesota where the father died. The mother of our subject came to Oregon in 1910 and is living in this state. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Magill were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living: George W., the subject of this review; Rhoda, the wife of John Richison of Minnesota; Abbie, who became the wife of John Webster of Minnesota; Harvey, who resides in Coos county, Oregon; Melissa, now Mrs. Martin Reger of North Dakota; and John, of Coos county, Oregon.

George Magill received his early education in Iowa and pursued the usual course of studies in the public schools of that state. He came to Oregon in 1887, settling in Curry county where he engaged extensively in stock-raising until 1910. During this time he built up a profitable and successful enterprise and became known throughout the vicinity in which he lived as an expert judge of cattle and a thoroughly efficient business man. He eventually disposed of his holdings in Curry county in order to move to Coos county where he purchased one hundred and eighty-seven and one half acres of land adapted to stock-raising and immediately began its operation as a cattle ranch. He is thoroughly conversant with all the details connected with the breeding and care of stock. He carries on his enterprise scientifically and thus makes it a profitable branch of industry. He keeps himself abreast of the times and well informed on all modern developments relating to his line of work. Besides stock ranching he engages in general farming and carries on his labors along this line with the same facility and efficiency which marks the other branch of his endeavors. He has acquired a comfortable fortune during the years of his intelligent activity and this he has judiciously invested in residence property in Myrtle Point and Bandon, Oregon. In both of these cities he is well known and popular among his many friends, although he maintains his residence upon his ranch seven miles above Myrtle Point on the Coquille river.

Mr. Magill's marriage occurred on October 6, 1889, on which date he wedded Miss Effie L. Hollenbeak, who was born June 22, 1872, in Shasta county, California. Mrs. Magill is a daughter of Stephen and Amanda (Benham) Hollenbeak, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Missouri. Their marriage occurred in California where they resided until 1880, the father operating a productive farm. They subsequently came to Oregon where they settled in Coos county. Here Stephen Hollenbeak purchased eighty acres of land and conducted a modern agricultural enterprise until 1907 when he retired from active life and moved to Coquille, Oregon, where he died in 1910. His wife is still a resident of that city and has reached the sixtieth year of her age. They were the parents of eleven children: Effie L., the wife of our subject; Jane, who married Otto Epps, of Coquille, Oregon; Belle, the wife of Lewis Sell of Riverton, Oregon; Georgia, the wife of Oscar Bunch of Dora, Oregon; James, who now resides in Coquille, Oregon; Pearl, who married Elmer Willard of the same place; Grace, who is living in Coquille with her mother; and Benham, Susan, Ilda and Bessie, all of whom are now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Magill have been born eight children: Bessie, now Mrs. William Ocheltree of Bandon, Oregon; Verner, Iva, and Otto, all of whom reside at home; Zimra; Amanda; Osie; and Bertie. All the children of Mr. and Mrs. Magill received their education in Coos county and were all born in this section with the exception of four whose births occurred in Curry county.

In his political views Mr. Magill is a democrat with socialistic tendencies and keeps himself well informed upon public matters. He has added to the prosperity of Coos county by promoting his individual success along lines of progress and expansion and has well earned the prominent place which he occupies in agricultural circles of his district.

BEN DALY is extensively engaged in sheep-raising, having about ten thousand head, which are pastured on a ranch of two hundred acres about sixty miles east of Lakeview. Mr. Daly resides in town but makes frequent trips to the ranch, supervising his live-stock interests, which are of an important character. He has closely studied sheep-raising and this study, combined with his practical experience, has given him comprehensive knowledge of the business. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, March 17, 1876, a son of Ben and Johanna (Kennaley) Daly. The father spent his entire life on the Emerald isle, where the mother is still living.

He was a farmer by occupation and passed away about twenty years ago.

Ben Daly was the sixth in order of birth in a family of eight children, but he and his sister, Mrs. Nellie Sullivan, of New York city, are the only ones who came to the United States. In May, 1901, he made his way direct to Oregon after crossing the Atlantic and took up his abode in Lakeview. He had worked as a farm hand in his native country and for two years he was employed as a sheep herder in Oregon. He then leased a band of sheep for two years, also purchased some and has since engaged in the sheep-raising business, having now about ten thousand head, which feed over the government range. His property interests include two hundred acres in Lake county about sixty miles east of Lakeview, which is pasture land, and he also owns some town property. His flocks are increasing yearly in numbers and his business has become an important one, making him a leading representative of sheep-raising in southeastern Oregon.

On the 20th of July, 1911, Mr. Daly was married to Miss Kate Barry, a native of Lake county and a daughter of James and Kate (O'Connor) Barry, who are also residents of Lakeview, the father being the owner of large flocks of sheep. Both Mr. and Mrs. Daly are communicants of the Catholic church and he holds membership with the Elks, while his political indorsement is given to the republican party. Laudable ambition brought him to America and he has here made steady progress along business lines, winning a gratifying measure of success.

JOHN F. CADLE was born at Agency City, Iowa, November 28, 1847, and is a son of James N. and Ellen D. (Wallace) Cadle, the former a native of Claiborne county, Tennessee, and the latter of Woodford county, Kentucky. The father removed with his family to Iowa in 1849 and there engaged in farming until 1864 when he went westward by way of the isthmus route and took up his abode first in Sonoma county, and later in Plumas county, California. There he made his home until called to his final rest in 1900, for two years surviving his wife who died in 1898. In their family were nine children, six sons and three daughters, of whom four sons and a daughter are now living, the latter being a resident of Washington while two of the sons are citizens of Nevada and one of Fresno, California.

John F. Cadle, the other member of the family, acquired his early education in the public schools of his native state and in McClure's Military Academy. He left school to enter the grain-exporting business and later spent three years in mining in Nevada. He also engaged in mining in Venezuela in 1874 and 1875, but in 1876 returned to Nevada where he once more followed mining for a year. In 1877 he removed to Plumas county, California, where for ten years he made his home, coming to Oregon in 1887, at which time he located near Prineville, Crook county, where he has since resided.

In 1876 Mr. Cadle was married to Miss Alice Drury of Plumas county, California, and to them were born two children but both are deceased. In his political views Mr. Cadle is republican, interested in the growth and progress of his party yet not a politician in the sense of office seeking. He served, however, as recorder of Plumas county in 1878 and 1879. He belongs to the Improved Order of Red Men and has been secretary of the Central Oregon Agricultural Society in which connection he does much to further the interests of the farming class of people and holds high the standards of agricultural development and progress in his adopted state. He believes the possibilities before the farmer in Oregon are almost limitless and recognizes the fact that the wealth of the country lies largely in its soil. He has therefore employed improved and scientific methods in the conduct of his own place and does all he can to stimulate those similarly engaged to adopt the progressive ways of the present day.

WILLIAM H. SHIRK. The complex problems of banking are familiar to William H. Shirk, for comprehensive study and practical experience have acquainted him with the various phases of the business and qualify him for the successful conduct of banking interests. The policy which he has ever followed in this connection is such as carefully safeguards the interests of depositors and at the same time promotes the success of the institution. He is president of both the First National Bank and the Lake Loan & Savings Bank of Lakeview.

Indiana numbers William H. Shirk among her native sons, his birth having occurred in Park county, that state, October 1, 1853, his parents being Joseph and Margaret (Linton) Shirk, who were natives of Pennsylvania and Indiana respectively, their marriage being celebrated in the latter state. They removed to Will county, Illinois, when their son William was but six months old, and the father there owned and conducted a stock farm of three hundred and twenty acres. Both he and his wife remained on that farm until called to their final rest. There were six children of that marriage and William H. Shirk is the youngest of the five yet living. There were also four children, two sons and two daughters, born of the father's second union.

Reared in Illinois, William H. Shirk remained at home until 1873, when he went to Texas. He assisted in driving a band of cattle owned by his father and eldest brother from Texas to Idaho in the summer of 1873, spending five and a half months on the road. He was paid thirty dollars per month and by that trip made one hundred and fifty dollars. Pleased with the northwest and its possibilities he decided to remain there, and for nearly nine years was in the employ of one firm in Idaho and the southeastern part of Oregon, working on a stock ranch. His initial position was that of cook but gradually he worked his way upward until he became foreman of the ranch. He was employed by the firm of Catalow & Shea, who were extensively engaged in raising and selling cattle and horses. Thus Mr. Shirk became familiar with every phase of stock-raising on the ranches and on the open range in the northwest, and is a survivor of a period when that business presented many picturesque features.

On the 26th of December, 1881, Mr. Shirk was married to Miss Anna R. Crow, a native of California and a daughter of John L. Crow, of Plumas county, that state. After his marriage Mr. Shirk secured government land in Harney county, Oregon, and also purchased other land, continuing in the stock business and raising as high as twelve hundred head of cattle at a time. At length he disposed of both his land and stock in 1900 and in February of the following year left the ranch and went to Reno, Nevada, in order to afford his children the educational opportunities obtainable in a city. Later Mr. Shirk came to Lakeview and was interested in the California & Oregon Land Company there. Watchful of opportunities leading to success he later turned his attention to the banking business and in 1905 organized the First National Bank of which he has since been the president, and in 1906 established the Lake Loan & Savings Bank, of which he is also the chief executive officer. The National bank was started with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, which with surplus and undivided profits now amounts to one hundred thousand dollars. The savings bank was originally capitalized for twenty thousand dollars but this sum has been increased to forty thousand dollars. Today Mr. Shirk is one of the prosperous residents of Lakeview and southern Oregon and is regarded as one of the prominent business men. This position is attributable entirely to his own labors for he and his wife began ranching in a primitive manner, living in a log cabin. They were industrious and determined, however, and each year witnessed their progress. In 1878 Mr. Shirk came very near losing his life at the hands of the Indians during the Bannock war, being the only survivor of a party of three who were ambushed while riding through the Cataloh valley in Harney county. This was but one of many exciting experiences which came to Mr. Shirk in pioneer times when he was endeavoring to lay the foundation of his fortune through the utilization of the natural resources of this part of the state. Traveling over the country he became conversant with its advantages and he regards Harney county as one of the finest stock-raising districts in the world, being adapted to that industry throughout all seasons of the year. In addition to his other business affairs Mr. Shirk has small timber interests and is also the manager of the California & Oregon Light, Heat & Power Company of Lakeview, which company he aided in organizing and incorporating. He is local agent for the Oregon Land & Live Stock Company. Mr. and Mrs. Shirk became parents of two children: C. L., who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Taft, California; and Hazel, who died at the age of sixteen months. Mr. Shirk belongs to the Masonic fraternity and both he and his wife are connected with the Eastern Star. He is also a member of the Elks lodge at Ashland. Coming to the northwest when a young man of twenty years, he recognized its possibilities and has since utilized its opportunities. Step by step he has advanced and he seems to have realized at every point in his career the possibilities for successful accomplishment at that time. Earnest, persistent, arduous toil was supplemented by the intelligent understanding and direction of his labors and at all times his efforts have been of a character that has never infringed on the rights of others but has promoted public prosperity in advancing individual success.

WILLIAM H. SMITH is one of the well known and successful farmers of Coos county, Oregon. He was born in Empire, Coos county, in 1862, and is the son of W. D. L. F. and Mary R. (Luse) Smith, the former a native of Connecticut and the latter of Pennsylvania. The father crossed the plains to Oregon in 1855 and settled in Coos county. Immediately following his arrival in Oregon he enlisted as a soldier in the Rogue River Indian war and followed his command for about one year, after which he was employed as a laborer in one of the sawmills in Coos county. In 1857 he settled at Coos bay and engaged in work in sawmills at North Bend, Empire and Marshfield. He was one of the early pioneers of Coos county and did his share of the work in the early organization and building up of that part of the state of Oregon. In his family were five children: Ada E., who is the wife of Charles Dungan, residing on the Coos river; William H., of this review; Florence, the wife of J. D. Hawes, of California; Gussie, deceased; and George F., of Empire, Oregon.

William H. Smith was reared at home and received his early education in the schools of Coos county. He started in life for himself at the age of nineteen as an employe in the logging camps in Coos county and continued in that occupation for several years, after which he retired from the lumbering business and leased a steamboat which he operated on Coos bay, Coos river and its tributaries for two years. At the same time he was interested largely in the fishing industries in that territory. He later took up his abode on his father's homestead, located seven miles up the Coos river at the forks, where he is engaged in farming, making a specialty of the dairy industry, using in his business at present twenty-five Holstein cattle. He is the owner of forty acres of highly developed agricultural land.

Mr. Smith was united in marriage in 1894 to Miss Iowa E. Davis, a native of Oregon and a daughter of John R. and Matilda (Brown) Davis, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Davis two children were born: Iowa E., the wife of William H. Smith, of this review; and Laura, the wife of William James, of Santa Ana, California. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of three children: Helen, born in 1897; Bertha, born in 1899; and Mary, born in 1902. The children are all attending school.

MR. AND MRS. W. H. SMITH

Mr. Smith is affiliated with the republican party and served as county surveyor for four years and also as deputy sheriff of Coos county for one year, having consented to fill the latter office for that time as its former incumbent failed to qualify as a competent man in that position. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World and of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and is also an active and enthusiastic member of the Grange. Mr. Smith is one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of Coos county and a man interested in every public measure seeking the improvement of the people of his county and state.

DARIUS WELLS. Probably no man in Douglas county is better acquainted with the details of agriculture as it is pursued under Oregon conditions than is Darius Wells, one of the most prominent and successful farmers in this section. He has spent his entire life in the west and has gained an expert knowledge of his occupation which can come only through long and personal experience. He was born where the town of Cottage Grove now stands, on March 28, 1849, and is today counted the oldest native son of Oregon. His parents were Ira and Ann Elizabeth (Mantler) Wells, the latter a native of Germany. They crossed the plains from Illinois to Oregon with ox teams in 1847 and on their arrival they settled at Eugene, but shortly afterward removed to the present site of Cottage Grove. In 1851 Ira Wells came to Douglas county, leaving his family to spend the winter in Yoncalla, while he journeyed into the Umpqua valley in order to find a suitable location for a farm. He took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres two miles southwest of Elkton and upon this he built a crude log cabin, in which he resided alone until the spring of 1852, when he brought his family up the Elk creek pack trail to his new home. The journey was made with pack horses and was filled with the hardships and inconveniences of pioneer travel. Darius Wells, who was then only three years of age, was carried over the road by Mr. Miller, who was journeying in the same direction. His father lived on the donation claim which he took up and was successful and prosperous in the cultivation of the soil until his death, when he was seventy-five years of age. His wife lived to the age of seventy-seven years. The parents of Darius Wells were among the earliest Oregon pioneers and their labors aided materially in the upbuilding and development of the section in which they lived. One of their daughters, Caroline Elizabeth, who is now the wife of William Hawley, of Eugene, Oregon, was the first white child born in Lane county.

Darius Wells was reared at home and acquired a limited education by attendance at the district schools. He gained the greater part of his early schooling in a six weeks' course at Wilbur Academy, at Wilbur, Oregon, and when he had completed this returned to the home farm where he aided his father in the cultivation of the soil until he was twenty-two years of age. At that time he bought two hundred and ninety-four acres, a mile and a half south of Elkton, which constitutes today a part of his farm. He began the cultivation of the soil and has carried it on with constantly increasing success since that time. He gained his start in agricultural life when he was nineteen years of age. At that time his father bought three hundred and twenty acres of land and agreed to give his son a half of this fine farm if he would stay at home and engage in the cultivation of the soil. His present success is due to his personal experience in the details of scientific agriculture and to the impetus which this early gift gave to his ambition. He is now accounted one of the most progressive and extensive land owners in Douglas county. Besides his large farm upon which he resides he also owns three hundred and ninety-seven acres on Elk creek which he operates as a stock ranch and which forms a valuable addition to his income.

In 1876 Mr. Wells was united in marriage to Miss Julia Haney, of the Umpqua valley, a daughter of Robert Haney, one of the earliest settlers in this district to which he came from Iowa at an early day. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Wells have been born three children: Laura, deceased wife of Arthur Mack, who upon her demise left one son, Francis, who makes his home with the subject of this sketch; Roy, who is now operating a portion of the home farm and who married a Miss Myrtle A. Lamb, by whom he has two children, Lois and Claire; and Retta, who is now deceased. In politics Mr. Wells is independent of party lines and although he takes an intelligent interest in public affairs has never sought office. He is a member of the Oregon State Pioneer Society and is a prominent figure in its affairs. He brings to his occupation a true sense of agricultural economics and never allows a foot of his land to be unproductive. Douglas county is a rich and fertile country with wealth and prosperity hidden in its acres. No man has done more toward its development and improvement than has Darius Wells, and his success is the just reward of his intelligent labor.

HARRY E. OLINGHOUSE. The fertile farms and extensive ranches in the Cow creek valley are the chief source of the prosperity and wealth of that region and are the foundations upon which many a man has built up a successful career. Harry E. Olinghouse is the owner of two hundred and forty acres of improved ranch land in that district and gives his entire time and attention to its cultivation and development. He was born in California, March 22, 1879, a son of J. C. and Sarah E. Olinghouse, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Missouri. The parents moved to California in 1866 and in 1890 the family became residents of Douglas county, Oregon, where the father remained in business on Cow creek until 1910, when he removed to Glendale, where he now resides.

Harry E. Olinghouse is one of thirteen children, ten of whom are still living. He remained at home until he reached mature years and then started to work in a gold mine and continued in that line of activity until 1908. He saved his money during that period until he had accumulated sufficient capital to buy a ranch in the Cow creek valley, and then purchased two hundred and forty acres of land in that region, which he now owns and operates. He is a practical farmer, familiar with all the details of that occupation, is progressive and is deeply interested in agricultural development.

In 1905 Mr. Olinghouse was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Cheney, a daughter of George and Katie (Forstall) Cheney, of California, and to their union three children have been born, Edna V., Leonard C. and Ada M. Mr. Olinghouse has always been interested in any movement looking toward the educational and civic improvement of his community. His politics are essentially republican and he is now serving as chairman of the school board of Galesville. He operates his extensive holdings actively and intelligently and is cultivating his ranch along scientific lines.

ROY I. KILGORE was numbered among the young men of Oregon who possessed the enterprising progressive spirit that has been the dominant factor in the rapid and substantial upbuilding of this part of the country. He carried forward to successful completion whatever he undertook and his labors were ever of a character that contributed to public progress and prosperity as well as to individual advancement. There were in his life record many estimable traits which caused his death to be deeply regretted by all who knew him. He was born in Ashland, Oregon, April 6, 1880, and was only a few months old when his parents removed to Langells Valley, Klamath county, settling on a ranch, upon which he was reared and on which he remained to the time of his marriage, although the winter seasons were spent as a student in the schools of Ashland.

On the 6th of March, 1898, Mr. Kilgore was united in marriage to Miss Etta Mary Chastain, a daughter of Dr. J. A. Chastain, and after his marriage Mr. Kilgore began the cultivation and improvement of a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres given him by his father. He devoted two years to its development and then removed to Bonanza, continuing in the stock-raising business. He early displayed a spirit of enterprise and progress which made his cooperation appreciated by his father, in connection with whom in 1908 he built the Bonanza Flouring Mills, of which he remained manager to the time of his death, which occurred on the 24th of February, 1911. He was a partner with his father in ranching and stock-raising interests as well as in mining and they won substantial and well merited success. Their prosperity was never gained at the sacrifice of the interests of others but was due to constructive business methods, to careful management and unfaltering perseverance.

Mr. and Mrs. Kilgore became the parents of four children: Mary Elizabeth, thirteen years of age; Inez A., aged ten; Gladys, eight years; and Roy James, two years of age. Mr. Kilgore erected a large residence in Bonanza which is still owned by his widow, but since his death she has purchased and removed to another residence which is more centrally located. His success enabled Mr. Kilgore to leave his family in very comfortable circumstances. Their welfare and happiness were ever his first interest and at the same time he proved himself a public-spirited citizen by his cooperation in movements for the general good. He kept well informed on questions and issues of the day, voted with the republican party and served acceptably as a member of the city council of Bonanza. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and in his life exemplified the spirit of mutual helpfulness and brotherly kindness which underlies that organization. Death called him at the very early age of thirty-one years and thus terminated a life of great usefulness to the community, for his influence and aid could always be counted upon to further movements for the public good. There were also attractive social qualities in his makeup and principles of honor and integrity which commanded the respect of all. While his life was of brief duration he accomplished much more than many a man who lives to twice his years and he left a memory that is cherished by all who knew him.

FRANK FLAM, who is engaged in the livestock business in Coos county, buying and selling in the local markets, maintains his home about six and a half miles from Bandon, on the Bear creek road, through the summer season, while the winter months are spent by him in town. He was born in Minnesota, May 16, 1864, and is a son of John and Frances (Winson) Flam, both of whom were natives of Germany. They became parents of four children: Rosella, who is the wife of John Beach, of Bandon and has five children; Katherine, who is the widow of John West and has three children; Joseph, residing in Parkersburg; and Frank. The father came to Oregon from Minnesota in 1872 and preempted a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres on Bear creek, which is now owned by his son Frank. The father died November 21, 1890, and the mother passed away on December 21, 1900.

Frank Flam came to Oregon when about eight years of age and was reared upon his father's farm which was a tract of wild land when it came into the possession of the family, but the father and his sons cleared and developed it and when old enough Frank Flam began managing the place. He took care of his parents to the time when they were called to their final rest, thus repaying them by filial devotion for the love and care bestowed upon him in his youth. Prospering, he purchased another tract of one hundred and sixty acres in 1899 and soon removed to that place, later adding thereto until today he is the owner of four hundred acres in one tract. He built a sawmill which he operated for several years, cutting his own timber, and he owns one hundred and sixty acres of timber land. He has leased all of his land to an oil well company which is sinking a well, having already put one well down, twenty-three hundred and fifty feet. The prospects of striking oil are good and already a good flow of natural gas has been found. Mr. Flam is engaged in the live-stock business, raising, buying and selling stock which he handles in the local markets. He deals largely in stock used for beef and his success is due to capable business management, unflinching enterprise and careful discernment. He owns altogether seven hundred and twenty acres of farm land together with business and residence property in Bandon, and he is interested in the Bank of Bandon, having long been a stockholder and director in that institution. He is well known as a prominent and progressive business man and one whose success is the direct reward of his own labors.

In September, 1898, Mr. Flam was married to Miss Docia A. Haga, and they have become the parents of two children: Blaneh, who was born September 23, 1899; and Rosella, born December 29, 1903.

Mr. Flam has served as a school director for a number of terms and also as school clerk. He has filled the office of road supervisor and is interested in all that has to do with the betterment of the community and its substantial upbuilding along material, intellectual and social lines. He is a self-made man in the truest and best sense of the term for whatever he has accomplished is due to his own labors.

WILLIAM R. VINSON was born in a prairie schooner in Nebraska territory during his parents' journey across the plains and all his life he has been a resident of the northwest. He is the founder and builder of his own fortunes, having begun his active life at the age of fifteen, and the success which he has met with reflects credit upon the design and the execution. He is owner of one thousand acres of the finest land in Oregon and is giving his attention to general agriculture, fruit farming and dairying. He was for many years superintendent of the Douglas county poor farm and was afterward general manager of this institution, the paupers being brought to his own land, where he contracted with the county for their care. Mr. Vinson's birth occurred June 9, 1859, and his parents were John and Phoebe (Troxel) Vinson. They crossed the plains with ox teams from Iowa in 1859 and their first location after their arrival in Oregon was on the North Umpqua river, east of Roseburg, in Douglas county. Here the father took up a homestead claim upon which he settled and resided until 1862. In that year he enlisted for the Indian war and subsequently in the regular army, serving for six years. His troop was held on the plains after the close of hostilities in order to suppress the Indian uprising and to guard the emigration trains. When he was finally discharged he located in Montana, where he lived until the time of his death.

William R. Vinson received his education in the common schools of Oregon and has been earning his own living since his fifteenth year. From that time until the year of his marriage, in 1881, he worked at whatever occupation offered him an opportunity to make money. For three years he drove a stage on the old Coos bay road from Roseburg to Empire City. Mr. Vinson's career as a farmer began in 1881, at which time he rented land two miles north of Roseburg and continued his agricultural pursuits in this way for twelve years. At the end of that time he bought a ranch near Winchester, where for eight years he did general farming. In 1901 he took charge of the county poor farm and acted as its superintendent until the institution was sold, eighteen months later. Mr. Vinson was the purchaser of what was the first farm of its kind in the county and he assumed its management, contracting with the county to take care of their poor. He took care of the paupers on his ranch for eight years, being aided in this branch of his activities by his systematic business administration and his kindly understanding of the needs of his charges. The county's poor were finally removed to the vicinity of Roseburg and Mr. Vinson's identification with their interests ceased. He is now the owner of a thousand acre tract of land in Coles valley and is engaged in dairying, stock-raising and fruit farming. He has a prune orchard covering thirty acres of ground but the success of this branch of his undertaking rests with the future, as the trees are still too young to bear. Two years after his removal to his present property he erected a sawmill, which he operated for seven years. It was eventually destroyed by fire but a year and a half later another mill was built upon the same site and this is now run by the Coles Valley Lumber Company, Mr. Vinson furnishing the timber.

On March 20, 1881, Mr. Vinson was united in marriage to Miss Virinda Cummins, a native of California, who came to Oregon in 1876. They had four children, three of whom are now living. Their eldest son, Bird Glen, is a veteran of the Spanish-American war, who saw twenty-two months' service in the Philippines. Upon his return home he enlisted in the navy and was located for a short time in the Mare Island navy yard, on a training ship. He next was a bugler on the United States ship Oregon for four years with the exception of a short time when he was transferred to the United States ship Wisconsin and the revenue cutter Raleigh, whence he was again transferred to the Oregon. He is now in the railroad passenger service. The other children born to Mr. and Mrs. Vinson were Iva Belle, who is now deceased; Ralph Roy, a bookkeeper in the employ of the National Hospital Association of Portland; and Vernon Edgar, at home.

In his political beliefs Mr. Vinson is a consistent republican and in 1908 was a candidate for the nomination to the office of sheriff and of the seven competitors for this position he had the second largest vote. He is a member of Laurel Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., of Roseburg, and he also belongs to the Coles Valley Grange and the Douglas Pomona Grange in which latter organization he holds the position of secretary. He is one of the leading citizens of Douglas county and has attained his success by honorable means. His early struggles gave him a broad and tolerant outlook and a practical knowledge of the conditions among the poor, and this he has applied to making the lives of hundreds of paupers better and more bearable. His farm is intelligently operated and improved and is a credit to his agricultural skill and the standards of citizenship in Oregon have gained by the life of a man of administrative business ability, broad charities and upright and straightforward characteristics.

THOMAS DEVEREUX is one of the most important general farmers, dairymen and stock-raisers in Coos county. He is wealthy and successful, and prosperity has come to him by his own efforts as a natural result of energy well directed, and continuous labor. He was born in Ireland on September 14, 1851, and is a son of Michael and Ellen (Hickey) Devereux, natives of the Emerald isle. He is one of a family of eleven children born to his parents; Peter, who died in 1912 in Ireland; Paul, a twin of the former, of Ireland; Michael, who has also passed away; Maria, who is residing in her native country; John, Phillip and John, the second of the name, all of whom are deceased; Thomas, the subject of this sketch; Bridget, the wife of Michael Tobin of Ireland; Margaret, who married Edward Morrissey, and who also resides in Ireland; and Phillip, the second of this name, who has passed away.

Thomas Devereux was educated in his native country and was reared upon his father's farm. Before he was eighteen years of age he left home and came immediately to America settling in Humboldt county, California, where he worked as a farm hand for five years during which time he had two employers. He saved his money and was soon able to purchase ninety acres of land which he developed and improved for two years. At the end of that time he became identified with lumber work in the redwood camps and for thirteen years he was successful in this line of occupation. He came to Oregon immediately after his marriage and settled in Coos county where he purchased one hundred and eighty acres of land four miles from Coquille. The property was then in a raw condition and Mr. Devereux was obliged to clear the timber. He is responsible for all the improvements which were made upon the land and which finally resulted in making it one of the attractive and important farms in the section. Here he lived until 1900 in which year he disposed of his holdings and purchased two hundred acres near Parkersburg. This place was also unimproved and Mr. Devereux with the help of his sons began the work of development. He cleared the timber, erected fine barns and outbuildings and has it now in an excellent condition. He engages in general farming but specializes in dairying and stock-raising, both of which enterprises form an important source of income to him, as his cattle and dairy products find a ready sale in the Oregon markets.

Aside from the farm upon which he resides Mr. Devereux owns also one hundred and sixty-eight acres of timber land near Myrtle Point, Oregon, and is interested in town property in Bandon. He owns the postoffice building and also a large amount of residence property. Moreover, he was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Bandon and has been one of its directors ever since it was incorporated.

In 1886 Mr. Devereux married Miss Mary Larkin, a native of Ireland who came to Humboldt county, California, with her parents when she was two years of age. She is one of a family of two children, her brother, Michael, being a resident of Eureka, California. Her father is living and makes his home in San Francisco. To Mr. and Mrs. Devereux have been born eleven children: Mary Ella, who resides in Portland; John, a resident of Bandon; Thomas, who resides with his parents; Margaret, also a resident of Portland; Henry, who makes his home with his parents; and James, Teresa, Lena, Phillip, David and Loretta, all of whom are attending school.

In his political affiliations Mr. Devereux is a consistent democrat and is always ready to do his duty in a public way. He is interested in education and has been school director for a number of years and is now serving as school clerk. For some time he did able and constructive work as road superintendent. While he recognizes his obligations as a citizen Mr. Devereux has never sought public office and prefers to concentrate his attention upon his agricultural pursuits. He is a member of the Roman Catholic church and affiliates with the Woodmen of the World. He is a self-made man and perhaps because of this has a thorough knowledge of values. Citizenship means something to him and success while important and valuable is kept entirely secondary to the qualities, standards and methods which promote it.

JASPER DARNEILLE. When Oregon was in the stage of pioneer development, when its great forests were largely uncut and its prairie and valley lands uncultivated, Jasper Darnelle entered upon the scene of earthly activities. He has always remained a resident of this state, his birth having occurred in Harney county, September 1, 1853, while his parents, Anderson and Mary (Lane) Darnelle, were en route for Jackson county. They started from Missouri across the plains early in that year with ox teams, joining a train of four hundred wagons. Various obstacles and difficulties confronted them as they proceeded but each day saw them a little farther on the journey. At one time the Indians stampeded their cattle and stole some of them but when several months had passed they found that the long stretches of hot sand and the mountain trails lay behind them and they had reached the rich valley lands of western Oregon. The father secured a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres in Lane county and upon that place Jasper Darneille was reared. He attended the schools of the early day and aided in the arduous task of developing a new farm, but gained from his work that practical experience and comprehensive knowledge which have enabled him in later years to successfully conduct his own business affairs.

On attaining his majority Jasper Darneille left home and was united in marriage to Miss Laura Custer, a native of Iowa. Unto them were born ten children, as follows: Lydia J., Mary J., Laura A., Ida M., Henry A., Ellen F., Cora E., Lester L., Marion L. and Kenneth W. The last named was drowned in 1900, and on the recovery of his body his grave was made in the Missonri Flat Cemetery.

Coming to Jackson county in early manhood, Mr. Darneille took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he lived for eleven years, making many improvements thereon during that period. He then sold out and removed to Josephine county, and is now living on rented land which he has operated for the past six years. He is a very active, energetic man, who is leading a busy and useful life, and his reliability in business affairs has gained for him in the high regard and good-will of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

WILSON SHEPHERD WILEY, who in August, 1907, came to Klamath Falls, where he is engaged in the practice of law, was born in Springfield, Illinois, January 9, 1880, a son of Colonel Edmund R. and Ladora Ella (Rice) Wiley. The father was born in New York city, June 20, 1833, and the mother's birth occurred at Springfield, Conway county, Arkansas, October 3, 1852. In his childhood days Colonel Edmund R. Wiley removed with his parents to Illinois, and his father, who was a merchant tailor, established the first clothing store in Springfield, Illinois, in partnership with Richard H. Beach and George Wood, which with some changes continued for twenty years under the firm style of Wiley, Beach & Company. Colonel Wiley's father was one of the pioneer business men of the city, and contributed in substantial measure to its early development and progress.

Colonel Wiley was reared in Sangamon county, Illinois, and supplemented his early education by a course in the Jacksonville (Ill.) University, from which he was graduated. He afterward practiced law in Decatur, Illinois, and the Civil war coming on he was appointed adjutant of the Sixty-second Illinois Infantry. Valiant and meritorious conduct won him promotion through various grades to the rank of colonel, and he was on active duty throughout the period of hostilities. He was mustered out in May, 1866, being at the time on duty as judge advocate of the Department of Tennessee with headquarters at Memphis, Tennessee. He was married in Arkansas, and during his residence there served in the state legislature, and also served as clerk of Arkansas county from November 3, 1867, to October 7, 1871. He was elected sheriff of Arkansas county in the fall of 1872 to serve two years. He then returned to Illinois and afterward went to Chicago, where he engaged in newspaper work on the Chicago Tribune. Subsequently, however, he again went to Springfield, Illinois. Some time later he went once more to Arkansas, establishing his home in Little Rock, where he is now living retired. His wife also survives. Colonel Wiley is a republican in his political views, and has made an excellent record in every relation of life, as a soldier on the field of battle, as a public official and as a business man.

Wilson S. Wiley was the sixth in order of birth in a family of seven children. He resided in Illinois until nine years of age, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Little Rock, Arkansas. He acquired a high-school and business education, and afterward went to Washington, D. C., where he took a private course of study and did special work. He received the Master of Laws degree from the National University Law School, of Washington, D. C., in 1904, and then again went to Little Rock, Arkansas, where he practiced for a short period. He accepted a law clerkship in the office of the solicitor, department of commerce and labor, in March, 1905, under Hon. Edwin W. Sims, remaining a member of the legal staff of the department of justice, Washington, D. C., for about two and one-half years. In August, 1907, he arrived in Klamath Falls as law examiner for the United States reclamation service, which position he continued to fill until April, 1911, since which time he has engaged in the private practice of law, being accorded a liberal clientele that connects him with much of the important litigation tried in the courts of this district.

On the 1st of August, 1907, Mr. Wiley was united in marriage to Miss Effie C. Sharpless, a native of Pennsylvania, but a resident of Washington, D. C., during the greater part of her life. Her parents are Harry (deceased) and Phebe E. Sharpless. Mr. and Mrs. Wiley have one child, a son, named Wilson Sharpless Wiley. Mr. Wiley was brought up in the "faith" of the republican party, and has seen no reason to change his position in regard to his support of that political organization. He is a charter member of Lodge No. 1247, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Klamath Falls, and has a wide acquaintance here, his sterling traits of character and his professional ability having gained for him a favorable and enviable position in both business and social circles.

GEORGE A. STEWARD is the owner of a fine farm near Riverton and its state of development and improvement is entirely the product of his own labor. His success as a general agriculturist has established him among the men whose careful and conservative management of a private enterprise makes them valued citizens of the community. He has been a resident of Coos county all his life, his birth having occurred on Lampa creek in 1872. His parents were Stephen and Mary F. (Hamlin) Steward, the former a native of Maine and the latter of Illinois. The father came to Oregon about 1860, settling near Lampa, where he took up a homestead, which he improved and operated for a short time. He afterward engaged in the lumber business in Coquille, selling out his holdings eventually in order to establish himself as a butcher. He was engaged in this line of occupation at the time of his death, which occurred in 1887. He and his wife had ten children: Frank and Charles, both deceased; George A., the subject of this review; Charles, Scott and Nellie, all of whom have passed away; Nettie, the wife of Melvin Hayter, of Riverton; William, who resides in Washington; Freeman, of Beaver Slough, Oregon; and Steve, who makes his home in Riverton.

George A. Steward grew up on his father's farm and at an early age became acquainted with the best and most progressive agricultural methods, gaining at this time a personal experience which has been invaluable to him in his present activity. He was educated in the district schools of Coos county and started active life for himself at the age of sixteen years. He obtained employment upon neighboring farms and worked in this way for a number of years, abandoning farm labor eventually in order to become a steam engineer. For sixteen years he worked at this business, gaining success and prosperity during the time. He purchased fifteen acres of land in Coos county and upon this he lived for one year before he bought his present farm near Riverton. Here he does general farming, planting his acres in the most suitable grains and reaping abundant harvests every year as the reward of his care and labor. He has gained a comfortable fortune, which he has invested judiciously, principally in town lots in Bandon.

Mr. Steward was united in marriage to Miss Lillian M. Thomas, a native of Oregon and a daughter of W. H. and Elizabeth (Dean) Thomas, who came to this state in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas became the parents of three children: Lillian, now Mrs. Steward; Edna, who married Freeman Steward, of Beaver Slough; and Elva, who has passed away. Our subject and his wife have three sons: M. Earl, who was born in October, 1902, and is attending school; William H., whose birth occurred in 1904 and who is also pursuing his studies; and Henry, born in 1909. Mr. Steward is a well known member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his only fraternal affiliation. He is liberal and independent in his political views and, while he has never sought office, his public spirit has led him to accept the position of road supervisor. He entered upon his duties in January, 1909, and has accomplished much progressive work along his particular line since that time, keeping the roads under his charge in excellent condition. He has conducted all the affairs of his department in a satisfactory and intelligent manner, his ability and efficiency ranking him among the constructively useful servants of the community.

C. B. CLENDENNING is well known as a representative business man of Klamath Falls, where he owns and conducts a large livery stable and in addition is extensively engaged in ranching, having planted more than four hundred acres to wheat in the year 1912. He was born in Strathroy, Ontario, Canada, January 9, 1870, and is a son of Robert and Mary (Ross) Clendenning, who were natives of Canada, born near Quebec. They remained in that country until 1878, when they removed to St. Clair county, Michigan, where their remaining days were passed, the father, who had been a lifelong farmer, dying when seventy-two years of age and the mother at the age of sixty-six.

C. B. Clendenning, the youngest of six children, resided in Michigan until he came to Klamath Falls. He had worked in the timber woods in Michigan and it was timber interests that brought him to the northwest. He arrived here on the 16th of July, 1904, and for three years worked at the carpenter's trade, since which time he has engaged in the livery business, building his present large livery barn on Klamath avenue in 1909. He has extensive ranching interests and employs progressive methods in the care of his crops, having four hundred acres planted to wheat alone.

On the 21st of October, 1892, Mr. Clendenning was united in marriage to Miss Carrie M. Shook, a native of Michigan and a daughter of P. L. Shook. Three children have been born to them, Beatrice Hattie, Cecil Calvin and Barbara Elizabeth. Mr. Clendenning holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but his time and attention are chiefly concentrated upon his business interests, his capable management thereof bringing to him a goodly measure of success.

JOHN R. COX was born in Lane county, Oregon, and long familiarity with farming as it is carried on in this state has made him successful and prosperous in the cultivation of his one hundred and sixty acres of land on the Bear creek road ten miles above Bandon. He is a representative of the best agricultural principles and keeps his farm in excellent condition. He is an important stock-raiser and dairyman and is influenced in the management of his entire enterprise by sound business discrimination. He was born on January 5, 1860, and is a son of Solomon and Diana (Cox) Cox, the father a native of Missouri and the mother of Kentucky. Solomon Cox came to Oregon in 1852, taking up a donation claim in Lane county where he resided until his death. He and his wife were the parents of ten children: Jane, who married William Taylor of Bandon; Julytha, who has passed away; Samuel and James M., both of whom reside in Lane county; Emily the wife of G. W. Carter, also residents of Lane county; Lucy, deceased; William H., who makes his home in Lane county; John R., the subject of this review; Jefferson D. of Lane county; and Sarah who married Milton Harlon of Washington.

John R. Cox was educated in the common schools of Lane county and from his early childhood has been familiar with the details of the operation of the farm. He was fourteen years old when his father died and he lived upon the farm where he was born for two years after that event. Then his brother Jefferson D. Cox assumed the management of the property and a short time afterward bought out the other heirs and now lives upon the homestead. John Cox began his active life working for wages in the employ of different people. After his marriage which occurred in 1886 he took up a homestead claim near Bandon on Bear creek where for seven years he carried on general agriculture. In 1904 he bought his present property which was at that time one hundred and sixty acres of raw and unimproved land. Its present attractive appearance is entirely due to the hard work and the unflagging industry of Mr. Cox. He set about clearing the land of timber and improving his property along systematic lines. He has now one of the finest ranches in Coos county, developed and in excellent condition. Upon this he carries on general farming, specializing in stock-raising. He breeds sheep, cows and horses and sells them in the state markets. He has now forty head of stock and is extremely successful in this branch of his activities. He also does dairying on a small scale.

In 1886 Mr. Cox was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Haga and they became the parents of nine children: Malinda E., deceased; Floyd, of Coos county; Eita J., who married George Colvin of Coos county; William H. and James R., both of whom reside in Coos county; George F., who is associated with his father in the operation of the home ranch; Jennie A., who lives at home; Lillie May, who is attending school; and Pearl Leona.

Mr. Cox does not affiliate with any political party, voting according to his own convictions. He is interested in education and has been a school director. His farming and stock-raising, however, form the principal interests of his life and his career has been useful and he is a representative and enterprising citizen. His property, raw and wild when he purchased it, is today cultivated and improved and in its excellent condition is a tangible evidence of his constructive labor.

W. F. ARANT. Of recent years public thought and attention have been called more and more largely to the subject of conserving the natural scenic beauties and wonders of the country and with this end in view various districts have been set apart as national parks that they may be seen and enjoyed by all who can find the opportunity to visit them. It was a wise step when the country decided to make Crater lake and the surrounding district one of its natural parks and W. F. Arant at the present time is acting as its efficient superintendent. He was born September 29, 1850, in Tazewell county, Illinois, the son of Jesse T. and Mary Jane (Emmett) Arant. The father was born east of Nashville, Tennessee, April 19, 1823, and the mother's birth occurred at Mount Pnlaski, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1828. Jesse T. Arant went to Illinois with his father in 1830 and in the same year Mary J. Emmett arrived in that state with her father, Samuel Emmett. The paternal grandfather was William Arant, who enlisted for active service in the War of 1812. He became one of the early settlers of Illinois and there spent his remaining days. He displayed expert skill in the making of spinning wheels and looms and in other mechanical work and was a valued citizen of his adopted state during the pioneer period of its development. His family numbered two sons and two daughters, including Jesse T. Arant, who was married near Peoria to Mary J. Emmett. They continued to reside in Illinois until 1852 and on the 12th of March of that year they left their home in the middle west, crossing the plains with ox teams to Oregon. They arrived at the Sandy river in September and located near the present site of Harrisburg, in Linn county. After a year they removed to Douglas county, where some of their friends and relatives had previously settled. The father secured a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres seven miles northwest of Roseburg in September, 1853, and this property is still in possession of his son, W. F. Arant. The parents resided thereon until 1871, after which they spent a few years in Klamath county and then returned to the old home farm. The father devoted his entire life to farming and stock-raising, his labors being terminated in death June 17, 1895, while his wife passed away September 8, 1902. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom seven are now living: Mary E., who is the widow of James H. Rowley and lives in Ashland, Oregon; W. F.; Samuel F., whose home is in Mendocino county, California; A. Marion, living in Monmouth, Oregon; Arthur T., occupying the old home place near Roseburg; Ernest Jesse, of Ashland; and Mattie, the wife of W. W. Hazen, of Chino, California.

W. F. Arant resided with his parents until he attained his majority and during his youth acquired a common-school education and worked on the home farm. In the fall of 1872 he came to Klamath county, where he engaged in stock-raising and later he also took up farming, following both pursuits for about thirty years. On the 22d of May, 1902, the Crater Lake National Park was created by act of congress and in August of the same year Mr. Arant was appointed superintendent of the park, which position he has since held. He is the first to enter the park in the spring and the last to leave in the fall. He takes great pride in making this one of the attractive national parks of the country and his practical methods and sound judgment are manifest in the work of improvement that has been carried on. During the winter months he gives his attention to his private business interests and thus he is leading a busy and useful life.

On the 29th of October, 1871, Mr. Arant was married to Miss Emma L. Dunham, who was born in Livingston county, Missouri, November 6, 1853. She crossed the plains with her parents in 1864, starting on the first of April and arriving in November. She is a daughter of John S. and Harriet (Wyatt) Dunham, the latter a daughter of Captain John Wyatt, who commanded a company in the War of 1812, while her husband was a veteran of the Civil war. The ancestors of W. F. Arant served as soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Arant have been born four sons: E. L., a farmer and stockman of Klamath county; Chauncey F., a dairy farmer of Ashland; Herbert Lincoln, a dairyman and stock-raiser of Klamath county; and Jay J., a stockman of Klamath county. All four are married and have families.

W. F. Arant has had the usual experiences which have fallen to the lot of the pioneer of the northwest. His father was a member of a militia company known as Minute Men during the Rogue River Indian war in 1855 and participated in a number of skirmishes in defense of the settlers who were living here. W. F. Arant served for five years in the State Militia, one year as a private, one year as company bugler, two years as first sergeant and one year as guidon sergeant. He won the championship medal as the finest shot of Troop B, Oregon National Guard, which was one of the two cavalry troops in the state at that time—1892. Two of his sons, E. L. and C. F. Arant, served with the same troop during the same time as their father but held official positions, one acting as bugler and the other as a corporal. His son Jay at seven years of age was presented with a colonel's uniform by the troop, who regarded him as their mascot, and he was made special orderly by Brigadier General Compson. W. F. Arant was at one time a teamster in the employ of the United States government and engaged in furnishing the supplies to the army during the Modoc Indian war. He acted as teamster with wagonmaster Davidson's train. He has always led an outdoor life, spending much of the time in the saddle with his gun by his side. A natural mountaineer, he found in his present position as superintendent of the Crater Lake National Park one that was particularly congenial. He has always lived close to nature and knows her every phase. His political allegiance is given to the republican party but he has never sought nor desired office. There is little concerning the history of Oregon for the past sixty years that he does not know, for he has witnessed its continuous growth and development throughout that period and is especially active in connection with the progress in the southern part of the state. He is a cousin of Hon. Robert A. Emmett, his mother and Mr. Emmett being sister and brother, while Mr. Arant's father and Mr. Emmett's mother were cousins. W. F. Arant and Robert A. Emmett were born about four miles apart in Tazewell county, Illinois. Their parents crossed the plains together and settled in the same locality in Douglas county. After the two boys were grown they settled on adjoining farms in Klamath county and are now neighbors in Klamath Falls. Both have become prominent in their respective fields of labor and are numbered among the valued residents of southern Oregon.

JOHN MATTSON is numbered among the successful farmers of Coos county, where he is engaged in general agricultural pursuits on a highly improved ranch of ninety acres located six miles up Catching inlet from Marshfield. He was born in Finland, December 14, 1855, and is a son of Matt and Margaret A. (Osboeka) Mattson, both of whom were natives of that country. In their family were beside our subject the following children: Matt, Leander, Annie and Sophia, all of whom are deceased; Hannah, also deceased, who became the wife of Alexander Peterson; Matilda, deceased; and Brita, now deceased, who was the wife of Carl Carlson.

John Mattson was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in his native land. He started in life for himself at the age of seventeen years, at which time he emigrated to America, making his first settlement in Michigan, where he was engaged for two years as a laborer in a stone quarry. He then removed to California and for two years was employed in the lumber camps of that state. At the end of that time he moved to Oregon, settling in Marshfield in 1877. On taking up his abode in Marshfield he found employment in the lumber camps near that city and continued in that occupation for a number of years. He then purchased a farm consisting of one hundred and sixty acres and also took up a homestead which he failed to prove up on. He later purchased a farm of one hundred acres and was engaged in its cultivation for a period of four years. He then bought a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he lived for two years, after which time he disposed of that property and in 1890 he bought a farm of ninety acres located on Catching inlet and has since been engaged in the cultivation and development of that place. His farm is well located and the soil is considered to be equal to if not the best in that portion of Coos county. Since moving upon the property he has built a very fine residence and surrounded his home with shrubbery of all varieties common to that portion of Oregon. He makes a specialty of dairy farming and in that business has been very successful, milking at present twenty well selected dairy cows.

On May 7, 1880, Mr. Mattson was united in marriage to Miss Sophia Stora, a daughter of Carl and Louisa (Stora) Stora, in whose family were twelve children, six of whom are now living: John, of Marshfield; Matt, of North Bend; Sophia, now Mrs. John Mattson; Hannah, who is the wife of Victor Loxstrom, of Texas; Hilma, who married Condron Haquist; and Selma, who is the wife of William Loxstrom, of Coos Bay. The parents of these children are both deceased, the father's death occurring in 1904 and the mother's in 1907. To Mr. and Mrs. Mattson six children have been born. Selma, the eldest, married William Bjorkquist, of Coos Bay, and they have three children, Ellen, Signe and Ture. Arthur, who resides at Coos Bay, married Hilma Strang and they have one child, Gladys. Carl married Miss Rose Harris, of Sumner, and they have two children, Lorin and Jean. Edna married Stephen Currin, of Bandon, and they have three children, Lenora, Leroy and Lorna. Reuben resides at home with his parents and is attending school. Walter completes the family.

Mr. Mattson is liberal in his political views, giving the benefit of his support to the party which he believes represents the best interests of the people. He has served as school director of the district in which he now resides for the past twenty years. He belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. Mr. Mattson is one of the best known men in his portion of the state and the highly developed farm upon which he lives is one of the show places at Catching inlet. He has always taken great pains not only to succeed in his business but also to adorn his farm with beautiful hedgerows and other ornamental shrubbery, all of which contributes to the beauty and attractiveness of his home and farm. He is one of the substantial citizens of the community in which he resides and is in every respect a man to be numbered among the agricultural leaders of Coos county.

WALTER RYDELL, the senior member of the firm of Rydell & Kent, general merchants of Elkton, enjoys an enviable reputation as one of the leading young business men of the town. His birth occurred in Douglas county, Oregon, about four miles east of Elkton, on the 22d of August, 1888, his parents being Nels and Ida (Parson) Rydell, both natives of Sweden. They emigrated to the United States about 1876, locating in Chicago, Illinois, where they were married and made their home for five or six years. About 1882 they came west to Oregon, locating in Douglas county and taking up a homestead some four miles east of Elkton. Nels Rydell continued to reside thereon until 1899, when he took up his abode in Elkton. While a resident of Chicago he had been employed for a time in an iron foundry and had become much interested in that line of work. After removing to Elkton he purchased a partnership interest in a blacksmith shop from a Mr. Smith, under whose direction he learned the blacksmith's trade. Subsequently he bought Mr. Smith's interest in the shop and has since conducted the same alone with gratifying success. He is a staunch republican in politics and now acts as central committeeman of his precinct. He has lived in Douglas county for three decades, or during the entire period of his residence in this state and is widely recognized as one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of Elkton. Fraternally he is identified with the following organizations: Elkton Lodge, No. 63, A. F. & A. M.; Elkton Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and the Modern Woodmen of America of Elkton.

Walter Rydell was reared under the parental roof and obtained his early education in the public schools, subsequently continuing his studies in the Central Oregon State Normal School, at Drain. At an early age he began assisting his father in the blacksmith shop, learning the trade in all its details. He worked with his father until 1909, or until he had attained his majority and then accepted a position as bookkeeper with the Elkton Mercantile & Development Company, remaining in that employ for about one year. On the expiration of that period he was made manager of the concern but resigned at the end of a year to embark in business on his own account. In 1911, in association with W. W. Kent, he organized the mercantile firm of Rydell & Kent. As the junior member he devotes practically his entire attention to mercantile interests at Drain. The management of the business of Rydell & Kent devolves solely upon Walter Rydell, under whose able direction the enterprise has been built up until it is now in a prosperous and thriving condition. His business record is one of which he has every reason to be proud, for, prompted by landable ambition, he has worked his way steadily upward until at the age of twenty-four years he occupies a leading position among the merchants of his town.

On the 5th of September, 1910, Mr. Rydell was united in marriage to Miss Ellene Bossen, a native of Curry county, Oregon, and a daughter of Edgar Bossen, who was born in Germany. Mr. Rydell is a republican in politics, exercising his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of that party. He is a member of Elkton Lodge No. 5786, M. W. A., and also belongs to Elkton Lodge, No. 1050, M. B. A. Both he and his wife have always lived in the Sunset state and in the community where they reside are well and favorably known.

LAURITS F. RASMUSSEN, who is the proprietor of a general merchandise store at Wichita, in Clackamas county, was born in Denmark, October 11, 1866. His parents were Lars P. and Katie Rasmussen, both of whom died in Denmark, the mother passing away in 1879 and the father in 1887. Lars P. Rasmussen was the youngest of twenty-three children born to his parents. He was the father of the following children: Hans, who was born in 1856; Martin, who was born in January, 1859, and is a brick mason by trade; Marie, born July 22, 1862; a child who died in infancy; Laurits F.; and Hansine born in 1869. The children who are now living reside in Denmark, with the exception of the subject of this sketch.

Laurits F. Rasmussen was educated in Denmark and remained in his native country until April 22, 1888, when he came to America, arriving in May of that year. He then came directly to Walla Walla, Washington, reaching that state on the 21st of May. He worked on farms in that neighborhood for eleven years, and during this time purchased eighty acres of land in Oregon and resided on the same for three years, after which he sold out and was engaged in the lumber business until 1897. At that date he again took up farming, making a specialty of raising fruit. After two years he moved to Portland and was for a short time again engaged in the lumber business and later was in the employ of the police department for a time. Subsequently he was engaged in a wholesale grocery store in Portland for seven years. On August 1, 1911, he opened up his general merchandise store at Wichita, which is the only mercantile store in the town. He is here meeting with excellent success and has an extensive patronage.

On the 14th of November, 1900, Mr. Rasmussen married Miss Lydia A. Rivers, a native of Clackamas county, Oregon, and a daughter of Israel and Hannah N. Rivers, both of whom are deceased. The father passed away in September, 1907, and the mother in 1909. Mrs. Rasmussen is the youngest of a large family of children. To Mr. and Mrs. Rasmussen has been born one son, Peder, whose natal day is September 2, 1901.

Politically Mr. Rasmussen is a democrat and he served as road supervisor of Umatilla county for two years and as deputy sheriff for two years. Fraternally he is a member of the Eagles, the Foresters of America, the Shepherds of America, the Companion of Foresters and he also belongs to the Danish Aid Society of Portland. He is a faithful member of the Lutheran church. Mr. Rasmussen has never regretted the fact that he sought a home in America, for he has here met with good success. He has ever been active and energetic and his advancement in life is not the outcome of propitious circumstances but the honest reward of labor, good management, ambition and energy.

SILAS D. COATS. With the opening of the year 1912 one of the most venerable couples residing in Polk county was Mr. and Mrs. Silas D. Coats. The former was then a retired ranchman and miner, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Ere the celebration of another birthday came to him he had passed away and three days later the demise of his wife occurred. He was one of the pioneers on the Pacific coast, identified with the early development of Oregon as a sheep-raiser, farmer and miner. His birth occurred in Ontario county, New York, October 2, 1828, his parents having been Erastus and Mary (La Munion) Coats, the former a native of Massachusetts, and the latter of Rhode Island. In their family were three children, Carlos, Hannah M. and Silas D. The father removed with his family from New York to Ohio and in the latter state engaged in farming until 1852, when he visited Michigan on a business trip and while there became ill and died. The mother continued to reside in Ohio until she passed away about twenty-five years after her husband's death.

Silas D. Coats was reared under the parental roof and remained at home until 1852, being at that time in his twenty-fourth year. It was on the 11th of March that he started westward with a pair of Canadian ponies, which he drove as far as Rock Island, Illinois. There he sold his team and paid one hundred dollars for the privilege of joining an ox train en route to Yreka, California. Arriving at that place, he engaged in milking for two years, during which period he made seven thousand dollars. He next bought a pack team of twenty-two mules and managed a pack train between Crescent and Yreka for a year. Subsequently he took up land on the outskirts of Yreka and planted twenty acres in garden selling the remainder in town lots. Eventually, however, he disposed of his property there and took up a ranch in Shasta valley, purchased cows and engaged in the cattle-raising business for thirty years. He next removed to Umpqua, Oregon, for the purpose of educating his children and for five years continued his residence there. He later spent four years in Umatilla, Oregon, and then removed to the vicinity of Eugene, purchasing one hundred and seventy-three acres of land, to which he afterward added tracts to the amount of twelve hundred acres. Thereon he engaged extensively in sheep-raising for five years, after which he went to Grant county, where he remained for three years, during which time he raised cattle. Finally he removed to Monmouth and retired from active business life, for old age had come upon him and he felt it meet that he should spend his remaining days in well earned rest.

On the 8th of January, 1858, Mr. Coats was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary (Ivers) Reynolds, the widow of Harrison Reynolds. She was born April 28, 1827, and crossed the plains in the same ox train with Mr. Coats. By her first marriage she had four children. Adeline, Elmira, Charles and Palmer. Mr. and Mrs. Coats became the parents of four children: Erastus, deceased; Silas, living in Monmouth; Carlos, who has passed away; and Mary, who is now Mrs. W. O. Meador.

In politics Mr. Coats was a democrat and for fifteen years held the office of marshal. He was familiar with every phase of pioneer life as represented in the development of the far west and he always bore an active and helpful part in the upbuilding of the different sections in which he lived, for he was a progressive and enterprising citizen, whose methods were ever honorable and whose labors were resultant. He enjoyed the high regard of all with whom he came in contact and when he passed away on the 5th of January, 1912, many there were who spoke of him in terms of high regard and friendship. His widow, living only three days longer, died on the 8th of January, 1912, on the fifty-fourth anniversary of their marriage, and thus the couple, united so long in life, were separated for only a brief period in death.

ROBERT A. DUNCAN, who is the manager of the general merchandise store of the firm of Duncan & Cruse Brothers at Estacada, was born in Washington, May 1, 1878, the son of James and Carrie B. (Burton) Duncan. The father was a native of Scotland, and the mother of the state of California, and they were married in Washington, the father having come to America in 1854. On his arrival in this country he first settled at New York, and there was employed in railroad work until 1878, when he removed to Washington, where until 1893 he was superintendent of the rolling stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad. He then came to Oregon settling in Clackamas county, where he is living retired. In his family were five children: Charles, who is a farmer near Estacada; Edward, deceased; Robert A., of this review; Lillie, deceased; and Isabel, who is attending high school at Portland.

Robert A. Duncan received his early education in the public schools, and started out in life for himself at the age of fourteen, when he went into partnership with his father in the grocery business at The Dalles, Oregon. Selling the grocery store after two years he located in Portland, where he worked for six months in a sawmill. Subsequently he went to Idaho where he engaged in packing from Boise City to Thunder Mountains, and at the same time he operated a general mercantile store at Thunder Mountains. Two years later he returned to Portland, and for one year attended the Holmes Business College, after which for two years he was employed in fancy card writing and drawing. Then being accidentally hurt he was forced to retire from active work for two years, after which he went to Kansas City, Missouri, and traveled for the Peate Brothers Manufacturing Company for two years. He was then a traveling salesman for the Hunt Baking Powder Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, but after one year was again in the employ of the Peate Brothers Company of Kansas City. Two years later he returned to Oregon, settling at Estacada, where for one year he was in the government forest service, and then engaged for himself in the real-estate and bond business in Portland. In July, 1911, he bought a share of the Cruse Brothers general mercantile store, which has since been operated under the firm name of Duncan & Cruse Brothers, and he is now the general manager of the same. Mr. Duncan still handles real estate and has options on various tracts of land, one of which is a fourteen thousand acre cattle ranch in eastern Oregon, and he also owns numerous stocks and bonds.

In his political views Mr. Duncan is a republican, but he has never sought nor desired office, preferring to give all his time and attention to his business affairs. Fraternally he is a member of the Lone Pine Lodge, No. 53, A. F. & A. M., and is now serving as junior warden of the same. He is identified with the Estacada Garfield Grange, is a member of the Homesteaders Order at Des Moines, Iowa, and has filled all chairs in the local lodges of these two orders. He is a popular merchant, a well known and highly honored young man in Estacada, and all interests which tend to promote the public welfare receive his indorsement and support.

HENRY A. TRAYLOR, one of the well known and influential citizens of Elkton, is now living retired but in former years was actively identified with both industrial and agricultural pursuits. His birth occurred in Roseburg, Douglas county, Oregon, on the 29th of December, 1861, his parents being James N. and Eliza (Woodcock) Traylor, the former a native of Litchfield, Illinois, and the latter of Kentucky. It was in 1853 that James N. Traylor crossed the plains with ox teams in General Brooks' train and, arriving in Oregon, settled on the Molalla in the Willamette valley. He was a volunteer in the Rogue River and Modoc wars in 1855 under the command of General Ross, serving throughout the war. In 1848, when but four years of age, Eliza Woodcock accompanied her parents on their journey across the plains with ox teams. The party had many skirmishes with the Indians and several of their number were wounded but fortunately not fatally. Willis Woodcock, the maternal grandfather of our subject, took up a donation claim on the banks of the Molalla in Clackamas county. Following his marriage James N. Traylor resided in Clackamas county for twenty-seven years. He superintended the construction of the Oregon City locks on the Willamette river, and subsequently purchased a farm which he successfully operated for fourteen years. After the expiration of that period he entered the service of the Southern Pacific Railway Company under Ben Holladay and was made superintendent of the bridge building gang, acting in that capacity for seven years. In 1878 he removed to southern Oregon, locating in Jackson county, where he engaged in farming. Six years later he came to Douglas county and bought a small farm within a mile and a half of Elkton, residing thereon until he passed away on the 31st of January, 1909. His wife was called to her final rest on the 7th of December, 1877. In the death of James N. Traylor the community lost one of its respected and representative citizens and one whose labors had contributed in substantial measure to the early upbuilding and development of the Sunset state.

Henry A. Traylor was reared at home and obtained his education in the common schools. At the early age of fourteen he began learning the blacksmith's trade and after completing his apprenticeship worked at that occupation for seven consecutive years. He also learned the carpenter's trade under the direction of his father and has worked intermittently at both blacksmithing and carpentering to the present time. He has likewise bought and sold farm lands and has owned several properties but disposed of his last farm in 1909 and has since lived retired at Elkton. His is one of the neatest and most attractive homes in the Umpqua valley.

In 1885 Mr. Traylor was united in marriage to Miss Dora Heckathorne, a native of Jackson county, Oregon, and a daughter of Jeremiah Heckathorne, who crossed the plains from Indiana to this state in 1854. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Traylor have been born eleven children, eight of whom still survive, as follows: Myrtle, who is the wife of Alex Sawyer and resides in the Umpqua valley in Douglas county; Thomas and Grace, both at home; Ethel, who gave her hand in marriage to D. O. Weatherly, of Elkton, Oregon; Ernest, Gerald, Jesse and Henry R., all of whom are still under the parental roof.

Mr. Traylor gives his political allegiance to the democracy but has never sought nor desired the honors and emoluments of office. Fraternally he is identified with the following organizations: Elkton Lodge, F. & A. M.; Elkton Lodge, No. 259, I. O. O. F.; Drain Camp, No. 192, W. O. W.; and Elkton Lodge, M. B. A. Both he and his wife have spent their entire lives in this state, and therefore this record cannot fail to prove of interest to many of our readers.

GEORGE W. AGER. The birthplace of George W. Ager was a town bearing the family name and so called in honor of his father, Jerome Bonaparte Ager, who was born in New York in 1829. He went to California in 1851, crossing the plains with ox teams. During the first year of his residence on the coast he engaged in mining at Cape Blanco and in 1852 returned east with seventeen thousand dollars which he had mined. In 1853 he crossed the plains again and spent the rest of his life in Siskiyou county, being closely identified with the material development and progress of the district in which he lived. He was married at Yreka to Miss Lucy Jane Axtell, who was born in Wisconsin in 1848 and by way of the isthmus route came to the Pacific coast with her parents. From Red Bluff she had to ride horseback to Yreka, for there were no wagon roads at that time. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ager spent the rest of their lives in Siskiyou county upon a ranch and he was well known as a stockman of that locality. The town of Ager was named in his honor and became a shipping point for a large tributary district in northern California and southern Oregon. He was a prominent and influential resident of that locality and his labors contributed much to its improvement. He died November 14, 1900, and was survived by his wife until February, 1911. Their family numbered five sons and six daughters and with the exception of one daughter all are now living.

George W. Ager, the fifth child, made his home with his parents until he came to Klamath county in 1900 and in the meantime worked on the ranch with his father. He is now the owner of one hundred and twenty acres in his home place, together with two hundred acres about a mile distant near Rainier. He now has a good property and many of the improvements thereon were made by him. His farm is devoted to the raising of both grain and stock and he has a good orchard of two hundred trees.

In 1900 Mr. Ager was united in marriage to Miss Blanche Stearns, a native of Klamath county and a daughter of O. A. Stearns, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work. Our subject and his wife have three children: Irma, Lowell and Julian. Mr. Ager has always lived in this district, spending his youth and early manhood in Siskiyou county and since that time residing in Klamath county. He has been an interested witness of the work of improvement and progress and he is numbered among those whose labors as a farmer and stockman are contributing to the improvement and substantial upbuilding of his part of the state.

FRANK VARRELMANN. Occasionally this humdrum and workaday world gives to a man the unique gift of a stirring and adventurous career. This boon has fallen to the lot of Frank Varrelmann, whose life is a romance of the sea. He is a man who has "gone down to the sea in ships," has penetrated to distant ports of the world, has been near death and close to life many times, was one of the pioneers in the settlement of the great American northwest and has lived to retire in honor in the sixty-ninth year of his age. Mr. Varrelmann was born in Hanover, Germany, August 4, 1844, and is the son of Fritz and Catherine (Rippe) Varrelmann, both of whom lived and died in their native country. The father was a prominent educator and interested in school expansion. He was a teacher or "kuester" in the public schools in his native country, under a life appointment by the government. He gave his energies and activities during his entire career to school expansion and was prominent and honored as a German educator.

Frank Varrelmann was reared at home and continued his studies in the public schools of his native country until he was fourteen years of age. In 1858 he shipped aboard a Bremen vessel and made three trips to New Orleans. On the third journey he ran away from his ship and stopped in New Orleans, where he obtained employment on an American sailing vessel, the J. P. Whitney, and from November 1 to March 1, 1861, he was ship's keeper on this vessel. On March 1, 1861, he sailed for Kronstadt, Russia. While passing through the Gulf of Mexico the deck of the ship was swept clean by the heavy seas and Mr. Varrelmann was washed overboard. He was rescued by the mate and they continued their journey, reaching Kronstadt in record time and returning via Copenhagen, Denmark, to Liverpool, England, where they stopped and the captain discharged his entire crew with the exception of Mr. Varrelmann and one other. At this time he had the intention of laying up his ship on account of the breaking out of the Civil war in the United States, but subsequently he got a cargo of coal to Rio Janeiro and employed another crew to make that journey, still retaining Mr. Varrel-

mann in his service. The return journey was made via the West Indies and the island of St. Thomas, a Danish colonial possession, where they anchored until the news of the capture of New Orleans reached them. The captain immediately signed a nondescript crew and returned to America, arriving in New Orleans six weeks after the city had been taken. He found ruin and devastation everywhere. He took a cargo of sugar to New York and upon his arrival in that port Mr. Varrelmann left the vessel. He was suffering severely from chills and fever caught in the malarial districts of the south and in order to overcome this shipped on a Nova Scotia brig, on which he sailed for two years. He remained in New York for a long time, sailing out of that port as cook on pilot boats. On leaving this vocation he decided to visit his home in Germany and shipped as cook on a sailing bark to Antwerp and from there went overland to Bremen. After spending about two months he returned to Antwerp, but not being able to get on the crew of a vessel at that place he went to England and finally shipped on an American vessel, the Odessa, and made several trips between Baltimore and ports of France and other countries. He then shipped aboard an English vessel for Cardiff, Wales. From there he went to the West Indies on an American ship and thence returned to Baltimore, Maryland, via Havre, France. In Baltimore he was taken ill with swamp fever and compelled to leave his vessel, on which he had been about two years. After a lingering illness he eventually recovered his health and went to Brooklyn, New York, where he shipped aboard the sailing vessel, Fleet Wing, for a voyage around the Horn to San Francisco. The vessel made this journey in one hundred and thirteen days and upon its arrival in California Mr. Varrelmann resigned his position in order to ship aboard the schooner Enterprise, plying between San Francisco and Gardiner, Oregon. He remained aboard this ship for one year, later spending eighteen months on the Bobolink, plying between the same seas. He then became a member of the crew of the Pioneer, a fruit vessel operating between Sacramento and San Francisco. On one of its journeys to Marysville the Pioneer sank and four of the crew were drowned. Mr. Varrelmann escaped with his life and made his way to safety in a lifeboat. He returned to San Francisco, shipped on the bark General Cobb and sailed for two and one-half years from San Francisco to Seabeck. Eventually he left the vessel and came overland to Gardiner in 1873 and in this city he has since made his home. He has been identified with many of the most important commercial enterprises in Douglas county and for three years operated a local hotel in company with a Mr. Kronholm. He has gained much success in mercantile enterprises and his commercial career has been distinguished by that fearlessness and courage which was his principal asset in his seafaring life. For some time he operated a brewery in Gardiner in partnership with Mr. Kronholm. This partnership was shortly afterward dissolved. Mr. Varrelmann taking charge of the brewery and Mr. Kronholm of the hotel. Mr. Varrelmann was successful and prominent as a brewer in Gardiner until 1906, when the principles of prohibition were enforced. In that year he abandoned active life and has lived retired in Gardiner since that time.

On April 21, 1881, Mr. Varrelmann was united in marriage to Mrs. Frederick Hartsell, who was in her maidenhood Miss Blanche Elliott, a native of San Francisco. To Mr. and Mrs. Varrelmann have been born five children: Annie Pauline, born January 14, 1882, the wife of Albert Perkins, manager of a salmon cannery at Gardiner; Alfred Thomas, born June 2, 1884, who is a blacksmith in the same city; Franklin Emil, born January 29, 1886, who is employed in the Umpqua Life-saving Station; Charles Wallace, born January 29, 1889, of Hammond, California; and Agnes Blanche, born March 9, 1894, who resides at home. Mrs. Varrelmann also had a son by her former marriage, Frederick William, born October 1, 1879, who was officially adopted by his stepfather. Mrs. Varrelmann is a daughter of Thomas and Jane (Ilussey) Elliott. Her father was an old sea captain who followed this line of occupation for many years during his life and brought his vessel over the Umpqua bar into the port of Gardiner. He subsequently lost his vessel when she parted amidships in the Umpqua river but did not abandon his seafaring career for many years.

During the last few years of his life Mr. Varrelmann has been actively interested in local politics, and he is a democrat of progressive tendencies. In 1912 the people of Gardiner held an election to incorporate the town but this proposition was defeated. Mr. Varrelmann voting against it, although he was the nominee for mayor at the time. He has been identified with navigation in all its aspects during the greater part of his active life. He has now given up his adventurous career for a well earned repose and with many years of life before him is interesting himself in the political and business development of the city and will undoubtedly do conspicuously efficient work in this line before he is eventually summoned to cross the bar.

JOHN MINGER is one of the active and prosperous farmers of Marion county and lives on a tract of forty acres four miles east of Salem. The farm's neat and thrifty appearance indicates Mr. Minger's careful supervision and his use of practical methods in its cultivation. He was born in Switzerland, December 19, 1851, his parents being Benedict and Christina Minger, also natives of Switzerland. The father was a stone mason and contractor and, being an unusually strong and healthy man, he followed these occupations throughout his life, his death occurring at the age of eighty-three years, in 1899. The mother passed away when her son John was but a child. To Mr. and Mrs. Benedict Minger six children were born, all of whom are residing in Switzerland excepting the subject of this sketch. The others are, Benedict, Frederick, Annie, Adolph, and Eliza.

John Minger received his education in the common schools of Switzerland and attended the high school for one year. After he discontinued his studies he enlisted as a recruit in the army for a short period of service and then worked with his father as a stone-cutter for a year and a half. Subsequently he worked in hotels for four years previous to going to France, where he studied languages for a period of three years. Afterward he returned home and again was employed by his father and in hotels until he came to the United States in 1881. His first place of residence was in Allen county, Ohio, where he remained for two years, after which he came to Salem, Oregon. He has since made his home upon his forty acres of highly developed property near that city. In addition to cultivating his farm he has been employed for three and a half years as gardener by ex-Governor J. F. Moody at Salem.

John Minger has been married twice. His first marriage occurred in San Francisco in 1884 to Miss Martie Scheidegger, who was a native of Switzerland. Her death occurred twenty-six months later. She became the mother of Theodore, who married and is living in Prineville, Oregon, where he is engaged in the plumbing business. Mr. Minger's second marriage took place in 1890, when he was united with Miss Adelia Allenbach, a native of Switzerland. To them a child, Edna, who resides at home and attends school, was born on the 10th of April, 1891.

Mr. Minger has never affiliated with any party but casts his vote independently for men or measures which in his opinion insure the best government for the community. He is not a member of any church or lodges but is untiring in his efforts to work for the social good of his community. His public spirit was manifested in the labor which he gave gratis to the state when he acted as landscape gardener at the asylum at Salem for fifteen years. He made a study of this work in Switzerland for two years. The state of Oregon was thoroughly appreciative of the services he rendered and has since found it difficult to fill his place satisfactorily. Wherever he is known he is respected for his unfaltering allegiance to the principles of honorable manhood as manifest in his social relations and in his public-spirited citizenship.

BENJAMIN E. KERNS. Extensive business interests claim the time and attention of Benjamin E. Kerns, who since 1898 has made his home in Klamath county, where he has large landed holdings and is extensively engaged in farming, stock-raising and industrial pursuits. He was born on the banks of the Delaware in western New Jersey, March 24, 1877, and is the eldest of the four children of Benjamin S. and Martha (Everhart) Kerns, the former a native of New Jersey, and the latter of Ohio. They were married in Missouri and established their home in New Jersey, where they lived for four years. In 1879, however, they located in Missouri, where they remained for a number of years. In the fall of 1893 they went to southern California and now reside in Chico, that state, the father being a retired ranchman there.

Benjamin E. Kerns remained with his parents until twenty-one years of age. Accompanying them on their various removals, he came to Klamath county in 1898, having but recently attained his majority, and has here continuously engaged in farming. He now owns one thousand acres of land near Keno, the greater part of which is under cultivation, and he also rents six hundred acres. He likewise has about one thousand acres of hay land and pasture which he rents. He is a prominent stockman of southern Oregon, extensively engaged in the raising of cattle and horses, of which he has about three hundred head. He is also associated with his brother, James W., in the building of a power plant near Keno, which will be operated under the name of the Keno Light & Power Company and will furnish power for irrigation purposes. This is a business in which the spirit of public service figures largely, for the enterprise will be one of untold value to the community.

On the 14th of December, 1905, Mr. Kerns was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Mattoon, a native of Douglas county, Oregon, and a daughter of H. J. Mattoon. They now have four children: Esther May, Edna B., Claud C. and Mary Edith. In the fourteen years which have come and gone since Mr. Kerns came to the northwest he has made continuous advancement in a business way. He realized the fact that great opportunities are here to be had almost for the asking and he determined that he would win his share of success if it could be done through persistent and earnest purpose intelligently directed. He is working hard in all the different lines upon which he concentrates his energies, and Klamath county numbers him as one whose efforts are constituting a vital force in the upbuilding of this section.

A. W. COLLINS is well known in agricultural circles of Douglas county, where he owns and operates a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on Cow creek. His birth occurred in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on the 5th of October, 1867. His parents were Samuel and Angeline (Worley) Collins, both natives of Pennsylvania, who removed to Nebraska in 1884. They made their home in that state for ten years and then moved to California, where they spent fourteen months before they came to Oregon and located on Cow creek, in Douglas county. Here the father bought a ranch which he operated with much success until his death in 1905. He was the father of five children: Martha E. and Clara J., who have passed away; A. W., of this review; Mary E., who is deceased; and Ella S., who is still living on the old homestead.

A. W. Collins was reared at home and remained on the farm until he had attained his majority. By careful saving and strict economy he accumulated a small sum of money with which he bought a farm in Nebraska, operating the same until he went to California in 1894. After one year in that state he came to Douglas county, Oregon, and located on Cow creek. He is now the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of improved farm land in this county and is one of the prominent agriculturists of his district. He is well acquainted with the details of farming and takes an active interest in every new discovery along the line of scientific agriculture. He makes a specialty of stock-raising and dairying and in both of these branches has met with success. He keeps a large herd of graded cattle constantly on hand and the products of his dairy obtain a ready sale on the market.

In 1889 Mr. Collins was united in marriage to Miss Anna Mills, a native of Effingham county, Illinois, and a daughter of Michael and Naney (Tedrick) Mills, the former a native of Indiana, and the latter of Maryland. To Mr. Collins and his wife have been born two children: Lola M., the wife of Walter J. Burch and Samuel A., who is living at home. Politically Mr. Collins is a democrat and takes an active interest in the affairs of his district. He is now serving as director of the school board and has always been a prominent figure in educational circles. He brings to the cultivation of his land a scientific knowledge of the details of agriculture, a progressive mind and the most modern and up-to-date equipment which the markets of America afford.

WESLEY J. HAGA devotes his attention to farming, dairying and gardening, having thirty-nine acres of land which he has redeemed from brush and converted into a productive property. He was born in Virginia, December 10, 1872, and is a son of J. F. and Melinda (Dixon) Haga, who were natives of Virginia and North Carolina respectively. The family came to Oregon when Wesley J. Haga was but eight years of age and settlement was made at Eugene, where they lived for eight years, removing thence to Coos county. The father preempted a place of one hundred and sixty acres which he began to cultivate and improve. Later he bought about three hundred and fifty acres but afterward disposed of that property and became owner of one hundred and twenty acres upon which he and his wife still reside. In their family were eleven children, as follows: Sarah I., the wife of J. R. Cox, of Parkersburg, Oregon; George Columbus, also of near Parkersburg; Wesley J., of this review; John W., a resident of Parkersburg; Docia, who married Frank Flam, near that city; Polly, the wife of E. M. Randleman, of whom mention is made on another page of this work; Gussie, the wife of E. E. Doyle; Elizabeth, the wife of F. Van Leuven; Frances, who married John McAdams; David, who died in infancy; and Joseph, who resides with his parents. With the exception of Mrs. McAdams, who makes her home at Coquille, Oregon, they all live near Parkersburg, Oregon.

Wesley J. Haga accompanied his parents on their various removals until he reached the age of twenty-four years, when he started out in the business world on his own account. He had previously had considerable experience in the best methods of reclaiming wild land and converting it into fertile fields. At twenty-four years of age he married and rented land upon which he lived for six years, during which time industry and careful expenditure brought him a sum sufficient to enable him to purchase thirty-nine acres where he now lives in Coos county. The tract was mostly in brush and timber but with characteristic energy he began its development, clearing the fields and bringing them under a high state of cultivation. He carries on general farming, dairying and gardening and his practical methods are evidenced in his growing success. His home is pleasantly situated on the Coquille road about four miles from Bandon.

Mr. Haga has been married twice. He first wedded Miss Annie M. Taylor, a native of Oregon and a daughter of William and Jane (Cox) Taylor, in whose family were eight children, and by her marriage Mrs. Haga became the mother of four children: Bessie, who was born January 10, 1898; Clara, May 22, 1900; Lester, March 9, 1903; and Arthur, October 4, 1905. All are attending school. Mrs. Haga passed away October 2, 1909, and Mr. Haga has since married Irlan Evans, a native of California and a daughter of William H. S. and Lulu (Warner) Evans, who were natives of Ohio and Mississippi respectively. Mrs. Haga was the younger of two children, her brother being Owen, living at Bullard, Oregon. It was on the 20th of October, 1910, that she gave her hand in marriage to Mr. Haga, and unto them has been born a son, Kenneth, on June 15, 1911. Mr. Haga votes with the republican party but has never been active in politics, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business interests.

ISAAC ECCLESTON. The various features of progressive ranching as seen in the northwest are found on the place of Isaac Eccleston, who is the owner of two hundred and seventy-four acres on the east side of Goose lake valley, seven miles south of Lakeview. He was born in Cedar county, Missouri, September 4, 1843, and is a son of Henry Harrison and Belinda (Richardson) Eccleston. The father was born in Cayuga county, New York, September 6, 1811, and the mother's birth occurred in North Carolina, in 1808. She had been previously married and had a son, John M., who, however, went by the name of Eccleston. His death occurred in 1852, while the family were crossing the plains to the west. Two children were born of the second marriage. The family removed to Ohio, thence to Illinois and afterward to Missouri. In 1832 the father served in the Black Hawk war, whereby the Indians of Illinois and the middle west were subjugated, and in 1838 he went to Missouri, where he lived until 1849, when he crossed the plains to California returning to Missouri the following year. In 1852 he came to the Willamette valley, settling in Lane county in 1853. He was a physician and practiced medicine throughout his entire active life, yet other interests to some extent claimed his time and attention, for he secured a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres and supervised its development and improvement. He aided in organizing the republican party in Lane county and in 1855 he served in the Rogue River Indian war. He was a member of the Christian church and his life commended him to the confidence, good-will and high regard of those with whom he came in contact. In his family were nine children: Ezra, deceased; one who died in infancy; M. M., who served in the Rogue River Indian war and resides in Junction City, Oregon; James Y., deceased, who was one of the first pioneers of Lake county, arriving in 1867, driving a bull team from Idaho for D. R. Jones; Henry Harrison, of the Deerlodge valley of Montana; Isaac; S. J., deceased; Mary, who became the wife of William Ragsdale and after his death married George Goodman; and Martha Jane, who is the wife of Amos Higgins, of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Isaac Eccleston resided with his parents until 1861, when he left Lane county and went to Idaho, which was then a part of Oregon. For five years thereafter he worked in the gold mines and subsequently removed to Yamhill county, building a good home in McMinnville, where he worked at the carpenter's trade for several years. In 1872 he came to Goose lake valley, where he has resided most of the time since, living upon his present ranch for thirty-seven years. He owns two hundred and seventy-four acres of land, on the east side of the valley, seven miles south of Lakeview. He homesteaded one hundred and seventy-two acres of the land and made all necessary improvements thereon. He is now engaged in raising hay, grain and stock. He and his son have three hundred head of cattle on the range and thirty-five head of horses and mules. He has learned to utilize his time, energies and opportunities to the best advantage in the cultivation of his land and in his stock-raising ventures, and his labors are being attended with a gratifying measure of success.

In 1868, in Yamhill county, Mr. Eccleston was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Miller, who was born in Polk county, Oregon, in July, 1852, a daughter of John and Ruth Ann (Franklin) Miller, the mother having been a first cousin of Benjamin Franklin. The parents crossed the plains in 1847 from Ohio to the Willamette valley and their last days were passed in Douglas county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Eccleston have six children: F. M., living in North Yakima, Washington; Lilly, the wife of William Smith, lighthouse keeper in Lane county, sixteen miles north of Florence; Charles, of Lakeview; George D., of Portland; Amy, the wife of George Peterson, of Eugene; and Harry B., who is living at Drain, Oregon.

For forty years Mr. Eccleston has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined that organization on the 26th of April, 1872. He closely follows the teachings of the society, to which he has ever been loyal. For about six decades he has been a resident of Oregon and much of his time has been passed in Lake county, the development and improvement of which is due to the work of such men as Isaac Eccleston—men who realize the possibilities for progress here and seek at all times the betterment and upbuilding of the community.

STEIN DANIELSON who died upon his farm on the Coquille river on June 7, 1909, was prominent among the many men of foreign birth who have given their energies and talents to promote the agricultural development of Oregon and his career was a factor not only in farming progress but in the motives which influenced its success was an addition to the qualities of citizenship in Coos county. He was born in Norway in 1841 and came to Oregon in 1867 settling in that year in Coos county. He had followed the sea for some time in his early youth and came from Norway to America as ship's carpenter on a sailing vessel. He had learned his trade in Norway and also followed it in Oregon. He was pleased with the conditions in the American northwest and determined to settle in Coos county. He purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land on the Coquille river and began its improvement and cultivation. He was successful from the beginning, as his methods were always practical and his industry untiring. He worked hard, plowing his fields, gathering his harvests and caring for his stock and grain. His enterprise grew more lucrative as his methods became more progressive and his experience wider. At the time of his death he was numbered among the representative and substantial citizens of his district and was counted among the individuals who made their personal success important in promoting public growth.

Mr. Danielson married Miss Elizabeth Thrush, a native of California and a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Trimble) Thrush, who in 1853 came to California across the plains with ox teams. They lived in that state for a short time and then journeyed north to Portland. They spent a few years in the Willamette valley, finally settling in Douglas county. To their union were born twelve children: Nathaniel, who is deceased; Sarah Jane, who is the wife of Richard Crow of Loraine, Oregon; Phoebe, who married Ike Boyles of Douglas county; Clementine, the deceased wife of Joseph McCue; Rhodie A., who has passed away; Rosie A., the widow of Joseph Russell of Prosper, Oregon; Susan A., the widow of James Blundell of Bandon; Elizabeth, the wife of our subject; Maggie, the widow of Adolph Hulton of Prosper; Richard, who is also a resident of Prosper; and two children who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Danielson have been born nine children: Matilda L., who married Jesse Smith of Marshfield; Rosetta, who became the wife of William White of Lampa, Oregon; Frank D., who passed away leaving one child, Perna; John E., of Bandon; Lillie May, the wife of Bartie Davidson of Lampa; Tora E., the wife of Martin L. Randleman of Lampa; Rene Arinda, who lives at home; Richard, who also lives with his mother; and Christopher S., who in conjunction with his brother Richard is operating the home farm.

MR. AND MRS. STEIN DANIELSON

Mr. Danielson affiliated with the democratic party in his early life but later became a socialist. He was one of the prominent general farmers and dairymen of Coos county and operated his enterprise along modern, systematic and progressive lines. During his life he sought success entirely in agricultural circles and had a fitting reward for his ambition and energy in the excellent condition of his farm. He founded a distinct and substantial prosperity upon a capacity for hard work, well directed, and upon business discrimination of a high order. He met with a success which always rewards earnest, persistent and intelligent labor. His life was actuated by the principles and standards of industry and honor which this country welcomes so eagerly in its adopted citizens and his death was felt as a distinct loss to his community.

CHARLES WHEALAN SHERMAN, Sr., who since 1903 has owned and operated a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres in Klamath county, was in former years an active and well known representative of journalistic interests in the middle west. His birth occurred in New Castle, Richland county, Ohio, on the 9th of June, 1841. His father, Captain Henry Sherman, of the Ohio State Militia had migrated from Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in 1824, and set up a blacksmith and wagon shop at the head of the village of New Castle, conducting the same throughout the remainder of his life. His death occurred in 1844 and was the result of injuries received from a vicious horse. His parents were of English-Irish extraction. His estate was mostly expended in paying doctor bills and in its administration. The mother was left with eight children and had a hard struggle in caring for the little ones, possessing only a few acres of ground, an orchard and garden, and a small log cabin with a "loft" above. Charles, being one of the youngest of the children, was thus reared amid poverty, and his schooling consisted of the common district variety, including what is now known as the eighth grade. When he reached his fourteenth year a distant relative for whom he was named, Charles R. Sherman, a brother of General William T. Sherman and Senator John Sherman, offered to send him to college on condition that after graduation he enter his law office at Mansfield and become a lawyer. But the offer did not appeal to him. He preferred, as he said at the time, to make his way in the world independent of favor, and he had no fancy for the law as a life occupation. His ambition was to go into a printing office, learn the "art preservative" and become an editor. During the following winter, with two of his older brothers, Jacob and Henry, he split rails and cut cordwood, thus earning the money with which to come west. On the 7th of May, 1857, in company with his eldest brother Salisbury, he left home and mother for northeastern Iowa, where his brother had a small piece of land and expected to make his home. Traveling by rail via Toledo, thence up the Maumee valley to northern Indiana, they came to a place where the line was unfinished for the space of fourteen miles, and over that distance the two were obliged to walk and carry their luggage, there being no public conveyance. Carrying a trunk and two heavy valises for that distance, they found, was no easy task.

The city of Chicago at that period had a population of about forty thousand people. It was the largest place, however, that Mr. Sherman had ever seen, and the two brothers stopped over there to view its wonders. The grade of the streets was being raised some eight feet and he was much interested in watching the mechanics raise tall buildings, covering half a block, to the new grade by means of hundreds of jackscrews, each one being turned at the same instant by a sturdy workman at a given signal. Reaching the east side of the Mississippi river on the evening of May 20th they crossed over to the city of Dubuque and there took a steamer for McGregor's Landing that night. The winter before had been a very severe and long one, and it is one of Mr. Sherman's remembrances that banks of snow still filled the clefts of the high cliffs along the river. Arriving at McGregor next morning, they learned that there was no stage line leading to Castalia, their destination, some thirty miles northwest; so there was nothing left for them to do but to take to the road, again carrying their luggage between them. Severe as was the burden, however, they covered the distance that day, reaching the village some time after nightfall, footsore and tired to the point of utter exhaustion.

That summer was spent working on a farm for a man who kept a dairy and made cheese from the milk of some sixty cows, it being one of the chores of the morning and evening for Mr. Sherman and two others to milk the cows and carry the milk to the house. He helped in the hay and wheat harvest, doing a man's work, for which he received twenty dollars a month in gold. While living in that vicinity he had been told that the winters were very severe, that during the previous month of March the mercury was frozen in the bulb for two weeks. This information frightened him. He didn't want to live in such a cold climate, so he bid his brother farewell in August and set out afoot for the town of Knoxville, two hundred miles further south, whither his two younger brothers had migrated the spring before and where a married sister was living.

North and south roads in Iowa were scarce at that time, all travel being on east and west lines. The country, too, was thinly settled, and after having crossed Turkey river by fording it, and following a dim trail till night came on, he was obliged to sleep out of doors on the prairie. Fortunately he came upon a giant boulder high up on the divide and found a slight shelter in one of its clefts. The night was a warm one and, by making a pillow of his shoes and dividing his clothing from his satchel between a bed and covering, he slept well. Arising at the first gleam of sunlight and mounting the boulder, he could see the houses of a village miles away to the south. Gathering his effects, he followed a dim trail in that direction, and by seven o'clock he arrived at the village of Eden, situated in a pretty grove, where he breakfasted.

"There is one incident of this journey of some two hundred miles," says Mr. Sherman, "which deserves a place in history. Stopping en route for a few days to visit relatives at the town of Marietta, Iowa, which was then the county seat of Marshall county, I proceeded southward on my journey, along the road on the west side of the Cedar river, passed by Waterloo, a distance of some twelve miles, when I came to a large stream known as Wolf river, which I discovered, owing to recent heavy rains above, was hankful and a raging torrent. Some six miles further back I passed by the last house, and none was in sight on the opposite side of the stream. How I was to get across this stream was a troublesome problem. To turn back seemed to me out of the question. There were groves of timber bordering the torrent and great logs and brush were floating down the stream. Possibly, I thought, I might find a log further up, on my side, and by getting a pole, might push myself across, floating with the current. So I walked on the bank upstream for half a mile or more, when I came to a large tree that was lodged in an eddy. It had several branches and was deeper in the water near its center than at either end. Looking about, I found a stout pole some fifteen feet in length. Taking off my shoes and stockings and tying them to my satchel and with my suspenders tying my satchel to my shoulders, I mounted the log and tried it to see if I could turn it over easily. The result was satisfactory. The forks and limbs so balanced the tree in the water that it would not turn. Thus reassured, I stood on the log and with the pole pushed boldly out into the roaring, surging river in such a way that the butt of the log went downstream first. When the current struck the tree it came near going over but soon righted up and floated rapidly with the current. Finding it difficult to keep my feet, I sat down, with my feet in the water on either side. That pole was not of much use to me, but occasionally I could use it with good effect in steering the tree toward the south side of the stream, and after floating about two miles downstream the tree was drawn, with my help in pushing with the pole, to the south bank, in an eddy, and I mounted the shore, thoroughly frightened and only then fully realizing what a fearful venture I had made. Sixteen miles' walk brought me to a village and a good night's rest." The balance of the journey was made without notable incident.

The following spring, by correspondence, Mr. Sherman ascertained that there was an opening for a boy in a printing office at Council Bluffs and without hesitation he made the journey afoot to that place, although the country was then thinly settled, arriving there on the 19th of April, 1858. After paying for his dinner he had but ten cents left in his purse. He found the editor of the Council Bluffs Nonpareil in his sanctum, introduced himself and was at once installed as "the new devil." In all of his experience with men since then, he has never found a better man than W. W. Maynard, the founder and manager of that newspaper.

Getting a touch of the "gold" fever, in the spring of 1861 he engaged himself to a man named McLain, of Omaha, to drive a freight team across the plains to the Rocky Mountains, and, returning as far down the Platte valley as Fort Kearney, took care of his ranch and herd of cattle until July. While there, during the absence of his employer, he was made a prisoner by some bands of Sioux, Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians while they plundered the ranch of its goods and valuables. On the 13th of July he resigned his position and started to walk back to Iowa, determined to enlist as a soldier in the Union army. He arrived at the home of his mother and brothers in Knoxville on July 27th, the day after the burial of his youngest brother, Henry, who belonged to the Third Iowa Infantry and was the first man of the regiment to be killed. His body had been brought home for interment. Determined on being one of the boys to answer the call of Uncle Abraham for men to save the Union and still unwilling to go without his mother's benediction, Charles Sherman remained at home almost a month before she, having just lost one son, could make up her mind to part with a second—her youngest. But finally, in response to his pleadings and to maintain unsullied the honor of the family, she gave her consent and the boy enlisted and became a member of Company K, Third Iowa Cavalry. He served throughout the war, re-enlisting in 1864 as a veteran and being finally mustered out with his regiment at Atlanta, Georgia, on the 9th of August, 1865. Three times he had been slightly wounded. With his company or regiment he was in twenty-one battles and was under fire fifty-one times, participating in the most audacious and successful cavalry charge that was made during the Civil war—at the battle on the Marias des Cygne, or Little Osage, on the Kansas-Missouri state line. He was one of the sixty-two men who charged over the enemy's entrenchments, creating a panic which successfully ended the last battle in the war—in front of Columbus, Georgia,—his regiment making the charge in a night attack, on the 16th of March, 1865, a week after Lee had surrendered at Appomattox.

After the war Mr. Sherman went back to his trade and, before long launched into the newspaper business, in a small way, being greatly hampered by the lack of means. His first venture was the Eddyville Star, a small paper in a small town in Iowa. This undertaking was not a success and he sold his plant within a year, going to Burlington, where he became a compositor on the Daily Hawkeye. He afterward published newspapers at Queen City, Quincy, Villisca and for ten years at Glenwood, Iowa. Selling out there, he began the publication of the Plattsmouth Journal, a daily and weekly, which he continued for twenty years. Then his office was burned, without insurance, and the paper passed into other hands.

In 1902 Mr. Sherman compiled and published a directory of the "gold belt" cities of the Black Hills—Lead, Deadwood, Silver City, Terry, etc., and in March, 1903, came to Oregon, soon thereafter taking up a quarter section of Uncle Sam's land as a homestead in Dairy precinct, Klamath county, where he still resides. In addition to improving his place he has been keeping in touch with his former life by corresponding with various newspapers, not only writing the local news of the day but dissertations upon topics of current interest and upon political questions of the day.

In early life Mr. Sherman became a "free soiler"—an opponent of slavery—and from that drifted into the republican party, to which he held allegiance till the second nomination of Grant for president, when he supported Mr. Greeley and since then has counted himself a democrat of the reform or progressive order. He was one of the earliest to recognize the abilities and power of William J. Bryan as a public orator and statesman and a leader of the people and has been a steadfast adherent to his standard, both of morals and of politics. He has not been an office hunter, although he served a term as councilman of the village of Quincy and was sergeant-at-arms of the Iowa house of representatives during two sessions. He was his party's candidate for state senator while living at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, but was not elected. In 1912 his name was on the democratic ticket at the primaries for delegate to the national convention, but he was taken sick and made no canvass for election.

On the 20th of August, 1866, Mr. Sherman was married to Orilla Groom, the ceremony being performed at Knoxville, Iowa. Ten children were born to this union, seven of whom, four sons and three daughters, grew to maturity and are living and doing well in the world. All are married save one. The parents have nine grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman are well known throughout the community in which they reside and are esteemed as people of the highest respectability.

FRANCIS FRANKLIN WELLS, who has lived retired in Elkton for the past three years, was long numbered among the enterprising and representative agriculturists of Douglas county and is still the owner of a valuable ranch comprising three hundred and seventy-six acres. His birth occurred on the old Wells donation claim, on the Umpqua river above Elkton, on the 8th of November, 1859, his parents being Ira and Anna E. (Manddler) Wells. The father was born in Vermont, on the 30th of July, 1814, while the mother's birth occurred on the Mayn river in Prussia, Germany, her natal day being July 10, 1822. The latter was a maiden of sixteen when she crossed the Atlantic to America with her parents, the family home being established in Illinois, where she gave her hand in marriage to Ira Wells. It was in 1847 that Mr. and Mrs. Wells crossed the plains to Oregon, the journey consuming six months. They made their first stop in the Willamette valley, on the present site of Cottage Grove, where was born their second child, who was the first white child born in Lane county and who is now Mrs. W. W. Hawley, of Corvallis. In 1848 they came down into Douglas county and located in Scotts valley, where Mrs. Wells was left to spend the winter with the Scott family, while Mr. Wells made his way to the vicinity of Elkton and filed on a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres a mile and a half west of Elkton. In the spring of 1849 he brought his family to this claim, their belongings being carried over the mountain from Drain to Elkton by pack horses. As time passed and his financial resources increased he extended the boundaries of his ranch by purchase until it embraced ten hundred and sixty acres, on which he ran large herds of cattle and later was quite extensively engaged in sheep-raising. After his sons grew to manhood, however, he cultivated a large part of the land. His demise occurred on this farm on the 17th of July, 1892, when he had attained the age of seventy-eight years. His wife was called to her final rest on the 20th of December, 1904, when more than eighty-two years of age, passing away in the faith of the Christian church. Ira Wells gave his political allegiance to the democracy for many years but in later life joined the ranks of the republican party. Although frequently urged to accept the candidacy for county commissioner and state representative, he always declined, having no desire for political honors and emoluments.

Francis Franklin Wells was reared under the parental roof and supplemented his early education, acquired in the public schools, by a course of study in Umpqua Academy, at Wilbur, Oregon. When a youth of seventeen he took charge of the home farm, his father being practically an invalid, and continued its operation until after the death of his parents. He then acquired three hundred and seventy-six acres of the homestead and this land is still in his possession. In November, 1909, however, he rented the property and took up his abode in Elkton, where he has since made his home. He is a stockholder and was one of the organizers of the Elkton Mercantile & Development Company, the principal mercantile institution of Elkton. In his undertakings as an agriculturist he was highly successful, utilizing modern methods and improved machinery in his work. He bought the first steam thresher, the first binder, the first cream separator and also purchased the first registered stock on the Umpqua river.

On the 18th of June, 1899, Mr. Wells was united in marriage to Miss Elsie L. Iffely, of Drain, her parents being Thomas H. and Carrie (Snell) Iffely, who came to Oregon from Minnesota in 1883. Our subject and his wife have three children: Lena Irene, born December 12, 1907; Frances Alene, born February 10, 1910; and Ira Thomas, born November 10, 1911.

Mr. Wells is a democrat in politics and about ten years ago was the candidate of his party for state representative. The candidacy having been thrust upon him in spite of his protest, he made no campaign and was consequently defeated at the polls. He belongs to Elkton Lodge, No. 46, A. O. U. W., and Hyacinth Lodge, No. 93, Degree of Honor, and is also a member of the Oregon Grange. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, to which his wife also belongs. Mr. Wells has always lived in Douglas county and the sterling traits of his character are well known to his fellow townsmen, the great majority of whom number him as a friend.

JOHN H. ROBINSON is one of the highly respected citizens of Oregon and has one of the largest orchards in Josephine county where he resides upon his beautiful ranch of five hundred and sixty-seven acres. He was born in Tennessee, January 16, 1850, and is a son of James and Susanna (Jackson) Robinson, both of whom were natives of Johnson county, Tennessee. They became the parents of eleven children.

John H. Robinson was reared in his father's home and received his early education in the public schools. He left the parental roof at the age of eighteen years, and removed to Missouri where he was engaged for several years as a common laborer at various kinds of employment. By carefully saving his money he was later enabled to complete his English education. For some time thereafter, he was engaged in teaching in Missouri and returning to Tennessee he taught there for five years. He removed to Oregon in 1883 and filed upon a homestead which he has since brought to a high state of cultivation. He engages in mixed farming and fruit-growing. His ranch comprises five hundred and sixty-seven acres, fifty of which is planted to apples, pears and prunes. Mr. Robinson and his brother personally supervise the harvest and packing of the fruit crop which averages ten carloads per annum. In addition to the attention which he gives to his orchard he is also specializing in the breeding of pure blooded Poland China hogs and in that particular branch of stock-raising he has been highly successful.

John H. Robinson was united in marriage on October 27, 1879, to Miss Olive Newkirk, of Texas, and to this union nine children have been born: Claudius C.; Roy Randolph, who died in 1890; George L.; Estelle G.; Elsie E.; Clifford B., who died in December, 1909; Omer; John Reginald; and Everett. Mr. Robinson is affiliated with the republican party and for some years served as school examiner for Josephine county. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

John H. Robinson is one of the enterprising and highly valued citizens of Josephine county. His work as a scientific farmer and fruit grower has demonstrated to the people in his county that intelligent and modern methods applied to agriculture bring gratifying results.

NORMAN L. LEE, M. D. One of the prominent men of Junction City, Oregon, is Dr. Norman L. Lee, the owner of landed and other interests, who retired from professional life recently and gives his attention principally to overseeing his investments. He was born in Illinois, March 29, 1837, while his parents were en route to Iowa from Ohio, and is a son of Philester and Eliza Ann (Burge) Lee. Both parents were natives of New York, in which state their marriage occurred. They resided in the Empire state for some time and then removed to Ohio, where they remained for a few years. In 1837 they went to Iowa, settling in Van Buren county, where the father took up a homestead and for ten years devoted his time and attention to the improvement and cultivation of his farm. He built the first frame barn ever erected in Wapello county. In 1847 he crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon and settled in Portland, making the trip from The Dalles to Portland by flatboat. After living for a time in Portland he went to California as a gold miner, leaving his family in Portland. He worked at mining with success until 1849 and in the following year removed with his family to Salem, where he engaged in the mercantile business. He remained there for only a year, however, and then removed to Linn county, taking up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres upon which he lived until 1860, when he retired. He attained the age of eighty-three years and at the time of his death was the owner of his homestead of six hundred and forty acres and also one hundred and sixty acres of timber land. The mother passed away when she was sixty-two years of age. They were the parents of ten children, four of whom are yet living: Norman L.; Mrs. Mary Vale and Mrs. Lucinda Mathews, both of whom reside in Linn county; and Mrs. Sarah Hogue, who makes her home near Grants Pass, Oregon.

Coming to Oregon with his parents when he was ten years of age, Norman L. Lee first attended school in a log schoolhouse in Portland and later was a student in the Methodist Academy at Salem. He then began the study of medicine in Willamette University and was graduated from that institution in 1871. Entering upon the practice of his chosen profession in Junction City, he soon succeeded in building up a good practice and has since made that city his home.

JOHN H. ROBINSON

On March 14, 1868, Dr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss Amanda M. Griggs, who was born in Adams county, Illinois, in October, 1849, a daughter of Aley B. and Sarah J. (Morris) Griggs. The parents were both born near Griggsville, Adams county, Illinois, which town was named in honor of the Griggs family. There they were married and resided until 1851, when with ox teams they crossed the plains to Oregon, spending the first winter in Oregon City. In the following spring they came to Linn county, locating about twelve miles from Albany, where the father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres. Here he resided until the time of his retirement, when he removed to Albany, where he passed away at the age of seventy-five years, the mother having died at the age of thirty-one. To them six children were born: Amanda M., now Mrs. Norman L. Lee; Mrs. Charles Ralston, of Lebanon, Oregon; Frances, who engaged in teaching school for several years and is living at Lebanon; Mrs. Mary McClain of Albany; Mrs. Addie Nixon, of Farmington, Washington; and John V., who resides on the home farm. To Dr. and Mrs. Lee seven children have been born. Ernest U., who was born December 25, 1868, is married and lives in Eugene. For twelve years he filled the office of county clerk and is now serving as cashier of the Merchants Bank of Eugene. Annie L., who was born in 1873, received a college education. She is the wife of Fred Fortmiller, of Albany, Oregon. Claude, born March 15, 1876, is a druggist and resides in Albany. Wright B. born January 16, 1884, is engaged in the practice of dentistry in Junction City. Clare A., born January 4, 1889, is attending Willamette University at Salem and will graduate from the medical department of that institution in 1915. Abbie J. and Maude are both deceased. The former was born in 1871 and died February 13, 1873, while the latter died at the age of one year.

Dr. Lee gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never been an office seeker or taken an active part in politics although he served for four years as postmaster of Junction City. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic lodge, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Degree of Honor. He has been extremely active during his professional career, which has been a distinguished one. He was state medical examiner for twelve years, performing the duties which that appointment enjoined upon him in connection with his other professional work. In early manhood he enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming a member of Company F, First Oregon Volunteer Infantry and served until after Lee's surrender, receiving his honorable discharge in 1865. In 1868 Dr. Lee went to the Klamath reservation, where he was employed as a carpenter and it was there that Ernest U., the eldest son was born. He is the first white child born in Klamath county. When at Klamath Mrs. Lee was the only white woman on the reservation, where she remained seven months before she saw another woman of her color. Dr. Lee has an extended acquaintance, is one of the most prominent citizens of Junction City and is greatly respected by all who know him.

B. B. GESNER, a worthy and respected representative of agricultural interests in Marion county, owns and cultivates a farm of two hundred and sixteen and one-half acres, all of which is under cultivation. Aside from agricultural connections he also has a strong hold upon the regard of his fellowmen owing to a kindly spirit and generous disposition. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, March 19, 1850, a son of Reuben A. and Mary (Alaway) Gesner. The father was born in New York and the mother in Kentucky. They were married in 1844 in Illinois and crossed the plains the following year, taking up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres near Salem where our subject now lives. This was the father's home until a few years before his death, which he spent in Salem, where he lived retired. At various times he acquired property in other parts of Oregon and at the time of his demise was a large landholder. He passed away at the age of seventy-four years and his wife died at the age of eighty-two. To them twelve children were born, eight of whom are living, namely: Alonzo, who is residing in Salem; Harriett, who is the widow of Samuel Rundlett and a resident of Polk county; B. B., of this review; Vanison, a physician of east Oregon; Ramekia, who is married to James Munkeis, of Linn county, Oregon; Sarah, who is the widow of George Jerowe and is a resident of Portland, where she conducts a sanatorium; Amnei, the wife of Thomas Davidson, of Salem; and Rebecca, who is married to George Haskell, of Benton county.

B. B. Gesner received his education in the grammar schools of Salem, after which he returned to the home farm, where he assisted his father for one year before he started out to earn his own livelihood by accepting employment which he held for a year, with a surveying party. Afterward he engaged in agricultural pursuits for five years but in 1882 entered the United States mail service. For four years he carried mail from Salem to Silverton and for one year from Turner to Mehama. During the following four years he was engaged in teaming and at the end of that time returned to the old homestead and purchased twenty-two and a half acres of his brother's share of the farm, thus making him the owner of two hundred and sixteen and a half acres, which he has since cultivated. The land is all in a high state of improvement, being equipped with the accessories of a modern farm. The place presents an attractive appearance because of its neatness and cultivation and annually yields profitable harvests, due to the practical methods which Mr. Gesner employs in its development.

On the 9th of March, 1874, Mr. Gesner was married to Mrs. Frances E. Buster, whose birth occurred in Marion county in 1857, her parents being Samuel and Jane Olinger, who came here from Kentucky in 1852 and in 1843 respectively. To Mr. and Mrs. Gesner eleven children have been born: Frank X., of Lincoln county; Ulysses S., who is residing at home with his father; Jessie, the wife of George Napske, of Florida; Bessie, the widow of Samuel Updegraff; Dolph, at home; Clifford, a resident of Marion county; Archie, Ralph, Lola and Virgil, all at home; and Harry, who died in infancy.

B. B. Gesner is a republican and has been a faithful and active advocate of the policies of that party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He is a member of the school board and has served as road supervisor, offices which he has undertaken for the good of the community rather than for personal aggrandizement. Although not a member of church or lodges, he always gives his support to those social and moral interests which he believes promote public welfare and has by so doing won the confidence and esteem of all.

E. E. FISHER, M. D., who since 1907 has engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Salem, specializing, however, in the latter was born in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1870, his parents being C. A. H. and Mary (Kirby) Fisher. The father was born in England in 1847 and on coming to America in 1869, then a young man of about twenty-two years, settled in Michigan. He was married at Adrian, that state, to Miss Kirby, who was born in New York in 1852. They removed westward to Nebraska in 1870 and in 1892 arrived in Salem, Oregon, where they now reside, the father being a retired farmer who devoted the greater part of his life to agricultural pursuits. In their family were seven children.

Dr. Fisher attended the country schools in the vicinity of his father's home until fourteen years of age, when he became a student in the Highland Park Normal School, at Des Moines, Iowa. He also attended the Fremont (Nebraska) Normal and was graduated with the class of 1892. He taught school both before and after his graduation, devoting five years to that profession and in 1894 he took up the study of medicine, reading for one year under a physician, while for three years he was a student in the medical department of the University of the Northwest, at Sioux City, Iowa. He was graduated in 1898 and located for practice at Rodney, Iowa. In 1902 he entered the Rush Medical College for post-graduate work and also attended the University of Iowa, where he pursued a special course in surgery in 1906-7. In the latter year he came to Salem and has since engaged in general practice, making a specialty of surgery. He displays marked skill in that department of professional labor and he has also proven a capable educator in two years' work as a teacher in the medical department of Willamette University. He belongs to the Marion County Medical Society, the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and keeps in close touch with the advanced work of the profession and its high ideals.

In 1901 Dr. Fisher was married to Miss Alice Bates, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of A. J. and Helen (Morris) Bates. Dr. and Mrs. Fisher are well known in Salem, where they have a large circle of warm friends. He enjoys, too, the high regard of his professional brethren because of his close conformity to an advanced standard of professional ethics.

ROBERT WALKER is remembered in Bandon, Oregon, as an upright, progressive and representative citizen and as an honored veteran of the Civil war. He gave his energies and attention for almost a quarter of a century to commercial activities in the village and as its postmaster did able, conscientious and useful work. His death on March 30, 1909, brought to a close a career which had been identified with much of the upbuilding and development of Bandon and deprived that community of a competent, successful and valued citizen. Mr. Walker was born in Canada April 17, 1844, and is a son of William and Sarah (Gibson) Walker, the former a native of England and the latter of Canada. They were the parents of two children: Robert, the subject of this sketch; and James G., of Gold Beach, Curry county, Oregon. The latter was sheriff for a number of years but is now living retired, his son being a candidate for the office.

Robert Walker remained at home until he enlisted in the Federal army. He served as sergeant for three years and obtained his honorable discharge at the close of hostilities. He immediately came west and settled in Coos county afterward removing to Curry county where he resided for twelve years. During his residence in that section he was elected sheriff to serve for four years, from 1874 to 1878. In 1888 he moved to Bandon and made that village his home until his death. He established himself in business and was successful, building up a distinct and substantial prosperity upon the firm foundation of hard work, ability and industry. In 1901 he was appointed postmaster and held that office for eight years, doing efficient and practical work in this capacity. After his death his widow was appointed to the position, having been assistant postmaster, for some time. Mr. Walker was one of the public-spirited and active citizens of Bandon. He built the first house in the city after Bandon was laid out in town lots. He was connected all during the twenty-one years of his residence with much of the work of the upbuilding and development and at the time of his death which occurred on March 30, 1909, he was numbered among the loyal, conscientious and useful members of his community.

On January 27, 1875, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Frame, a native of California. She was one of two children born to her parents, her brother Frank P., being a resident of North Bend, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Walker were born five children: Mary L., who is a trained nurse in Portland; Robert F., of Bandon.

who is married and has one son, Robert, Jr.; Pearl R., who was educated in the Bandon high school and is a teacher in the public schools of that city; Harry J., who is connected with the sawmill business in Bandon; and Claire L., the wife of G. T. Treadgold, an attorney in Bandon, by whom she has one child, Grayden W.

Mr. Walker was a staunch republican and an active worker in the interests of the party. He was chairman of the state committee and a member of the board of equalization holding both positions for a number of years. He served upon the city council, always giving his influence to worthy and honorable causes and promoting in a useful and valuable way local legislation. He was a school director and a factor in the building of the first large school in Bandon, serving as a member of the first board of education. He was well known in the Masonic order, having been a charter member of two lodges. He was proud of his connection with this organization and active in promoting its welfare and progress. He was a member of the Episcopal church and widely known as a man of high and exemplary character. During his life he always gave his influence to constructive and valuable things. He labored earnestly to make his career successful, bringing his commercial enterprise to a successful issue and making his more public life upright, straightforward and honorable and his death brought to a close a career which was an important factor in local upbuilding and development and in all its relations useful and valuable.

DR. REUBEN H. FIELDS, physician and surgeon practicing at Gardiner, a large measure of success indicating public confidence in his ability, was born near McVeytown, Pennsylvania, on the 20th of June, 1873, his parents being William M. and Nancy (Cutman) Fields, both of whom were natives of the Keystone state and of Scotch descent. The father was one of the prominent farmers of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, where he died in early manhood, passing away on the 5th of June, 1873, prior to the birth of Dr. Fields. At the time of the Civil war he became a member of the Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry and served under Kilpatrick and later under Stoneman. He was captured while at the front and sent to Libby prison where he was confined for four months which contributed largely to the cause of his early death. His wife long survived him, passing away in 1903, at the age of fifty-eight years.

Dr. Fields was reared in his mother's home and acquired his early education in Pennsylvania in the Soldiers Orphan School, at Loysville, and in the public schools. Later he attended the Brothers Normal College, now Juniata College, at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, and after leaving that institution at the age of eighteen years, he taught one term of school in his native county. The following year he went west to Iowa where he was employed for some time at farm labor. In the fall of 1893 he returned to Pennsylvania and the following year took up the study of medicine, entering the Atlantic Medical College in Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897. Following his graduation he went directly west to Rudd, Floyd county, Iowa, where he engaged in practice for four years. He also spent three years in professional work in Clarion, Iowa, and in the spring of 1905 came to Oregon. He spent some time in looking over the state in search of a suitable location and at length determined on Gardiner, here opening an office. In the intervening period of seven years he has built up a large and remunerative practice and is now accounted one of the foremost physicians of this part of the state. On the 1st of June, 1912, he became associated with Dr. Frank S. Pratt, formerly of Stevenson, Washington, and they are now fitting up a modern private hospital in connection with their office, which will accommodate ten patients. They are progressive physicians, thoroughly in touch with the advanced methods of the medical science, and their work is proving highly satisfactory in checking the ravages of disease.

Dr. Fields was married, in 1897, in Rockford, Iowa, to Miss Mae Farnham, a daughter of John Wesley Farnham, a prominent farmer of Iowa, and unto this union have been born two children, Nancy Ruth and Richard Henry. Dr. Fields belongs to Aurora Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M., of which he is now serving as master. He also holds membership with Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., and with the Modern Woodmen camp. Both he and his wife are members of Martha Chapter, O. E. S., and of Riverside Lodge, No. 100, Daughters of Rebekah. Their religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and to its teachings they are loyal. In politics Dr. Fields is independent, with republican tendencies. His professional relations are with the Southern Oregon Medical Association, the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and he is justly accounted one of the progressive and successful practitioners of Douglas county, where he has again and again given demonstration of his ability to cope with the intricate professional problems and check the ravages of disease.

E. D. MATLOCK. Business activity and enterprise in Eugene find a worthy representative in E. D. Matlock, proprietor of one of the department stores of the city. He was born at Pleasant Hill, February 8, 1870, and supplemented his public-school education by a course in the University of Oregon. He entered business life in connection with his father Joseph De Witt Matlock, under the firm name of J. D. Matlock & Sons, in the conduct of a general mercantile establishment. At length he disposed of his interest in that business and with his father went to Dawson City, Alaska, accompanied by his wife and son. The latter was the first white child to cross the mountains. Mr. Matlock and his father started in the mercantile business there and at length they also became connected with commercial pursuits at Bennett, British Columbia, as owners of a general store. They were successful in their operations but after two years returned to Eugene, where E. D. Matlock established his present business. He has an attractive store, carrying a large and well selected line of goods, and his long training in mercantile lines well qualifies him to carry on this business in a most progressive manner. His sales are steadily growing, for the integrity of his business methods is widely recognized, as is his conformity to a high standard of commercial ethics.

Mr. Matlock was married to Miss Nellie T. Marquis, a daughter of Rufus Marquis, of Dayton, Washington, and they have one son, Earl Edis. In Eugene their circle of friends is an extensive one and the hospitality of the best homes of the city is freely accorded them. Mr. Matlock belongs to Spencer Butte Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F., to Wina-whala Encampment and to Hovey Canton, having taken the various degrees of the order. He is also a member of the First Christian church, to the support of which he gives liberally, doing all in his power to advance its growth and extend its influence. All who know him respect him for his many sterling traits of character and he is proving a helpful factor in the business development of the city.

GEORGE M. DYER. In every community are found men capable of guiding its destinies, of meeting exigencies as they arise and of utilizing opportunities so that they redound to the benefit of the individual and the general public. Such a man was George M. Dyer. He studied conditions in the northwest and was numbered with those who have aided in shaping its history and guiding its destiny. There was nothing spectacular in his career but through the faithful performance of each day's duty he rose to a place of prominence and honor in Coos county. He was born on his father's farm in Clermont county, Ohio, December 5, 1834, and had the usual experiences of the farm boy who devotes his youth to the work of the fields and the acquirement of an education in the public schools. He resided at different periods in Indiana and Iowa and from the latter state accompanied his father on his removal westward across the plains in 1853, with Oregon as their destination. He was then a youth of eighteen years and when twenty years of age he began mining in Curry county between Port Orford and the Rogue river. About that time, however, the Rogue river war broke out and he did active duty with the soldiers who defended the interests of the white settlers on the frontier.

While Mr. Dyer resided in the northwest he did not forget the friends of his earlier life and in the winter of 1858 returned to Iowa, where in August, 1859, he was united in marriage to Miss Fannie E. Grant, a native of Dearborn county, Indiana, born March 6, 1840. She was a daughter of Daniel

B. Grant, a native of Ohio, who in early manhood went to Burlington, Iowa, where he worked at the cooper's trade until his death in 1862. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Caroline Bonker, was born in Pennsylvania and they became the parents of eleven children, six sons and five daughters, of whom Mrs. Dyer is the fourth in order of birth.

When he again came to the northwest Mr. Dyer was accompanied by his young wife and his father's family. He settled in Curry county, where he engaged in mining for a number of years and during that period he also served as county assessor in 1862-63. After his removal to Coos county in 1865 he engaged quite extensively in mining and for a time also owned the McClellan ranch at New Lake. He was called from private life, however, to public office, being chosen county commissioner in 1878 and again elected in 1880. In the latter year he was also chosen county judge and served upon the bench for four years. In 1886 he traveled extensively over Coos county in search of a favorable location and secured the tract of land upon which the town of Bandon has since been built. He formed a partnership with W. H. Averill and with characteristic energy and well defined plans they began to clear the wild land of the timber thereon and to put forth efforts to induce settlers to locate in this region. They sought to advance the work of general improvement and progress that comfort might be a feature of the new homes to be established here, and in this work Mr. Dyer displayed keen sagacity. He established a general merchandise store and otherwise added to the general improvement. After two years the partnership was dissolved, each, however, agreeing to further as best he could the interests of the embryo town. Settlers began to arrive and the work of improvement and advancement was carried forward, as shown in the establishment of different business concerns, in the building of schoolhouses and churches and in other ways. With the growth of the city the original schoolhouse became inadequate and two other buildings have since been erected. Commercial and industrial enterprises have been established, and with the work of building the town Mr. Dyer was ever closely and helpfully associated. Nor did he overlook the harbor advantages here and did much to foster shipping interests. He was active in securing the incorporation of the town of Bandon and at the first election he was chosen one of its trustees, after which he was made chairman of the town council. In that position he continued uninterruptedly until failing health caused his retirement. He stood in the vanguard in the progressive movement that led to the founding and building of the town and the development of the surrounding country. He wrought along substantial and enduring lines and his cooperation could always be counted upon to further any movement tending to advance the material, intellectual, social, political and moral progress of the community.

Judge and Mrs. Dyer were the parents of four children: Florence E., who is the wife of John Garfield, of Oakland, California; Alice C., the wife of D. D. Fagan, of Whatcom, Washington; Henrietta, the wife of A. H. Buckingham of Benton county, Oregon; and Elbert, who is president of the Bandon Water & Light Company. An adopted daughter, Hattie, is the wife of C. Y. Lowe, of Bandon. Since her husband's death Mrs. Dyer has managed her business interests in a most capable way. She is the owner of considerable town property and shows sound judgment and keen discrimination in its control. Her social position is an enviable one and she is a valued member of the Order of Rebekahs and the Degree of Honor.

Mr. Dyer passed away on the 1st of August, 1896. To him life had meant opportunities; he seized legitimate advantages as they arose and labored not only for his own benefit but also for the progress and welfare of the community. The town of Bandon largely stands as a monument to his enterprise, for he was the guiding spirit in its progress for many years.

WILLIAM J. STANLEY is a prominent representative of mining interests in Jackson county, being vice president of the Sykes Creek Mining Company. He was born in New York, July 24, 1842, and is a son of John O. and Dolly (Flansburgh) Stanley, both of whom were natives of the Empire state. In 1846 they removed westward to Knox county, Illinois, and in 1867 went to Kansas, where both passed away. The father was a farmer by occupation and thus provided for his family, which numbered eight children, four sons and four daughters, William J. Stanley being the sixth in order of birth. His eldest sister, Mary Ann, became the wife of the Rev. T. F. Royal, at Bates Academy, Salem. They crossed the plains to Oregon in 1853. George C., a brother, served for three years in the Civil war as a member of the Ninth Illinois Cavalry and is now deceased. Another brother, James M., was for four years a member of the same regiment and now resides near Fort Scott, Kansas.

William J. Stanley was only four years of age when the family left the east and became residents of Knox county, Illinois. He there completed his education by three years' attendance at Knox College, in the city of Galesburg, Illinois, and remained with his parents until 1866, when he came to Oregon. When not in school he worked upon the home farm and after his arrival in the northwest he followed the profession of teaching, being connected at different times with the work of the classroom in Ashland, Jacksonville and Roseburg. He was also a teacher in the country schools, following the profession for eighteen years, and from 1872 until 1874 he served as county superintendent of schools in Jackson county. He was again called to public office in his appointment to the position of deputy sheriff, which he filled for one term. Mr. Stanley has since engaged in mining and is interested in both quartz and placer mines on Sykes creek, being the vice president of the Sykes Creek Mining Company. He was formerly interested in the old Home Stake mine, a mile west of Woodville. His activities in the development of the mineral resources of this part of the country have been crowned with a gratifying measure of success and his labors always constitute an element in public progress and prosperity.

In 1871 Mr. Stanley was married to Miss M. L. Ross, who was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, in 1854, a daughter of Colonel J. E. and Elizabeth (Hopwood) Ross. Mrs. Stanley was the third white child born in southern Oregon and prior to her marriage was engaged in teaching for a few terms. They became the parents of six children: Winifred, the wife of Allen Hildreth, of Ashland; Helen, who is the widow of William Marks, a druggist traveling for Woodard, Clark & Company, of Portland; George C., a successful merchant of Eugene, who began the publication of the Town Talk, now the Tribune of Medford, and was an editor for a number of years; Mrs. Maggie Hunter, whose deceased husband had at one time been a grocer of South Portland; Bessie, who died at the age of twenty-three years; and Louis F., a traveling salesman residing in East Portland. The son George married Mollie High, of Ashland, who was a granddaughter of an own cousin of Abraham Lincoln. They have two children, Thelma and G. C.

In his political views Mr. Stanley is a republican and while not an office seeker keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He has resided in Oregon for forty-six years and has been an interested witness of its growth and progress and of the changes which time and man have wrought. He has seen this section of the state transformed from a comparatively undeveloped district into one of the rich and prosperous regions of the northwest and has borne his share in the work of general improvement. He has a wide acquaintance in Jackson county and has a large circle of warm friends.

CLYDE PRESTON BECKLEY, a native son of Oregon and one of the prominent ranchmen of Douglas county, was born on the old Beckley home farm, adjoining Elkton, May 5, 1882, his parents being Henry and Mary (Woodson) Beckley, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work. He was reared on the home place and in the acquirement of an education attended the public schools, also pursuing a commercial course in Armstrong's Business College, of Portland. In 1907 he took charge of the home farm and has since had under his management some twenty-five hundred acres, devoting his attention principally to sheep-raising. He has won a creditable measure of success and also an enviable reputation for one of his years, being widely recognized as a prosperous ranchman of his county.

On the 7th of September, 1910, Mr. Beckley was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary E. Lyons, a daughter of James Lyons, deceased, who was for many years a leading merchant of Elkton, Oregon. Our subject and his wife have one son, Henry L. Mr. Beckley gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and is a firm believer in its principles. His wife is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church and exemplifies its teachings in her daily life. Upright and honorable in all the relations of life, Clyde P. Beckley well merits the regard and esteem which are uniformly accorded him.

VICTOR ANDERSON is identified with the shipyard of Banks & Kruse, of North Bend, Oregon. He is a native of Finland and in his early youth became familiar with vessels and nautical machinery in that country. He was born on November 2, 1863, and is a son of Andrew and Louisa Anderson. The father died in Finland in 1889. The mother crossed to America in 1900. She is living in North Bend with her son and is in the sixty-eighth year of her age. She is the mother of six children: Victor, the subject of this sketch; Albert, deceased; Bertha, who makes her home in Marshfield; Alma, who resides in Beaver Hill, Oregon; Silgna, who is living in Finland; and Alec, who resides in North Bend.

Victor Anderson came to America in 1881 and settled in Coos county, Oregon. He worked as a logger for two years and then conducted a saloon in Marshfield for some time. He spent four years working in a sawmill and at the end of that time resigned his position to learn the trade of ship carpenter. He worked at that occupation for several years and later became a bridge contractor. At the present time he is employed in the shipyard of Bank & Kruse, owners of the largest ship-building establishment in Coos county, and is doing efficient work there. For some time Mr. Anderson engaged in agricultural pursuits in Coos county but has sold all of his holdings. He is shrewd and economical and has in the course of his career acquired a comfortable fortune which he has invested judiciously in North Bend real estate. He owns a beautiful home in which he is residing with his mother and family. He also owns two fine residence properties in North Bend. He is extensively interested in unimproved real estate and has valuable holdings in the city in which he lives.

In 1884 Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Anna Strong, a native of Finland, who came to America with her parents in 1881. They settled near Marshfield, on Coos bay, where they are still residing. Her father is in the eighty-first year of his age and her mother has attained the age of eighty years. They became the parents of four children, all of whom are deceased. Mrs. Anderson died in November, 1910, and is buried in Marshfield cemetery. To Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were born nine children, six of whom are still living: Emma, who married Albert Matson, of Marshfield, Oregon; Ellen, born in 1892, who is a graduate of the North Bend high school, and who is living at home; Inez, born in 1894, who attended the public schools of North Bend and who was graduated from a local business college; Malinda, born in 1899, who attends school; Louis, whose birth occurred in 1903; and Fred, who was born in 1908. Of those deceased, Ida was the wife of H. Hallam, of San Francisco, California.

Mr. Anderson has always been a republican and served as a member of the city council for six years. He is active in the affairs of the North Bend school board and takes an intelligent interest in matters of education. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Owls. He is a devoted adherent of the German Lutheran church, in the faith of which he was reared. He has been active in many occupations and has been fairly successful in all. He is a prosperous and intelligent business man and Coos county has gained a public-spirited and progressive citizen by his residence in North Bend.

MRS. MARGARET EDMUNSON is well known in Eugene, occupying a prominent position in social circles and taking an active and helpful part in church and charitable work. She is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of Oregon. Her father, Matthew Wallis, was born in North Carolina in 1820, and died on the 17th of July, 1895, at the age of seventy-five years. His ancestors came from Scotland. He was reared to manhood in his native state and when young removed to Missouri, becoming a farmer and stock-raiser there. He was married to Emeline Lindley in Cedar county, that state, on the 18th of February, 1847, and with his wife and one child came to Oregon in 1852, traveling across the plains with ox teams to Lane county. They traveled with two wagons, a few cattle and necessary supplies and not only experienced many difficulties and hardships, but also had many narrow escapes from the Indians, especially when in the vicinity of Snake river. On the 13th of September they arrived at their destination and Mr. Wallis secured a donation land claim of three hundred and twenty acres, situated two and one-half miles west of Eugene. On that property he built a hewed log house which still stands there. His claim was a beautiful one, the land being adorned with oak trees, and the property is still in possession of the family. In 1852 the Rogue River Indians were on the war path or threatening, and the white people gathered on the ranch of Mr. Wallis and stayed there for several days but no attack was made, probably on account of the white forces being well organized. This was what is now called Wallis Butte, two and one-half miles west of Eugene. As time passed on, Mr. Wallis added to his original farm until he was the owner of between ten and twelve hundred acres of land. In addition to cultivating the crops best adapted to soil and climate, he also engaged quite extensively in raising cattle. His business affairs were carefully conducted, his judgment was sound, his discrimination keen, and these qualities combined with his industry, brought him substantial success. His wife was born in Nashville, Tennessee. Her father was Jonathan Lindley of South Carolina and her grandfather who came from England, bore the same name. He was a planter and his son and namesake became a farmer and stock-raiser of Tennessee, where he resided until his removal to Cedar county, Missouri. There his remaining days were passed, his death occurring when he was fifty-five years of age. In early manhood he married Miss Clara N. Terry, a native of Georgia, who died at the age of eighty years at the home of her daughter Mrs. Wallis, having crossed the plains in 1852. Mrs. Wallis was one of a family of nine children who became residents of Oregon, and by her marriage to Mr. Wallis she became the mother of thirteen children. Those who reached adult age are: Clara, who is the widow of John Duncan and resides in Dayton, Washington; Margaret, now Mrs. Edmunson; Mary, the wife of Lee Searcy, also of Dayton; Alice, the wife of John Welch of Portland; Matthew Sneed; H. Lee, living in Eugene; and Webster, who makes his home in Garfield, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallis continued to reside upon the farm until 1873, when they took up their abode in Eugene, although the father still continued to manage his agricultural interests and added to his property until he was one of the most extensive land-owners of his locality. Both he and his wife were members of the Christian church in the work of which they took an active and helpful interest, Mr. Wallis serving as one of the deacons. He was a Mason and was always loyal to the teachings of the lodge. Both he and his wife were held in the highest esteem and had an extensive circle of warm friends in Eugene and Lane county.

Mrs. Edmunson spent her girlhood days in her father's home and in early womanhood she became the wife of Rufus J. Edmunson, a son of John Edmunson, a pioneer of Lane county. Her children are Lawrence, of Goshen; John Matthews, also living in Goshen; Byron Anthony, a resident of Lane county; Leon R., an attorney at law of Eugene; and Margaret Grace, who is the wife of George Ohler of Astoria, Oregon. Mrs. Edmunson belongs to the Christian church of which she is an active and loyal member, and she is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. No good work done in the name of charity or religion seeks her aid in vain. She is ever ready to extend a helping hand to the poor and needy and she is also well known in social circles, while the hospitality of her home is greatly enjoyed by her many friends who are almost as numerous as her acquaintances.

EVANDER MELVIN RANDLEMAN does general farming and dairying upon one hundred and seventy-three acres of land in Coos county which constitute his father's original homestead claim in this section. He has been a resident of Oregon since he was two years of age and has been an independent agriculturist since 1898. He was born in California on June 9, 1870, and is a son of Henry and Rachel (Steel) Randleman, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Illinois. The father crossed the plains in 1852 in order to find a home in the western part of America for his family. He returned and in 1856 brought his wife and children to California. He worked in the gold mines for a time but was not particularly successful. He left California for Oregon after spending some years in the former state and upon his arrival took up a homestead claim of one hundred and seventy-three acres in Coos county. Here he followed farming until his death. His wife survives him and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Barklow of Norway, Oregon. She and her husband became the parents of eight children: DeWitt C. and Martin L., both of whom have passed away; Mary H., the deceased wife of John Armstrong, who has also passed away; Jason L., also deceased; Madora A., now Mrs. Albert Sneed of Parkersburg; Louisa F., who married J. H. Barklow of Norway; Evander Melvin, the subject of this review; and Lafayette, who has passed away.

Evander M. Randleman was reared at home and remained upon his father's farm until he was twenty-six years of age. He was married in 1895 and one year afterward left home and worked at carpentering, which trade he had learned in his youth. He spent three years in this occupation and at the end of that time was able to purchase the family homestead where he has since carried on general farming and dairying. He keeps a fine herd of cows for the latter purpose and the products of this branch of his enterprise find a ready sale in the markets of the county. Their purity and the sanitary conditions under which they are made are well known. Mr. Randleman has been successful in his enterprise making his soil productive and his dairy lucrative by hard work, capable management and judicious business discrimination. His farm is located seven and one-half miles from Bandon on the Bear creek road and comprises his father's original one hundred and seventy-three acres. It is well cultivated and intelligently developed and is one of the model properties of Coos county.

In 1895 Mr. Randleman was united in marriage to Miss Polly C. Haga and to their union were born six children: Paloma, born in 1898, who is attending the public schools; one child, who died in infancy; Alta, whose birth occurred in 1902, and who is also attending school; Thelma, born in 1904; Orrin, who was born in 1907; and Elveda, whose birth occurred in 1910.

In politics Mr. Randleman keeps himself independent of party lines, preferring to vote according to his personal convictions. He never seeks public office although he is intelligently interested in the welfare and growth of his section. He is a member of the State Grange. He does not hold membership in any church, preferring the broad range of universal brotherhood to set doctrines and dogmas. He deserves much credit for his success as an agriculturist for in a large measure he planned and enforced his own prosperity. His agricultural knowledge and experience have been directed and guided by his keen business insight and sagacity until he is now numbered among the representative and successful men of his section.

HON. F. M. SPENCER. Various business interests have claimed the time and energies of Hon. F. M. Spencer, nor has he been unknown in connection with political activities in Douglas county. He is now identified with the Umpqua Cooperative Packing Company, engaged in the canning of salmon. He was born in Maine, June 8, 1843, and is a son of Joseph and Jennie (Huntley) Spencer. The mother died in Maine when her son was but four years of age and in 1855 the father came to the Pacific coast by way of the Isthmus route. He was engaged in mining in California until 1866 when he returned eastward as far as Michigan and there spent four years. About 1870 he came to Oregon where his death occurred fifteen years later.

F. M. Spencer was reared at home acquiring his education in the common schools and from the age of twelve years he has practically made his own way in the world. When his father went west to California F. M. Spencer was left with a neighboring family who were to board and clothe him and send him to school in exchange for his work in the hotel which the family conducted. This contract was for three years but after a year and a half his employer failed to send him to school and fell short of the contract in other ways so Mr. Spencer ran away and from that time on was dependent entirely upon his own resources. He was employed at various occupations until after the outbreak of the Civil war at which time he enlisted for active service, becoming a member of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, in November, 1861. He was wounded in the battle of Baton Rouge and was discharged on account of his injuries in October, 1862.

In the spring of 1863 Mr. Spencer came west with California as his destination and the following spring made his way northward to Gardiner, Oregon, where he has lived for the past forty-eight years. During this long period he has been identified with various business interests in Gardiner and in 1910 he was one of the dominant factors in the organization of the Umpqua Cooperative Packing Company for the canning of salmon, the new canning factory being built a half mile east of Gardiner on the Umpqua river. Mr. Spencer was made fish cook in which capacity he has since served. The business is a growing one, and its success already makes it one of the valued enterprises of this district. Mr. Spencer, moreover, owns two hundred and seventy acres of good ranch land and a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres. His son, Frank A., is at present using the ranch for stock-raising purposes.

In 1869 Mr. Spencer was united in marriage to Miss Anna Wade of Scottsburg, a daughter of John Wade. They have become the parents of six children of whom five are still living: Belle, the wife of John Black who is engaged in the real-estate business in Portland; Eva, the wife of Thomas E. Bloodsoe of Portland; Eugenia, the wife of George Shelley of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Mary, the wife of Henry Bell of Carlton, this state; and Frank, who is a ranchman on Smith river in Douglas county.

Mr. Spencer is a republican in politics and in 1880 was chosen to represent his district in the state legislature in which he served with distinction to himself and with credit to his constituents, laboring earnestly to promote the welfare of the state at large. He holds membership in George E. Wright Post, G. A. R., of Portland, and thus maintains pleasant relations with his old army comrades. At all times he is as true and loyal to his duties of citizenship as when he followed the old flag on southern battle fields. He is likewise a business man whose record is a credit to the community and his energy and enterprise are bringing to the concern with which he is connected a satisfactory degree of success.

EUGENE ROY FISHER is a native of Douglas county and a son of an Oregon pioneer. He is a prominent stock-raiser and has extensive interests along that line, carrying on his operations upon three hundred and sixty-one acres of land on the Umpqua river, near Kellogg. His property constitutes one of the valuable ranches of that section. Mr. Fisher was born in Kellogg, May 21, 1884, and is a son of William H. and Mary J. (Maupin) Fisher, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Oregon. In the early days the father crossed the plains to California and spent some years in that state. He served in a California regiment during the Indian war. Afterward he came north to Oregon, locating in Gardiner, and found employment in the Gardiner Mills. He spent several years thus engaged and finally bought a farm on the Umpqua river, near Kellogg, where he engaged in stock-raising and in general farming for sixteen years, after which he made his home with his sons. He died in 1904. His wife was born in Eugene, Lane county, and is a daughter of Garrett Maupin, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work. She is still living and resides in Oakland, Oregon.

Eugene R. Fisher was reared at home and received a common-school education. In 1900, in partnership with his brothers, Walter and William, he removed to the Thomas Maupin ranch and there followed farming in conjunction with Mr. Maupin for some time. At the end of a year William Fisher disposed of his holdings, while our subject and his brother Walter continued their cooperative management five years longer. During this time Eugene R. Fisher added to his limited education by attending school in Scottsburg for one winter and for an equal length of time in Albany. In 1906 he left the Maupin farm and came to his present ranch.

F. M. SPENCER

buying in partnership with his brother Walter eight hundred and twenty acres. Eugene R. Fisher had very little money at first and his operations upon the ranch which he purchased were conducted without much capital for some time. The enterprise, however, was successful and the partnership continued until 1908, when it was dissolved and the land divided. Mr. Fisher has been prosperous since the beginning of his independent career. He is entirely responsible for his success and has made his fortune by industry and intelligent activity. He owns three hundred and sixty-one acres of land and has improved and developed this along modern lines. He is an expert stock-raiser, specializing in the breeding of sheep and hogs, which he sells in the Oregon markets.

On November 3, 1909, Eugene Roy Fisher was united in marriage to Miss Jennie L. Hager, a daughter of Charles Hager, who is a resident of Culldesac, Idaho. To Mr. and Mrs. Fisher has been born one child, still in its infancy. Our subject is a democrat and is actively interested in the welfare of the section in which he resides, although he never seeks public office. His wife affiliates with the Saints church. He is an enterprising and progressive citizen. He has been a constructive force through his stock-raising activities and on account of his business ability and originality has attained a distinct and substantial success.

JOHN AND LAWRENCE NEUNER. The future of any country is in the hands of its young men. Among those who are doing much to contribute to the prosperity of Glendale in the present and to its future prominence are John and Lawrence Neuner, who are not only active in business circles but are doing everything in their power to advance the welfare and progress of the section in which they live. They are sons of George and Margaret Neuner, natives of Germany. The father crossed the Atlantic in 1885, becoming a resident of British Columbia, where two years later he was joined by his wife and children. The parents remained in Canada for two years and then removed to Fresno, California, where they engaged in the hotel business until 1895. In that year they came to Douglas county, Oregon, and are still residents of Roseburg. Unto them were born five children, George, John, Lawrence, Louis and Frank. The eldest and two youngest are still living with their parents in Roseburg.

The other two sons, John and Lawrence, are partners in business in Glendale. The former was born in the village of Weshafelt, Germany, March 14, 1882, and the latter on the 16th of October, 1884. They acquired their education in the public schools of British Columbia and California and in later years John Neuner attended business colleges. The family came to Oregon in 1895 and the brothers remained with their parents in Roseburg until 1907, when they came to Glendale. Here they established a livery business in connection with a garage and are meeting with success in this undertaking. They conduct their interests under the name of the Central Livery & Glendale Garage and the enterprise is one of the largest of its kind in the city. In addition to their livery business John and Lawrence Neuner own much valuable property in Glendale and are actively connected with the commercial development of their community.

On the 29th of November, 1911, Lawrence Neuner was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Harmon, a native of Oregon, and both are well known in the social circles of Glendale, where they are popular with their many friends. The political allegiance of the brothers is given to the republican party and since coming to Glendale John Neuner has taken a very active part in politics, holding the offices of mayor and recorder. While residing in Douglas county he has filled various positions of trust and honor, the duties of which have been promptly, capably and faithfully discharged. The record of both brothers has been at all times creditable and they are regarded as a valuable addition to the business circles of their adopted city.

ROLAND V. LEEP, M. D., one of the most practical, efficient and prosperous young physicians of Coos county, is a native of Oregon and is the third representative of his family to live in this state. He was born in Baker county, in 1887, and is a son of Dr. K. A. Leep. His father was born in Kentucky and came to Oregon with his parents in pioneer times, settling in Pine valley, in eastern Oregon, where the grandfather of our subject resided until his death. Dr. K. A. Leep moved to Myrtle Point in 1891 and has been practicing his profession in that district since that time, gaining a gratifying and well deserved success.

Dr. Roland V. Leep was the only child born to his parents. He received his education in the public schools of Myrtle Point and is a graduate of the Agricultural College at Corvallis. He later took a course in pharmacy, completing his studies along this line in two years, and then went to Portland, where he entered the medical department of the State University, graduating with the degree of M. D. on the 1st of May, 1911. After completing his education he spent one year as interne in St. Vincent's Hospital in Portland, gaining a personal experience in the different phases of the practice of medicine. He located in Bandon for practice on January 11, 1912, and since that time has been very successful and has gained a reputation for efficiency and ability. He brings to his professional duties a practical equipment in its scientific details, guided by business judgment and common sense, and the high quality of his work has increased his patronage during the short period of his activity and made him prominent and successful as a general practitioner. He has recently opened a hospital in the business section of the city and gives a great deal of his time and attention to its management and direction. He specializes in surgery and has many successful operations to his credit.

Dr. Leep is independent in his political convictions and has never been an office seeker, preferring to devote his undivided energies to the conduct of his increasing practice. He is a member of the Alpha Kappa fraternity and prominent in the affairs of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has been active in his possession in Bandon for less than one year, but has already gained a gratifying measure of success by reason of his ability and scientific efficiency. His capable work ranks him among the leading members of his profession and his scientific knowledge of the many technical and difficult features of general medicine and surgery entitles him to recognition as an enterprising, progressive and able physician.

HON. HENRY BECKLEY. On the roll of the honored citizens of Douglas county appears the name of Henry Beckley, who during his lifetime figured actively in connection with business affairs and with public interests that have constituted elements in the growth and prosperity of the state and in the establishment of its political status. Mr. Beckley came to the Pacific coast from the middle west, his birth having occurred in Switzerland county, Indiana, January 4, 1833. He was seven years of age when, in 1840, his parents removed to Polk county, Missouri, where he was reared to manhood on a farm. In 1853 he came west to Oregon, crossing the plains with an ox team. On his arrival in this state he located at Yoncalla, Douglas county, but the following winter was spent in the mines at Yreka, California, where he met with fair success.

In 1864 Mr. Beckley was united in marriage to Miss Mary M. Woodson, a native of Benton county, Missouri, and a daughter of Jesse and Verlena (Linn) Woodson, who crossed the plains to Oregon in 1850 and spent the succeeding winter in Portland, whence they removed to Douglas county in the spring of 1851, locating at Yoncalla. After the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Beckley they began their domestic life on a ranch near Elkton, on the Umpqua river, there residing until 1895, when Mr. Beckley retired from active business and took up his abode in the city of Elkton. For many years he had capably and successfully carried on farming and stock-raising on an extensive scale. In business matters his judgment was sound, his discrimination keen and his enterprise unflinching. As the years passed he won a gratifying measure of prosperity, his judicious investments making him the owner of twenty-five hundred acres of valuable land. In 1873 he organized a stock company capitalized at twenty thousand dollars and built the Elkton Saw & Flouring Mills. Subsequently he became sole owner of the mills, which he operated very successfully until they were destroyed by a flood. In 1870 he was elected county commissioner of Douglas county and was instrumental in securing many needed improvements for the county during his term of office. In 1876 he was chosen to represent his district in the Oregon state legislature, serving for one term with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He carefully considered every question which came up for settlement and his support of any measure indicated his firm belief in its advocacy as a factor for good government or public improvement. In 1892 he was nominated and elected to the state senate and at the close of his term was reelected for a second term, this vote indicating his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him by the general public. He was a staunch democrat in politics and for years was an influential factor in the councils of his party. For several years he held the office of postmaster at Elkton and discharged the duties of that minor position with the same fidelity and promptness that characterized his work as a legislator. While residing in Elkton he also engaged in merchandising, controlling commercial interests in addition to his extensive landed interests.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Beckley were born thirteen children, ten of whom still survive, namely: John W.; James H.; Verlena M., who married Philip Pinkston; Charles L.; Pitzer W.; Mary J., the wife of Orange Mattoon; Jesse L.; Clyde P.; Claude R.; and Orval S. Mrs. Beckley resides in a handsome residence in Elkton and is very prominent socially. She is a member of the Christian church and is a lady whose many excellent traits of character have won her high and enduring regard. Mr. Beckley died at The Dalles, Oregon, while en route to Missouri, on the 17th of September, 1898. Through all his life he left no duty undone, no task neglected. He realized and met his responsibilities and his obligations to his family, to his friends and to his country. There was nothing spectacular in his entire career but his faithfulness and fidelity to every trust were features that made him one of Oregon's most honored citizens.

WILBUR W. CAMERON is one of the representative and successful agriculturists of the state of Oregon, owning in one body three hundred and fifty acres of land, also an additional eighty acre tract. He was born in this state on the 23d of December, 1867, and is one of seven children born to Wm. and Emma (Sturgess) Cameron. He was reared in his father's home and educated in the public schools. He resided with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age. On starting in life independently he located on a ranch near Jacksonville, which he rented for a number of years. This ranch comprised three hundred and fifty acres of excellent land, the soil and topography of which admirably adapted it for alfalfa growing. Shortly after having moved upon this ranch and tested its adaptability to grains and forage plants Mr. Cameron came to the conclusion that no better investment could be made in that part of Oregon than that of acquiring the property. He accordingly purchased the ranch and here he has built his beautiful home and devotes his time and attention to the growing of alfalfa and the raising of red Mexican beans.

His experience with these commodities has justified his original opinion as to the value of the land as an investment. He realizes a handsome net return for all labor and money expended in its operation.

Mr. Cameron was married to Miss Dora Bostwick, a native of California, with whom he resides on his farm near Jacksonville, Jackson county. In politics Mr. Cameron is a republican and always interested in all affairs pertaining to the best interests of his community. He is one of the most successful farmers in Jackson county and is highly respected and well known throughout this portion of his native state.

FLOYD W. BOOTH, who owns nineteen hundred acres of valuable land in Douglas county in association with his brother, Robert Roy Booth, is engaged with him in the stock business, their interests being mutual. A native son of Oregon, he was born in Drain, Douglas county, on the 7th of June, 1887, his parents being Robert A. and Clintona (LaRaut) Booth, who are mentioned at greater length on another page of this work, in connection with the sketch of Robert Roy Booth. Floyd W. Booth received his early education in the public schools of Grants Pass and the Eugene high school and later entered the University of Oregon at Eugene, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in the class of 1909. He then came to Douglas county and joined his brother on the ranch in the stock business. In the conduct of their interests the young men have displayed excellent business ability and sound judgment and have already won a place among the prosperous and representative citizens of the community.

On the 1st of September, 1910, Mr. Booth was united in marriage to Miss Edith Elizabeth Prescott, of Eugene, who graduated from the University of Oregon with the B. A. degree. She likewise graduated from the Thomas Normal Training School and also studied and received her musical education under Maurice De Vries of the Michigan Conservatory of Music of Detroit, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Booth have one child, Robert William Prescott. Mr. Booth is a republican in politics, believing the principles of that party to be most conducive to good government. He belongs to Eugene Lodge, No. 11, A. F. & A. M., and has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Masonry. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church.

EDWARD E. OAKES is prominent in real-estate and insurance circles of Bandon, Oregon, and by his insight and sagacity has built up a business along these lines which ranks him as a force in civic expansion. He was born in Racine, Wisconsin, and is a son of Theodore and Annie (Olstetter) Oakes, both natives of Iowa. His father was a contractor and builder by trade and followed this occupation in Wisconsin until his death. He was survived by his wife for three years, her death occurring when our subject was thirteen years of age. They were the parents of three children, Edward E., Oliver and Alexander. Oliver and Alexander are married, have families and reside in Racine, Wisconsin.

Edward E. Oakes was educated in the public schools of his native town and pursued his studies until after the death of his mother. Being left an orphan at that time he was obliged to earn his own livelihood and went to work upon a farm in Minnesota for one summer. In the fall he went to Minot, North Dakota, where he worked in the employ of a large contracting firm which was in charge of the construction of the Great Northern railroad. He remained with that company only a short time and resigned his position in order to work in a restaurant. His next line of activity was as cabin boy upon a boat, and he later went to Montana where he worked at various occupations for seven years. In 1893 he came to the Pacific coast and settled in Coos county, Oregon, where he hunted and trapped in the woods for a short time. After his marriage in 1900 he removed to Parkersburg where he operated a broom factory for three years. He then spent four years in the employ of various lumber concerns and in 1907 established his residence in Bandon. He immediately engaged in the real-estate and insurance business which has occupied his attention since that time. He has been a leading factor in the growth of the town of Bandon. In his capacity as real-estate agent he has added the Oakes' addition to the city and platted it off into town lots and sold them at a good profit. He owns a large two-story building in the business section, and has invested extensively in improved and unimproved farm lands. There is scarcely a line of activity in the city in which he is not prominent and active. He is assistant cashier of the First National Bank and was one of the organizers of that institution on April 20, 1910. His financial career has been distinguished by honesty and systematic attention to banking conditions, and has been a valuable force in the growth of the city along this line.

On October 28, 1900, Mr. Oakes was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Perkins, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of William and Francis (Hamblock) Perkins, who are among the oldest settlers in the state. Mrs. Oakes' grandfather settled on the Rogue river at an early date and died in Bandon in 1911. Mrs. Oakes is the only child born to her parents. She and her husband have three children: Wallace, born October 21, 1901, who is now attending school; Gladys, who was born in 1903; and Maxine, whose birth occurred in 1905.

In his political affiliations Mr. Oakes is a progressive republican but has never sought public office. He is a member of the Masonic order and is treasurer of the Bandon organization. He also holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America and is clerk of that body. He possesses a keen intelligence which directs and controls his long experience as a judge of land values. His thorough honesty which never allows him to take advantage of his customers is well known, and finds its rich reward in his unqualified success.

JOHN CHAPLIN LOGAN. The name of John Chaplin Logan has long been closely associated with the development of the educational system of the state, for through nineteen years he was a successful teacher in Oregon, entering upon his work here with a thorough experience that had come to him previously as a teacher in the middle west. He was born in Ohio, in 1845, a son of John T. and Mary A. (Loutzenhisar) Logan. The father was of Scotch and Irish descent but was born in Pennsylvania. He was a son of Charles Logan and a direct descendant of James A. Logan, who was secretary to William Penn.

John C. Logan was the second of six children, his elder sister being Emma, the wife of Elisha T. Scoville, of Ohio. The younger members of the family are: Ella, the wife of Homer Smith, of Newton Falls, Ohio; William H., a contractor and builder of Bandon, Oregon; Anna, the wife of William Wills, of Columbus, Ohio; and Netta, who is engaged in commercial and real-estate work in Los Angeles, California.

John C. Logan started out in life for himself when eighteen years of age, taking up the profession of teaching. He had been reared upon his father's farm and early became acquainted with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. The district schools of Ohio provided him his educational privileges and when he reached the age of eighteen years he devoted the winter months to teaching school and the summer seasons to farm labor. He was anxious, however, to improve his own education and with that end in view he entered the Iron City Commercial College, from which he was graduated in 1866. He afterward spent three years upon the road as a traveling salesman for a hardware company of Emlenton, Pennsylvania. He also taught school in Ohio and to these different activities devoted his time until 1868, when through an accident he lost his left leg. As soon as able he entered college, where he pursued the scientific and teacher's course and, having thus further qualified for the profession of teaching, he went to Youngstown, Ohio, becoming principal of the public schools there. For seven years he remained in that city and for six years he was at Ashtabula. He also spent one year in teaching in Florida and four years in Colorado. While in the latter state he was elected county superintendent of schools.

In the winter of 1893 Mr. Logan came to Oregon and has taught almost continuously since that time, although now he is practically living retired. He was a teacher in the district schools for nineteen years and his ability to impart readily, concisely and clearly to others the knowledge which he had acquired made him a capable and valued educator. At length he retired from that work and is now devoting his attention to the supervision of his agricultural interests

He owns two hundred acres of fine land, including eighty acres of timber and a small tract of bottom land. He is now comfortably situated in his beautiful home on Bear creek, five miles from Bandon, and his attractive surroundings indicate how active and useful has been his life, showing that he has made wise use of time and opportunities.

On the 29th of March, 1884, Mr. Logan was united in marriage to Miss Ella M. Moore, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Reuben F. and Lavancha (Adams) Moore, the former a native of Connecticut and the latter of New York. Mrs. Logan was one of three children born unto her parents, the others being: Arthur A., a wealthy real-estate owner of Barberton, Ohio; and Elizabeth S., who is a bookkeeper in a bank at Barberton.

In his political views Mr. Logan is a republican, thoroughly informed concerning the questions and issues of the day but never seeking public office. He has, however, served on the teachers' examining board and has been very prominent both as a teacher and citizen. He is public-spirited and enterprising, manifesting active and helpful support in all measures relating to the general welfare. He is one of the charter members of Bandon Lodge, I. O. O. F. He joined the society in Youngstown, Ohio, in 1878, and is actively identified with the association here. He rode forty-five miles one day to assist in founding the Bandon lodge and then rode back the next day to his school. He is ever loyal to the teachings of that society, which endeavors to inculcate the most honorable and manly principles, and these find expression in Mr. Logan's life. Mr. and Mrs. Logan are both much interested in church work, the former being a member of the Christian church and the latter of the Methodist church. His entire career has been largely one of service for others and his influence has been a beneficial factor for good.

WILLIAM MANLEY CURRIER is the proprietor of the hotel Chewaucan and has been interested in this enterprise since 1911. He has made it one of the best hotels in Lake county, accomplishing this result by following fair and honorable business methods. He has been a resident of Paisley only a short time but has spent his entire life in Lake county, having been born on Summer lake, June 2, 1885. His parents were William Andrew and Catharine (Hadley) Currier, both of whom were reared and educated in the Willamette valley. They were among the pioneers in the settlement of Lake county and their marriage occurred in that district. They are now residing in Summer lake valley, where the father operates a large stock farm and deals in thoroughbred horses. They are the parents of three children: Frances, the wife of Francis Kimes, of King county, California; Eva, who married Verne Lutz of Bellingham, Washington; and William Manley, the subject of this sketch.

William M. Currier was reared at home and was educated in the district schools of Lake county. He aided his father during his childhood with the work of the stock ranch and when he attained his majority became associated with him in the conduct of the stables. His residence in Paisley dates from March, 1912, in which year he came to this city and purchased Hotel Chewaucan, which he has conducted since that time. It is new, having been built in 1911, modern and up-to-date in every particular containing thirty rooms and equipped with all the necessary accessories for the comfort and convenience of guests. In one year it has become established as a prosperous local institution and its proprietor has become recognized as a business man of resourceful ability, whose energies have been important factors in the growth of his city.

On April 11, 1909, Mr. Currier was united in marriage to Miss Elsie Moore of Paisley, a daughter of Robert Moore of Elmira. They are the parents of one child, Manley. Mr. Currier is regarded in Paisley as one of the most progressive and enterprising citizens. He is still a young man but the prosperity he has already attained by the efficient management of an important enterprise is well deserved and promises well for greater future success.

ROBERT WESLEY BULLARD has many claims to prominence, being engaged actively and successfully in many of the representative enterprises of Coos county. For over twenty years he has operated a ferry across the Coos river, first as the proprietor of the enterprise and then as manager in the employ of the government. He is postmaster of Bullards and is well known in commercial circles as the owner of one of the most modern and up-to-date general stores in the county and as president of a large fish-canning company. He has gained success as an agriculturist in his able conduct of a fine ranch of four hundred and fifty acres, having based his prosperity in this as in all other lines of his activity upon his energy, forcefulness and strict integrity. He has been a resident of Oregon since 1877, having come to this state when he was twenty years of age. He was born in Iowa on November 26, 1857, and is the son of James H. and Charlotte (Van Volkanburg) Bullard. The mother was a daughter of Wesley Van Volkanburg, whose father was among the early settlers in New York state. The father of our subject is of French ancestry. He farmed in Iowa for some years, when he went to California with his family and after several years' residence in that state came to Oregon, where he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres at Arago. He and his wife became the parents of four children: Robert Wesley, the subject of this sketch; Clark A., deceased; Lottie E., the wife of J. E. Bundy, of Oakland, California; and Millie E., who married Dr. A. Brandon, also a resident of Oakland.

Robert W. Bullard was reared at home and attended the public schools of Iowa until he was eighteen years of age. He accompanied his parents to California and later to Oregon, his residence in this state dating from 1877. He helped in the improvement and development of his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age, adding to his activities by working as a laborer upon neighboring places. When he attained his majority he obtained a position as a school teacher and for eight years followed this occupation in Coos county. He later followed fishing for a number of years and was one of the organizers and founders of a fish-canning company. He was elected president of this concern in 1904 and still retains that office although its affairs are almost entirely in the hands of a manager. It was in 1892 that Mr. Bullard began his general merchandise business, starting upon a small scale and gradually increasing his enterprise until he now carries a seven thousand dollar stock of goods. His store is conducted along the most modern and progressive lines and is equipped with all modern accessories. His stock is kept attractively arranged and his increasing trade is an evidence of his success and of the straightforward and honest principles by which it has been attained. In the same year in which he established himself as a general merchant he also began the operation of a ferry across the Coos river and for twenty years has been identified with the conduct of this enterprise. His original object was to facilitate his commercial dealings and his ferry aided him materially in the management of his large volume of business. In 1906 the county made it a free ferry and employed Mr. Bullard to operate and manage the enterprise. In 1912 he sold his interests outright to the county but still retains his position as operator. A postoffice was established upon the site of his store on June 19, 1879, and Mr. Bullard was appointed postmaster, which position he has held since that time. He has done able and conscientious work in this capacity and his success has come as the natural result of hard and industrious labor. He is also prominent in general agricultural circles of Coos county, where he owns an excellent stock farm of four hundred and fifty acres. He raises a large amount of hay with which he feeds his cattle and horses and has added materially to his income by the operation of this enterprise. He also owns timber land amounting to one hundred acres and has invested extensively in town property in Bandon, owning at the present time twenty-one city lots.

On April 3, 1882, Mr. Bullard was united in marriage to Miss Malinda Hamblock, a native of Oregon and a daughter of John and Jane (Long) Hamblock, who were among the early settlers in Coos county, settling in this section in 1835. They were the parents of four children: Mary, deceased; Malinda, the wife of our subject; John, who resides in Bullards; and Christina, the wife of A. Barrows, of Bullards. To Mr. and Mrs. Bullard six children have been born, Warren R., born January 10, 1884, is now engaged in shipbuilding in Bullards. He is married and has one child, Howard. Pearl A., born April 2, 1886, received her education in the district schools of Coos county and is now residing at home with her parents. John Chester, born in 1888, received his education in the district schools and later took a course in electrical engineering. Lawrence, born in 1890, is a pupil in the district school. Christina, born in 1894, is a student in the district schools. Frank, who completes the family, was born in 1897 and is also attending school.

Mr. Bullard gives his political allegiance to the republican party and has always been intelligently active in political affairs. For four years he was justice of the peace and is now serving as school clerk, which position he has held continuously for twenty-three years, accomplishing during this time much constructive work along lines of educational expansion. He helped to organize the school district in which he resides and in many other ways aided and helped the cause of education. For eight years he served as road supervisor and has always been prominent in any movement looking toward the further welfare of his community and toward the upbuilding and progress of the section in which he resides. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World. In all the relations of his life he shows a progressive spirit and a policy of gradual expansion. These qualities, well directed and intelligently controlled, have made him thriving and prosperous in business, agricultural and political circles and a dominating influence in the development of Douglas county.

ARTHUR THOMAS MORRISON, proprietor of the Coquille Laundry & Ice Company, is numbered among the representative and important business men of Coos county, having brought a small and comparatively valueless enterprise to a flourishing and substantial condition by his power of constructive organization and his administrative ability. His business is one of the largest and most intelligently managed in this section of the state and his position as its proprietor and the dominating factor in its operation places him in the front ranks of the prominent citizens of Coquille. He was born in Vernon, Alabama, in 1866, a son of Miles H. and Rebecca (Collins) Morrison, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Alabama. The father was a farmer and followed that occupation for some time, coming to Oregon in 1877 and operating a donation claim in Jackson county for a number of years. He later engaged in contracting and building, in which business he was active in San Diego, California, whither he had removed in 1886. He, however, gave up that occupation eventually, resumed farming and is now cultivating a fine tract of land near San Diego. He is the father of five children: William, deceased; Arthur Thomas, of this review; a child who died in infancy; Walter N., a merchant of Escondido, California, where he resides with his wife and two children; and Clarence A., who is a railway mail clerk residing in Los Angeles, California, and who is married and has one child.

Arthur T. Morrison was educated in the public schools of Oregon and in 1886 went with his father to Southern California, where he resided for twenty years. In 1890 he took up the study of scientific agriculture and horticulture and was given charge of the Gay farm, belonging to John H. Gay located near San Diego. He was active in the management of that enterprise for five years and then went into business in Los Angeles, where he helped organize a company, specializing in the sale of cement products. He was superintendent of that concern, did much work in the building line and for five years was prosperous and successful in that occupation. When he sold out in Los Angeles he came directly to Coquille, where he purchased an interest in a steam laundry and ice plant which in 1908 was incorporated under the name of the Coquille Laundry & Ice Company. In 1910 he bought out the other stockholders, and now owns all the stock with the exception of two shares. When he first became identified with this enterprise it was conducted on a small scale and was comparatively unimproved. Mr. Morrison is handling five times the original volume of business and the concern has a capitalization of ten thousand dollars. He is responsible for the addition of the ice plant and was instrumental in creating a demand for ice in this part of the country. He is a true business man, energetic, shrewd and intelligent, and has made his business expand and grow along modern and progressive lines and has gained for himself a high place among the representative citizens of Coquille.

In 1888 Mr. Morrison was united in marriage to Miss Anna Nosler, a native of Iowa and a daughter of W. H. and Esther (Ritters) Nosler, early settlers in Oregon. Mrs. Morrison's father built the first house in Coquille and is living in Eugene, Oregon. His wife passed away in 1888. In their family were nine children: Alva A., who is engaged in the transfer business in San Diego, California; Anna, the wife of our subject; Oscar L., of Randolph, Oregon; Samuel M., a wholesale grocer of Coquille; Mary A., the wife of Clyde Gage, of Coquille, who is serving as deputy sheriff of Coos county; Birdie, the wife of Charles T. Skeels, who is engaged in merchandising in Coquille; Minnie, the wife of George Hartley, who is secretary of the Randolph Lumber Company and whose home is at Prosper, Oregon; Eugene E., of Coquille; and Israel R., who is engaged in the transfer business in San Diego, California. To Mr. and Mrs. Morrison has been born a daughter, Lois Genevieve, whose natal day was February 1, 1908. The family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church.

Arthur T. Morrison holds membership with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He is prominent in local politics, being independent in his views, and has held many important public offices. He was elected to the city council and served for a term of two years, from 1909 to 1911. His satisfactory work with that legislative body was rewarded by his election to the office of mayor in May, 1912. During his administration many improvements have been made in the city streets and sewers and he is largely responsible for some of the most important advancements in civic growth. He brings to his official life the same shrewdness, intelligent grasp of local conditions, and conscientious ability which have gained him success in his business life and have made his public spirit effective.

Y. M. LOWE is one of the pioneers in the settlement of Oregon and came to the site of the town of Bandon at a time when there was not a single house within the present limits of the city. He has been associated with representative industries in Coos county for many years and was one of the greatest individual forces in the upbuilding and development of the city in which he resides. He was active in buying and selling town property in Bandon and has been successful by reason of his familiarity with local conditions and on account of the upright and honorable methods by which he carries on his business. Mr. Lowe has lived in Oregon since 1857 and is numbered among the earliest settlers in the state. He was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, on June 30, 1826, and is a son of John and Nancy (Gosnell) Lowe, both natives of that section. His father was a general farmer and followed that occupation until his death which occurred in Baltimore county. His wife has also passed away. They had six children who grew to maturity; Jesse, who passed away in California; David J., who made his home in Marshfield, but who is now deceased; Y. M., the subject of this review; Robert H., who passed away in Coos county; Thomas G., a resident of South Tacoma, Washington; and Ann E., the deceased wife of Samuel Harding, who has also passed away.

Y. M. Lowe received his education in the public schools of Maryland and came west to California in 1849 attracted by the reports of the gold discoveries in that state. He made the journey with ox teams across the plains and was twenty-three years of age when he arrived at the Pacific coast. He worked in the gold mines and followed various other occupations until 1857 when he married and came to Oregon, settling at Port Orford where he remained for one year. At the end of that time he came to the Coquille river valley and established a squatter's right to a quarter section of land near Myrtle Point. Here for nine years he carried on general agricultural pursuits and in 1867 purchased the property. Still later he took up a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres on Beaver slough and carried on general farming and stock-raising for twenty-two years, during which time he was also active as manager and proprietor of a tavern. In 1887 he disposed of all his interests and moved to the place where the town of Bandon now stands. He purchased land which at the present time constitutes a portion of the town site and has made his home in this locality since that time. He has sold most of his property with the exception of six houses and lots. He has been identified with much of the upbuilding and progress of Bandon and has seen the town develop from an unsettled tract of land into a thriving and prosperous village.

In 1857 Mr. Lowe was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Slayback, a native of Butler county, Ohio, who came to Illinois with her parents when she was still a child. She moved to California in 1853, her parents having passed away some time previously. To Mr. and Mrs. Lowe have been born six children: Viola R., the wife of R. H. Rosa of Bandon; Thomas C., who resides in Los Angeles, California; Clarence Y., who is engaged in the drug business in Bandon; George Webster, who passed away in infancy; John Sumpter, who has also passed away, dying at the age of eight years; and Florence, the deceased wife of Charles H. Clough.

Mr. Lowe gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and is actively interested in all movements which have for their object the further progress and advancement of the city to which he came as a pioneer settler. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined Franklin Lodge in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1848. He has witnessed the development of a new and unsettled section into one of the prosperous regions of the United States and contributed largely to its growth. He has won success in his business enterprises and is representative of the highest standards of citizenship.

MELVIN HAYTER is a native of Oregon, the son of a pioneer in its settlement and has been a resident of Coos county for almost fifty years. During this time he has gained the respect and esteem of his friends and acquaintances by reason of a consistently honest, upright and straightforward life. He was born in Polk county, near The Dalles, on March 15, 1863, and is a son of W. L. and Sarah (Crowley) Hayter, natives of Platt City, Missouri. They were married in that section and crossed the plains in pioneer times, locating in Polk county where they took up a donation land claim upon which they lived until 1865. In that year they disposed of their property and came to Coos county where the father took up land near Fishtrap on the Coquille river, which he improved and operated for a number of years, disposing of his holdings eventually in order to purchase one hundred and sixty acres in the same section. After a time he sold this ranch also and bought a farm near Argo and after a few years successful cultivation of the soil in that section moved to Bandon where he lived retired until his death which occurred in 1909. He and his wife became the parents of fifteen children: Theodosia and Richard M., who reside in California; Sarah, who has passed away; Melvin, the subject of this review; James, also a resident of California; William, whose residence is unknown; Priscilla, the wife of R. S. Knowlton of Coquille, Oregon; Robert, who makes his home in Marshfield; Ella, the widow of Robert Long of Polk county, Oregon; Cora, who married John Lindebeck of California; Edith, who became the wife of Grant Beal, also of California; May, the wife of Alva Lee, a resident of Myrtle Point; Andrew J., who makes his home in the same city; Wilber O., of California; and Charles, who is deceased.

Melvin Hayter grew up upon his father's farm and at an early date became acquainted with the best agricultural methods and gained a personal experience in the details of farm operation. He had the distinction of attending the first school in Coos county and pursued the usual course of studies until he was fourteen years of age. He then went to work in the logging camps and followed lumbering for twenty-eight years, abandoning the occupation at the end of that time in favor of general farming. He preempted a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres which he cultivated and improved for a number of years, bringing it to a high state of development. He recently sold this property and bought a home in Riverton where he resided only a short time afterward leasing his father's property upon which he resided for a year and a half. He then retired from independent agricultural life, purchased other property in Riverton and now works upon neighboring farms.

In 1895 Mr. Hayter was united in marriage to Miss Nettie Pearl Steward, a sister of George A. Steward of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. To their union were born two children: Lusta H., who was born in 1901, and who is a pupil in the public schools of her native city; and Alvin, whose birth occurred in 1904, and who is also attending school.

Mr. Hayter is liberal in his political views preferring not to affiliate with any party. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but has never sought office. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, his only fraternal affiliation. During the forty-eight years of his residence in Oregon he has won true success in gaining the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens.

WARREN P. REED who without invidious distinction may be termed the leading business man of Gardiner and one of the foremost representatives of commercial and industrial interests in central Oregon, has won that success which follows well formulated plans carefully executed, unfaltering enterprise and honorable effort. He was born at Winchester Bay, Douglas county, Oregon, March 4, 1876, and is a son of James W. and Ellen (McBride) Reed, both of whom were natives of Lubec, Maine, where they were reared and married. In 1872 they came west to Oregon, settling in Winchester Bay at the mouth of the Umpqua river and for a number of years Mr. Reed engaged in driving stage from the mouth of the Umpqua to Coos Bay. Subsequently he removed to Gardiner and for several years was identified with the live-stock business. For a time he was employed in the mills here and in the '80s he removed to Grays Harbor where for several years he was identified with the stock business after which he returned to Gardiner about 1902. Since that time he has managed the live-stock interests of his son, Warren P. Reed. The present mercantile business conducted by Warren P. Reed was established by his uncle, Alfred William Reed, who came to Gardiner in 1870. On his arrival here he found employment as sawyer in Simpson's mills and was subsequently made foreman of the mills. He was one of a party who took the steamer Swan up the Umpqua river to Roseburg, the only time a steamship ever made the trip. Later he became identified with steamboating, becoming one of the owners of the steamer Argo. Subsequently he and William Wade built a steamer which they called The Restless. This vessel plied between Scottsburg and the mouth of the Umpqua, and from that point Mr. Reed's father took the passengers and mail to Coos Bay. Alfred W. Reed subsequently became identified with the salmon-canning industry and purchased an interest in a cooperative cannery which up to that time had not proved a successful enterprise. Under his capable management, however, several thousand dollars were cleared on the first year's business, and after paying off some of the indebtedness of the firm Alfred W. Reed purchased the entire plant. The following year a ninety days' catch netted him forty thousand dollars, the gross sales bringing one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. He also established himself in the mercantile business and in the butchering business and likewise operated a tannery in Scottsburg. In 1896 he opened the Gardiner Creamery which he conducted up to the time of his death. He was not only one of the most prominent factors in business circles here but also served for two terms in the state legislature and was a member of the state senate at the time of his death. He was looking for a site for a hatchery for the government on the North Umpqua just below Winchester on the 9th of April, 1899, when the boat was overturned and he and a Mr. McGuire, a member of the state fish committee, were drowned. He was one of the most prominent men of southern Oregon, few doing as much for the upbuilding, improvement and advancement of this section of the state.

Warren P. Reed following his uncle's death, took charge of the business to which he succeeded. He had been in his uncle's employ for about eight years prior to his death and therefore was familiar with the different phases and interests of the business and was well qualified to assume entire control. His mercantile business is now one of the most extensive in Douglas county, its sales reaching a large annual figure. The Gardiner Creamery was merged with that of the T. S. Townsend Creamery Company of Portland in 1909, that company owning and operating eight creameries in the state. The Gardiner Creamery is one of the most modern in its equipment and one of the most successful individual plants in the state. At the time of the death of Alfred W. Reed the Gardiner Mill Company owned one-third interest in the canning plant. Warren P. Reed later sold his interest in the plant to Elmore & Company of Astoria, but subsequently he purchased the interest of the Gardiner Mill Company and in connection with Elmore & Company in 1907 built the present plant of the Umpqua Packing Company which is one of the most modern and best equipped plants on the Oregon coast. This plant has a capacity of one thousand cases of forty-eight pounds each, every ten hours. The enterprise is one of the most modern business interests of this section of the state, furnishing employment to a large number of workmen during the season. Mr. Reed owns and laid out the townsite of Reedsport across the bay from Gardiner on a proposed route of the Eugene & Coos Bay railroad. He owns also four thousand acres of land in and adjoining this townsite. The Townsite Company owns adjacent to the town a body of water known as Clear lake, capable of supplying water for a population of a half million people. The lake has a meandering shore line of six miles and its depth is from fifty to three hundred feet. Mr. Reed also owns fifteen hundred acres of land adjoining Gardiner, five hundred acres of which is reclaimed marsh land on which he keeps from sixty to seventy dairy cows. He conducts a butcher shop and has removed the tannery from Scottsburg. This tannery has the reputation of turning out the best saddle leather in the country. Mr. Reed is also well known as a stockman, running from fifty to one hundred horses and from six hundred to seven hundred head of cattle on his land. Moreover, he is interested in various financial institutions and in the Gardiner Hotel at that place. Whatever he undertakes seems to prosper. His judgment is sound, his discrimination keen and he combines what to others appear diverse elements into a harmonious working whole.

In 1898 Mr. Reed was married to Miss Marjorie H. Wade, a daughter of Captain Henry Wade, and unto them have been born two children, Eva I. and Laura M. Mr. Reed is republican in his political views, but while he has been a dominant factor in the party councils he has had no aspiration for public preferment. On the contrary he has concentrated his energies upon his business affairs and in 1911 he incorporated his mercantile business, giving some of his employes an interest therein so the house is now conducted under the firm style of Reed, Janelle & Company. They not only conduct the mercantile interests but also operate the steamboats which are used for the collection of cream for the creamery.

Warren P. Reed is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M., of Gardiner; Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E.; Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F.; the Knights of Maccabees of Gardiner; and he and his wife are members of the Martha Chapter, No. 48, O. E. S. Mrs. Reed is a member of the Episcopal church. Both are widely known in this part of the state and are highly esteemed. Mr. Reed belongs to that class of progressive men who in promoting individual interests contribute to public prosperity.

Few men seem to discriminate more readily between the essential and the nonessential not only in business matters but in public affairs and what he has done redounds to the credit and benefit of the community as well as to his individual interests.

E. F. CHENEY. The history of the northwest and its development is familiar to E. F. Cheney. For seven years he was engaged in conducting a fast freight stage line from Lakeview to Anderson, California, a distance of two hundred and forty miles. He is now engaged in the harness-making business in Lakeview but at different periods various other business interests and activities have claimed his time and attention. He was born in Vermont, July 15, 1855, and is a son of E. E. and Abigail (Clark) Cheney, who were also natives of the Green Mountain state. The mother died there when her son E. F. Cheney was but two years of age and later the father married again, his death occurring in South Dakota. He was a carpenter by trade and afterward engaged in the lumber business. In the family were three children, of whom one died in infancy, while Flora has also passed away, leaving E. F. Cheney the only surviving member of the family. After his mother's death he resided with his grandparents until ten years of age, when he returned to his father's home remaining there for four years, but his experience with his stepmother was unpleasant. He remained at home, however, until fourteen years of age in order to get his own mother's gold watch but left as soon as his purpose was accomplished. He was then living in New Hampshire and later he went to Boston, Massachusetts, where he attended school for one winter. He also drove a butcher's wagon in Boston for four and a half years in the employ of one man and at the end of that time went to Lebanon, New Hampshire, where he was married in 1874 to Annette Clark, a native of Vermont, who died in Lakeview in September, 1910, at the age of fifty-five years.

For two years after his marriage E. F. Cheney remained in New Hampshire and in 1876 went to California. He located first at Santa Rosa, where he conducted an express train during a part of his time and devoted some time to carpentering. On the 24th of July, 1878, he arrived in Lakeview, Oregon, where he has since resided and followed carpentering and ranching.

E. F. Cheney left Santa Rosa, California, with his wife's parents, Israel and Elizabeth Clark, two of his wife's brothers and three other men who were with their families. They arrived in Lassen county, California, where they learned that the Indians were on the warpath in the north. They remained at that place for six weeks, waiting for better reports before proceeding to their destination, which was Spokane. Some of them, however, became tired of waiting and E. F. Cheney, Nathan Clark, Eli Clark, John Adams and Peter Post built a house there. They later decided, however, to proceed as far as Lakeview. It was a fearful time among the women, for they feared that they would be killed by the Indians if they proceeded on the journey. The five men above mentioned came on alone, took up land, established homes and then returned for the other members of the party. Ranching was carried on successfully for a number of years and in 1881 Mr. Cheney purchased the Hot Springs, south of town, and began the production of vegetables. Being the first man to raise garden products in this location, he supplied all the ranchers there with vegetables that first year, after which, Mr. Cheney having demonstrated the possibilities along that line, others began to plant gardens. The town was just being founded and one could ride over the country all day without seeing a fence. Mr. Cheney owned Hot Springs for three years, or from 1881 to 1883 inclusive, during which period he made vegetable growing his chief occupation. From 1883 until 1890 he conducted a fast freight stage line from Lakeview to Anderson, California, a distance of two hundred and forty miles. He used a regular coach, with six horses. The trip was made going down in five and a half days but ten days were required for the return, because of coming back with heavy loads up a grade and over the mountains. In 1890 Mr. Cheney began ranching, which he followed until 1900, when he established his present business and has since conducted a harness making shop here. He had learned the trade through the winter months while working on a ranch, acquainting himself with the trade in the shop of S. F. Ahlstrom. He has a good harness business, employing two men all the time and three some of the time in the manufacture of harness and saddlery. He owns his shop on Main street and a good residence on West street, also a ranch of six hundred and sixty acres on the west side of Goose Lake. In the early days he enjoyed some of the fine hunting and fishing and yet indulges in those sports when opportunity offers.

Mr. Cheney has but one son, Albert E., who works in his father's shop, having been thus employed since the business was established. He married Della Pratt and has one child, Nettie. Our subject has been somewhat prominent in local affairs. For the past two years he has served as a member of the city council and exercises his official prerogatives in support of various progressive measures. He has been called upon to settle some estates and he is prominent in several fraternal societies, especially so in the Odd Fellows. In the local lodge he has been secretary for many years and also scribe of the encampment, while in the camp of the Woodmen of the World he is banker. He has membership relations with the Foresters, the United Workmen and the Degree of Honor, and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. All phases of pioneer life in this section of the state are familiar to him and he is one of those characters who lend picturesqueness to the history of the past because of the varied and interesting experiences which he had as a stage driver as well as a rancher before entering upon his more quiet, yet equally remunerative, occupation of manufacturing harness and saddlery.

HON. CLARENCE E. RICKER. "The race is to the swift and the battle to the strong," and in business and political activities in Douglas county the Hon. Clarence E. Ricker is both swift and strong. He is the owner of one of the finest ranches on the Smith river and as a representative of one of the leading industries in this section has gained prominence and comparative wealth. He has been identified for many years with political affairs of his state and county and as a member of the Oregon legislature did constructive work along developing and expanding lines. He was born in Maine on the 10th of November, 1850, and is a son of Ezekiel and Catherine P. (Baker) Ricker, both of whom were natives of the Pine Tree state. In 1859 they removed to Minnesota and located in Minneapolis, where they lived for many years and where their deaths occurred.

Clarence E. Ricker was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Minneapolis. He worked for his livelihood from an early age, engaging in logging in the lumber woods of Minnesota. He was also identified with the sawmill industry and was engaged in this line of occupation until the spring of 1875, when he journeyed westward to California. After three months spent in Eureka he started for Oregon, landing in Gardiner on July 22, 1875. He spent the following winter as a student at DeFrance & White's Business College and in the spring of 1876 established his residence in Douglas county. He married in the same year and immediately settled on the north fork of the Smith river, where he took up a preemption claim, proving his title in 1879. He was successful as a general agriculturist for a little over three years and at the end of that time had been prosperous enough to buy his present ranch on the Smith river, at the junction of the north fork. He purchased this property in the summer of 1881 and in the following fall removed to his new home, where he has since resided. He now operates one of the most fertile and productive properties in Douglas county, comprising two hundred acres of land seventeen miles above Gardiner. He brings to its operation a scientific knowledge of modern agriculture and a progressive and open mind. He has equipped his holdings with all the newest devices in farm machinery, has erected convenient barns and outbuildings and has brought his property to a model and attractive state. He represents in his agricultural career the intelligent and upright qualities which are an important source of the prosperity and development of the state of Oregon. Identified as he is with one of the principal industries of his section, he holds a prominent place among his fellow citizens, which he has done much to deserve.

Mr. Ricker besides being successful and prosperous as an agriculturist is also prominent and well known as a politician. He affiliates with the republican party and represented his district in the Oregon state legislature in the session of 1889. He has for years been an active worker and a dominating factor in the local republican organization and his name is a synonym for honorable and upright qualities of statesmanship.

Mr. Ricker has been twice married. His first union occurred in 1876, when he wedded Miss Emma E. Sherett, a daughter of John Sherett, who was among the pioneers in the settlement of Douglas county. He crossed the plains with ox teams from New Philadelphia, Ohio, to Oregon in 1851, locating for a short time in Oregon City, but shortly afterward removed to Scottsburg. In 1861 he took up a donation claim on the Smith river, sixteen miles above Gardiner, and was successful in its operation for many years. To Mr. Ricker by his first marriage three children were born: Maud L., the wife of Giles Fowler, of Meadow, Oregon; Grace, the wife of Evermont Minor, of Cottage Grove; and Roscoe R., who lives at home. The mother passed away on November 10, 1893, and on February 6, 1897. Mr. Ricker was again married, his second union being with Mrs. C. O. Helmick, who was in her maidenhood Miss Cora O. Cain, a native of Indiana, who came to Oregon in 1889. To this union were born two children: Warren Dale, who is deceased; and Bernice Olive.

Fraternally Mr. Ricker is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M.; and St. Anthony's Chapter, No. 3, R. A. M., of Minneapolis. For the past five years he has given almost all of his attention to dairying and this in combination with his political career has kept him busy and active. By his swiftness in action and his dominating strength of purpose he has won the race in which he started. There are many more contests open to him equally honorable and worthy, which hold forth conspicuous rewards to his industry, common sense and intelligence.

JOHN IRWIN is a capable attorney well known as one who has made a strenuous fight for the people to obtain their water rights. In this connection his work has been extremely beneficial to the community, and the city of Klamath Falls and the surrounding district owe to him a debt of gratitude for his efforts in this connection. His sympathy has been with the small farmer who must irrigate his land in order to make it productive rather than with the corporations and companies who, in the building of ditches and the development of irrigation systems, have placed water at almost a prohibitive price. Mr. Irwin is accorded a good law practice, connecting him with much important litigation of his part of the state. He was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, May 11, 1878, a son of John and Margaret J. (Rankin) Irwin, the former a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Armagh, Indiana county, Pennsylvania. The father spent a number of years in Wisconsin and Illinois and in 1859 engaged in rafting on the Mississippi river. He and his brother Robert operated the first sawmill and cut the timber for the first Catholic church at La Crosse. About the time of the Civil war John Irwin returned to Pennsylvania and spent the remainder of his life in farming. He died in 1889, at the age of sixty-six years, and is survived by his wife, who is residing at Livermore, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, at the age of seventy-five years. In their family were seven children, of whom one daughter died in 1897. Six are yet living.

John Irwin remained at home until he had attained his majority and in the meantime supplemented his public-school education by a course in Jefferson Academy at Canonsburg, Pennsylvania, which he entered at the age of seventeen years, and also in the State Normal School at Slippery Rock, where he was graduated with the class of 1900. He engaged in teaching school for two sessions in Pennsylvania and in the spring of 1902 went to Illinois. In the fall of the same year he made his way to Boulder, Colorado, and entered the law department of the University of Colorado, from which he was graduated with the class of 1905. He then took the bar examination in that state on the 23d and 24th of June and in March, 1906, was admitted to practice. He spent the months until the following September in traveling through the northwest and on the 19th of October, 1906, settled at Klamath Falls, where he began practice on the 4th of May, 1908. He has since engaged in general practice, taking up the active work of the profession after teaching in the rural schools of this locality for a time. It was with difficulty that he secured his education, for after his father's death it was necessary for him to work upon the home farm through the summer months and he only had the opportunity of attending school in the winter seasons. While pursuing his studies in Colorado he devoted the summer months to work in the mines and in the winter seasons conducted a boarding house in order to help pay his way in the law school. He came to Klamath Falls during the long continued struggle over the water rights and his sympathy being with the small farmer, he has made it his purpose to extend aid to those who need it most and has done good work in behalf of the people against corporation greed. He is a capable lawyer, strong in argument, logical in his deductions, and has won many verdicts favorable to his clients.

On the 27th of July, 1910, Mr. Irwin was united in marriage to Miss Josephine M. Seng, of La Crosse, Wisconsin, a daughter of Hiram Seng. Mrs. Irwin is a graduate nurse of the La Crosse Hospital of the class of 1911. Both Mr. and Mrs. Irwin have become widely and favorably known during the period of their residence in Klamath Falls. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party and he was made its nominee for the office of prosecuting attorney of the district comprising Klamath and Lake counties. This nomination is equivalent to an election, as there is no opposing candidate. He has been a member of the board of directors of the Klamath Water Users Association and for the past two years has been vice president of the board. He is now attorney for the Klamath Water Users Association and he does other important work as a practitioner, indicating the scope of his knowledge and his devotion to his clients' interests.

JOHN LETSOM, who came to this state in 1850, is one of the few surviving representatives of the early pioneers of southern Oregon and is one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Douglas county, residing on a ranch six miles northeast of Yoncalla. As an agriculturist he has won a gratifying measure of prosperity, owning three hundred acres of valuable land in Scotts valley. His birth occurred in Shropshire, England, on the 13th of March, 1828, his parents being Thomas and Margaret (Davis) Letsom, both of whom were natives of Wales. They came from England to the United States in 1845, and after two years' residence in New York city, removed to Wisconsin, purchasing a farm near Racine, on which they spent the remainder of their lives.

John Letsom was a youth of seventeen when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Wisconsin in 1845 but did not remain in that state, returning to New York, where he obtained employment as a die sinker in a steel toy factory. In the spring of 1848 he formed one of the first parties to leave for the California gold fields and made the voyage by sailing vessel around Cape Horn, reaching his destination at the end of six months. During the following winter he worked in San Francisco and in the spring of 1849 began mining on Stanislaus river, remaining there through the summer. In the fall he formed one of a company of about fifty men who banded themselves together for cooperative mining, but the venture proved unprofitable and Mr. Letsom left the gold fields. In the spring of 1850 he came north, to Oregon, spending the following summer and winter in Milwaukie, Clackamas county, where he worked in a blacksmith shop. In the spring of 1851 he went to the gold fields of Yreka, California, and there spent one year. In the spring of 1852 he came to Douglas county, locating about six miles northeast of Yoncalla, where he took up a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres and where he resided for five years or until he had proved up his claim. During this time he had married the widow of S. M. Lewis, formerly Miss Sarah Harrer, who was a native of Arkansas and who had three living children by her first husband. It was in order to give these children the advantages of an education that in 1861 Mr. Letsom took up his abode in Yoncalla, where he remained for about ten years. On the expiration of that period he removed to the place whereon he has resided continuously since—a fine ranch six miles northeast of Yoncalla. He owns three hundred acres of valuable and productive land and has long been numbered among the best known and most highly respected citizens of southern Oregon.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Letsom were born five daughters and four sons. The six surviving members of the family are as follows: Thomas, who is a resident of Portland, Oregon; Mary, who is the widow of F. M. Goodell and now resides with her father; Lewellyn, living in eastern Oregon; Martha, the wife of J. W. Harris, of Chelan, Washington; Evan, who operates the home farm; and Talitha, who is the wife of B. E. Hedrick, of Douglas county. The wife and mother was called to her final rest on January 19, 1898.

In politics Mr. Letsom is a staunch and loyal republican. For two terms he served as assessor of old Umpqua county before Douglas county was cut off. From the time of his arrival in the county until 1911, covering a period of about fifty-nine years, he served continuously on the school board in one capacity or another. To fill vacancies he served by appointment as justice of the peace and also in the office of postmaster at Yoncalla. In the early days he knew everyone living in the northern part of Douglas county and the circle of his friends was almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances. He has now passed the eighty-fourth milestone on life's journey and enjoys the respect and veneration which should ever be accorded one who has traveled thus far on this earthly pilgrimage and whose career has been at all times upright and honorable.

H. M. FLEMING is a member of the firm of Fleming Brothers, merchants of New Pine Creek, who recognize the fact that satisfied patrons are the best advertisements and, therefore, carry a large and well selected line of goods, suitable to a general trade, and win a liberal patronage by progressive methods, fair prices and honorable dealing. H. M. Fleming was born in Jackson county, Oregon, January 13, 1876, a son of Henry Clay and Minnie (Marchbanks) Fleming, who were natives of Tennessee, the former born in 1842 and the latter in 1841. The parents were reared and married in that state and made their advent on the Pacific coast in 1872 as residents of Siskiyou county, California. Soon afterward, however, they removed to Jackson county, Oregon, where they remained for fifteen years, and then went to Modoc county, California, taking up their abode near New Pine Creek, Oregon, where the father now resides. For many years he followed farming and had extensive interests but is now living retired, enjoying a well earned rest. The mother passed away here in 1910. In their family were eight children: Dora, the widow of D. T. Colvin, of Willowbranch, Modoc county, California; W. S., also living at Willowbranch; T. M., a partner of H. M. Fleming; H. A., living at Willowbranch; H. M.; L. P., who is a twin brother of H. M. and resides near Fresno, California; Winifred, of Santa Rosa, California; and William, of Lake county, Oregon.

In the county of his nativity H. M. Fleming remained until he reached the age of thirteen years and then came with his parents to Lake county, where he has since lived with the exception of seven years spent in Modoc county, California. He was on a ranch until he attained his majority and his educational opportunities were those afforded by the public schools. While in Modoc county he worked in a store for seven years but laudable ambition prompted him to engage in business on his own account and with his brother T. M. Fleming he purchased his present store in 1904. They have since conducted the same under the style of Fleming Brothers, general merchants. They own a brick building, one story and basement, thirty by seventy feet, and also own warehouses in the town. They have a large and growing trade and their business is a profitable one. They also loan money and are interested in many projects in this locality, including gold mining, which is fast developing into an important feature in the business of this section of the state.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN LETSOM

Mr. Fleming holds membership with the Elks and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he has attractive, genial qualities, which render him popular in these organizations. Moreover, his record proves that success and an honorable name may be won simultaneously, for energy and industry have ever been supplemented by fair dealing in the conduct of his mercantile interests.

JOHN B. SWEET has been a resident of Oregon for many years and his agricultural career in Coos county was important as an element in its general advancement. He cultivated a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of land which in its highly developed and improved state is regarded as a model enterprise of its kind. He is at present living retired in Coquille, having sold his farm to his sons, and is enjoying a rest earned by diligent and patient labor. He was born in Nova Scotia in 1848 and went to California in pioneer times, settling in Humboldt county where he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land upon which he operated a large and prosperous dairy for nineteen years. At the end of that time he came to Oregon, purchasing a farm near Coquille upon which he resided for six years. He then retired and moved to Coquille in order to give his children the advantage of adequate educational facilities. When Mr. Sweet purchased his farm hardly any improvements had been made upon it and its excellent condition at the present time is almost entirely due to his well directed and practical labors. He gave his entire time and attention for many years to making his land productive and it has increased in value many times since it first came into his possession. He recently sold the farm to his two oldest sons, who are now active in its management and operation. Mr. Sweet has lived in Coquille since 1907 and owns the attractive home in which he resides.

On September 5, 1877, John B. Sweet was united in marriage to Miss Susan Gormely, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Atkins) Gormely.

Mr. and Mrs. Sweet became the parents of nine children. Alfred J. received his education in Coos county and is employed by the Cody Lumber Company at Tampa. William J., who is assistant cashier in the Bank of Bandon, is married and has two children, Helen and Percy. He is also acting as postmaster of Bandon. Sarah and Maggie Bell, passed away in infancy. Arthur Percy, received a good business education and is serving as assistant postmaster of Bandon. Pearl A. is the wife of Edward Ellingson, of Coquille, who is engaged in the contracting and building business. They are the parents of one daughter, Pauline R. Maud G. resides at home with her parents. Jessie M. received a college education and is at home. Hattie makes her home with her parents.

John B. Sweet is liberal in his political views and actively and intelligently interested in the growth and advancement of Coos county, although he never seeks public office. He has achieved success by hard work and industry and by thoroughly practical business qualifications and his fine farm stands today as evidence of the value and usefulness of his activities.

JAMES L. COLE, a lifelong resident of Oregon, was born on the old family homestead in the Calapooia precinct of Douglas county, September 21, 1860. Mention is made of his family in connection with the sketch of his brother Joel A. Cole on another page of this work. James L. Cole was reared at home in the usual manner of farm lads, early becoming familiar with the duties and labors incident to the development of the fields. He acquired his education in the public schools and after reaching young manhood was associated with his brothers in the development and improvement of the home farm, for the father was for many years in ill health and thereby incapacitated for farm work. The early experiences of James L. Cole well qualified him for the duties and labors that have devolved upon him in later years and which have brought to him a substantial measure of success.

In November, 1887, was celebrated his marriage to Miss May Starr, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Felix and Leephena (Willets) Starr, who crossed the plains with ox teams from Indiana to Oregon in 1852, with their family, the father being captain of the wagon train. He spent the first winter in Oregon City and in 1853 Mr. and Mrs. Starr returned to Indiana and remained a year. He then bought a lot of blooded mares and drove them across the plains to Oregon. It was the first good stock to come to this section. He then made his way southward into the Calapooia valley. There he traded a span of oxen for three hundred and twenty acres of land, upon which he located, and he also bought another tract of similar size, thus becoming owner of six hundred and forty acres in the heart of the valley and comprising some of the finest land to be found in Douglas county. He built a sawmill on the Calapooia river, twelve or fourteen miles above Oakland, which was the first sawmill erected in Douglas county. Felix Starr died in 1871, while his wife long survived him, passing away in 1901.

After his marriage Mr. Cole continued to reside on the old homestead until 1892, when he and his wife purchased two hundred and eighty-eight acres of the Felix Starr home farm, to which they removed and upon which they have since resided. Mr. Cole, however, still retains his equity in the Cole homestead. He is one of the substantial citizens of this part of the state, enterprising, industrious and energetic, and the methods which he employs in the cultivation and development of his place indicate that he is thoroughly conversant with the most progressive ideas of farming.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Cole have been born four children: Grace M., who is now a student in the senior year in the State University of Oregon; Bessie, deceased; Lucian, at home; and Elsie, who is attending the Eugene high school. The parents are members of the Christian church and Mr. Cole is a republican in politics. While he has never been an office seeker, he has served for the past ten years as deputy assessor of his district. Matters relative to the welfare and upbuilding of this part of the state receive his earnest consideration and when his judgment dictates he gives to all such stalwart endorsement. He stands for all that is progressive in matters of citizenship, as he does in business life, and he is justly accounted one of the leading farmers of Douglas county.

FRANK MORSE is one of the leading business men of Coquille, where he is operating an independent light and power plant, supplying electric light to the cities of Coquille, Myrtle Point and Norway. He has advanced rapidly in the engineering profession, his efficiency and knowledge being guided and controlled by true business ability. He has been identified with his line of business practically all his active life, working in different cities in various capacities but always advancing. He is one of the foremost figures in the business world of Coquille, where as manager and proprietor of an important enterprise he has made his influence felt in commercial circles. He was born in California, August 8, 1865, and is a son of Harris and Mary C. Morse, natives of Maine. The parents went to California in 1848, traveling around the Horn and spending six months on the journey. They settled at Stockton, where the father engaged in the contracting business for a short time, later abandoning this occupation in order to take up mining. Eventually he purchased land and carried on general agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1907. His wife is still living upon the old homestead in California. She is the mother of three children, two of whom are yet living: Frank, the subject of this sketch; and Milton, who is in the black-smithing business in California.

Frank Morse received his education in the public schools of Stockton and remained with his parents until he was nineteen years of age, when he was appointed engineer in the mines, working in that capacity for two years. He then returned to Stockton in order to take a two years' course in a business college and when he had completed it he again worked in the mines. Later he clerked in a general store for two years and during that time purchased an interest in an electric light plant. He became assistant manager of that enterprise, gaining during this period experience not only in the scientific aspects of his occupation but also in the details of the operation of a modern and progressive business establishment. When he married he sold out his interests and went to Cloverdale, where he established a plant of a similar character. In 1897 he went to Ukiah, formed a partnership with Mr. Montgomery and engaged in the operation of a large electric-light enterprise. After four years they moved the plant to Coquille and conducted it successfully until 1910, when it was completely destroyed by fire. Mr. Morse is now operating a similar enterprise at Coquille and is furnishing light for that city and for Myrtle Point and Norway. He is progressive, energetic and successful and his plant is modern in all its equipment and accessories, and intelligently and efficiently managed. He thus ranks among the enterprising business men of his district. He owns property in Coquille and also in Bandon.

On July 3, 1897, Mr. Morse was united in marriage to Miss Margaret M. Smith, who was born at Sebastopol, California. Her parents are deceased. They had three children, the wife of our subject and her two brothers, both of whom live in Saginaw, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Morse are the parents of four children: one who died in infancy; Philip and Ruth, twins, born in 1906; and Fred S., who was born January 26, 1912, and died August 3d of the same year. Mrs. Morse is a devout adherent of the Methodist Episcopal church. Frank Morse gives his political allegiance to the republican party but is not unusually active in public affairs, preferring to devote his entire time to commercial activity.

HARLEY E. MORRIS, who settled in Eugene in 1900, is a dealer in pianos, organs and other musical instruments and manager of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Company in this city. He was born June 5, 1864, in Linn county, Oregon, his parents being George J. and Elezanna (Cook) Morris. George J. Morris, the father, was born in Richmond, Kentucky, March 15, 1818, and Elezanna (Cook) Morris, the mother, was born in Cross Creek Village, Pennsylvania, January 6, 1825. She moved with her parents to Steubenville, Ohio, where she received her education in the Young Ladies Seminary, thence going to Clark county, Missouri, where she taught school and was married, February 13, 1844. The parents crossed the plains by ox team to Oregon, arriving here in the fall of 1853, and spending over six months on the journey. While en route one of their children, a boy, a year and a half old, was taken from them by the grim hand of death and they had to bury him on the road. They settled on a government claim two miles east of Harrisburg, in Linn county, where the father gave his attention to agricultural pursuits and the mother taught school in their log cabin home for the benefit of the children of the neighborhood. George J. Morris and his wife helped to organize the first Christian church in Harrisburg, in which the father was a deacon. He passed away August 2, 1896, and the mother died January 9, 1903. They were the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living: Sarah R., the wife of W. M. Davidson, of Brownsville, Oregon; Minnie H., the wife of J. T. Dinwiddie, of Seattle, Washington; Addie; L. A., a contractor of Eugene; Charles L., postmaster at Harrisburg, Oregon; Harley E., of this review; and Irene E., the wife of J. S. Porter, of Portland, Oregon.

Harley E. Morris was educated in the public schools at Harrisburg, and between school terms he assisted his father on the farm. His first venture in the commercial world was as traveling salesman for the Kohler & Chase Music House of Portland, Oregon, which position he held for about ten years, his territory being the states of Oregon and Washington. In 1900 he settled in Eugene and formed a partnership with George F. Craw, engaging in his present business as dealer in pianos, organs and musical instruments, under the firm name of Morris & Craw. Shortly after the firm was established he purchased the interest of his partner and became the sole owner of the business, which he has since conducted. The Morris Music House is today the largest and best known house of this kind in the valley south of Portland, and is factory distributor for goods put forth by the National Piano Company, of Boston, which line embraces the famous Briggs piano, the Merrill, Norris & Hyde, also the Mehlin & Sons and many other makes.

On the 18th of November, 1891, Mr. Morris was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Baker, a daughter of J. S. Baker, of Benton county, Oregon, whose parents had crossed the plains in the '40s. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morris; an infant daughter, who died soon after birth; Beatrice Thecla; and Winnie Clarice. Mrs. Morris and her two daughters are members of the Congregational church of Eugene.

Fraternally Harley E. Morris is a charter member of Juniper Camp, No. 217, Woodmen of the World, of Harrisburg, Oregon, having passed through all the chairs, and having the distinction of holding the office of consul commander for two successive terms. He has transferred his membership to Eugene Camp, No. 115. He is also a member of Eugene Aerie, No. 275, Fraternal Order of Eagles, a charter member of the Eugene Commercial Club and a member of the Merchants Protective Association.

ALBERT E. CLAYTON is a native son of Oregon and one of the substantial agriculturists of Melrose and Coles Valley, Douglas county, where he owns three fine farms. He has been active in their management for many years and his systematic and progressive methods of operation have made them finely developed and highly productive. He is now turning over the supervision of these tracts to his son. Mr. Clayton was born in the district where he now resides on June 17, 1857, and is a son of Ashford and Jennima (Harper) Clayton, natives of Ohio. They were married in Illinois whither they had previously removed and in 1852 crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon, spending six months upon the journey from the Missouri river to Portland. They arrived in the latter city about the 1st of October and pushed on to Douglas county, where they both took up donation claims of one hundred and sixty acres, each in Coles valley. Upon this they located and here they resided until their deaths, the father passing away in 1902, when he was seventy-seven years of age and his wife in 1890, in her sixtieth year. Ashford Clayton was a staunch republican in his political beliefs and while he never sought public office he was an influential factor in his party's councils. His wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Albert E. Clayton was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools. Upon reaching his twenty-first year he took upon himself the operation and management of the home farm and for two years he was successful as a practical agriculturist. At the end of that time he purchased one hundred and sixty acres adjoining his father's donation claim and upon this he lived for twenty years, cultivating the soil according to the most approved principles and becoming increasingly prosperous. At the end of that time he removed to Melrose and a short time later bought one hundred and sixty acres in that vicinity which is now accounted the finest ranch in Douglas county. Mr. Clayton is still the owner of both of these tracts of land and is also the proprietor of his mother's donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres. He has given his personal attention and efforts to making his holdings productive and profitable and has spent over a quarter of a century in agricultural pursuits. He is now relaxing in his more arduous labors and is turning over the principal activities in connection with his ranches to his son.

In 1883 Mr. Clayton was united in marriage to Miss Emma Hawn, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Woodruff) Hawn, early pioneers in the settlement of the Sacramento valley, California, who came to Oregon in 1875. To Mr. and Mrs. Clayton have been born four children: Margaret Elizabeth, the wife of E. H. Stivers of Portland, Oregon; William E., who for the past nine years has been a teacher in commercial colleges and the high schools of San Francisco and Santa Clara, California, but who is now active in the management of his father's lands; Edlie Violet, who married W. F. Drew, an architect and builder, of Oakland, California; and Dora Grace, who holds the position of bookkeeper in the Roseburg National Bank.

Mr. Clayton was a republican, but is now independent, and while he has never sought public office his interest in education has led him to accept a position on the local school board where he has served for the past sixteen years and has given his undoubted talents and abilities to the cause of education and has given all his children an excellent high-school and business course. He is a member of Rising Star Lodge, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Roseburg. Mrs. Clayton is a devout adherent of the Christian Science church. Albert E. Clayton is one of the progressive and substantial agriculturists of the section and his policy has always been to expand and develop his holdings in an intelligent way. His ranches have been improved constantly and are now numbered among the private enterprises which are also valuable as state resources.

CHARLES A. PERKINS. A model hotel in its intricate operations is a mammoth undertaking when run successfully. No one can question the administrative ability of Charles A. Perkins, manager and director of the Gardiner Hotel of Gardiner, Oregon, who sees his smoothly running enterprise operated without noise or confusion along the most progressive and modern principles of inn-keeping. Mr. Perkins is a native son of Oregon, having been born in Gardiner, Douglas county, on July 6, 1866. He is a son of Solomon A. and Catherine (Elliott) Perkins, the former a native of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and the latter of New York state. Mr. Perkins' mother came with her parents when she was a girl nine years of age to San Francisco. Her father, Thomas Elliott, was captain of the vessel which brought him and his family around the Horn in 1856. He located in San Francisco and continued the seafaring life for many years. He was the first man to sail a vessel into the port of Umpqua which was later called Gardiner. He lost his vessel in attempting to cross the bar. His ship foundered on the south beach and was completely disabled. In 1865 Thomas Elliott removed his family to Gardiner, Oregon, where he resided until his death. Mr. Elliott was one of the sturdy pioneers in the early settlement of the state of Oregon. He was the man who helped Silas Hedden carry L. L. Williams, who had been shot by the Indians at the mouth of the Coquille river up that stream to Scottsburg in order to obtain medical aid. Mr. Elliott died in 1907 after having passed his ninetieth year. His death deprived Douglas county of a man of keen and constructive intelligence whose labors, always directed along developing lines, had been a conspicuous factor in progress and growth.

Solomon A. Perkins, the father of our subject, came west to California from New Brunswick when he was a young man and in the early '50s worked in the red woods of that state. He gave his entire active life to the logging industry. In 1865 he came to Gardiner, Oregon, in company with Thomas Elliott and later married his daughter Catherine with whom he resided in Gardiner until four years previous to his death when he removed to Portland where he passed away in January, 1911. His wife is still living and maintains her home in Portland.

Charles A. Perkins was reared at home and acquired a limited education in the public schools of Gardiner. The facilities which the city offered in this line were extremely primitive. The schools opened for instruction only three months in the year and were then carried on in a haphazard way. From early boyhood Charles Perkins was accustomed to work in the logging woods of Oregon during the time not occupied by his studies and as early as his fifteenth year was drawing a man's wages. His advancement was rapid and continuous and in the seventeen years of his labor in the logging wood he gained an expert and scientific knowledge of the details of lumbering and the method of operation in the great camps in the northern part of the state. In April, 1898, he abandoned his original line of occupation and accepted a position in the life saving station at the mouth of the Coquille river where he remained in the service until September, 1901. In that year he returned to Gardiner and bought the old Gardiner Hotel which he conducted along modern and progressive lines with gratifying success for a number of years. On March 15, 1910, he sold his property and was appointed superintendent of the building of the new cannery belonging to the Umpqua Cooperative Packing Company, in which he is a stockholder and director. In the following year his executive ability and business discernment earned him the position of manager of the concern and he was active in this line until 1911 when the new Gardiner Hotel was built and in March of the following year Mr. Perkins was made its manager, and is also a heavy stockholder and director. During the short period of his administration he has shown himself to be thoroughly conversant with the many details connected with modern inn-keeping in all its aspects. He has made the hotel which he manages one of the most modern enterprises of its kind in southern Oregon and has gained for the management a reputation for courtesy and consideration in every particular. The patrons of the hotel are increasing in number every year as they become acquainted with the comforts and luxuries to be obtained there. The building is equipped with hot and cold running water and is lighted by acetylene gas. It offers all modern conveniences and is known throughout Douglas county as a thoroughly progressive and up-to-date hostelry.

In 1891 Mr. Perkins was united in marriage to Miss Julia Murphy, a native of Calais, Maine, and a daughter of George E. Murphy, who came to Gardiner in 1877. To Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have been born two children: Clifford A., who was graduated from a four years' business course in Columbia University, Portland, Oregon, in 1911; and Floyd Francis, now pursuing the same line of studies in the Columbia University.

In his political views Mr. Perkins is a republican and actively interested in furthering the progress and development of his section of the country. His wife is a devout adherent of the Roman Catholic church and is well known in Gardiner as an exemplary and high-minded woman.

Charles Perkins in the management of the Gardiner Hotel is building up an enviable reputation as a practical innkeeper. He possesses a shrewd and discriminating mind, a capacity for detail, combined with broad comprehension, an economic knowledge of modern food values and a specialized grasp of the art of hotel-keeping which amounts almost to an inborn talent.

EARL E. ELLIOTT, who is extensively engaged in the general merchandise business at Eagle Creek, where he is also postmaster, was born at Damascus, Oregon, on the 13th of August, 1877, a son of Eli and Ophelia A. (Caton) Elliott. His paternal grandparents were natives of Tennessee and his mother's parents were born in Kentucky. The father was one of nine children and the mother was one of a family of seven. Mr. and Mrs. Eli Elliott were married in 1861, and to their union seven children were born: Albion B. of Powell Valley, Oregon, who is married and has three children, Ruby, Harold and Elsie; John C. of Damascus, Oregon, who is married and has four daughters, Nellie, Bernice, Mabel and Geneva; Edward L., also of Powell Valley, who is married and has four children, Ray, Ruth, May and William; Frank W., who is living in Alaska; Earl E., who is the subject of this review; Lulu M., who is the wife of Charles Simmons of Gresham, Oregon, and the mother of three children, Allen, Earl and Edward; and Florence I., who is the wife of H. F. Wihlon of Powell Valley, and has two children, Esther and Frances.

Earl E. Elliott acquired his education in the public schools of Damascus, where he studied until he was thirteen years of age. At that time his parents removed to Powell Valley and he entered the schools of that district and was a student there until he was twenty-one years of age. After graduating he taught school in HIGHLAND, CLACKAMAS county, for two years before entering upon a normal course at Monmouth College. Following the completion of his college course he went into his father's store in Powell Valley as a partner. He remained there until 1904, but in that year removed to Eagle Creek and opened a general merchandise store. Since his advent into the commercial circles of Eagle Creek he has built up a large business, carrying a complete stock of general merchandise. In addition to his store he has also interested himself in real estate and is at present the owner of not only his store and residence but also a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, ninety acres of which have been brought under a high state of productivity, while the balance is in timber. This farm is located three miles east of Eagle Creek and is valued at twenty thousand dollars. When he came to Eagle Creek Mr. Elliott had only thirty-five hundred dollars in cash, but after beginning business his finances at once began to increase. During the first year he did about eighty-five hundred dollars worth of business and he is now doing from fourteen to fifteen thousand dollars worth per year. He has sold more than one hundred thousand dollars worth of goods during his eight years he has been conducting his store, and during all that time has so managed his business that he has made himself one of the most valued citizens of the community. He seems to possess natural ability for dealing with the public and because of his careful study of the needs and requirements of his customers he has made his store one of the most important assets of the commercial enterprises in Eagle Creek.

On the 22d of January, 1902, Mr. Elliott was married to Miss Mary E. Jones, a daughter of N. J. and Annie (Bartlett) Jones, of Kansas. In politics Mr. Elliott gives his support to the democratic party, and although he is thoroughly alive to the issues of the day and is a sympathizer and supporter of the policies of his party he has never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty. For twelve years he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Gresham.

JAMES BERRY COLE, who has been a resident of Klamath county for more than two decades, is the owner of two ranches of one hundred and sixty acres each and in their operation has met with gratifying success, making a specialty of potato culture. His birth occurred near Sedalia, Missouri, on the 10th of March, 1866, his parents being Leonard and Louisa A. (Spence) Cole. The father was a native of Boone county, Missouri, while the mother's birth occurred near Sedalia, that state. During the infancy of their son James, they took up their abode in Christian county, Illinois, and about six years later removed to Dallas county, Texas, settling on a ranch fifteen miles south of the city of Dallas. Leonard Cole there passed away on the 5th of April, 1910, when eighty-five years of age, but is survived by his widow, who makes her home at Wheatland, Texas. General agricultural pursuits claimed his attention throughout his active business career. He learned the saddler's trade in early life and later familiarized himself with the occupation of plasterer, but found the work of the fields more congenial and as a farmer won prosperity. To him were born four children, as follows: Charles, who is a resident of Happy Camp, Siskiyou county, California; James Berry, of this review; Thomas, living in Dallas county, Texas; and Edward, of Eagle Ford, Texas.

James Berry Cole remained under the parental roof until twenty-two years of age and in 1888 made his way to San Diego, California. A short time later he took up his abode in Dixon, that state, working on a ranch for a few years. In 1891 he came to the Klamath basin in Klamath county, Oregon, and took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, which he improved and still owns. Subsequently he purchased his present home ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, which he operates in connection with the former, devoting his attention to general farming with excellent results. During a number of years he was a "buccaro," riding after cattle for many years. For the past three years he has owned and operated a threshing machine. He makes a specialty of potato culture and in the season of 1912 planted eighty acres to that vegetable. Through the successful conduct of his agricultural interests he has won a reputation as one of the substantial and representative citizens of his community. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Lodge No. 172 at Dixon, California.

JOHN D. BENNETT, who successfully operates his tract of seventy-five acres of land in Coos county where he is also active as a ranchman and a carpenter and builder, was born in Illinois in May, 1848. His parents were Thomas and Sarah (Baker) Bennett, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Indiana. In the last mentioned state their marriage occurred and to their union were born ten children, six of whom are still living. The surviving members of the family are: Mary, the wife of Mr. Peck of Spokane, Washington; Elizabeth, now Mrs. John Jenkins of Bandon, Oregon; George Washington, who is living in Texas; Orange S., who is a traveling salesman of South Dakota; Samuel A., who lives in Spokane; and John D., the subject of this sketch.

John D. Bennett started in independent life when he was extremely young. He was raised in Indiana and Minnesota and educated in the public schools of those states. He left home when he was twenty-three years of age and came to Oregon. His residence in this state dates from 1871. In boyhood he had learned the carpenter's trade and was active in this line of occupation for some time. He later took up land in Oregon, near the Washington boundary line, which he improved and developed for four years but eventually established himself in sawmill operation on the Coquille river. His mill he brought to a prosperous condition and then sold it to Binger Herman. Mr. Bennett entered the employ of Mr. Herman and operated the sawmill for a salary for a short time. He then took up carpentering again, making a specialty of bridge work and has never discontinued this occupation although he has also engaged in the cultivation of soil. He bought seventy-five acres of land near Gravel Ford in 1887 and has since operated it along modern and approved lines. He specializes in dairying and breeds and raises his own cows. He has twenty-five acres of land under cultivation and rich harvests of hay, grain and garden produce reward his enterprise and diligence every year. He is numbered among the representative agriculturists of Coos county.

In 1877 Mr. Bennett was united in marriage to Miss Mary Belle Bunch, a native of Kansas and a daughter of James C. and Mary (Saunders) Bunch, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Bennett is one of ten children born to her parents, nine of whom are still living. To Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have been born seven children: William, educated in the district schools of Coos county and for many years a prominent agriculturist in that region who upon his death left a widow who in her maidenhood was Miss Alice Heartley; Edna M., deceased; Charles R., a dentist of Pasco, Washington; Arthur R., engaged in general agriculture in Gravel Ford; Ray R., a teacher in the public schools of Coos Bay; Eva M., attending school; and Lois L., who is also pursuing her studies.

Mr. Bennett is a republican and actively interested in local affairs although he never seeks public office. He belongs to the Seventh Day Adventist church and is well known in religious circles. He has assisted to the best of his ability and with gratifying success in the slow process of development which has made Coos county one of the most productive sections of Oregon and has added that state to the rich and prosperous communities of America.

WILLIAM WESLEY TRAYLOR is following general farming in the Hard Scrabble district of Douglas county, and as a land owner and practical farmer has gained success which has come gradually and been natural evolution. He was born in Josephine county, Oregon, on October 12, 1859, and is a son of James N. and Eliza (Woodcock) Traylor, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. Mr. Traylor was reared at home and educated in the common schools of Josephine county. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-three years of age and at that time commenced his active life. He has been identified with agriculture since the beginning of his career. For four or five years he worked for wages upon a neighboring farm and acquired in this time a knowledge of the systems and methods which make farming practicable and lucrative. He was ambitious and economical and had soon saved a sufficient sum to rent a farm. His land was located in Jackson county and he brought it to a high state of cultivation before he came to Douglas county where for some time he rented land near Elkton. After a short period he purchased one hundred and ninety-eight acres adjoining his present farm but later sold this tract and bought the land which he now occupies. His holdings comprise three hundred and fourteen acres of productive and fertile land in the Hard Scrabble district of Douglas county, and by practical and efficient methods and personal supervision of all the details of his enterprise, he has brought it to a highly developed and improved state.

On the 19th of October, 1883, Mr. Traylor was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Powell, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Samuel Powell, a pioneer in the settlement of the state of Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Traylor have been born four children: James, who is in partnership with his father; Julia, the wife of Ivan Haines, of Lorraine, Oregon; and Millie and Edna, at home.

Mr. Traylor is a democrat in his political views and keeps himself well informed upon public questions. He and his wife affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church and are well known in the affairs of that organization. Influenced always by the most practical and scientific methods and guided by high ideals Mr. Traylor has, through his own well directed efforts, worked his way upward until he is today placed among the worthy and prominent agriculturists of Douglas county.

E. R. C. WILLIAMS, a ranchman residing five and a half miles southeast of Klamath Falls, is the owner of one hundred and eighty acres of land in Klamath county. His birth occurred in Attala county, Mississippi, on the 10th of October, 1862, his parents being Benjamin and Sally (McMath) Williams, both of whom died when our subject was but an infant. The McMath family owned a part of the present site of Birmingham, Alabama. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Williams had six children, three sons and three daughters, of whom Mr. Williams of this review is the only survivor.

E. R. C. Williams spent the first twenty years of his life in his native state. He was reared in the home of his grandmother until ten years of age, when the latter died and left him to make his own way in the world. In 1885 he came to Oregon, reaching Klamath county on the 20th of June of that year. Throughout the intervening twenty-seven years he has remained in that county and has lived on a ranch in the Klamath basin. He makes a specialty of dairying and has long enjoyed an enviable reputation as an enterprising and prosperous agriculturist. His holdings embrace one hundred and eighty acres of valuable land.

In 1890 Mr. Williams was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary H. Bryant, who was born in Missouri on the 12th of November, 1871, and arrived in this state with her parents on the 19th of March, 1889. A sketch of her father, Rev. J. W. Bryant, appears on another page of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been born seven children, as follows: J. L. Ferd; Robton, who passed away at the age of three years; Sally W.; William M.; Mary Z.; Bryant R.; and George Louis. All were born in Klamath county.

The democratic party has received Mr. Williams' loyal support since age first conferred upon him the right of franchise. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, the teachings of which he exemplifies in his daily life. He has the courage of his convictions and is recognized as a man of strict integrity, whom neither fear nor favor can swerve from a course which he believes to be right. His record is an excellent illustration of the power of industry and perseverance in the attainment of success.

REV. JOHN WALLACE BRYANT. A tract of land of ninety acres constitutes the home place of the Rev. John Wallace Bryant, who with the exception of a period of three years has resided continuously in Klamath county since January, 1889. His land has greatly increased in value and his attention is now largely given to the raising of chickens. He was born in Wilson county, Tennessee, July 19, 1847, his parents being Elijah London and Mary A. (McConnell) Bryant, who were also natives of that state. The maternal grandparents removed from North Carolina to Tennessee and the paternal grandfather, Elijah Bryant, was a native of England, whence he crossed the Atlantic with a brother and settled in North Carolina. Following the war Elijah L. Bryant, the father, removed with his family to Hart county, Kentucky, and was there drowned in 1865, when about fifty-five years of age, his birth having occurred in 1811. He was a carpenter and cabinet-maker and was a skilled workman. His wife, who was born in 1811, died when nearly eighty years of age. In their family were twelve children, one of whom, William Bryant, was a captain of the Twenty-third Tennessee Regiment during the Civil war, espousing the cause of the Confederacy at an early period in hostilities. He went out with one hundred and ten men and returned with only nine. All these were crippled, and Captain Bryant almost lost his life at Murfreesboro. He participated in most of the important battles of Mississippi and Virginia and was captured at Richmond. James L. Bryant was a soldier of the Twenty-second Tennessee Infantry and afterward reenlisted under Captain Forest, doing scout duty. Of the twelve children of the family, four sons and three daughters are yet living.

The Rev. John W. Bryant resided at home with his parents until twenty-two years of age, when he married and went to Missouri but afterward returned to Kentucky. Later he resided for a time in Tennessee and subsequently in Arkansas, whence he came to Oregon. When twenty-seven years of age he began preaching regularly as a minister of the Methodist church, but in 1896 united with the Congregational church and entered the denomination as pastor. His religious instruction proved a tangible force for good in the various communities in which he made his home. He removed from Arkansas to Oregon in January, 1889, and has since resided in Klamath county with the exception of two years spent in Jackson and one year in Josephine county. He has been interested in ranching most of his life and sold a ranch in Arkansas before he came to the northwest. When he arrived here he homesteaded on Lost river, Klamath county, securing one hundred and sixty acres of land which he still owns. He proved up on two hundred acres of desert land, which he sold. He now owns and resides on a ranch of ninety acres not far from Klamath Falls. This was formerly a tract of one hundred and sixty-two and a half acres but he gave his son a portion of this. It is situated on the Lakeview road, a mile from the corporation limits of the town. Something of the increase in property values in this district is indicated in the fact that while he paid four and a half dollars per acre for the land in 1900, he has since refused two hundred dollars per acre for it. He also has one hundred and sixty-three acres in another tract and forty acres in still another tract on Lost river. He now makes a specialty of raising pedigreed chickens and has upon his place many of the finest fowls produced in this section of the country.

On the 23d of December, 1869, in Kentucky, the Rev. J. W. Bryant was married to Miss Sarah N. De Witt, who was born in Hart county, Kentucky, and there resided until her marriage. She is a daughter of the Rev. N. C. and B. A. (Markham) De Witt, who were natives of Bedford county, Virginia, and were married there. Two children were born unto the parents ere their removal to Kentucky, where both the father and mother passed away. He was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and during the last sixteen years of his life he served as assessor of Hart county, Kentucky. Two of the great-grandfathers of Mrs. Bryant were soldiers of the Revolutionary war and her grandfathers were both soldiers of the War of 1812. To Mr. and Mrs. Bryant have been born the following children: Mamie H., the wife of E. R. C. Williams, of Klamath county; Emily B., the wife of J. H. Farrar, of Ashland, Oregon; James L., who passed away at Medford when a youth of nineteen; William N., whose demise occurred at Medford when he was sixteen years of age; Theo J., a resident of New Mexico; Elijah C., who died in infancy; Ella B., the wife of Leon Lewis, of Klamath county; Mrs. Sally W. Curran, who lives at home; and John Franklin De Witt, who was born in this state and is yet under the parental roof.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Bryant are strong temperance people and belong to families that have long been total abstainers. In politics he is a staunch democrat and his fraternal relations are with the Masons, the Eastern Star, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Good Templars. He has ever sought to conform his life to those principles of truth and honor which uplift the individual and to those teachings which recognize the brotherhood of mankind and the obligation of the individual to his fellows. By example as well as by precept he has pointed out to others the best way of life and his course has at all times awakened honorable regard.

CARL LOUIS ALBRECHT is one of the large landowners of Coos county, Oregon, having an undivided third interest in a valuable tract of agricultural land comprising a total of six hundred and forty acres. He was born in Bremen, Germany, on May 29, 1872, and is the son of Carl Henry and Germania S. (Windler) Albrecht. His parents were both natives of Germany who emigrated to America in 1883, reaching New York harbor on April 10 of that year. Immediately upon reaching American shores they continued their journey to the Pacific coast and settled at Marshfield in Coos county, this state, on May 10, 1883. Carl Henry Albrecht was by trade and occupation a shoemaker and had accumulated during his industrious and economical life a very large amount of personal and real property, of which he was possessed at the time of his death, which occurred in 1895, as did also the death of his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Albrecht five children were born: Jennie, the wife of Robert Kruger, of Marshfield, by whom she has five children; Carl Louis, of this review; Herman, who is deceased; and two who died in infancy.

Carl Louis Albrecht was reared in his father's home and educated in the district schools. He began life for himself at the age of eighteen as an employe of a steamboat company at Coos Bay and continued in this occupation until 1891, after which he was employed by a railroad corporation as one of a party in the surveying department of that company and continued to be so employed for two years. Their field of operations during that time was largely confined to the territory of Arizona. After severing his connection with the railroad company he was engaged in the employ of a river and harbor contracting company, with which he remained for four years, after which he was employed by a surveying company operating in Mexico. While in the employ of that concern he was engaged in topographical work and continued in that occupation for nearly a year, during which time his health became impaired and he, on that account, returned to Coos Bay and at once was engaged as the foreman for a fruit-drying company for one year and was afterward employed by the Simpson Lumber Company to survey for that concern a logging road, and since the date of his first engagement with that concern he has continued in the employ of that company. He is now the owner of a third interest in six hundred and forty acres of valuable agricultural land in this state.

On the 24th of December, 1901, in Marshfield, this state, Mr. Albrecht was united in marriage to Miss Fannie E. Warner, a daughter of William and Laura (Phillips) Warner, who were natives of Indiana and Missouri respectively. Both the father and mother of Mrs. Albrecht crossed the plains with their respective parents when they were children and upon reaching maturity their wedding was celebrated in this state, where her father purchased the donation claim of William Rowland and continued to live upon that property until the time of his death, which occurred in 1899. To Mr. and Mrs. Warner four children were born: John C., of Myrtle Point, this state, who lives on the old donation claim purchased by his father; Mary C., the wife of William Wise, of Myrtle Point; William, also of Myrtle Point; and Mrs. Fannie E. Albrecht. To Mr. and Mrs. Albrecht one child has been born, Vera L., her birth having occurred January 22, 1903. She is now in attendance at the public school.

Mr. Albrecht is a loyal adherent of the republican party. He has served three years as city councilman, his last term having recently expired. During his time of service as city councilman practically all of the harbor dredging and street paving and other important municipal improvements in Marshfield were started and many of them completed before the expiration of his last year's service in the council. Both he and his wife are members of the Fraternal Union. Their residence is located at 215 North Fourth street, Marshfield, Coos county, this state. Carl Louis Albrecht is distinguished among his fellows for his public-spirit and the support he gives to the development and improvement of his community. He is an earnest, capable and trustworthy business man and recognized as one of the leading citizens of Coos county and the city of Marshfield.

HON. JOSEPH DE WITT MATLOCK. The life history of the Hon. Joseph De Witt Matlock forms a connecting link between the primitive pioneer past and the progressive present. He came to Oregon when all this district had every evidence of frontier life; he also lived and conducted business in Alaska during that period when it was just entering upon the commercial and industrial activity that has wrought such marvelous changes there in the past two or three decades. He has been no mere idle witness of all that has occurred but a most helpful factor in the work of progress and improvement of the northwest in a material way, while upon its political history he has also left the impress of his ability and individuality. He is now living retired in Eugene, well meriting the rest that crowns his former labors. He has passed the seventy-third milestone on life's journey, his birth having occurred in Benton county, Tennessee, March 8, 1839. His father, Edward Lane Matlock, was a farmer of that locality for many years although a native of the state of Georgia. In the fall of 1839 he removed with his family to Dade county, Missouri, where he not only continued in the occupation of farming but was also prominent in the public life of the community, serving for one term as county judge. In 1853, attracted by the glowing stories of the golden west, he came to Oregon, settling north of Goshen, in Lane county, upon a donation claim of two hundred and ninety-six acres. For nine years thereafter his time and labors were devoted to the cultivation and improvement of that tract of land. Like the great majority of settlers in this section, however, he attempted to win a fortune in the mines, following the discovery of the rich mineral resources of the state. In 1862 he went to the mines at Florence and the following year to the Boise basin, but in the latter year contracted lung fever, which caused his death, July 1, 1863, when he was forty-six years of age, his birth having occurred April 18, 1817. He had served as a wagon master in the Rogue River Indian war of 1855-56 and in many ways was prominently and helpfully connected with the pioneer development of the state. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan C. Fry, was born in North Carolina, December 3, 1815, and died in Heppner, Oregon, May 11, 1896. In the family were seven sons and a daughter: Caswell John A., who was a soldier of the Rogue River Indian war and is now owner of a ranch in Morrow county, Oregon; Joseph De Witt, of this review; James W., formerly sheriff of Marion county and now a resident of Heppner; Edward Lane, who died in Heppner while serving as sheriff of the county; William F., a capitalist of Pendleton, Oregon, who served for two terms in the state senate and was a major general of the Oregon National Guard; Thomas J., a ranchman of Heppner; Benjamin F., who died in Morrow county; and Sarah, who became the wife of Lee Greenwood and died in Eugene.

Joseph De Witt Matlock began his education in the schools of Dade county, Missouri. His father was a man of public spirit in that community and had borne half the expense of maintaining a school in his district. The son was fourteen years of age when the family started across the plains in April, 1853. They traveled with ox teams and had a large number of loose cattle, which the boy drove, walking the entire distance from the Mississippi valley to the northwest. The family brought with them six or seven wagons and completed the journey with no unusual occurrences save the incidents and hardships which always featured in such a trip. They followed the old Oregon trail until they reached Fort Boise and thence came by Meek's cutoff, which led along the Malheur river to the big lakes. Two weeks were consumed in going around the lakes. They also crossed the desert, where their supply of water became exhausted. They afterward crossed the Deschutes river and at length reached what is known as the Military road. While en route they were forced to cross the Willamette river nineteen different times but at length reached their destination on the 26th of October, 1853.

In his boyhood days J. De W. Matlock worked on his father's farm for several years. At times he had the opportunity of continuing his education in the common schools of Goshen and in the Eugene high school. He next entered Columbia College but the school building was destroyed by fire while he was still a student there. He afterward continued his studies in the high school at Cornelius, Oregon, this ending his work in the classroom. In 1862 he went to the mines at Florence, where he met with fair success, after which he returned to Lane county.

In the fall of that year Mr. Matlock wedded Elizabeth E. Rutledge, who was born in Illinois, November 9, 1844, and was brought to Oregon in 1853. The young couple began their domestic life on a farm seven miles southeast of Eugene. Mr. Matlock purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he cultivated until the death of his wife in 1864. He then took up the profession of teaching, which he followed for two years, and within that time he was elected county superintendent of public instruction, in which capacity he served for a term. He preferred commercial interests, however, and on his retirement from office engaged in pork packing and in general merchandising at Pleasant Hill, Lane county. After twenty months, however, he again took up his abode upon a farm, selecting eight hundred and fifty acres in the vicinity of Pleasant Hill, whereon he carried on general agricultural pursuits and stock-raising for fifteen years. He met with excellent success in that undertaking and within the period of time designated had won a very gratifying little fortune. He then sold his property and removed to Eugene, but he did not retire permanently at that time from business life. On the contrary, he became identified with commercial interests, purchasing the store of T. G. Hendricks in 1884. Two years afterward he erected at the corner of Willamette and Eighth streets a handsome three-story business block, to which he removed his stock of goods, there successfully continuing in business until 1896, when he sold out and prepared to go to Alaska. He was en route for that country in January, 1898, going first to Skagway, after which he engaged in business at Lake Bennett, British Columbia, for two years. He sold out there with the intention of moving his stock to Dawson and proceeded down the Yukon river, taking his goods with him on flatboats. While en route he lost about two thousand dollars through the sinking of a boat in a storm, for, although he succeeded in raising the boat, the stock was almost worthless. In Dawson he again embarked in general merchandising but after eighteen months closed out his store there and returned to Eugene, making the trip down the Yukon river to St. Michael and thence to Nome. He is now practically living retired, although he owns valuable property interests in this part of the state, including five hundred acres about five miles from Eugene, which is devoted to stock-raising. For many years he was interested in the Eugene Lumber Company as one of its directors. In business matters his judgment has ever been found to be sound and reliable and his enterprise unflinching. Prosperity has crowned his labors, enabling him to live retired in the enjoyment of rest which has been truly earned and is richly deserved.

Having lost his first wife, Mr. Matlock married her half-sister, Louisa Rutledge, who was born in Illinois, April 1, 1851, and died in Eugene, July 17, 1891. He later wedded Mrs. Sarah Durant, the widow of William Durant. She was born in Indiana, August 15, 1843, and became a resident of Oregon in 1874. Her father was Samuel Lowe, a native of Ireland, who, on coming to America, followed farming near Omaha, Nebraska, for a considerable period and after he retired made his home in that city until his death. The first husband of Mrs. Matlock was a merchant of Eugene, who died in 1857. Of the six children born of their union five are now deceased, while a daughter, Jennie, is the wife of Robert M. Pratt, of Eugene. Mr. Matlock is the father of twelve children: Elizabeth, the wife of S. C. Smith, of Eugene; Edis De Witt; Caswell C.; Lulu S., who died in Eugene; Louisa C., the wife of George Randeubusch, of Los Angeles; Bertha, the wife of E. E. Emmons, of Dawson, British Columbia; Mary M., who died in Eugene; Joseph Frye; Frankie and William, who have passed away; Eugene; and Hazel, also deceased.

Mr. Matlock is well known as a member of the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Eugene Lodge, No. 11, F. & A. M.; Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M.; Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T.; the consistory; and Al Kader Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a past noble grand of Spencer Butte

Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F.; and belongs to Wimawhala Encampment. His religious faith is evidenced in his membership in the Christian church. He has always taken an active part in public affairs and is a broad-minded citizen, whose efforts have been an effective force for progress and improvement in the communities in which he has lived. In 1874 he was elected on the democratic ticket to the state legislature and he was chosen mayor of Eugene for two terms, or six years. He also served as a member of the city council for ten years more and has been chairman of the street commissioners and health commissioners. He was mayor and the moving spirit when the power plant on the McKinzie and waterworks of Eugene were put in, and laid the foundation for the city electric lighting system, all of which the city now owns. It took him eight years, as mayor and councilman, to accomplish these things, owing to the opposition of capitalists and corporations who owned these public utilities. He was instrumental in having a committee appointed to look after these various measures and was the chief factor in bringing to pass the movements which have proved beneficial to the city. He has acted as chairman of the Lane county democratic central committee and was a member of the first congressional district committee of his party. His interests and activities have touched the various phases of life which are factors in progress and improvement. He has ever kept abreast with the thinking men of the age, has held to high ideals and yet has utilized the most practical methods in their accomplishment. It would be difficult to determine wherein has been the field of his greatest usefulness, yet all acknowledge the value of his service along many lines, honoring him for what he has accomplished and for the public-spirited devotion which he has displayed to the city and state of his adoption.

NICKOLAUS BECKER. Germany has furnished many of the thrifty and substantial citizens of Marion county. Among these Nickolaus Becker, who conducts a harness store in Woodburn, stands prominent. His birth occurred in the fatherland on the 2d of August, 1848, his parents being Johanas and Mary (Mueller) Becker, both of whom were born in Germany but came to America in 1874. After their arrival in this country they settled in Wisconsin for a short time previous to going to Nebraska where they remained until their deaths, which occurred at the ages of ninety-eight and sixty respectively. They were the parents of eight children, three of whom passed away in Germany, the others being: Jacob A., a resident of Idaho; Mary, who still makes her home in Germany; Nickolaus, who is the subject of this review; Michael, a resident of Kansas; and Mrs. Bogner of Nebraska.

In 1872, at the age of twenty-four years, Nickolaus Becker left his native land and came to America. Previous to his departure he had received a good common-school education and had served as a soldier in the Franco-

Prussian war. His first residence in America was in Wisconsin, but after a few years he removed to Nebraska and two years later, in 1879, took up his residence in Grand Island, that state. In this latter city he managed a harness store which eventually became a wholesale harness and shoe finding establishment and which he conducted for twenty-two years. In 1901 he removed to Woodburn, Oregon, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He purchased a farm of thirty acres, a mile and a half from Woodburn and for four years he was engaged in the cultivation and management of this property. At the end of that time his sons, Edward A. and Anthony J., took charge of it, and at the same time Mr. Becker again engaged in the harness business, this time opening a store in Woodburn which is now conducted by himself and his son, George N. He has met with great success in this line and has a good knowledge of leather goods. His practical judgment and business ability have enabled him to work up a profitable trade, and also to give complete satisfaction to those who are numbered among his patrons. He also owns one quarter block of valuable business property in Woodburn which is proving a good investment.

On the 14th of January, 1879, Mr. Becker was married to Miss Barbara Bogner, whose birth occurred in Missouri and who was a daughter of Christopher Bogner. The father is a native of Bavaria, Germany, and came to America when a young man. He first settled in Missouri where the death of his wife occurred and later, in 1870, he removed to Nebraska, where he resided until his death in 1890. Mrs. Bogner was one of ten children, six of whom are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Becker seven children have been born. George N., the eldest, was born on the 3d of February, 1880, and is married to Salina Eckhout, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Eckhout, the former a native of Belgium and the latter of Germany. They are both residing in Woodburn. George Becker is in partnership with his father in the harness-making business in Woodburn. John H., the second son, was born in September 1882, and is residing in Portland where he conducts a dry-goods business at Twelfth and Washington streets. Edward A. was born in 1886, and is a resident of Marion county where he lives upon his farm and is also engaged in the manufacture of cigars. He cultivates and raises all the tobacco which he uses in making his cigars. Clara M., who is living at home, was born in 1888. Anthony Joseph and Lucy M. E. were born in 1892 and 1893 respectively, and are also living at home. Elizabeth died at the age of nine years.

In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Becker are Catholics, holding membership in the Roman Catholic church which they and their family attend. During his residence in Woodburn, Mr. Becker has shown himself to be a reliable and public-spirited citizen. He cooperates in many movements for the general good, and is particularly interested in developing the business interests of the county. He is an active and willing worker and stands high in the regard of all who know him while his acquaintances cover a wide territory because of the extent of his business interests.

PALMER AYRES owns and operates a ranch of five hundred and fifty acres, located five miles north of Eugene, where for over forty years he has engaged in agricultural pursuits. His birth occurred in Iowa, in 1848, his parents being Eli and Ruth (Stevens) Ayres, both of whom are deceased, the mother having passed away in Washington, in 1882. The father, who was a minister of the Baptist church, was a native of England, but the mother was born in Canada. They were married in Illinois but subsequently removed to Iowa. After the death of the father the mother married again, her second union being with Sampson Shaw, and together with her husband and family crossed the plains in an emigrant train to Oregon in 1864. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ayres, of whom our subject is the youngest. The others in order of birth are as follows: Sarah R., the widow of D. M. Kerby, of Dayton, Washington; W. E., who is also a resident of Dayton; Amelia and Charles, both of whom are deceased; and J. A., who lives in Harrisburg, Linn county, Oregon. There were two children born of the second marriage: Grace, who died young; and Abel, who lives in Idaho.

The first sixteen years in the life of Palmer Ayres were passed in his native state, whence he removed with his mother and step-father to Oregon in 1864. In December of the following year he located in Lane county, and for a time attended school in Eugene. At the age of eighteen years, he started out to make his own way in the world, and during the succeeding seven years devoted his energies to teaching in the country schools and followed such other occupations as afforded him the means of earning an honest living. Upon attaining his majority he was married and two years later he invested his earnings in one hundred and sixty acres of land that formed the nucleus of his present ranch. He immediately settled upon his place and has ever since devoted his energies to its further improvement and cultivation. He has prospered in his undertakings and has extended the boundaries of his ranch until it now embraces five hundred and fifty acres, one hundred and forty of which are under cultivation.

Mr. Ayres was married on the 22d of March, 1869, to Miss Mary E. Benson, the youngest child of Edward S. and Sarah (Tandy) Benson, both of whom are deceased. They were the parents of five children, the others being as follows: Rebecca, Francis and Emily, all of whom are deceased; and Damaris, the wife of M. M. Gillespie, of Lane county. The father, who was a Baptist minister, died when Mrs. Ayres was a child. The mother crossed the plains with her mother and brothers in 1851, and located in Lane county near Mrs. Ayres' present home. After the death of Mr. Benson she was again married, her second union being with Vincent S. McClure. Their only child died in infaucy. After the death of Mr. McClure, Mrs. McClure made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Ayres until she passed away on the 20th of January, 1899. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ayres, five of whom are still living, as follows: Edward L., who is a resident of Junction City, Oregon, is married and has three children: Chester, Palmer and Wallace. Fannie married J. S. Walls of Lane county, and they have three children: Charles, Palmer and Nellie. Cora, the wife of G. F. Saunders, also of Lane county, has four children: Merle, Venita, Ruth and Pasco. William, who is likewise a resident of this county, has two children, Thelma and Harold. Lillian, the youngest member of the family, is living at home with her parents. The deceased members of the family are as follows: Sarah Ruth, who was the second in order of birth, first married John D. Fooshee, and after his death wedded Joseph Wood, and became the mother of one child, who is deceased; Charles and Anna, the fourth and fifth in order of birth; and Nellie. They were all given a good education and William is a graduate of the business college at McMinnville, Oregon.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ayres belong to the Baptist church, in the faith of which they have reared their family. Mr. Ayres votes the democratic ticket. He is one of the highly esteemed pioneers of this section, as is also his wife, who located here in 1851 with her parents, and still holds the deed to eighty acres of the old Benson donation claim. He has become one of the substantial ranchmen of the community, which fact must be attributed to his own efforts, as he began his business career without any capital and is in every sense of the word a self-made man.

HON. HARRISON RITTENHOUSE KINCAID. Long a leader of public thought and action, Hon. Harrison Rittenhouse Kincaid has left his impress in notable measure upon the history of Eugene and of Oregon at large. His labors have taken tangible form in support of progressive measures, and many specific incidents may be cited where advancement has been greatly conserved directly through his efforts. He was long identified with the Oregon State Journal, the oldest weekly newspaper in the state owned by one party, and in addition to the duties which the management of this paper entailed his work of a public nature has been of far-reaching and beneficial effect.

Judge Kincaid has now passed the seventy-sixth milestone on life's journey. He was born in Madison county, Indiana, January 3, 1836, and is the eldest of a family of seven children. With the exception of his sister, Elizabeth M. Gale, the widow of James M. Gale, formerly a noted newspaper man and owner, but now deceased, and himself, all have passed away. The Kincaids come of Scotch-Irish ancestry, the first American representative locating in Virginia, where Francis Kincaid, the grandfather, was born. It was subsequent to Francis Kincaid's marriage that he moved westward to Madison county, Indiana, and with his family settled eighteen miles northeast of Indianapolis. He became one of the pioneer farmers of that state. His son, Thomas Kincaid, was born in Greenbrier county, Virginia, in 1800, and there spent the first seventeen years of his life, after which he accompanied his parents to the Hoosier state. His business training was of a most practical character. He aided in the various duties of the farm and also learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in connection with general agricultural pursuits throughout his entire life. Moreover, he possessed notable musical ability, becoming an excellent performer on the violin, and thus he added not only to his own pleasure but also greatly to the happiness and enjoyment of others. He was ever a wide-awake, alert and progressive man, deeply interested in the important questions of the day whether of a local or national character, and while a resident of Indiana he became captain of a company of state militia. No duty of citizenship was ever neglected by him and his political allegiance was given to the republican party, which was formed to prevent the further extension of slavery, of which he was a strong opponent. He was small of stature but was vigorous and active and was a great runner. Pioneer life proved attractive to him, as it had to his ancestors, and with the intention of establishing his home on the frontier of Texas he started for the southwest but in St. Louis met a friend who induced him to choose Iowa as a place of location. He accordingly became a resident of Appanoose county, where he spent the winter, which was a severe one and fixed his determination of becoming a resident of Texas. In April, 1845, he set out once more for the south but in Van Buren, Arkansas, he met so many who were returning that he became discouraged and went east to St. Francis, Arkansas, where he spent the winter. After a short sojourn at Memphis, Tennessee, he returned to Madison county, Indiana, and occupied his old home until 1853. In that year he made the long and arduous journey across the plains to the Pacific coast, settling on a farm three miles southeast of Eugene in Lane county, Oregon. However, the town of Eugene had been laid out only the year before and as yet not a house had been built within its corporation limits, although Eugene Skinner was the owner of a house below Skinner's Butte and Hilyard Shaw had one where the main building of the University of Oregon now stands. Jim Huddleston and Captain Ankeny had a plank shanty at the ferry where the bridge has since been built over the Willamette river. The father continued to make his home upon the farm on which he originally settled until he went to live with his son Judge Kincaid, passing away at his residence in 1865, at the age of sixty-five years. He had married Nancy Chodrick, a native of Butler county, Ohio, and a daughter of Peter Chodrick, who removed from Ohio to Indiana, where he spent his remaining days. At the remarkable age of ninety-five years Mrs. Kincaid is a well preserved woman and makes her home with her son Judge Kincaid.

Judge Kincaid began his education in the district school in the vicinity of his father's home. He was a youth of seventeen when the family started across the plains with ox teams, he driving one of the teams from Indiana to the Willamette valley. The travelers encountered many hardships and difficulties incident to a trip of that character. Leaving Indiana in February, they crossed the Mississippi river on the ice and from the city of Burlington made their way through Iowa to the Missouri river, crossing to the west side of that stream at a point nine miles below where Omaha now is. It was necessary for them to tarry for a brief period in order that the grass might grow and thus furnish pasturage for the stock. They continued to the northwest over the Barlow route to Oregon, at which time there was not a single house on the site of Omaha nor did they see any habitation on the way until they reached Foster, Oregon, about twelve miles from Oregon City, where they arrived September 29, 1853, reaching Lane county on the 11th of October. During the succeeding two years Judge Kincaid was largely occupied with the task of assisting his father in the development and improvement of the home farm. Especially in the winter time did he give his attention to that work, while in the summers he was employed by Isaac and Elias Briggs in digging a mill race at what is now Springfield. In 1855 he purchased a pony and miner's outfit and started for the Rogue river mines. In the placer mines at Althouse creek the Indians became troublesome, surprised the miners and killed several before the others saw the necessity of preparing for attack. They then erected a fort in that location and for several weeks were compelled to remain continually on the defensive.

Seeing no further chance for mining, Judge Kincaid and his partner started for Crescent City, California, where they remained until spring, earning their livelihood by chopping cord wood and splitting rails, making fourteen thousand rails. In the spring of 1856 as a steerage passenger Judge Kincaid journeyed on the steamer Goliath to San Francisco and for several weeks was engaged in erecting a plank fence where the wharves of the Pacific Steamship Company are now found. He then went by steamer to Sacramento, walked from there to Folsom City and was soon engaged in mining on the American river near Auburn, where he continued until the water dried up. He afterward worked in the stables of the American Express Company at Marysville and later found employment with Matthew Sparks upon his ranch at Bear river. When his employer sold his property there Judge Kincaid accompanied him to Colusa county and was there engaged in making rails for his employer. The following summer he followed freighting in the mountains near Marysville but in 1857 decided to return to Oregon. However, he expected to go back to California and there left his outfit valued at about five hundred dollars, for which he never was paid. At San Francisco he boarded a steamer bound for Portland and thence proceeded to Corvallis, whence he walked to Eugene.

The first work that Judge Kincaid did in Oregon was cutting logs, which he hauled to the mill race and had sawed on shares, using the lumber to build his house, having purchased six acres of land in the southern part of Eugene before going to California. He also employed the burning of charcoal as a means of livelihood and sold the product to Eugene blacksmiths. In the meantime he had come into full recognition of the value of education and when he had saved a little money he decided to attend school, entering Columbia College as a member of a class which numbered many men who afterward became famous, including Joaquin Miller and his brother John Miller, D. D. S., Judge Watson, Joseph D. Matlock, Judge J. J. Walton and Jefferson Blewins. It was about this time that Judge Kincaid entered upon his journalistic career. It was the year 1860, when most momentous questions were being everywhere discussed. The Herald, a democratic paper, strongly supported the secession movement in articles written by President Ryan, of Columbia College, under the pseudonym of Vindex. At length Judge Kincaid was induced to answer these through B. J. Pengra's paper, called the People's Press, writing under the name of Anti Vindex. President Ryan ascribed the articles to Mr. Pengra and made an attempt to kill him, after which he escaped to Virginia and entered the Confederate army. The next summer found Judge Kincaid as a staff member of the People's Press, the leading republican paper of the state, and when its proprietor was nominated for presidential elector and was making campaign speeches the Judge was left to learn printing, while the presswork and nearly all of the writing was done by him during the campaign of 1860. A short time afterward he gave up this work and for two summers was engaged in packing flour and produce to Canyon City but again became connected with editorial work, writing for a short time for the State Republican, the Union Crusader and the Copperhead Killer. The last named was edited by the Rev. A. C. Edmunds, who wrote principally upon religious subjects, leaving Judge Kincaid to handle the political questions. A year later he and Joseph Ware purchased the paper and changed its name to the Oregon State Journal. The partnership, which had begun March 12, 1864, continued for a year, when Judge Kincaid became sole proprietor. He conducted this paper for forty-five years and twenty-two weeks, the last issue being dated May 29, 1909, owing to the fact that daily newspapers killed the demand for weekly publications. He ever held his paper to the highest possible standard and he is today the oldest newspaper man in the state. As dean of the profession he occupies an honored place. A contemporary biographer has written: "Politically no man has exercised more influence than Judge Kincaid, for he has proven himself one of the strong and reliable men of his party and as such has won the commendation of leaders. He has always been a staunch republican and in 1896 joined the ranks of the silver republicans, in entire sympathy with whom he has since remained." When the convention of his party met in Portland April 7, 1870, all the nominations were speedily made except that of state printer, for which position there were three candidates, the late Henry L. Pittock, of the Oregonian, Henry Denlinger, of the Oregon Statesman, and Dr. N. C. Gault. The friends of Judge Kincaid, who was then, from 1866 until 1879, a clerk in the United States senate, three thousand miles away, and was not a candidate, used his name. He was nominated on the fifth ballot, receiving one hundred and nine votes, while Denlinger and Pittock were each given seventy-six. The nomination was then made unanimous and Judge Kincaid returned from Washington to conduct the campaign. Further political honors came to him in 1894 in his election to the position of secretary of state on the republican ticket, his service beginning in January, 1895, and covering four years. In 1898 the same position was virtually his but he could not indorse the gold standard platform and, therefore, would not again become a candidate on that basis. He cast his lot with the silver republican ticket and was defeated, though he led the ticket. In 1900 he was nominated on the citizens' ticket for county judge and overcame a majority of five hundred votes, entering upon the duties of the position in July, 1900, for a four years' term. For thirteen years, from 1866 until 1879, he was a clerk in the United States senate, first in the finance room, later in the executive room and afterward in the enrolling room, while subsequently he served as indexing clerk until 1879, when a change in the political situation at Washington made it more profitable for him to return to Eugene. He then again assumed charge of his paper, for which he had written letters and editorials throughout the entire time. Aside from all his varied activities Judge Kincaid took a deep interest in agricultural affairs in the county and devoted three hundred and twenty acres of the old Kincaid donation claim to stock-raising. He was likewise interested in mining. He has also dealt largely in real estate, having platted Kincaid's addition of thirty lots, while there are yet seven and a half acres unplatted. At the east end of Eugene he laid out Kincaid Park of one hundred and fifty lots and a sixty-three acre tract which lies across the railroad, extending to his father's donation claim and a mile and a quarter south, making two and a half miles of land from the head of the mill race extending southward. This is called Kincaid Park. His son now has charge of his real-estate interests. Judge Kincaid also owns eight hundred and ninety-four acres two and a half miles from Creswell and the Eugene & Great Western Land Company has charge of the sale of this tract.

H. R. Kincaid went to Washington, D. C., in the fall of 1866 along with Hon. J. H. D. Henderson, member of congress from Oregon, by steamer from San Francisco via the Isthmus to New York, and thence by rail. While in government service at Washington about thirteen years, most of the time being a clerk in the United States senate, he traveled across the continent to and from Oregon by rail frequently when congress was not in session, the first time just after the Union & Central Pacific railroad had been completed between Omaha and Sacramento. He was one of the six delegates from Oregon in the republican national convention at Chicago in 1868 that nominated U. S. Grant for president and Schuyler Colfax for vice president, and represented one of the other delegates by proxy, which he transferred to and which was voted by Congressman Rufus Mallory. He was also one of the six delegates from Oregon in the republican national convention at Philadelphia in 1872 that nominated U. S. Grant for reelection as president and Henry Wilson for vice president, and represented one of the other delegates by proxy, which he transferred to and which was voted by United States Senator Henry W. Corbett. He was elected to and served in many republican county and state conventions in Oregon during a period of more than thirty years.

While serving as secretary of state of Oregon, having been elected by a large popular vote in 1894, at a special session of the legislature, in 1898 he was the choice of the opposition members of the legislature to the regular party candidate and received twenty-three votes for United States senator on the final vote when Joseph Simon was elected. secretary of state was then the most influential and by far the most lucrative office of the state and consequently the most sought after and the hardest to obtain, much more so than the office of governor. It included not only the office of secretary of state as in other states, but also the office of state auditor, state insurance commissioner, state incorporation commissioner, state building and loan commissioner, and member of the boards that controlled the state insane asylum, the state deaf-mute school, the state reform school (now called the "State School"), the state blind school, the State Agricultural College, the State Normal School, the Soldiers Home and the sale and management of all state lands and the loaning and management of the large sums of money belonging to the school fund. Governor William P. Lord at the close of his term of office in 1900, appointed his friend H. R. Kincaid a regent of the University of Oregon, but his name was withdrawn by Governor Geer immediately after he had entered upon the duties of his office before the senate had an opportunity to confirm it, although a large majority of the senators protested against the withdrawal and would have confirmed it had not the chairman of the committee returned it to the governor without giving the senate a chance to vote on it.

Perhaps no two other men ever served in important positions where they were closely associated and their duties sometimes brought them into conflict more harmoniously and cordially than did Governor Lord and Secretary of State Kincaid. Their association made them lifelong friends. Mr. Kincaid was very active in securing the passage of the act locating the University of Oregon at Eugene, and remained at the state capitol during the entire session of the legislature, when the act was passed, working for it.

On the 29th of September, 1873, in Macomb county, Michigan, Judge Kincaid wedded Augusta Lockwood, a native of that locality. Her brother, C. M. Lockwood, for many years was identified with the interests of Oregon although he died in Michigan. He and John Haley, of Idaho, father of Judge Haley, owned a stage line from Salt Lake to The Dalles. Mr. Lockwood brought his sister to The Dalles on a visit and there she became acquainted with Judge Kincaid, whom she also met in Washington, D. C., and they were married at her Michigan home. Their only child is Webster Lockwood.

Judge Kincaid is connected with the State Pioneer Association, the Oregon Historical Society, the Eugene Commercial Club and formerly belonged to the Ilihee Club of Salem and was a member of the Multapor Club of Portland, which is now out of existence. Judge Kincaid's life has, indeed, been one of great usefulness. His ideas have always been practical and his methods progressive and what he has undertaken he has accomplished. The years have brought him not only success but honor, and he stands today among the foremost residents not only of Eugene but of all Oregon, where he has a very wide acquaintance.

MRS. NANCY KINCAID was born in Butler county, Ohio, a few miles from Cincinnati, July 7, 1816. Her parents were Peter and Elizabeth (Steele) Chodrick. Her father was a native of Delaware and her mother was a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. Her parents moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio, floating down the Ohio river in a flatboat, about 1812. They moved to the thickly timbered wilderness of Indiana about the year 1822, when the subject of this sketch was about six years old, and settled about eighteen miles northeast of where Indianapolis is now located, with a population of two hundred and forty thousand. Indianapolis was founded in 1820, and became the seat of government in 1825, the state government having been established in 1816. The land where they cleared the timber and made a small farm and resided the remainder of their lives is in the corner of what is now Madison county on Fall creek at the mouth of Lick creek. They had nine children, four boys and five girls, Nancy being the fourth child. Three were born in Pennsylvania, two in Ohio, and four in Indiana.

In 1831 Nancy Chodrick was married to Thomas Kincaid, sixteen years her senior, at the residence of her parents. He was the second son of Francis and Nancy Kincaid, nee Murdock, who came from Virginia, now West Virginia, and settled in the wilderness of Indiana, about the same time as the Chod-ricks. They had nine children, five boys and four girls. They were both of Scotch-Irish descent, that is their parents were Scotch who migrated to the north of Ireland and thence to America in colonial times.

Thomas and Nancy Kincaid had born to them nine children, five boys, and four girls, seven while residing in Indiana, one while residing temporarily in Iowa, and one at their home near Eugene, Oregon. Three died in infancy. The other six lived to mature ages, but only two are now living, Harrison R., the eldest, and Elizabeth M. Gale, both residing in Eugene, Oregon.

In 1844 Thomas and Nancy Kincaid, with their three children, Harrison, Rebecca and Elizabeth, started in a two-horse wagon to move from Indiana to Texas. At St. Louis, Missouri, they met with friends who persuaded them to go to Iowa. They traveled in the winter of 1844-5 up through Illinois, and crossed the Mississippi river with their team on the ice at Fort Madison. They spent the remainder of the winter near Iowaville on the Des Moines river. This village is not now on the map. The winter was so intensely cold that in the fall of 1845 they started on for Texas. They crossed the Des Moines river at Attumwa, and the Missouri river on a boat propelled by horse power at Lexington. They then traveled southwesterly through Missouri and Arkansas to Van Buren on the east bank of the Arkansas river, opposite Fort Smith on the western bank in Indian Territory. There they met so many discouraged people returning from Texas that they turned eastward and spent the winter near the St. Francis river. In the spring they traveled across the Mississippi bottom which is about forty miles wide, made up of cane brakes and swamps with a black mud bottom that sticks to a wagon like tar. They camped a few weeks on the west side of the Mississippi river and a short time on the east side in the upper end of Memphis, Tennessee, at the mouth of Wolf creek. After this they took passage with their wagon and team on the steamboat Cincinnati, and landed at Jeffersonville on the north bank of the Ohio river opposite Louisville, Kentucky. They then traveled out to the old home in Indiana. Some of the distance the wagon road was along the side of the first railroad built in Indiana, from Madison on the Ohio river to Indianapolis. It was a very primitive affair, with little engines and cars running on flat bars of iron nailed on thick boards or stringers running lengthwise of the tracks, scarcely resembling the railroads of today.

In 1852 Thomas and Nancy Kincaid started from their old home in Indiana with an ox team and a two-horse carriage for Oregon. Their children then living were: Harrison R. Kincaid, clerk in the United States senate for eleven years, secretary of state of Oregon for four years, county judge of Lane county, Oregon, for four years, and managing editor and proprietor of the Oregon State Journal at Eugene, forty-five years and five months; Rebecca Ann; Elizabeth Maria; John Sanford; and Mary Alice.

George S., the youngest, was born in Oregon, on the homestead three miles from Eugene. They stopped one year with friends in Benton county, Indiana, about thirty miles west of Lafayette. In February, 1853, they started for Oregon, camping in snow and ice through Illinois, crossed the Mississippi river with their teams on the ice at Burlington, and reached Kanessville, now Council Bluffs, some time in April; crossed the Missouri river on a steamboat that had come up from St. Louis to ferry the emigrants over, May 9. There was not a house then where Omaha now stands nor one in sight along the trail between the Missouri river and the Willamette valley. There was not then a stick of timber along the Platte river for three hundred miles, where there are now plenty of trees. It rained nearly all the time during the first two or three weeks. The water was so deep in the sloughs that it sometimes ran into the wagon beds. The buffalo chips were too wet to burn. No fires could be made and they had to live mostly on crackers. The driver of the ox team had to wade the sloughs and was wet day and night until the dry country was reached about Fort Laramie on the North Platte. And from there on the dust was like a fog, and everybody was covered with it.

Naney Kincaid drove the horse carriage nearly all the way as far as the Grande Ronde valley, near where La Grande is now, where it became disabled and was left. Her husband walked or rode horseback and drove the loose stock, and Harrison, their oldest son, drove the ox team. They crossed the Cascade mountains just south of Mount Hood, and arrived in the Willamette valley, September 29, 1853, and at Eugene, which then did not contain a house on the town-site, which had been platted the year before, October 11. They settled three miles southeast of Eugene and lived there about seven years. They then moved to Eugene, where the subject of this sketch has ever since resided, and where her husband passed away in the fall of 1866.

She has resided in a house on a six acre tract near the middle of Eugene during the last fifty years, and has in all that time refused to visit the coast or Portland or any place outside of the Willamette valley. She visited the state fair at Salem in a wagon before the railroad was built nearly fifty years ago, but that is the limit of her traveling since crossing the plains fifty-nine years ago. Until a few years ago she had seven or eight pet deer in a park on the lot, and has a chicken park, and raises dozens of chickens every year. She lives alone nearly all the time of her own choice, and does her own house work. She attends to feeding the chickens and gathering the eggs. Her son, who is twenty years her junior, usually dines with her every day, and she prepares the meal, and her daughter usually spends an hour or more with her every afternoon, and neighbors frequently call to talk over familiar matters, or to get information concerning pioneer or local history, for she has a wonderful memory and remembers everything that has ever come within her knowledge during her whole life of ninety-six years up to the present time. Her mind is as clear and bright as it ever was. She seems to be as young and in nearly as good a condition physically and mentally as she was fifty years ago. She is small, about five feet tall, and did not weigh more than one hundred and fifteen pounds in her prime and weighs less now. Considering her age and the terrible hardships and privations she has endured, not one in a million having endured so much, she is a human phenomenon, a living wonder. Recently Mrs. Kincaid was made queen of the pioneer women of Oregon, being the oldest pioneer woman in the state.

About twelve years after her husband passed away she married T. S. Riddel, a fine old gentleman, a few years her senior, who came out from Illinois. He passed away about twelve or fifteen years ago. But she prefers to retain and is almost uniformly known by her family name, the name of her children, Kincaid.

ANDREW A. LEE, who is president and manager of the Salem Abstract Company and one of the first abstractors of the city of Salem, was born in Iroquois county, Illinois, on the 15th of June, 1865, a son of Alfred D. and Mary Jane (Slack) Lee. The father was born in Indiana and the mother was a native of Ohio. After their marriage they located upon a farm in Iroquois county where they remained several years before removing to Michigan and later to Rensselaer, Indiana. They are now living there retired. They are members of the Christian church and Mr. Lee gives his political support to the democratic party.

Andrew A. Lee was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools and subsequently in Grand Prairie Seminary at Onarga, Illinois. Following the completion of his studies in that institution he took up the abstract business, securing a position with the Barber Abstract Company at Joliet, Illinois. After remaining there for less than a year he went to Watska and spent the following winter in an abstract office there. He subsequently left the middle west and came to the Pacific coast, locating in Salem. From the time he was in the public schools he had fully determined upon abstracting as his life's profession, and the immediate and earnest application he gave to it after leaving school showed his persistent purpose to succeed. When he arrived in Salem he was a stranger in a strange land with no equipment but his honesty and his ability. On the 1st of January, 1900, he secured a position in the Salem Abstract offices, and from that minor position he rose to manager of the company. For several years following he had charge of the work in the offices and in 1906 he, in partnership with U. G. Boyer, purchased the business and good-will of the Salem Abstract Company. At that time he was made president and manager of the business. For five years the business was conducted by these men, but in April, 1911, Mr. Boyer severed his connections with the firm and Mr. Lee took D. F. Skene, George J. Watson and A. P. Manning into partnership with him. The firm was reorganized with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars, Mr. Lee remaining president and general manager. The able conduct of this enterprise showed to the citizens of Salem the unusual business ability which Mr. Lee possessed. He has already won the confidence of the entire community, and so thoroughly cognizant were they of his capability as the manager and director of large enterprises that he became one of the most prominent organizers at the time the Mutual Savings & Loan Association was incorporated. Subsequently he became its president and he is now serving in that capacity. Mr. Lee's connections with Salem have extended in various directions. He has been one of the most public-spirited citizens Salem ever had. He is very prominent in educational circles. While he was a member of the school board he did more than any other one man to bring the system of the public schools of Salem to the high state of perfection which it today enjoys. Upon his retirement from the board he was presented with a gold watch in appreciation of the services he had rendered. He has also been a member of the board of trustees of Willamette University. His prominence in church work is also noteworthy. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was chosen lay delegate to the conference to be held in May, 1912, at Minneapolis, Minnesota. He is a member of the board of trustees of the church and is active in church work generally. He holds membership in the City Library commission which is now completing plans for a twenty-eight thousand dollar library to be erected at the corner of State and Winter streets. He has always taken a foremost part in all civic improvements and is recognized as a man who fills an important position in the affairs of the city.

In 1893 Mr. Lee was married to Miss Linnie Atwood of Onarga, Illinois. She is a daughter of Professor J. H. Atwood, a member of the faculty of the Grand Prairie Seminary. To their union two children have been born, Lloyd and Paul.

Mr. Lee holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is past grand of his lodge. His course has ever been marked by steady progress, and the distinctively representative circle of citizens numbered as his friends attests his fidelity, integrity and altruism.

BUTLER BROTHERS. Representatives of the Butler family in Oregon need no introduction to the residents of Douglas county. The local pioneer history is filled with the story of the settlement of Rufus Butler, who was one of the stanch and sturdy frontiersmen to whom America owes her great northwest. He it was who founded the family in Oregon. The spirit of the father has descended to the sons and the fidelity and forceful personality which energized his nature are today alive in Benjamin and Abraham Lincoln Butler, who are numbered among the men who represent in their section all that is honorable and worthy in agricultural development. They are now operating conjointly the farm which constituted their father's original homestead and their united efforts have resulted in a property of many level acres planted in grain and grasses, and equipped with fine barns and outbuildings grouped at regular intervals, with fields lying in productive fertility. The farm forms one of the attractive features of the landscape in Douglas county and is one of the largest agricultural enterprises in this section. The older brother is Benjamin Butler, a son of Rufus and Sarah (Wells) Butler, the former a native of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and the latter of Kentucky. The father's birth occurred in 1812 and he received his early training and education in his native state. When he had attained his manhood he shipped on board a vessel and for twelve years followed a seafaring life. In 1849 he came via the Isthmus of Panama to the California gold fields and was one of a company of twelve men who came from Massachusetts seeking their fortunes. In the years that followed he helped to bury all of his eleven companions and in 1850 came to Oregon on account of failing health. He was one of the earliest pioneers in the settlement of the state. He first engaged in freighting and lumbering and loaded the first vessel which ever came up the Umpqua river to its mouth. It was loaded with piling for which he received twenty-two cents a running foot. He drove the first freight wagon out of Scottsburg to Roseburg and organized the first school district on the Umpqua river. He took up a donation claim when he first came into the county and this constitutes the present Butler farm. He was a republican in his political views and while never an office seeker was an influential force in local public life. He was justice of the peace and held the first court ever held in Scottsburg. When he settled in this district there were only nine white men on the Umpqua river and he aided in the gradual development and expansion of one of the greatest states in America. He resided on his donation claim until his death, in 1884. The mother of our subjects crossed the plains to Oregon in 1854 and soon after her arrival here was united in marriage to Rufus Butler. She aided her husband in his pioneer work of development and lived in Oregon until her death in 1898. She was a devout member of the Christian church.

Benjamin Butler who was born on the old homestead, on March 12, 1860, was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Douglas county and at Wilbur Academy. His agricultural career dates from his childhood and when he was still a boy he was an active assistant to his father in the labors of the farm. When Rufus Butler died he began active life for himself, renting the home property which he operated for five years. At the end of that time he was joined by his brother, Abraham Lincoln

Butler, and the two have brought the home farm to a high state of cultivation, operating it along lines of progress and expansion. They keep abreast of the times and are interested in every new phase of agricultural life. Benjamin Butler besides his interest in his father's property owns another of two hundred and thirty-seven acres which adjoins the homestead. Here he carries on diversified farming and stock-raising and meets with the success which has attended him in all the labors of his life.

In 1899 Benjamin Butler was united in marriage to Mrs. Charles Smith, a native of the Yoncalla valley, Douglas county, Oregon, who was in her maidenhood Rosa Walker, a daughter of Alphens Walker. Mrs. Butler's father came to Oregon in 1848 and located in Douglas county in 1852. Unto our subject and his wife has been born one child, Cordelia S., who is living with her parents. Mrs. Butler affiliates with the Christian church and is an active worker in religious circles. In his political views Mr. Butler is a consistent republican but has never been an office seeker. He is one of the substantial men of the Umpqua valley and has extensive fraternal affiliations. He belongs to the Elkton Lodge, No. 192, I. O. O. F., and to Sunset Lodge, No. 8, A. O. U. W., of Gardiner, Oregon. He is a man of undoubted talent along agricultural lines and has given many years of his life to making the farm which he operates productive to the highest degree. He is ably assisted in the fulfilling of his ambition by his brother, Abraham Lincoln Butler, who has attained an equal reputation as a scientific agriculturist. The brothers unite in their efforts along expansion and professional lines and much of their success is due to their harmonious relations.

Abraham L. Butler is also a native son of Douglas county and was born on his father's homestead on July 30, 1865. He was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools, later attending the Central Oregon State Normal School at Drain. He was nineteen years of age when his father died and one year later, in partnership with his brother Benjamin, rented from the estate the homestead which constituted the original Butler farm. For five years they farmed in partnership and in 1890 bought the land which they have operated with conspicuous success since that time. Abraham Butler has since bought a smaller tract of land of thirty-three acres adjoining the home farm and this he has also developed along progressive lines.

In October, 1891, Abraham Butler was united in marriage to Miss Aurilla Maxfield, a native of Kansas and a daughter of T. J. Maxfield, who came to Oregon about 1889. He is now a resident of Siskiyou county, California. Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Butler have two children, Muriel and Roy. In his political views Mr. Butler is a staunch republican. In 1910 he was a candidate for nomination for the office of county commissioner. He had a strong support but failed of nomination on account of peculiar political conditions. His fraternal affiliations include his connection with Elkton Lodge, No. 192, I. O. O. F., and with Sunset Lodge, No. 8, A. O. U. W., in which organization he holds membership in Gardiner, Oregon. Abraham Lincoln Butler is an energetic, broad-minded and public-spirited citizen, staunchly loyal to local institutions and formulating his doctrine of activity according to the creed of his illustrious namesake, and with him he believes that, "There is something better than making a living—making a life." He has lived up to worthy standards and carried on his activities along progressive lines, and with his brother stands today a worthy representative of the spirit of the American northwest.

FRANK S. BUNCH, one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of Coos county, resides one half of a mile from Gravel Ford, Oregon, up the north fork of the Coquille river, and is the owner of thirty-eight acres of land which he cultivates along with one hundred and forty acres which he rents. He does an extensive dairy business and is actively interested in the breeding and raising of high-grade cattle and horses. He was born in Kansas, on February 11, 1865, and is a son of James and Mary (Saunders) Bunch. The parents were natives of Tennessee and came to the American northwest in 1872 in which year they settled near Milton in Umatilla county. Their children are as follows: Ann, the widow of Charles Watkins, who makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. E. A. Mereen; John M., who lives with his family in Los Angeles, California; William H., who holds the position of superintendent of the public schools of Coos county and resides at McKinley, Oregon; Mary B., the wife of John D. Bennett of Gravel Ford, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work; Charles H., of Coquille, Oregon; Alice, now Mrs. Charles Holt of Gaston, Oregon; Frank S., the subject of this sketch; May, the wife of Joseph Bright of Gaston, Oregon; and Hattie M., who married Professor Robert Airey of Cottage Grove, Oregon.

Frank S. Bunch was reared upon his father's farm and received his education in the public schools of Coos county. By a wise use of every opportunity and extensive reading combined with innate intelligence he fitted himself for teaching and when he laid aside his books at the age of nineteen was given a position as teacher in the public schools. He also taught in the Gravel Ford Academy under the direction of the Seventh Day Adventists and was principal of that institution for six years. In 1900 he bought thirty-eight acres of land, half a mile from Gravel Ford and began its cultivation. He then rented one hundred and forty adjoining acres and has since been engaged in farming on both tracts. He raises all kinds of grasses and grain and specializes in the breeding of high-grade horses and cows.

On October 15, 1890, Mr. Bunch was united in marriage to Miss Mary Leek, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of Rev. William and Nancy (Hodges) Leek. Mrs. Bunch is one of nine children born to her parents: Fannie, who married Thomas Vert of Turlock, California; Mary, the wife of our subject; Ha, who married Orville Messenger of Chadron, Nebraska; John H., who resides in Newcastle, Wyoming; Amy, the wife of Benjamin F. Roy of Rushville, Nebraska; George, who lives in Hot Springs, South Dakota; and three children who are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Bunch have been born seven children: Raymond, whose birth occurred on July 11, 1892, and who is teaching school at Parkersburg, Oregon; Frank L., born July 22, 1894, who is attending the Gravel Ford Academy; William, a twin brother of Frank L., also attending school; Edith, whose birth occurred on the 2d of February, 1900, and who is attending school; Paul, born July 14, 1904; Dorsey, whose birth occurred on the 24th of August, 1907; and Bessie, born April 23, 1910.

Frank S. Bunch is a republican and takes an intelligent interest in public affairs although he never seeks public office. He is a Seventh Day Adventist. In his career as a teacher he did able and effective work in the expansion and development of educational facilities, and as a farmer is justly accorded a place among the prominent and representative citizens of the county.

JOHN L. KENT. The Kent family is one of the best known in Douglas county today and its prominence is due to an honorable record dating from the early times of pioneer settlement. Its representative at the present day is John L. Kent, one of the substantial and influential citizens of the district, who in the cultivation of his fine farm of two hundred acres is carrying on the work of expansion and development begun by his father. Mr. Kent is a native son of Oregon and was born in Douglas county, July 24, 1865. He is a son of Levi and Mary E. (Allison) Kent, who were among the very first settlers in the state of Oregon. They crossed the plains with ox teams from Illinois to Douglas county in 1849 and were identified with the growth and development of this section for many years. Their first location was made in Scottsburg but they subsequently removed to a farm three miles south of Elkton and here Levi Kent became greatly influential and prominent. He was at the time of his death one of the most extensive land owners of the county in which he resided and one of the greatest individual forces in agricultural expansion. He died in 1901 and was survived by his wife until 1904 or 1905. His passing left a place in farming circles of Douglas county which is yet unfilled and deprived the citizens of this section of a loyal and upright friend.

John Kent was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools of Douglas county. He became acquainted with the rudimentary principles of agriculture when he was still a child and as he advanced in years was given more responsible duties upon his father's farm until he became an expert in all the details connected with the tilling and cultivating of the soil and the caring of grain and stock. When he was twenty-one years of age he began active life for himself, cultivating a part of the home farm for ten years. At the end of that time he purchased from his father one hundred and sixty acres which now form a part of his present tract of two hundred acres. He cultivates his land along the most modern and progressive principles and has already brought it to a high state of development. He has fenced it into fields, has built substantial barns and outbuildings equipped with modern labor-saving machinery and has drained and tiled his holdings, making his farm one of the model properties in Douglas county. He owns beside this ranch three hundred and twenty acres of valuable land in other places of the state.

In 1891 Mr. Kent was united in marriage to Miss Kittie Powell, a native of Lane county, Oregon, and a daughter of Samuel Powell, one of the pioneer settlers of that district. Mrs. Kent is a devout adherent of the Methodist Episcopal church and is widely known in religious circles. In his political views Mr. Kent is a staunch republican but has never sought public office, devoting his entire time to the progressive cultivation of the soil. Agriculture is every day assuming new aspects and becoming more systematic and scientific and Mr. Kent has kept abreast of this modern evolution and his labors have assisted in county and state progress by promoting the richness and productiveness of a valuable farm.

LUTHER FLETCHER ORPURD, whose earlier years of maturity were spent in agricultural pursuits in Missouri and Kansas, has since 1891 been engaged in the teaming and transfer business in Cottage Grove. He was born in Indiana in 1854, a son of Calvin and Eliza (Newkirk) Orpurd, both of whom were natives of that state. He was the eldest of five children born to his parents, the other members of the family being: Arminda, who is a widow and resides in California; Missouri, the wife of Frank Alford, of Salem, Oregon; Ira, deceased; and Florence, the wife of Frank Woodhouse, of California.

Luther Fletcher Orpurd remained at home and assisted his father with the farm work until he was twenty years of age, having in the meantime received a good common-school education. He then engaged in farming in Missouri and later in Kansas, and in 1891 came to Oregon, settling in Cottage Grove, where he engaged in the teaming business and has since successfully continued in this line of work. He pays strict attention to his work, is prompt in filling all orders and is prosperous. He is the owner of a comfortable home and is respected by the public in general.

On September 1, 1880, Mr. Orpurd was married to Miss Lillie Jones, whose mother passed away in 1877, after which the father removed to Oregon in 1885, settling in Cottage Grove. He was a carpenter by trade but is now living retired. A brother of Mrs. Orpurd, J. I. Jones, has taken much interest in the development of the community in which he lives and operates a sawmill about twenty miles from Cottage Grove. He founded the town there of which he was postmaster and where he conducted a store. Mr. and Mrs. Orpurd are the parents of two children: Hattie, the wife of Harry Hart, a druggist of Cottage Grove, and the mother of two children, Velma and Harry Luther; and Lizzie, the wife of Charles Cochran, a teacher of music, of Eugene, and the mother of two children, Herbert Luther and Gertrude. Mr. Orpurd is a socialist but he has never taken a particularly active interest in politics and has never sought office. During his residence of over twenty years in Cottage Grove Mr. Orpurd has established a good reputation as a business man, has enjoyed the confidence of a large number of customers and has been held in high esteem by all his acquaintances.

HENRY SPORES is a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of the Sunset state and is still the owner of five hundred acres of the original donation claim which was entered from the government by his father on coming to the Pacific coast. The greater part of his life has been passed in Oregon, for he was only about a year old when he came to the northwest. He was born in Illinois, February 6, 1846, and the following year the family made the long trip across the plains with a Flathead Indian as their guide, while the father, Jacob C. Spores, acted as captain of the wagon train with which they traveled. Amid pioneer conditions and surroundings Henry Spores was reared and his education was obtained in one of the old-time log schoolhouses of the frontier. When not busy with his textbooks he was assisting his father in the development of the donation land claim and continued at home until his marriage when he started out in life for himself. He built the house which he now occupies but still continued upon his father's ranch, devoting his energies to farming and stock-raising. He handled both cattle and horses and still raises stock. He has a well developed property, comprising five hundred acres of the original donation claim and one hundred and sixty acres adjoining which he purchased. He also owns land in other localities, for he has made judicious investment in real estate, from which he derives a good income.

In February, 1868, in Coburg, Mr. Spores was united in marriage to Philena Monroe, a daughter of William and Margaret (Mann) Monroe, who came to Oregon in 1865. Her father was prominent in political circles here and was filling the office of state senator at the time of his death in 1872. The mother survived him for many years, reaching the advanced age of one hundred and two years ere she was called to her final rest on the 19th of February, 1911. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Spores seven are living, Edgar, Jacob, Carson, Walter, Elmer, Melvin and Ethel. Of these Elmer is now in Alaska. Those who have passed away are: Mrs. Leona Howard, of Pendleton, Oregon, who died at the age of thirty-five years; and Harry and Bertha, both of whom were three years of age at the time of their demise.

Henry Spores votes with the republican party but has never sought nor desired office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs, which he directs with substantial success.

R. H. BUNNELL needs no introduction to the readers of this volume or the residents of Klamath county, for he is a member of the well known firm of Bunnell Brothers—prominent ranchmen of this district—owning and cultivating five hundred acres of land sixteen miles south of Klamath Falls and seven and a half miles north of Merrill. He and his brother, A. C. Bunnell, are natives of California, the former born in Alameda, on the 27th of June, 1878, and the latter in Siskiyou county, on the 15th of December, 1870. They are sons of A. F. and Matilda (Nautzel) Bunnell, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of New York city. The parents were reared in the east but were married in Siskiyou county, California, the father having made the trip there around Cape Horn in 1849, while the mother arrived at a later date, having come to the coast with her sister. A. F. Bunnell in 1852 located on Scott Barr, in Siskiyou county, and subsequently made his way to Alameda. He was a shop man, machinist and millwright, working along those lines during the greater part of his life, although at an early date he engaged in mining in Scott valley. Subsequently, however, he worked at trades and spent the last part of his life at farming. He died at the home of his sons, when seventy-one years of age, his birth having occurred in 1839. The mother survives him and is living in Ashland, Oregon. In her family are seven children: A. C.; Lottie, the wife of Frank Triplett, of Maxwell, California; Ella May, the wife of S. T. Reeve, of Ashland, Oregon; R. H., of this review; Evelyn, the wife of Howard G. Turner, of Portland; and two children who died in early life.

R. H. Bunnell spent his youthful days under the parental roof, and is indebted to the public schools for his education and to his father's training for his business knowledge. He came to Klamath county in 1896 and has here remained through the intervening years. He has always been engaged in ranching and for four or five years has been a partner with his elder brother, A. C. Bunnell, in the ownership, development and cultivation of a ranch of five hundred acres, all in one body. This is not only irrigated by the government ditch but they also have a private system of irrigation and, being thus able to turn the water on and off when it is needed, they keep their fields in excellent condition and produce good crops. The place presents a neat and attractive appearance and manifests the careful supervision and practical methods of the owners.

R. H. Bunnell is a republican and is acting as foreman of road construction work, having charge of a crew employed on the building of a new country road. He is also serving as a member of the school board of his district. His fraternal connection is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which organization finds him a worthy and valued member.

On the 1st of June, 1912, R. H. Bunnell was united in marriage to Miss Ida Smead, a native of St. Louis. His brother, A. C. Bunnell, was married in 1907 to Miss Laura Goudie, a native of Scotland, and they have three children, James, Lois and John. Mrs. A. C. Bunnell gave birth to four children, three daughters and a son, in June, 1911, each weighing four and a quarter pounds, but all died. Seven children were thus born to them during the first four years of their married life.

The Bunnell brothers are widely and favorably known in Klamath county and the work which they are doing establishes them as progressive and representative agriculturists.

SJUR P. NESS, a practicing attorney of Eugene and the president of the city council, demonstrates in his life the fact that neither the accident of birth nor fortune has to do with a man's opportunities for advancement. Mr. Ness is a native son of Norway, yet in the new world he has found the chances for progress and in their utilization has worked his way upward to a prominent place among the citizens of the community in which he lives. He was born in the parish of Lyster, Bergen, Norway, January 15, 1871, and is a son of Peter and Ingeborg (Talsater) Ness. The father was reared to manhood in the land of the midnight sun and there became a carpenter and cabinet-maker. At length he resolved to try his fortune on this side of the Atlantic and came to America in 1870, settling in Goodhue county, Minnesota, about thirty miles from a railroad. There he engaged in raising wheat to the time of his death, which occurred in June, 1885, when he was not quite fifty years of age.

His son, Sjur P. Ness, was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, but he had only limited opportunities, attending a few months in the winter seasons, while as he grew older his educational period each year grew shorter, owing to the need of his services on the home farm. However, he found time in the intervals of farm work to pursue his studies privately and was at length enabled to pass the examination for a teacher's certificate. Being the eldest in the family and the only son it was necessary that he assume charge of the farm following his father's death, and to that work he devoted his energies until twenty-six years of age. In the meantime, however, he had acquired sufficient education to enable him to secure a teacher's certificate and during the last three years which he spent upon the farm he followed the profession of teaching. In 1896 he became connected with commercial interests, opening a hardware and farm implement business at the neighboring town of Kenyon, where he remained for three years. In 1899 he disposed of his farm implement business and matriculated in the law school of the University of Minnesota, from which he was graduated with the class of 1902. He completed a year's academic work and a three years' law course within two years and one term.

Mr. Ness then came to Eugene and was admitted to the bar in 1902, at which time he entered into partnership with the Hon. Joshua J. Walton, one of the leading attorneys of this city, under the firm name of Walton & Ness. This association was maintained until about a month before Judge Walton's death in 1909, since which time Mr. Ness has practiced alone. He is an able lawyer, constantly studying in order to thoroughly acquaint himself with the principles of the profession and with precedents, and his presentation of a case is always full, accurate and comprehensive. He has served as city attorney of Springfield and of Creswell for about seven years. Mr. Ness was likewise one of the organizers of the Bank of Commerce, of Eugene, and has served on the directorate from its inception to the present time.

In public affairs Mr. Ness has taken an active and helpful interest, doing much effective service for the public good. In 1910, he was elected a member of the city council of Eugene and served as president of the council. Mr. Ness was always in favor of municipal ownership, and it was while he was serving on the city council that the water and power plant became the property of the city. He has taken a very active and aggressive part in illuminating the undesirable sections of the community and in elevating the moral tone of the city.

November 26, 1903, occurred the marriage of Mr. Ness and Miss Mary S. Watson, a daughter of Samuel Watson, of Eugene, and they have become the parents of four children, Ida, Martha, Anna and Julia. The parents are members of the Norwegian Lutheran church and Mr. Ness was its secretary from its organization until the last annual meeting. He belongs to the Lane County Bar Association and to Spencer Butte Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand, and to Eugene Camp, No. 52, K. O. T. M., of which he is a past commander. He is one of the public-spirited and progressive citizens of Eugene, never self-seeking and thoroughly modest and unassuming in manner, yet his fellow townsmen recognize his worth and accord him respect and honor by reason of the part which he has filled in the growth and development of this section.

REUBEN H. MAST was one of the founders and organizers of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille and since 1909 has held the office of cashier in this institution. He is well known as an able financier and a banker of more than ordinary ability, who has promoted the success of the enterprise with which he is connected by systematic and progressive work. He has been a resident of Oregon since he was fourteen years of age and from the beginning of his active career has been interested in various important local enterprises, being essentially public-spirited and eager for the progress and growth of Coos county. He was born in North Carolina on November 14, 1858, and is a son of William Penn and Charlotte H. Mast, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. The parents of our subject were natives of North Carolina and representatives of the paternal branch of the family have lived in that state since 1800. William P. Mast came to Douglas county in 1872 and rented land in that section, which he improved and operated for one year, going to Coos county at the end of that time. Here he purchased a squatter's right in the wilderness and evolved from an uncultivated tract of land one of the most highly developed farms in the section. His wife is still living upon the homestead and is making her home with two of her sons. She had five children: Reuben H., the subject of this review; William L. and James W., both of whom reside in Bandon; and Webb and Hardy, who reside on the home farm with their mother.

Reuben H. Mast was still a boy when he came with his parents to Oregon. He was educated in the public schools of Coos county and by the utilization of every opportunity and outside reading and study he fitted himself for teaching, following that profession in the district schools for four years. He remained upon the farm until he was twenty-one years of age, aiding his father in the work of improvement and development during the summer months. In 1888, however, he left home and went to Portland, where he took a course in a local business college. He afterward came to Bandon, where he entered the employ of George M. Dyer as clerk and bookkeeper, doing work until Mr. Dyer sold his interests and retaining his position under the new management. At the end of three years he purchased an interest in the business but after a short time disposed of his holdings, going to Hood River in November, 1898. There he worked in a general merchandise store for four months, resigning his position in 1899 in order to go to Portland, where he kept books in a large auction house for a short time. In February, 1900, he returned to Coos county to accept a position as deputy county clerk, serving in this capacity for about ten years. At the end of that time, in association with several prominent men of Coquille, he organized the Farmers & Merchants Bank and was elected to the position of cashier. The bank is capitalized at twenty-five thousand dollars and is one of the important financial institutions in Coos county. Mr. Mast owns a one-fifth interest in it and has done able and efficient work as cashier since the 10th of March, 1909. He is well versed in the details of modern banking and his knowledge is guided and directed by his general business ability. He is shrewd, systematic and unquestionably honest and these qualities have gained for him the respect and confidence of the men who do business with him and have consequently influenced the prosperity of the enterprise with which he is connected. He also helped organize the Coquille Lumber Company and owns stock in the Coquille Land & Improvement Company and also in the Coquille Valley Creamery. He is extensively interested in farm lands, being the proprietor of one hundred and thirty acres on the Coquille river, which he purchased in 1884 and which he has rented out since that time. He owns four hundred acres of timber land in the same section and is interested in city property. He is a firm believer in the future of the city in which he resides and always does his utmost to promote the growth and development of his county.

On August 12, 1890, Mr. Mast was united in marriage to Miss Lola M. Leabo, a native of Oregon and a daughter of James R. and Charlotte (Hawes) Leabo, who were among the pioneers in the settlement of the state, coming here in 1832. The father was a native of Tennessee and the mother was born in Iowa. In their family were five children: Elizabeth, the wife of Amos Cliff, of Portland; Lola M., the wife of our subject; Sterling, a resident of Astoria, Oregon; Roland, whose home is in Portland; and Predetta, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Mast are the parents of three children. Leta R. received her primary education in the district schools of Coos county and later took a course in music and art at the University of Oregon, in Eugene. She was also a student for one year in Mills College at Oakland, California, and is now employed in the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille. Reuben H., Jr., and James are both attending school.

Reuben H. Mast is a democrat and is one of the public-spirited citizens of his community and a dominating factor in the promotion of its welfare and advancement. He is prominent in the Masonic order and holds membership in the Knights of Pythias. He is one of the leading and important business men of Coquille. He has made the various enterprises with which he is connected successful by seizing always any favorable opportunity for expansion and by adhering faithfully to high standards of commercial honor.

ALFRED B. HAINES is one of the enterprising agriculturists in Douglas county. He comes of a line of farmers whose activities in the cultivation of the soil have promoted the development of their section of the state, and in his personal labors is following long and honorable traditions. He is a native son of Oregon and was born on a farm one mile south of Elkton on June 17, 1874. His parents were Alfred B. and Marietta (Ransom) Haines. His father was a native of Albany, Whiteside county, Illinois, where his birth occurred in 1844. He was a son of Alfred and Sarah (Nixon) Haines, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. The father of our subject was sixteen years of age when he came to Oregon. In 1864 he enlisted in Company K, First Oregon Infantry, and his regiment did service in suppressing Indian uprisings. When he returned home at the close of hostilities he remained for a short time upon the farm and then went to work on the Klamath reservation in the employ of the government where he remained for about two years. In 1873 he returned home and was married to Miss Marietta Ransom, a native of Napa county, California, and a daughter of William Clark Ransom, a distant relative of Captain William Clark, the famous pioneer who is known in history as a member of the Lewis and Clark expedition. After his marriage the father of our subject bought the present Haines homestead farm one mile south of Elkton where he cultivated the soil and became one of the extensive land owners in Douglas county. He acquired three hundred and fifty-four acres in the home farm and was also proprietor of large tracts of farm and timber land in various parts of Oregon. He was a successful and highly esteemed man and his death on May 19, 1907, was sincerely regretted as a loss to agricultural development. He was a staunch republican in his political views but never sought public office. His wife still resides on the home farm.

Alfred B. Haines received his education in the common schools of Douglas county and supplemented this by a course at the Armstrong Business College in Portland. By wise use of every opportunity and by constant outside study he fitted himself for teaching and pursued this occupation in the district schools of his native section for three years. When he was twenty-one years of age he was appointed deputy assessor of Douglas county in recognition of his broad-minded and intelligent activities in all movements looking toward the public welfare. After a term of efficient and capable service lasting four years he was appointed forest ranger and served in this capacity for one year. At the expiration of this time he returned home and in the following spring, 1900, bought his present farm on the Umpqua river four miles south of Elkton. His purchase consisted of eight hundred and twenty acres of fertile and productive land and he immediately began cultivation. Since that time he has given his personal supervision to the management and direction of his enterprise and by progressive and scientific methods and constant labor along many lines has made his farm one of the most valuable ranches in Douglas county.

On April 4, 1900, Mr. Haines was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Wainseott, a daughter of Andrew J. and Ada E. (Jack) Wainseott. Mrs. Haines' father came to Oregon when he was a young man, making the journey across the plains from the middlewest to Oregon. His wife is a native of this state and now resides with her husband in Idaho. To Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Haines have been born three children, Marcus W., Inez and Dexter. Mr. Haines is a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 63, F. & A. M.; Laurel Chapter, No. 31, R. A. M.; and belongs to Hiram Council, No. 7, of Eugene, and is connected prominently with Elkton Camp, No. 586, M. W. A. He and his wife are devoted adherents of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in the local organization Mr. Haines serves as steward. As a public official he is honest and conscientious; as a farmer progressive, modern and efficient and as a private citizen straightforward, sincere and uniformly courteous.

AMOS NELSON, who owns and operates a highly cultivated and improved ranch located a mile northwest of Newberg, is one of the thrifty and energetic citizens that Denmark has furnished Yamhill county. He was born on Fyen island, a possession of the Danish crown, on the 28th of June, 1848, and is a son of Niels and Anna Rasmussen, both of whom are deceased. The father passed away in 1880 and the mother in 1884. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Rasmussen numbered five children, three sons and two daughters, three of whom are now deceased, they having died in Denmark.

Amos Nelson spent the first twenty-two years of his life in the land of his birth, to whose common schools he is indebted for his education. There he was also trained to agricultural pursuits, obtaining a thorough and practical knowledge of the best methods of tilling the fields and caring for the crops. It was his desire to own a farm, but early realizing the difficulty of achieving his ambition in his native land, in 1870 he emigrated to the United States. He first settled in St. Louis, Missouri. From there he went to Iowa, continuing his agricultural pursuits until 1873, when he crossed the western prairies to the mining regions of Nevada. He worked in the quartz mills during the succeeding six years, but at the end of that time he withdrew from this and coming to Oregon once more turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He first located in the vicinity of Hurlburt, but two years later, in 1881, he removed to the Chehalem valley, settling on a ranch near Newberg. There in connection with his farming he also worked at blacksmithing until 1909. In the latter year he disposed of his interests there and came to his present location northwest of Newberg. Mr. Nelson possesses the thrift and enterprise that characterizes the Danish people generally, and during the period of his residence here has so intelligently exercised these qualities as to become one of the most successful ranchmen in his community.

In Iowa, in 1871, Mr. Nelson was united in marriage to Miss Anna Maria Peterson, who is also a native of Denmark and a daughter of Peter Hansen, and they have become the parents of seven children who are living. In order of birth they are as follows: Stina, who was born in 1872, and is the wife of Chris Hansen, of Scholls, Oregon; Anna, whose birth occurred in 1874, and who is now the wife of Charles Waide, a rancher of the Chehalem valley; N. P., who was born in 1877, and is living on a farm in Chehalem valley; Frank, who was born in 1879, married Elsa Bartholemew, and is now ranching in the Chehalem valley; Hannah, who was born in 1881, and married Grant Marsh, of Portland; George, whose birth occurred in 1884, now residing in Seattle and Emma, whose natal year was 1887, and who is living at home with her parents.

Mr. Nelson belongs to the Grange and in politics he is a republican. He takes an active and helpful interest in local political affairs and his fellow citizens have manifested their appreciation of his services by electing him to various offices. He served for four years as county commissioner and a similar period as justice of the peace, while for a long period he was a member of the school board. Mr. Nelson has always been loyal to all American institutions and is held in high regard in his community, where he has manifested qualities that well entitle him to the respect in which he is held.

HIRAM WEATHERLY. One of the sterling and substantial citizens of Dodge county who has done actively constructive work along modern lines of agriculture is Hiram Weatherly, who has given most of his career in Oregon to the cultivation and improvement of three hundred and fifty acres of the finest ranch land in Douglas county. He has now turned over the management of the farm to his adopted son and is living retired in Scottsburg, Oregon, where he occupies an influential place in public affairs. He was born in Genesee county, New York, July 31, 1838, and is a son of Lewis and Sarah (Merithew) Weatherly, both natives of New York where they were reared, educated and married. On the paternal side Mr. Weatherly comes of old Pennsylvania Dutch stock while his grandfather, Hiram Merithew, was a native of the Isle of Man. Lewis Weatherly, the father of our subject, left his native state for Illinois in 1841 and located in Winnebago county seven miles from Rockford where he was prosperous and successful as an agriculturist until 1856. In that year he removed to Lake county, Illinois, where he resided until his death on April 1, 1868. His wife later married Mr. Joshua Slusser and removed to Kansas where she died on the 22d of August, 1886, when she was sixty-seven years of age. Lewis Weatherly together with his two sons, Hiram and Elias, were veterans of the Civil war.

Hiram Weatherly was reared at home and received a limited education in the public schools of Illinois. His schooling was received at irregular intervals and almost all of it was self-acquired. At the age of nineteen he was obliged to gain a livelihood for himself and returning to New York state he worked for two years as a farm laborer. At the expiration of this time he came west to Illinois and for a time followed the same line of activity. He subsequently rented a farm and was prosperous and successful in the cultivation of the soil for some time. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Ninety-Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served as a private for one year. His able services were rewarded at the end of that time by a promotion to the office of file major, in which capacity he was active until the end of the war. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Fort Donelson, Lookout Mountain, Shelbyville, Chickamauga, Franklin, Ringgold, Resaca and many others. He received his honorable discharge at Huntsville, Alabama, February 6, 1865, and returned immediately to Lake county, Illinois, where he again followed agriculture with much success. In 1869 he removed to Iowa, locating in Montgomery county where he resided until 1871. In that year he came to California and for eight years worked upon a stock ranch in Mendocino county. His residence in Oregon dates from October, 1879, when he located two and one-half miles east of Scottsburg in Douglas county and farmed with gratifying results for three or four years. He subsequently disposed of this property and bought the ranch where the Long Prairie schoolhouse is now located, six miles from Scottsburg. Here he maintained his home and operated his farm until 1894 when he retired from active life and took up his residence in Scottsburg, where he has since resided. He still owns his farm of three hundred and fifty acres. This is being operated by his adopted son. In the course of a long agricultural career Mr. Weatherly obtained a degree of success which was the natural outcome of his scientific methods and his concentrated industry. He made extensive improvements upon his land and brought it before his retirement to a high state of cultivation.

On February 4, 1860, Mr. Weatherly was united in marriage to Miss Almira Lamphere, a native of New York state and a daughter of Henry and Eunice (Potter) Lamphere. The father was one of the prominent and substantial farmers of Lake county, Illinois, and died in Iowa and the mother in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Weatherly have adopted a son, Fred, whom they have reared from infancy and who is now operating his father's property. Mr. Weatherly gave his son a half interest in the home farm which he is conducting along progressive, modern principles.

In his political views Mr. Weatherly is republican and was elected in 1888 for a four-year term as county commissioner. He is a member of Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his only fraternal affiliation. He is prominent in any movement looking toward the further development and improvement of Douglas county and his long life has been one of the greatest individual forces in the progress of that section.

STERLING P. FENLEY is prominent and successful in the operation of a large livery business in Elkton, Oregon, and is pursuing a prosperous career which was begun at the early age of fourteen. He was born in Solano county, California, on December 18, 1868, and is a son of Columbus and Elizabeth (West) Fenley, both natives of Missouri where they were reared and married. Mr. Fenley's father learned the engineering trade when he was a young man and in 1852 he crossed the plains with ox teams to the California gold fields, where he worked as engineer in the mines for two years. In

MR. AND MRS. ITHAM WEATHERLY

1854 he returned to Missouri, where he was married and where he remained until 1862. In that year he again crossed the plains, taking his wife and children to California, where he worked at his trade in the mines for several years. He continued his residence in that state until 1880, in which year he came north to Oregon, locating in Fossil, Wasco county, which is now Gilliam county. Here he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, buying three or four hundred acres of land which he brought to a high state of development before his death in 1897 or 1898. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was one of the representative and influential men of his section. His wife's death had long since preceded his and occurred in California in 1876.

Sterling P. Fenley was reared at home and remained with his parents until he was fourteen years of age. At this early date he began active life for himself, engaging in farm work and as a monthly laborer. He added to his agricultural activities any occupation which offered him a chance to earn a livelihood. By the time he was twenty years of age he had gained an independence and a power of initiative which were valuable assets to him all during his life. He became acquainted with the details of agriculture as it is carried on in the American northwest and became an expert workman in all the branches of this activity. In 1888 he married and rented land in the Umpqua valley, which he began developing and cultivating. He was successful from the beginning and in 1902 was able to purchase eighty acres, on which he continued farming until 1907. He spent the years from 1895 until 1902, however, in southern California, although he retained his property in Oregon. In 1907 he came to Elkton where he bought the livery with which he is now connected. For the past five years he has given his entire attention to this business and has won the same success in commercial fields which attended his labors as an agriculturist. He is a progressive, representative and public-spirited man and his cooperation can always be counted upon in movements which have for their object the expansion and development of his city and county. He invests his money judiciously and almost always in local enterprises. He is a stockholder in the Elkton Mercantile & Development Company and his business sagacity has influenced the success of this enterprise.

In 1888 Mr. Fenley was united in marriage to Miss Ella Weatherly, a daughter of Ansil Weatherly, one of the pioneer settlers of the Umpqua valley in Douglas county. To this union have been born six children, three of whom are living. Stacey, Floyd and Eva. Mr. Fenley is identified with the republican party but has never sought office. He holds membership in Elkton Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M.; in Elkton Lodge, No. 2132, I. O. O. F.; and is also prominent in Elkton Camp, No. 5786, M. W. A.; and in Elkton Lodge, No. 1050, M. B. A. His wife is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Fenley has built his success gradually and his labors have been along different lines of activity, all of which have united to promote his prosperity and have influenced the progress of his success.

EUGENE H. HAMBLOCK. Six miles from Bandon on the Coquille road is located the farm belonging to Eugene H. Hamblock, who is one of the successful general agriculturists and stock-raisers of Coos county. The land constitutes his father's original claim of one hundred and sixty acres and has been the home of Eugene Hamblock all his life. Our subject was born in Coos county, on March 6, 1870, and is a son of John Frederick and Mary (Campbell) Hamblock. His father was a native of Germany and his mother of Virginia. They came to Oregon in 1869 from Missouri where their marriage occurred. The father had been engaged in sawmilling, but after their settlement in Coos county he engaged in general farming. He took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres near Parkersburg on the Coquille river and resided upon his property until his death which occurred in 1909. He had survived his wife by three years. To their union were born the following children: Emma, who is the wife of Thomas Drain of Parkersburg; Mary Frances, now Mrs. Joseph Flam. of Parkersburg; Margaret, who married Edward Rose, also of Parkersburg; John Vinton, of Parkersburg; and Eugene H., the subject of this sketch.

Eugene H. Hamblock's early life was spent upon his father's farm. He early became acquainted with the minor duties connected with its operation and as he advanced in years filled more responsible positions. Eventually he took entire charge and operated the enterprise systematically and successfully. At times in his early youth he worked for wages in the sawmills and logging camps of Coos county and at various other occupations but he always lived at home. After his father's death he purchased the interests of the other heirs and is now sole proprietor. Following the policies of his father who was practical and successful in his occupation Mr. Hamblock has made his soil productive. He does dairying on a small scale but gives his special attention to stock-raising, dealing in high-grade cattle and sheep and shipping his stock to the markets where they find a ready sale. He has been successful and his prosperity is founded upon practical labor. His industry has met with its natural reward in harvests which have increased in quality and abundance while his stock-raising interests have grown every year more important and lucrative.

On June 16, 1901, Mr. Hamblock was united in marriage to Miss Annie Carman, a native of Oregon and a daughter of James A. and Julia (Grant) Carman, who were among the early settlers near Myrtle Point in Coos county. Mrs. Hamblock is one of a family of six children. The others are: Eufa, the wife of Hugh Coke of Berkeley, California; Robert and Clinton, both of whom reside in Myrtle Point; Florence, who married Ora

Masters of Myrtle Point; and Asa, who lives in Myrtle Point. Mr. and Mrs. Hamblock are the parents of five children: John Raymond, born May 6, 1902, who is attending the public school; Sadie Carrol, whose birth occurred August 23, 1903, and who is also pursuing her studies in the public schools; Frances Wesley, born October 2, 1905; Julia Mae, who was born August 9, 1908; and Eugene Carman, whose birth occurred March 2, 1911.

Mr. Hamblock is liberal in his political views and is not an office seeker. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but is not particularly active in fraternal circles preferring to devote his attention to stock-raising and farming. He is a native of Coos county and has always been a resident of the same, which makes him familiar with agricultural conditions of his section and he knows the best methods of coping with them. He has that practical knowledge which is the basis of productive agriculture.

R. D. VARNER is practically living retired but is the owner of good ranch property, his home being situated three and a half miles east of Klamath Falls on the Lakeview road. He was born in Posey county, Indiana, January 7, 1827, and has therefore passed the eighty-fifth milestone on life's journey. His is an honored old age and his rest is well merited, for his life has been worthily spent. He was one of a family of nine children whose parents were John and Rebecca (McCarty) Varner, natives of Pennsylvania, the former born in 1792 and the latter in 1795. The parents were reared however, in Virginia and went to Kentucky as pioneers. Later they located in Indiana and their last days were spent in Illinois, both passing away when more than eighty years of age. The father was a farmer by occupation and after crossing the plains to California in 1852, attracted by the discoveries of gold on the Pacific coast, he engaged in mining. He also worked on a ranch to some extent, dividing his time between the two occupations until 1861, when he returned to Illinois. His nine children all lived to adult age. The eldest, M. Samuel Varner, born in 1819, is a resident of Indiana. James Francis Asbury, who is more than ninety years of age, is a resident of Posey county, Indiana. A daughter, Mrs. Sarah Ann Mills, is living in Illinois, but the others have all passed away.

R. D. Varner resided in Indiana until 1844, when at the age of seventeen years he went to Illinois, where he spent the succeeding decade of his life. In 1854 he arrived in California, where he engaged in mining for about ten years and later he followed farming at Goose Lake in Modoc county, California, until he came to Oregon on the 10th of November, 1887. He has since resided in Klamath county, his home being three and a half miles east of Klamath Falls, on the Lakeview road, where he has a good tract of land. The active management and development of the ranch, however, is left to his sons, who are operating two hundred and forty acres, all wheat land. To this they have given their energies for the past six years. At different periods in his life R. D. Varner followed other pursuits than farming. While in Illinois he worked for ten years at cabinet-making and on going to California he worked at bridge building and carpentering and afterward at gardening. His life has been a busy and useful one and his success has come to him as the merited and logical reward of his labors.

Mr. Varner has been married twice. In 1858 he wedded Miss Sarah Hassel, who was born in New York in 1830 and passed away in Illinois in the year 1867. She left two children: Julian, who is a resident of White county, Illinois; and Harriet, the wife of Joseph Curtis, of White county, Illinois. In 1870 Mr. Varner was again married, his second union being with Miss Caroline Hollar, who was born in Iowa in 1847 and died in this state in 1893. To R. D. and Caroline (Hollar) Varner were born seven children, as follows: Carey, who passed away at the age of eighteen years; John A., who assists in the operation of the home ranch; Fannie, at home; Sarah L., the wife of F. C. Smith, residing on the Merrill road in Klamath county; R. D., living in Nevada; and T. A. and Samuel, both at home.

Mr. Varner has always voted with the democratic party and has always held to high standards of citizenship. In his business dealings he has been straightforward and reliable, knowing that all honorable success can only be won through individual effort and unfaltering perseverance. He is one of the esteemed citizens of Klamath county and a well spent life has won for him the veneration which should ever be accorded one of his years.

FREDRICK WILLIAM COLEBROOK.

Probably no man has done more for the development, upbuilding and advancement of agricultural and business interests of Curry county than Fredrick William Colebrook, who died on his old homestead in that county in 1889. He was one of the early settlers of Oregon and the most forceful years of his life were given to the representative industry of pioneer times. His death was felt as a distinct loss to his many friends who honored and respected him for the quality of his attainments and his honorable and upright life. Mr. Colebrook was born in England in 1818 and educated in Blue Coat College, London, in preparation for a career as a sea captain. He held that position on an English vessel until 1849 when he crossed to America and went to California where he was engaged as store keeper in French Camp in the gold mines. He afterward followed general farming upon a large tract of land which he rented and after several years spent in that occupation came to Oregon, settling in Curry county, where he took up a number of acres of land upon which he carried on stock-raising. He was elected county surveyor and surveyed almost the whole of Curry county. Later he purchased land half way between Port Orford and Gold Beach, buying five hundred and twenty acres upon which for a number of years he engaged in stock-breeding and raising. It is today considered the finest ranch in this section of the country. Mr. Colebrook gave his entire time and attention to the improvement and development of this property, breeding his stock along the most modern and progressive lines. Whatever success he attained in life was a direct result of his industry and well directed activity. His widow now owns a tract of six hundred acres of fertile and productive land in Curry county, a farm which is one of the finest and most intelligently developed in this section.

On the 23d of July, 1875, Mr. Colebrook was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Shmitt, a daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Martin) Shmitt. She was nine years of age when her parents removed to Indiana and she later took up her residence in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Colebrook became the parents of seven children: Fredrick, deceased; Mary, who is the wife of William Coy of Curry county, by whom she has five children; Ellenora, who became the wife of Otto Newman of Bandon, by whom she has six children; Louisa, who married Richard Svins. of California, and who is the mother of four children; Anna, the wife of George Jensen, of San Diego, California; and William J. and George, both of whom reside in Portland.

Mr. Colebrook was a consistent democrat and took an intelligent interest in public affairs although he never sought public office. He was prominent in the Masonic order and had many friends in the section in which he resided for so many years. The importance of his work in agricultural circles and the place he had attained in the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens were evidenced by the widespread regret at his death which was a genuine tribute of sorrow, for the close of a useful, valuable and upright life.

WILLIAM SPENCER SAWYERS is a native son of Oregon and was born on the old Sawyers donation claim nine miles east of Scottsburg, on April 9, 1855. His parents were Andrew and Frances (McDowell) Sawyers, the former a native of Main. His mother was born on the sea while her parents were crossing from Ireland to the United States. Mr. Sawyers' father was among the earliest of the Oregon pioneers and saw many cities become organized and flourishing communities from undeveloped beginnings. He assisted in agricultural expansion, aided in the suppression of Indian rebellions and witnessed the evolution of a great and prosperous commonwealth from a wilderness. He was born on April 19, 1822, on disputed territory between Maine and Canada. When he was four months old his parents moved to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where his mother died some years later. He began his active career when he was only nine years of age, at which early time he was obliged to earn his own livelihood. At sixteen he was taken as apprentice to learn the carpenter's trade under Reuben Oliver, with whom he served for five years. In May, 1843, he left Pennsylvania for New York and from there went to New Orleans in September of the same year. On December 25, 1844, he was united in marriage to Miss Fannie McDowell, a daughter of Andrew and Sarah McDowell of Philadelphia. He lived in New Orleans for over six years and became successful as an expert carpenter. In September, 1849, he started for California on the bark Mary Waterman, under the captaincy of Mr. Higgins. The party stopped at Rio de Janeiro for one week and were becalmed in a fog in a cove two miles off Valparaiso. Some flat boat men who were aboard constructed an improvised raft from spurs and planks and with this they towed the vessel out to sea, where it encountered a good breeze and sailed into Valparaiso. Here Mr. Sawyers remained for one week. Early in May, 1850, the vessel again put out to sea, sailing later through the Golden Gate to San Francisco. There Mr. Sawyers found plenty of work to do at carpentering, receiving for his services from twelve to sixteen dollars a day. In June he purchased three shares, at one hundred dollars each, in an exploring stock company known as Winchester Paine & Company. The operators of this enterprise went first to the Rogue river valley but stayed only one week in that vicinity, later coming to the vicinity of Scottsburg and exploring the Umpqua river as far as the big canyon. They went back to San Francisco, taking along a good report of the regions of Oregon which they had investigated. They called a meeting, levying an assessment of twenty-five per cent of what had been paid them for stock. This gave Andrew Sawyers an interest in the foundation and promotion of the towns of Umpqua, Scottsburg and Elkton. In October, 1850, he and his family took passage on the steamer Kate Heath and arrived at Scottsburg in the same year. As they entered the harbor they saw the wreck of the Bostonian with its scattered timbers piled upon the beach. In December, 1850, Mr. Sawyers' daughter, Anna Augusta, was born. She had the distinction of being the first white child born on the Umpqua river. Soon afterward Mr. Sawyers took up a donation claim nine miles east of Scottsburg and began its cultivation. He was active as a farmer and was a force in agricultural development for many years. When he first came to Oregon he built a house for Mr. Garnier, of the Hudson's Bay Company, and worked at his trade for a number of years. During the first days of his settlement the carpentering business was extremely dull and he did not earn even a moderate competence by it for some time. However, when the pack trains from various parts of the United States began to come in and the population increased there was work for him to do in building houses for the pioneers. In 1854 he traveled to Oregon City to meet his father, John Jacob Sawyers, who with his family, consisting of two daughters, Mary, with her husband and one child, and Margaret, who afterward married Cyrus Hedden, and his two sons, Jacob A. and James Earl, had just arrived after a journey across the plains. In 1855 the Indians of the Rogue river were in a hostile state and the military ferry being upon Mr. Sawyers' place, a fort was built upon his land and all the settlers congregated within its walls and remained for some time until the danger was over. In 1858 or 1859 Andrew Sawyers moved with his family to Roseburg in order to give his children the advantages of a better education. He worked at various occupations until 1862, in which year he started for the mines at the Cascades. He did carpentering on the steamers and in February, 1863, returned to his family. In the following June he started for Bannock City, Idaho, and after working at his trade for a year and a half returned to Roseburg and established himself on a farm where he improved and cultivated the soil until his death, on December 20, 1906. His wife's death had preceded his and occurred on the 2d of January, 1902. Andrew Sawyers was a representative citizen and a prominent agriculturist in Douglas county. He served through one of the most important Indian wars, enlisting in an Oregon regiment on November 8, 1855, and being discharged at Roseburg on January 18, of the next year. His services were under the command of R. L. Williams as colonel of the regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Sawyers were the parents of ten children, three of whom died in infancy. The others were: Elizabeth, the deceased wife of H. C. Slocum, by whom she had one son, Harry C., of Roseburg; John J., who died at the age of seventeen years; Anna, the wife of Joseph Reed, of Emmett, Idaho; Catherine, who married J. Q. Stephens, of Los Angeles, California; Margueritta, the wife of Peter Nelson, of Gardiner, Oregon; William, of this review; and Fannie Isabelle, the wife of L. C. Haines, of Elkton, Oregon, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work.

William Sawyers was reared at home and secured his education in the common schools of Oregon. From his early childhood he was identified with the labors incident to general agriculture and when he had reached his majority he continued to assist his father in the work of the farm. He spent two years in Washington and Idaho and one year in southern Oregon, working on a cattle ranch. He married in 1855 and for seven years afterward he and his wife made their home with Mr. Sawyers' parents, where in conjunction with his father William Sawyers operated the home farm. Their united labors caused the property to expand and develop rapidly and when the father died it was already one of the model places in Douglas county. William Sawyers inherited two hundred acres of the finest land in the Umpqua valley and later bought from his sister, Mrs. Haines, two hundred and seventy-five acres adjoining. His farm now comprises four hundred and seventy-five acres, well improved and highly cultivated, equipped with efficient farm machinery and with suitable barns, outbuildings and granaries. Mr. Sawyers follows upon his property diversified farming and has been successful in every branch.

On November 16, 1885, Mr. Sawyers was united in marriage to Miss Belle Andrews, a daughter of Asa and Mary (Wentworth) Andrews, who came to Oregon from Illinois in 1878. A further history of Mrs. Sawyers' father appears on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of his son, T. W. Andrews. Mr. and Mrs. Sawyers are the parents of five children: William, Jr., who was educated in the Oregon State Agricultural College and is now aiding in the work on his father's farm; Ralph A. and Dena Belle, both of whom reside at home; Oscar W., who is deceased; and Arizona. Mr. Sawyers is a republican in his political beliefs but has never sought public office. He and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. He is one of the substantial and influential men of the Umpqua valley and the qualities which made his father, when a child of nine, face an unfriendly world courageously and wrest from it an honorable and in some points an unusual career, are today influencing the son in his less conspicuous but equally worthy life and are making his activities useful and valuable to Douglas county and to the commonwealth of Oregon.

ROBERT McKENZIE. Modern, progressive agriculture finds a worthy representative in Robert McKenzie, who owns one thousand acres of land in Curry county, near Port Orford, and by his practical, intelligent and systematic methods has made it one of the finest farm properties in this section. His success is the result of specialized activity and earnest labor along developing lines and has made him one of the leading figures in agricultural circles of Curry county. He was born in Scotland in 1835, a son of John and Catherine McKenzie, who lived and died in their native country, the father passing away when the subject of this review was only six weeks old. He and his wife had two children, of whom Robert McKenzie is the younger. His brother David died in Australia.

Robert McKenzie was educated in the public schools of his native country and remained at home until 1857, when he went to Australia and lived in that country until 1874. In the latter year he went to San Francisco, coming shortly afterward to Curry county, where he settled on a farm at the mouth of Elk river, purchasing four hundred and eighty acres of land from George Dyer, to which he has subsequently added. He owns one thousand acres, well improved and highly developed, one of the largest and most valuable agricultural properties in this section of the county. Upon this farm he carries on stock-raising and specializes in dairying, keeping a fine herd of sixty cows for this purpose. His dairy buildings are modern, sanitary and thoroughly equipped and the entire enterprise is ably and intelligently conducted and is a valuable addition to his income. He also specializes in the breeding and raising of high-grade stock, handling sheep, cattle and hogs, which he sells in the Oregon markets. He is interested in every phase of development in this section of the state, which is manifest in his investments in various important local enterprises. In his farming operations he has been thorough and energetic, his well directed labor and progressive methods resulting in gratifying success. He has devoted practically all of his time since the beginning of his active career to agricultural pursuits and by upright and honorable standards has gained that prosperity which results from earnest and well directed efforts and is accounted one of the substantial and leading citizens of his district.

Robert McKenzie was married on July 18, 1863, in Australia to Miss Georgina Tulloch, a native of Scotland, and they became the parents of ten children: John, of Elk river; Kate, whose death occurred in Curry county; Eliza, who resides at home; Annie, the wife of Eugene Schuyler, of Santa Barbara, California; Margaret, at home; Isabelle, who married Ed A. Ashman, of Santa Cruz, California; Ena, who is following the profession of nursing at San Francisco, California; Flora, at home; David, who is married and resides on the Elk river; and Robert G., at home. The family belong to the Presbyterian church.

Mr. McKenzie gives his allegiance to the republican party but never seeks public office, preferring to devote his attention to the development of his farm. Actuated always by the most practical and scientific methods and guided by high ideals of business integrity, he has through his own well directed energies worked his way upward until he is today classed among the wealthy and prominent agriculturists of Curry county.

MARGUERITE E. (CORNELIUS) POMEROY, M. D., needs no introduction to the readers of this volume, for she is known as one of Salem's leading physicians. Moreover, the high and upright principles of her life have commended her to the confidence and good will of all with whom she has been brought in contact. She was born at Hillsboro, Oregon, her parents being Jesse and Caroline (Ingles) Cornelius. Her father's birth occurred in Missouri, on the 7th of June, 1829, while his death occurred on the 19th of December, 1895. He crossed the plains in 1845 with his parents and passed his entire life in Oregon, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. The mother was also born in Missouri and when she was but six weeks of age was taken across the plains to Oregon by her parents. She is now living in Portland. To their union twelve children were born, six dying after they reached maturity. Both the paternal and maternal grandfather of Dr. Pomeroy took part in the Yakima Indian war.

Dr. Pomeroy received her education in the common schools of Hillsboro and was graduated from the high school with the class of 1886. Subsequently she studied in the Pacific University at Forest Grove, and after completing the college course entered the training school for nurses at the Good Samaritan Hospital, in Portland. Later she completed the medical course in Willamette University, from which institution she was graduated with the class of 1904, after which she took a post-graduate course in the Polyclinic, at San Francisco, in 1905. So successful had her work been in these institutions that she went east to Chicago and took a post-graduate course in Rush Medical College in 1909. Previously, after her graduation from Willamette University in 1904, she began the active practice of medicine in Portland and in 1906, after her return from San Francisco, located permanently in Salem, and now occupies a suite of offices in the United States National Bank Building. Her ability is recognized by the general public and a large patronage is accorded her. She is careful in the diagnosis of her cases and her judgment in professional matters is seldom if ever at fault. Although she is a general practitioner, she has specialized in pediatric and genealogical surgery.

In 1888 Marguerite E. Cornelius was married to Charles Pomeroy, who was born on the 17th of July, 1865, and is a son of Calvin and Henrietta (Blish) Pomeroy, the former having passed away. The father came to Oregon in 1842, and, in partnership with the Cornelius family, took up a donation land claim, which has since been known as the Cornelius claim and upon which he resided for many years. Mr. Pomeroy's grandfather owns the mill site at Oregon City. Charles Pomeroy came to Salem in 1896 and opened a jewelry store, which he is still conducting. To Mr. and Mrs. Pomeroy two children have been born: Wilbur, deceased; and Ray, who is a junior in Willamette University.

Dr. Pomeroy is a member of the Marion County and the Oregon State Medical Societies, and of the Ladies' Multnomah Medical Society. She also holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally she is identified with the Rebekahs, the Pythian Sisters, the Royal Neighbors, the Women of Woodcraft, the United Artisans, the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, the Modern Brotherhood and the Ladies of the Maccabees, and is acting as physician for each of these orders. Her broad sympathies and her superior training have already won her an enviable reputation and she stands prominent among the physicians of Marion county.

W. L. TINGLEY, who devotes his time and energies to the raising of grain and stock, is the owner of a ranch comprising four hundred and eighty acres and situated about three miles east of Midland in Klamath county. His birth occurred in New Brunswick, Canada, on the 9th of September, 1867, his parents being Harvey and Abby (Dobson) Tingley, who spent their entire lives in that province. The father devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career.

W. L. Tingley, who was the second in order of birth in a family of seven children, remained under the parental roof until eighteen years of age and then made his way to Siskiyou county, California, where he worked as a laborer. For a number of years he was employed in lumber camps by Abner Weed. In the summer of 1906 he purchased his present ranch of four hundred and eighty acres in Klamath county, Oregon, and took up his abode thereon the following April. One hundred and eighty acres thereof is under the government ditch. During the past five years he has been engaged in the pursuits of farming and stock-raising and his labors in this connection have been attended with excellent results.

In March, 1904, Mr. Tingley was united in marriage to Miss Bertha L. Moss, a native of California and a daughter of William Moss. Mr. and Mrs. Tingley have two children, Floyd and Thelma. Mr. Tingley is republican in his political views, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. He well deserves a place among the representative agriculturists and respected citizens of his community.

NATHAN SMITH MERRILL. The town of Merrill owes its existence as well as its name to the subject of this review, one of the honored and valued citizens of Klamath county who is still actively connected with agricultural and stock-raising interests although he has now passed the seventy-sixth milestone of life's journey. He was born August 22, 1836, in Hillsboro county, New Hampshire, a son of Nathan Merrill and a grandson of William Merrill, who were also natives of the old Granite state. The ancestry of the family is traced back to three brothers who emigrated from Paris and arrived in the new world soon after the Mayflower reached the shores of New England. They settled in Boston and became the founders of the Merrill family in America. Nathan Merrill wedded Julia A. Morrill who was also a native of New Hampshire and was a daughter of a veteran of the War of 1812, who died in service. Nathan S. Merrill is the eldest of his father's family, the others being: William R., of Colusa, California; John A., of Redding, California; Charles H., of Merrill, Oregon; Morris A., of Willows, California; and Mrs. Henrietta Scroggins, who has resided with her brother Nathan since the death of his wife.

Nathan S. Merrill left New England and went with his parents to Kane county, Illinois, in 1846. There he pursued his education in the public schools and in the fall of 1857 the family removed to McDonald county, Missouri. In the spring of 1862 he returned to Kane county, Illinois, and in the fall of 1869 started for California, accompanied by his wife and his father. Settling in Colusa county, he first cultivated land on shares and afterward purchased land near what was then Colusa but is now Glenn county, California. For thirteen years he was thus engaged but raised only one good crop during that time. In 1881 he removed to Chehalis county, Washington, where he followed farming until November, 1890, when he came to his present place of residence in what is now the town of Merrill. Here he has since remained. He purchased a ranch and in the spring of 1894 laid off a portion of the town of Merrill, the town site comprising eighty acres, of which he owns two-thirds. At one time he had five hundred acres adjoining the town, all of it under cultivation, two hundred acres being planted to alfalfa and the remainder to grain. He has since sold off much of this land but still retains two hundred and seventy acres, which is devoted to the raising of hay and for stock. He handles registered stock, including Durham cattle and Berkshire hogs. He has also engaged successfully in raising mules. He sold two mules at three years of age that weighed twenty-six hundred and fifty pounds and were over eighteen hands high. They were bred in 1908 and at one year had attained the height of sixteen hands and one inch, being said to be the largest mules ever raised in the United States. All of his land is now under government ditch. At one time he was a stockholder in the Little Klamath Ditch Company, which sold out to the United States government, at which time four million, five hundred thousand dollars was invested in the project.

On the 26th of October, 1860, in McDonald county, Missouri, Mr. Merrill wedded Miss Nancy J. Newland, a native of Washington county, Arkansas. They celebrated their forty-sixth wedding anniversary on the 28th of October, 1906, eating their first meal in their new home. This is a twelve room house, modern in its appointments and equipments, supplied with hot and cold water and electric lights. Electric power also operates the pump, churn, separator and washing machine. He has built his own water works upon the place, including a three thousand gallon tank. The Merrill home is said to be the finest farm house in Klamath county. The house stands far back from the road, with a beautiful drive leading to it lined with cottonwood and poplar trees. On the 20th of September, 1908, Mr. Merrill was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, with whom he had lived in happiness and harmony for forty-eight years. She was a lady of many excellent qualities, loved and esteemed by all who knew her. She took a very active interest in the Rebekah lodge, the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows society, and was its representative in the grand lodge. Mr. Merrill has always accredited his wife with much of his success, profiting by her wise counsel and keen insight as well as by her able management of the household affairs.

In politics Mr. Merrill has been a lifelong democrat and in 1902 he was elected county commissioner, serving for four years, during which time the beautiful county high school was erected at Klamath Falls, his support being given to the project. His election was a tribute to his personal popularity and worth, for the county is strongly republican. In 1885 he became a member of Sylvia Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F., in Washington, and his is the first name that appears on the charter of Klamath Falls Lodge, No. 137. With the organization of Tule Lake Lodge, No. 187, at Merrill, his name was again placed first on the charter and he was the first noble grand of the organization. This is the only fraternal society that he has ever joined. He has been a hard worker and is a well preserved man. He has led a very exemplary life, never using tobacco and never tasting liquor of any kind as a beverage. He attributes his good health and vigor to his regularity of habits and temperate life. Three meals a day and a good night's rest, with no abuse of nature's laws, have made him a well preserved man. Eight o'clock in the evening usually finds him in bed and four o'clock in the morning awake and preparing for the day's duties. His influence has always been on the side of right and progress, truth and improvement. He helped build the four churches in Merrill and wherever possible has promoted the welfare of the community along various lines. His has, indeed, been a well spent life and Merrill counts him as one of her most honored and valued citizens.

CHARLES L. McNARY, dean of Willamette College of Law, is one of the capable and highly successful attorneys of Salem. He was born in Marion county, on the 12th of June, 1874, and is a son of Hugh L. and Margaret (Claggett) McNary, the father a native of Pike county, Illinois, and the mother of Kentucky. Hugh L. McNary crossed the plains to Oregon as a boy with his parents, who located on a donation claim in the vicinity of Oregon City, Clackamas county, in 1845. During the succeeding ten years he remained at home, assisting his father in the cultivation and improvement of the farm. At the expiration of that time he went to Linn county and taught school for several years, and while there took up a donation land claim but later came to Marion county and acquired a farm near Salem, which he cultivated until his death in 1882. The family of Mr. and Mrs. McNary numbered ten children, those living being: John H. who was recorder of Marion county from 1890 to 1894, and is now serving his second term as attorney of the third judicial district, comprising the counties of Marion, Polk, Tillamook, Linn and Yamhill, with his office located in Salem; Ella, the wife of W. J. Stolz, of the Stolz Vinegar Factory of Salem; Mary, who married H. T. Bruce, a retired farmer; Nina, who is with her sister, Mrs. Stolz in Salem; and Charles L., our subject.

Charles L. McNary was reared at home and in the acquirement of his preliminary education attended the public schools of Salem. After his graduation from the high school he matriculated in the law department of Leland Stanford University, at Palo Alto, California. In October, 1898, he established an office in Salem and engaged in general practice with his brother, John H. McNary. He is a very capable representative of his profession and for two years he filled the chair of medical jurisprudence in Willamette University, and for the past four years he has been dean of the law department of that institution.

Salem was the scene of the marriage of Mr. McNary on the 19th of November, 1902, to Miss Jessie Breyman, a native of this city and a daughter of Eugene Breyman, who was born and reared in Germany. He emigrated to the United States in 1852, and located in Amity, Polk county, Oregon. He was one of the pioneer merchants of the Willamette valley, and being a very capable business man met with success in his undertakings. For his wife Mr. Breyman chose Miss Margaret Skaife of Marion county, who is still living.

Mr. McNary has filled all of the chairs in the Masonic fraternity, the Elks and the Odd Fellows, and is a most worthy exemplar of each order. He has taken an active interest in all public questions and municipal affairs since attaining his manhood, and can always be depended upon to champion every movement that will in any way tend to promote the development of the community. He was president of the Salem Board of Trade for two years, assuming the duties of this office in 1909. He was one of the organizers of the Salem Fruit Union the same year and has ever since been president of this association. In his political views he is a staunch republican and is president of the Taft-Sherman Club. He is one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of Salem, whose energies are largely expended in promoting the public welfare, and advancing its development along the various lines of human activity.

JOHN A. KOONTZ is engaged in general farming, owning eighty acres of land under the government ditch. This tract he has rapidly transformed into a highly cultivated place, its many improvements bearing evidence of his industry and practical methods. He was born in Putnam county, Illinois, April 9, 1858, and is a son of Henry and Lucy (Grubb) Koontz, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. The mother died in Putnam county when her son John A. was nine years of age. He was the eldest of six children, the others being Henry, William, Lucy, Charles and Alfred.

John A. Koontz in his early childhood went to live with his grandfather, with whom he remained between the ages of two and seventeen years. He continued in Putnam county until January 22, 1876, when he went to Missouri, where he started in active life on his own account, working at farm labor. He spent twelve years in Missouri and in 1889 arrived in Klamath county, Oregon, where he worked for wages until 1905. In 1893, however, he homesteaded his present place but for twelve years thereafter continued in the employ of others until he felt that his capital and conditions were such as to justify him in beginning the improvement of his own land. He now owns eighty acres of the one hundred and sixty acre homestead and is diligently and persistently carrying on the work of the farm. The government ditch supplies this with water and excellent irrigation is making his fields most productive so that he annually raises good crops. He is a public-spirited citizen and that he does not look only to his own interests and welfare is indicated by the fact that he has given nine acres for the right of way of the Modoc Northern Railroad which is now under construction upon condition that they build a depot and put in a siding here. This will afford excellent shipping facilities for the people of the surrounding country and will prove of inestimable benefit to the ranchers of this part of Klamath county.

Mr. Koontz has been married twice. In September, 1880, he wedded Miss Ella Drummond and unto them was born a daughter, Julia A., now the wife of B. E. Hull, of St. Joseph, Missouri. His present wife was formerly Mrs. Ida E. Greeley, whom he wedded December 29, 1908.

In politics Mr. Koontz is a republican, interested in the welfare and success of his party to the extent of advocating its principles and voting for its candidates, yet he never seeks nor desires office for himself. He is generous in his support of the Presbyterian church and gave an acre of his farm upon which to build a house of worship of that denomination. In fact he advocates all progressive measures that will advance the material, intellectual, political and moral progress of the community and thereby has become a valued citizen of Klamath county.

JOSEPH LANE HAMPTON is living practically retired in Paisley, although he has timber and mining interests in this region which return to him a good income on his investment. It is characteristic of the native sons of Oregon that they put forth earnest and persistent effort in the upbuilding of their state and endeavor to place it on a par with the older states of the east in all that constitutes a great commonwealth. Mr. Hampton, ever interested in the work of progress in the northwest, has cooperated heartily in the improvement of the community in which he has lived. He was born February 14, 1854, on a ranch six miles south of Eugene, in Lane county, Oregon, a son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Fickle) Hampton. The father was born in Kentucky in 1804, the mother in Virginia in 1812, and they were married in Missouri. In 1845, several years before the discovery of gold in California, they crossed the plains by ox teams, to enjoy the opportunities offered in the northwest and settled upon a donation claim in Yamhill county, about six miles below Sheridan. They came with the famous Joseph Meek's train passing through what is now Harney and Lake counties. At length the old farm was sold and Mr. Hampton engaged in the stock business. He went to northern California but afterward returned to Eugene and in 1871 he removed to Lake county, which was then a part of Jackson county. Subsequently he went once more to Eugene and his last days were spent in the home of a son seven miles south of that city, where he died in 1884, having for about four years survived his wife, who passed away in 1880. Their children were eleven in number: Lilburn, who died when about eighteen years of age; John D. and James, both deceased; Mary, deceased, who became the wife of S. A. Caldwell, also deceased; Eliza, who is the widow of M. S. Riggs and resides in Harney county, Oregon; Ralph, who died in childhood; Jesse Green and Andrew J., both of whom died in 1907; William Wade, of Paisley; Joseph L.; and Julia Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Moore and died in 1883.

Joseph L. Hampton accompanied his parents on their removal to Lake county and remained with them until they returned to Eugene in 1872, at which time he was eighteen years of age. He enlisted for service in the Modoc Indian war under Captain Thomas Mulholland, serving during the last month of the hostilities with the Indians. He then turned his attention to the stock-raising business, in which he engaged successfully for many years or until he sold out in 1901, since which time he has lived practically retired in Paisley, enjoying in well earned rest the fruit of his former toil. He has made judicious investment in timber and mining properties, being interested in the Paisley mines.

In 1888 Mr. Hampton was married to Miss Sadie L. Follett, who was born in Elgin, Iowa, April 3, 1870, and is a daughter of Captain E. Follett. They had two children: May E., who died at the age of six years; and Ruth, who died at the age of eighteen months.

Joseph Lane Hampton is a Master Mason and he and his wife are connected with the Eastern Star and with the Methodist Episcopal church—associations which indicate much of the principles which govern their conduct. At the present time he is serving as county fruit inspector. He is one of the city fathers, interested in the progress and upbuilding of Paisley, and in politics he is a Taft republican, holding to the more conservative branch of the party. He is mindful of all the duties of citizenship and, keeping well informed on the questions and issues of the day, is able to support his contentions by intelligent argument.

HENRY FISCHER is the vice president and manager of the Fischer Lumber Company and has been associated with his brother Carl E. in the lumber business in Oregon for many years. He was educated in the public schools of Wisconsin and at an early age started out in life to make his own way in the world. He came to Oregon one year later than his brother and has since that time been actively engaged with him in business. He is a capable business man and has been instrumental in promoting the growth of the enterprise with which he is connected. The Fischer Lumber Company is a corporation, of which Fred Fischer, Sr., is president; Carl E. Fischer, secretary; Fred Fischer, Jr., treasurer; Henry Fischer, our subject, vice president and manager; while Walter Fischer has charge of the sawmill work. Their annual business amounts to about fourteen million feet, and they have a complete plant, comprising dry kilns and planing mills. They manufacture columns and general lumber. They own a lumber supply which they calculate will last them about twenty-five years and ship lumber east as far as Montreal and other eastern markets and own several retail yards and shipping yards at various points to handle their wholesale business. Their offices and mills are located at Marcola and they own retail yards at Junction City and Halsey.

In 1898 Henry Fischer was married to Amelia Lunan, a daughter of August and Minnie Lunan. She was born in Wisconsin and is one of a large family of children, of whom eight survive. Her parents, who were natives of Germany, came to Oregon in 1907 and purchased a farm near Cottage Grove, upon which they make their home. To Mr. and Mrs. Fischer have been born three children, Oressa, Cleona, and Glenn, of whom the two eldest are now attending school in Springfield.

Mr. Fischer is a capable man and has given strict attention to his business, with the details of which he has become thoroughly conversant. He is well known and esteemed in the local circles of the lumber trade and in Springfield, where he makes his home, is accorded the highest respect by all those with whom he associates.

EDWARD A. REVENUE, an agriculturist who resides on his farm one and a half miles northeast of Sandy, Clackamas county, was born July 15, 1864, a son of Francis and Lyddie (Lawrence) Revenue. After receiving his education in the public schools and occupying his leisure hours by caring for the duties which came to hand, Edward A. Revenue started out on his own account at the age of eighteen years. His first position was with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company as a member of the construction crew. He was thus employed during the winter of 1882 but subsequently cleared land under contract. In 1883 he removed to Baker county, Oregon, and after remaining there for one year returned to Portland, where he was employed at various occupations before working for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, at Tacoma. He also worked in the Coeur d'Alene mines in Idaho and subsequently for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Later he was engaged in logging on the Columbia river and for nine years he roamed through the country before returning to the farm, where he remained until his father's death, which occurred June 1, 1909. His father deeded the farm to him, which was part payment for the labor he had previously given in aiding in its cultivation and since he has been the owner of the property he has continued to improve and develop it.

On the 13th of October, 1895, Mr. Revenue was married to Miss Myra Flynn, whose birth occurred March 2, 1879, and who is a daughter of Nelson A. and Jane (Mooney) Flynn. The father was born September 21, 1841, and during his early life lived in Wood county, West Virginia. While still a resident of that state he joined Company E, First West Virginia Cavalry, for service in the Civil war. Being wounded before his first year was completed, he was discharged but later joined the state guard and served until the close of the war. In the fall of 1865 he went to Hancock, Illinois, where he resided for eight years before returning to West Virginia. After two years he removed to Missouri and made his home in that state for seven years and after a three years' residence in West Virginia settled in Kansas. He lived in the Sunflower state for five years on a homestead claim but in April, 1883, came to Oregon. After making his home in Sycamore for two years where he was postmaster, he located in Cherryville upon a homestead claim of forty acres, upon which he resided for thirteen years. Mrs. Flynn was born on the 31st of March, 1843, and her marriage occurred December 25, 1862. After her death Mr. Flynn retired from active work and has since lived with his daughter Mrs. Revenue. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Flynn nine children were born: Gilmore N. and Vira A., both of whom are deceased; Alice M., who is the wife of L. B. Trullinger, of Lents, Oregon, and the mother of one son, Roy M.; Noah W., of eastern Oregon, who is married and has seven children, Ira, Clyde, Benjamin, Celia, Orville, Jessie and Leslie; Minnie J., who became the wife of D. W. Douglas, of Cherryville, Oregon, and has three children, Vira, Alice and Waldo E.; Mrs. Revenue; George, a resident of Oregon; Sarah, who has passed away; and Ira, of Hood River, who is married and has three children, Louis, Arlie and an infant son. To Mr. and Mrs. Revenue two children have been born, one of whom died in infancy. The surviving member of the family is Alice Ruth, who was born March 14, 1899, and is attending school.

Although Mr. Revenue is in sympathy with the greater number of the policies of the republican party, he casts his vote for man or measure rather than according to the dictates of the party machine. He has never sought nor desired office but takes a citizen's interest in the political welfare and civic government of Clackamas county. He has ever been diligent and industrious and the word fail has no place in his vocabulary. His life in all of its various relations has been of such character as to command the respect and esteem of those with whom he has been associated.

J. W. MANNING resides upon, owns and cultivates a ranch ten miles south of Klamath Falls, having at one time three hundred and twenty acres of land which was covered with sagebrush. His place now comprises one hundred and sixty acres, much of which has been brought under cultivation and is devoted to general farming. He was born in Mansfield, Ohio, May 3, 1838, and is a son of Horace and Wata A. (Crandall) Manning. The paternal grandfather, a native of Scotland, established his home in Maryland on coming to the new world. His son Horace was born either in Scotland or in Maryland and thence removed to Ohio, where his death occurred a short time after the birth of his son, J. W. Manning. He was a miller by occupation. His wife was a native of New York and went to Ohio with her parents.

In the days of her widowhood she became a resident of Missouri, going to that state with her father in the fall of 1838. She afterward became the wife of Aaron Chambers and in 1852 crossed the plains with her husband and her son, J. W. Manning. They traveled with ox teams and were six months upon the way, settling three and a half miles below Jacksonville, where both Mr. and Mrs. Chambers died. Mr. Chambers' first wife was a sister of the mother of our subject and by that first marriage there were two children.

J. W. Manning worked on the ranch in Jackson county with his stepfather until 1862 and afterward engaged in mining and freighting in Idaho and Montana, following the discovery of gold in those states. He returned to Jackson county in the fall of 1866 and subsequently was proprietor of a livery stable during most of the period of his residence in Jacksonville but was sheriff of Jackson county from 1874 until 1878. After he had been two years in the office, Lake county was cut off from Jackson county and later Klamath county was set off from Lake. For two years Mr. Manning conducted a livery stable in Klamath Falls and subsequently secured a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, on which he took up his abode in 1890. He also preempted one hundred and sixty acres, thus securing three hundred and twenty acres in all. The tract was covered with sagebrush and he was one of the first settlers of the locality and no improvements had been made. His ranch is situated ten miles south of Klamath Falls. Having disposed of part of this, he now devotes his time to the improvement of the remaining one hundred and sixty acres, carrying on general farming. His fields are well tilled, his methods are practical and progressive and the results which follow his labors are desirable. During the Modoc Indian war he engaged in teaming for the United States government. Jacksonville was the nearest postoffice at that time and Mr. Manning carried the mail and passengers from Jacksonville. He did an extensive livery business, owning stables in that town, and in fact in every business relation he has won success, owing to his diligence, careful management and well directed labors.

Mr. Manning was married first to Sarah E. Bellford, a native of Iowa who crossed the plains to Rogue river in the '60s and died in Jacksonville in 1878. There were three children of that marriage: Wata A., the wife of James Fay, of Medford, Oregon; Maggie Bell, the deceased wife of Levi Ward; and John W., living in Klamath county. In 1878 Mr. Manning was again married, his second union being with Belle Gallaway, a native of Mississippi, who crossed the plains with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Gallaway. Her father, who served through the Mexican war and also through the Civil war, is now living in Idaho at the age of nearly one hundred years. Mr. and Mrs. Manning have five children: H. M.; George W., a ranchman of Lake county; A. J., of Klamath Falls; Grover Cleveland, who died at the age of sixteen years; and Frances, the wife of W. H. Wynant, of Klamath Falls. Although Mr. Manning has passed the allotted Psalmist's span of three score years and ten, he is still an active factor in business circles, carefully managing his ranching interests, and whatever success he has achieved in life is attributable to his own industry, determination and perseverance. His straightforward business dealings have gained him the confidence of his fellowmen and made him one of the valued citizens of Klamath county.

JOHN MERIT WRIGHT. The death of John Merit Wright, who passed away in Roseburg on July 19, 1897, deprived the state of Oregon of one of the sturdy pioneers in its settlement, who defied natural forces, endured hardships, privations and defeat and evolved by their own labor out of an uncultivated wilderness and opposing timber forests the fertile land and well developed farms which are making the state prominent among the great agricultural regions of America. Mr. Wright was among the early settlers in Douglas county, his residence in this section dating from 1852. He was born in Kanawha county, West Virginia, June 12, 1826, and moved to Missouri with his parents in 1834. In 1850 he crossed the plains, going to California, where he remained until 1851, when he returned to Missouri. In the following year he again crossed the plains, this time accompanied by his family. He settled in Oregon in the Flournoy valley, Douglas county, whence, after a short period of residence, he moved to French Settlement in the same section and there remained until 1889. In that year he removed to Roseburg, where he lived retired until his death. During practically all of his active life he followed general agricultural pursuits and when he died was the owner of one of the most excellent and most intelligently developed farms in French Settlement.

In Missouri, in 1846, Mr. Wright was united in marriage to Miss Emily Simmons, who was born in Howard county, Missouri, April 20, 1830. Their marriage occurred in Linn county and Mrs. Wright accompanied her husband to Oregon in 1852. Seven children were born to their union: W. T., cashier of the First National Bank of Roseburg; Calvin W., of Marshfield; Lee S., a resident of Portland; Mrs. Rowena L. Jones, of Ronan, Montana; Mrs. L. T. Thompson, of Coles Valley; and Mrs. Alice G. Van Buren and Mrs. Emily Merit West, both of Roseburg. Mrs. Wright passed away at her home in Roseburg in 1902, at the age of seventy-two years. She was the highest type of Christian woman, kind, sympathetic, companionable and generous. Acquaintances immediately became her friends and admirers, her wholesome nature adding to the irresistible charm of her personality.

Mr. Wright gave his political allegiance to the democratic party but never sought public office, preferring to concentrate his attention upon the absorbing duties connected with the conduct of his agricultural enterprise. He was a man of sterling worth, honest in his convictions and courageous in the support of them. He had few enemies, his rigid adherence to principles of honor and integrity gaining him the respect and esteem of everyone who was in any way associated with him. He was a devout adherent of the Baptist church, having joined that religion in 1845, and lived a consistent Christian life.

MERLE SHELLY KILGORE. The agricultural interests of Klamath county find a worthy representative in Merle Shelly Kilgore. Moreover, he is one of the native sons of the county, having been born in Langells Valley on the 16th of April, 1890. His parents were Silas Wright and Mary A. (Herrin) Kilgore. The father was one of the pioneer settlers of Klamath county and was long identified with stock-raising here but spent his last ten years in retirement. He was the owner of three hundred acres eleven miles south of Klamath Falls, of which he had one hundred and fifteen acres planted to alfalfa. He also engaged quite extensively in stock-raising and at one time had five hundred head of cattle of the Durham breed. In addition to his home place he owned a section of land in Langells valley and at one time resided thereon. He was born near Canton, Stark county, Ohio, July 18, 1842, a son of James and Mary Ann (Dean) Kilgore, natives of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and Stark county Ohio, respectively. The grandparents of our subject were married in the latter county about 1837 and Mrs. Kilgore, who was born October 8, 1819, was of German and English descent. On the 11th of April, 1854, they left Ohio and after a difficult and arduous but safe journey reached Ashland, Jackson county, Oregon, on the 1st of October. Two years later the grandfather rented a farm near Central Point and in 1859 removed to the J. F. Miller farm, two miles north of Jacksonville. He purchased the property and continued its cultivation for a number of years but in the spring of 1873 disposed of his interest and removed to Klamath county. While the Modoc war was in progress he was carrying mail from Ashland, Oregon, to Cedarville, Modoc county, California. In 1875 he returned to Ashland and purchased one hundred and twenty acres adjoining the town. He took up his residence in the town and there lived until his death, December 27, 1887, when he was seventy-six years of age, his birth having occurred in December, 1811. His wife died in Ashland, April 11, 1902. Their children were: Lucetta, deceased; Martha Washington, the widow of Robert Hargadine; Felix, deceased; Silas W.; Amanda, the wife of G. W. Whitmore; Marv, the wife of Henry Duncan, of Langells Valley; James deceased; Josephine, the wife of A. F. Squires, of Milwaukee, Oregon; and Florence, of Ashland.

When the family settled in Oregon Silas W. Kilgore was a boy of twelve years. He supplemented his education acquired in Ohio by study in Jackson county, Oregon, and in 1862 started out for himself, going to the mines in the eastern part of the state. In 1864 he returned to Jackson county and in 1869 came to Klamath county, where he secured employment as a farm hand on an Indian reservation under Captain A. C. Knapp. After two years he moved to Langells Valley and located on a farm near the postoffice of that name, taking up three hundred acres at that time. He afterward made a specialty of stock-raising until his retirement and met with deserved success. During the last ten years of his life he resided with his children and passed away July 9, 1911. He wedded Mary Alice Herrin, who was born May 1, 1857, and they became the parents of three children. Roy died at Klamath Falls, February 29, 1911, leaving a widow, a son and three daughters, who now reside at Bonanza, Klamath county. The last few years of his life he was identified with milling at Bonanza, previous to which time he had been a stockman. Silas Warren engages in general farming and stock-raising near Langells Valley. The father left an estate valued at seventy thousand dollars to be divided among his three heirs, including ranch lands, live stock and mills at Bonanza.

Merle S. Kilgore is now residing on a part of his father's estate, having three hundred acres on the Merrill road, ten miles south of Klamath Falls. Here he has made his home for three years and is engaged in farming and stock-raising. He has the entire ranch under irrigation, well built ditches enabling him to drain the water from any part of the place and thus by careful development produce large crops. For a time he worked in the mills but all of the time has given part of his attention to ranching.

On December 29, 1909, Mr. Kilgore was married to Miss Mary Emma Butler, who was born in Ashland, Oregon, November 11, 1891, and there resided until December, 1905, when she came to Klamath county with her parents, Joel Wesley and Susan Frances (Bagley) Butler. The father died when Mrs. Kilgore was only thirteen months old. The mother in 1911 returned to Ashland, where she now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Kilgore have an interesting little son, Silas Shelly.

In his political views Mr. Kilgore is a republican, giving staunch support to the party but never seeking or desiring office. He is a young man, alert and enterprising, thoroughly in sympathy with the spirit of the northwest and doing all he can to promote its progress and improvement. His father was one of the prominent and influential citizens of the community who did much for the material development of Oregon and the work instituted by the father is now being carried on by the son.

JOHN P. ANDERSON is a self-made man not only in the sense that he had no early advantages but in that he conquered his destiny against hampering obstacles. He was born in Sweden, December 27, 1842, and is a son of Charles and Mary Anderson, both of whom lived and died in their native country.

Mr. Anderson was reared at home and was educated in the public schools of Sweden. He came to the United States in 1869 and located in Henry county, Illinois, where he worked as a farm laborer for one year at ten dollars per month. He was employed in the coal mines for four years and during this time was able to save enough money with which to purchase eighty acres of land in Webster county, Iowa. He bought this property from his uncle, taking the land upon the latter's word. When in 1874 he removed to Iowa with the intention of locating upon his farm he found that the soil was not fertile and that it would not pay him to cultivate this tract. In 1877, therefore, he came in company with four other men to Oregon, leaving his family in Iowa until his fortune was assured. Upon his arrival in this state he selected land on the Umpqua river in Douglas county and homesteaded eighty acres, which was the beginning of his present large and excellently cultivated ranch. He wrote his wife to sell the farm in Iowa and this she succeeded in doing in April, 1878, leaving Iowa in the same year to join her husband. Mr. Anderson then entered a claim to the eighty acres adjoining his original tract and set about its clearing. He built a log cabin with a clapboard floor and a half-window for light. He had no money upon his first coming to the state and his success is entirely the result of his energy, ambition and determination. His farm was wild brush land which he grubbed and which evolved his present improved farm. From time to time he purchased other land until he now owns nine hundred acres and is one of the substantial and representative citizens of Douglas county. He is not only a successful man but also a progressive one and it is his delight to keep his ranch model and attractive in all of its aspects and to operate it along systematic lines.

Mr. Anderson was married in Sweden in 1866 to Miss Clara Christina Abrahamson and of the children born to this union five are now living, all natives of the United States: Harry, whose birth occurred in Sweden and who is farming on Eagle creek, Multnomah county; Ernest, who resides in Alaska; Annette, now Mrs. Roy Walker, of Lebanon, Oregon; Hilda, who married William Schultz, a ranchman of Eagle creek; and Emil, at home.

In his political views Mr. Anderson is a republican but has never sought public office. He and his wife belong to the Lutheran church. His early life was filled with hardships, which he conquered by energy, determination and hard work. His career has had a tangible success since he has risen from poverty against hampering obstacles to his present substantial condition. He is one of the most successful men of his section but while the conditions of his life are changed there has been no lessening of the stalwart and forceful qualities which have made it prosperous.

J. A. H. KOCH is living retired in a pleasant home in Port Orford after an active career in Curry county of almost thirty years. He has been a resident of this section since 1871 and during this period a great deal of the time has been a general farmer, operating for a number of years attractive land on Elk river which he acquired as a homestead claim.

He was born in Prussia, February 25, 1824, and his parents died in that country when he was a child. He received his education in the public schools of Germany and came to America when he was twenty years of age, having followed the sea for a number of years. He landed in New Orleans in 1844 and for three years sailed out of that port. In 1851 he came to California where he resided until 1871, spending his time in mining for gold. In the latter year he moved to Oregon and mined in Curry county for two years before he took up stock-raising in which line of activity he engaged for a short time. Eventually, however, he proved up a homestead claim and there lived until his retirement.

Mr. Koch had served for six months in the American army during the Mexican war and in 1887 applied to the government for a pension and for the back pension due him. This was granted in 1890 and shortly afterward he sold his homestead and came to Port Orford where he erected a comfortable home in which he lives. He gives his allegiance to the democratic party but has never been an office seeker. During the forty-one years of his residence in Curry county he has made many friends in the section, all of whom honor and esteem him for the upright and straightforward qualities of his mind and character.

BURRELL W. SHORT. A good ranch of three hundred and twenty-four acres about six and one-half miles southeast of Klamath Falls pays tribute to the care and labor bestowed upon it by Burrell W. Short, its owner. Here he is engaged in general farming and he ranks among the progressive citizens of the community, whose cooperation can always be counted upon to further advancement along beneficial lines. He was born in Union county, Georgia, November 8, 1875. His father, John A. Short, was born in Carthage, North Carolina, December 24, 1850, a son of B. H. and Mary (Cole) Short, the latter a native of Moore county and the former of Anson county, North Carolina. The Shorts are of English descent and the family was founded in America during Colonial days. The parents spent their entire lives in their native state and the grandfather, who was drafted for service in the Confederate army, was killed at the battle of Richmond, June 25, 1862. He had three brothers in the Confederate army, the youngest being killed at Gettysburg. In the family were five sons, four of whom joined the army while two met death in battle. There were also seven daughters in the family.

John A. Short resided with his mother until her death in 1864. He was the third of four children, the others being: Martha Jane, who is the widow of James Ingham, of Texas; P. W., living in Green-boro, North Carolina; and J. B., of Poe valley, Oregon. In 1867 John A. Short went to northern Georgia and in 1884 came to Klamath county, where he has since resided. He has been a lifelong farmer and success has attended him in his efforts. He preempted and homesteaded land, using both rights on the same place. That property was located near his present home but after a time he sold it and purchased one hundred and sixty acres, where he now resides. He is engaged in general farming and in addition to his home place he has some town property. In politics he is a staunch democrat and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Baptist church. In 1874 he married Clementine Odom, who was born in Union county, Georgia, February 21, 1855, a daughter of W. W. Odom, who died in Georgia. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Short became the parents of four children, of whom Burrell W. is the eldest. Columbus is living on the Merrill road. Mary is the wife of James Dixon, of Klamath county, and Samuel P. resides upon part of the land belonging to his father. All of the children are now married and are prospering.

Burrell W. Short was a lad of about nine years when he came with his parents to the far west in 1884. He resided with them until 1901 and has since followed ranching on his own account. In that year he took up his abode at his present place of residence on the Merrill road, about six miles southeast of Klamath Falls. Here he owns three hundred and twenty acres of land upon which are many good improvements all made by him. He carries on general farming and his well tilled fields return to him good crops. In addition he owns eighty acres of timber sixteen miles east of Klamath Falls and seven lots in the city.

In 1901 Mr. Short was married to Miss Elizabeth Susan Routly, who was born in Lindsay, Canada, May 10, 1881, and in 1889 came to Oregon with her widowed mother. Her parents were Samuel and Margaret Routly. By her marriage she has become the mother of four children, Delia, Alton, Dorothy and Mary.

Mr. Short votes with the democratic party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. He holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and in matters of citizenship is most public-spirited. The work that he has done in behalf of improving the highways of the state is far-reaching and beneficial and by reason thereof he merits the gratitude and high regard of his fellow townsmen. He was the second vice president of the state good roads league and it is characteristic of him that his influence and aid are always given on the side of advancement and improvement whereby the welfare of the community will be promoted.

PAUL R. MEINIG. Among the citizens of Sandy who through their energy, industry and public spirit, reinforced by natural ability, have become prominent in the commercial and civic circles of the city is Paul R. Meinig. His business interests have always been of a character that has contributed not only to his individual success but also constituted an important factor in general progress. A native of Germany, he was born on the 17th of April, 1869, his parents being F. A. and Bertha Wilhelmina (Fischer) Meinig, both of whom were also natives of Germany. They came to America in 1870, settling at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. After residing there for five years, during which time Mr. Meinig operated a flour mill, he disposed of his mill and the family came to Oregon in October, 1876, settling at Sandy. For the first few years he engaged in agricultural pursuits, having purchased eighty acres of land, but later he bought a small store, which also served as the postoffice. He was the first postmaster of Sandy and served in that capacity for two years. Although he continued conducting this store he also purchased a flour mill, which he managed in connection with his mercantile business until the time of his death, which occurred February 22, 1902. The mother is still residing upon the old home place with one of her sons, Otto. To the parents four children were born: Paul R., the subject of this review; Albon O., an agriculturist and mill owner of Sandy, who is married and has one child, Milton; Clara F., who is residing with her mother; and Otto H., who is also living at home with his mother.

Paul R. Meinig received his education in the public schools of Clackamas county, Oregon. As he was the eldest son, it was frequently difficult for him to find time to attend school, his father requiring his assistance in the various pursuits in which he was engaged. After the father's death he started in business on his own account and he and his brothers took charge of the mercantile store which the father had formerly conducted. Until two years ago he remained in partnership with his brothers but at that time purchased his brothers' interests and has since been sole owner. He has demonstrated his ability to deal with the public and has also shown that he possesses unusual capabilities in business transactions. He owns sixty acres of land within the town limits, his store building and residence, a two-story warehouse and the public hall building.

On the 21st of October, 1896, in Marmot, Oregon, Mr. Meinig was married to Miss Marie Aschoff, whose birth occurred in Kansas, September 25, 1873, and who is a daughter of Adolph and Dora (Gein) Aschoff. She was the eldest of nine children, the others being: Ernest J., of Junction City, Oregon, who is married and has one child, Otto, whose birth occurred February 20, 1909; Amelia, who is married to Harry Bramhall, of Troutdale, Oregon, and has two children, Marie and Florence; Otto, a resident of Marmot, Oregon; Henry, also of Marmot, who is married and has two children, Virgil and Chester; Emma, the wife of Harry Thomas, of Gresham, Oregon, and the mother of two children, Maxine and Clifford; Margaret, who makes her home in Portland; and Carl and Gustav, who are residing with their parents. Mrs. Meinig was brought to Oregon by her parents from Kansas March 16, 1882. Her father was a farmer and stock-raiser in Kansas for eleven years. Both he and his wife are natives of Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Meinig three children have been born: Gertrude, whose birth occurred October 1, 1897, and who is at home and attending school in Sandy; and Frances and Alfred, born June 5, 1900, and December 7, 1902, respectively, both of whom are attending school.

In politics Mr. Meinig has always given his support to the republican party and he is one of its most active members in Sandy. He has held the office of road supervisor and since the incorporation of the town in August, 1911, has served as its mayor. He has also been clerk of the school board for a number of years. He is one of the public-spirited men of Sandy and his interest in its upbuilding and growth has been responsible for much of its success. The postoffice is located in his store and he is at present acting as postmaster. He holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the United Artisans. His record measures up to the full standard of honorable manhood and those who know him recognize in him a citizen whose loyalty to the public welfare has never been questioned, while his integrity and honor in the private affairs of life are matters familiar to all with whom he has been associated.

H. S. NEWTON is the owner of eighty acres of land all under cultivation and in addition rents and operates two hundred acres. Every state in the Union has furnished its quota of citizens to Oregon and among those who have come from Texas is H. S. Newton, who is a native of Grayson county. His natal day was December 24, 1851. His parents, Thomas and Eliza (Morris) Newton, were natives of Tennessee, where they were reared and married, removing to Texas in 1848. The father was a ranchman and miller and continued to make his home in the Lone Star state throughout the remainder of his life. He operated two large gristmills which were the first in Grayson county and he was closely, actively and helpfully associated with the development and upbuilding of that section of the state. The father died in 1874 and was survived by his wife for only about a year.

H. S. Newton, one of a family of nine children, resided in Texas until 1878, when at the age of twenty-six years he came to Oregon, settling in Klamath county. He removed thence to Klamath county in 1893 and has since lived in this neighborhood. He has always followed farming and stock-raising since he started out in active life and he is now the owner of eighty acres, all of which is under cultivation according to modern and progressive methods. In addition he leases two hundred acres, which he has also developed and in addition to cultivating the crops best adapted to the soil and climate he is engaged in dairying, keeping for this purpose a number of high-grade cows.

In 1874 Mr. Newton was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Miller, who was born in Grayson county, Texas, in August, 1851, and is a daughter of Thomas Miller, a native of Tennessee. Nine children have been born of this marriage: Almo, living in Klamath county; Dovie May, who is the wife of Archie Colson, of Klamath county; Thomas W., at home; Maude, the wife of Thomas Short, of Wood river valley; Claudie, who is a twin of Maude and is the wife of John Short, of Wood river valley; Obie H., who is a lieutenant in the constabulary department—a government position in the Philippines; Ethel, the wife of Neil Campbell, of Albany; and Jessie and Ruby, both at home. For nineteen years Mr. Newton has resided in Klamath county and he and his family are widely and favorably known within its borders.

WILLIAM H. SHELLEY. General farming and stock-raising engage the attention of William H. Shelley, who owns an attractive ranch of two hundred and fifteen acres seven miles north of Creswell. He was born in Lane county, on the 6th of April, 1872, and is a son of John and Margaret (Park) Shelley. The father, whose birth occurred in the state of Illinois on the 7th of September, 1827, is still living at the venerable age of eighty-five years. Together with his wife and family, John Shelley crossed the plains from Iowa to Oregon in 1852, locating in Lane county. Upon his arrival here he filed on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, a portion of which was cleared, in the vicinity of Pleasant Hill, and there he has ever since resided with the exception of one year. He has disposed of all of his ranch with the exception of one hundred and sixty acres, one hundred acres of which are under cultivation. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Shelley numbered twelve children, our subject being the eleventh in order of birth. The others are as follows: Thomas J., who is ranching at Greer, Idaho; one who died in infancy; Pascal N., who was a farmer, now deceased; Caroline, the deceased wife of John Waring; Weston P., a resident of Condon, Oregon; Ann, the wife of E. P. Lattin, a ranchman at Pleasant Hill, Oregon; Leroy L., who lived in Mayville, this state, but who is deceased; Leona, the wife of T. S. Winfrey, of Eugene; Eva, who married P. L. Bristow, of Sheridan, Oregon; Zora E., the wife of John West, of Eugene; and Ira G., of Salem.

The entire life of William H. Shelley has been passed in the vicinity of his present home. He was educated in the district schools and when old enough began assisting his father about the ranch. Upon attaining his majority he rented the home place and began ranching on his own account. He continued to rent from his father for nineteen years and during that time he bought one hundred and fifty-eight acres of the old homestead and a tract adjoining it containing one hundred and fifty-six acres. His holdings at that time aggregated three hundred and fourteen acres, ninety-nine of which he has since sold. Seventy-five of the two hundred and fifteen acres he now owns are planted to grain and the remainder of his ranch is in pasture and brush. His property is entirely free from incumbrance and is one of the best improved and equipped as well as most attractive ranches in the community. Mr. Shelley makes a specialty of raising hogs, goats and cattle for the market in connection with the cultivation of his fields and is prospering in his undertakings.

On Christmas day, 1901, Mr. Shelley was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle Buchanan, the eldest of the six children born to James and Ida M. (Rutledge) Buchanan. In order of birth the other members of the family are as follows: Faith, the wife of Jake Bartch, of Alberta, Canada; Malva, who married Forest Drudy, of Marcola, this state; Claude, who is a resident of Alberta, Canada; Leta, the wife of Albert Evans, of Medford, Oregon; and one who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Shelley have four children: Myron L., who was born June 21, 1903, and is now attending school; John Franklin, whose birth occurred on the 18th of July, 1905; Clarence H., whose natal day was June 3, 1907; and Elmer C., who was born on the 10th of June, 1909.

The parents are members of the Christian church, and Mr. Shelley is a member of Pleasant Hill Camp, No. 271, W. O. W., and in politics he is a democrat. He is leading a life of activity and business enterprise and is meeting with a corresponding degree of prosperity.

FELIX M. GREEN. The productiveness of the region along the boundary line between Oregon and California is well demonstrated in the success that is crowning the efforts of Felix M. Green, ranchman, who, though making his home in New Pine Creek, Oregon, owns eleven hundred acres of land on the California side in Modoc county. His labors in its development are being attended with excellent results and show that progressive methods bring gratifying returns. Mr. Green is a native of Colusa county, California, born February 14, 1857, and is a son of William and Harriet (Holland) Green, who were natives of Illinois, where they were reared and married. In 1856 they crossed the plains to Colusa county, California, and in 1872 removed to Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley. The mother now resides in Lakeview, but the father passed away in Colorado in 1887, when sixty years of age. He had devoted his entire life to ranching. In his family were eight children: Felix M.; Joseph, a miner of Colorado; William; Charles of Colorado; Carrie, the wife of William Struthers, of Junction City, Colorado; Hattie, the wife of Lee Bell; James of Sacramento, California; and Annie, the wife of H. Westmoreland of Washington.

Felix M. Green was reared in Chico, Butte county, California, and accompanied his parents on their removal to Eugene, Oregon, being then a youth in his teens. In 1878 he went to Lakeview and has since resided in Lake county. In April, 1911, he located at his present place of residence and while he has his home in New Pine Creek on the Oregon side of the boundary line, his residence being a beautiful and commodious one, his ranch lies in Modoc county California. It comprises eleven hundred acres and is improved with good buildings, including an attractive dwelling and all barns and sheds necessary for the shelter of grain and stock. The ranch is owned by Mr. Green and his father-in-law, W. P. Heryford, of Lakeview, and is known as the Heryford-Green ranch. Mr. Green engages in the cultivation of grain, hay and fruit and raises some stock. He has five orchards, fifty acres being planted to fruit, and in 1911 he harvested over ten thousand bushels of grain, including barley and wheat, and cut over eight hundred tons of hay, including both alfalfa and timothy. His farming interests are as is thus indicated extensive. The success which he has attained is the merited reward of persistent, earnest labor, intelligently directed. In addition to his ranch interests Mr. Green is a director and stockholder in the Lakeview Mercantile Company and is president of the Sunshine Mining Company of New Pine Creek, owning what is reputed to be the best gold mine in this section.

In 1894 Mr. Green was married to Miss Cora Heryford, who was born in Shasta county, California, May 6, 1873, and is a daughter of William P. Heryford, of Lakeview. Their children are Clarence, Nellie, William and Fay. Felix M. Green votes with the democratic party and for two years served as deputy sheriff of Lake county. His fraternal connections are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has always been a resident of the west and the spirit of progress which has brought about the wonderful development of the Pacific coast country is manifested in his life record. He has recognized and utilized the opportunities presented by this section of the country and is among those whose labors are an important element in bringing about the change that is converting it from an arid and undeveloped region into one of the richly cultivated and prosperous districts of the northwest.

WILLIAM T. WRIGHT has been a resident of Oregon since pioneer times, having come to this state with his parents when he was only four years of age. He has spent practically his entire life here and during its course has gained prominence in political, fraternal and business circles. He is assistant cashier and a director and stockholder in the Roseburg National Bank and is prominently connected with several other representative enterprises. He was born in Linn county, Missouri, on February 8, 1848, and is a son of J. M. and Emily (Simmons) Wright, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. He crossed the plains with his parents in 1852, being at that time only four years of age. He was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Oregon and when he had completed his studies followed general farming, as assistant to his father until he became of age. From that time until 1876 he engaged in general agricultural pursuits for himself discontinuing this occupation in order to accept the position of county treasurer to which office he was elected upon the democratic ticket. His first majority was by two votes only but he carried his two successive elections with large majorities. Mr. Wright later filled the position of deputy county clerk, doing able and efficient work in this capacity. In 1883 he engaged in the mercantile business as bookkeeper for an important firm in Oakland, Oregon, and in 1884 went to California where he spent nearly a year in traveling. In 1885 he returned to Oregon and spent one year upon his farm after which he again was appointed deputy county clerk. After serving for one year and a half in this office he was appointed in 1888 chief clerk in the registry department of the Portland, Oregon postoffice where he remained for seven months resigning at the end of that time on account of ill health. After one year's rest he accepted a position as bookkeeper and cashier for the Transfer Company, operated by Cook & Kiernan and was successful in this occupation for a year and a half. He began his banking career in 1891 when he accepted the position as cashier of the First National Bank of Roseburg and for thirteen years held this office, managing the affairs under his charge ably and efficiently during that time. He was obliged to resign finally on account of failing health but eventually resumed his active career, accepting the position of assistant cashier of the Roseburg National Bank, an institution which was organized in 1907 and which opened for business in January of the following year. He is still active in this capacity and is also a member of the board of directors and a stockholder in the institution. He has acquired considerable wealth which he has invested in California real estate. He was treasurer of the Second Southern Oregon Agricultural Society from 1893 until 1905 and held the same position in the County Agricultural Society. He has been treasurer of the Building & Loan Association for a number of years and has been a prominent factor in the success of that enterprise. He sold his farm when he moved to Portland and has not been actively identified with agriculture since that time.

Mr. Wright has been three times married. His first wife was Miss Amanda E. Williams, of Looking Glass, Oregon, whom he married in November, 1867. They had one child who has passed away. In 1872 Mr. Wright was united in marriage to Miss Marietta Williams, by whom he had four children: W. W., who is in business in Portland; Myrtle E., who married L. E. Belfils, cashier of the Estacada State Bank; Pearl, who resides in California; and Lester, who has passed away. On July 14, 1883, Mr. Wright wedded Miss Fannie A. Wright, of Clinton, Illinois, and a daughter of Dr. John Wright of that city. Her parents lived during the latter part of their lives in California and both have now passed away. Our subject and his wife belong to the First Presbyterian church and Mr. Wright is treasurer and trustee of that organization.

William T. Wright gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and has always taken an active and intelligent interest in public affairs, serving his fellow citizens when called upon to do so with ability and efficiency, never seeking to evade obligations of citizenship. He is well known in fraternal circles, holding membership in Philatristian Lodge, No. 8, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is its treasurer; he is also secretary and treasurer of the Odd Fellows Hall committee. He is treasurer of Alpha Lodge No. 47, Knights of Pythias, and holds a similar position in Oak Camp, No. 125, Woodmen of the World and Union Encampment, No. 9, and Canton Robertson, No. 13, all of Roseburg. He also holds membership in Roseburg Lodge, No. 16, Ancient Order of United Workmen and is treasurer of the Douglas County Odd Fellows Association. He has gained success as a banker because his methods have always been practical and consequently productive of good results. He understands the principles of his occupation and the details of modern finance and has won a gratifying measure of success by his ability and systematic work.

JOSEPH B. STRAVENS, who is residing upon his two hundred and fifty-five acre farm three miles northeast of Gervais, was born in Louisville, Kentucky, on the 22d of November, 1853, his parents being Martin and Kathryn (Blystine) Stravens, both of whom were natives of Germany. Their marriage occurred in Kentucky, where they resided for three years previous to removing to Minnesota where they lived fourteen years. They then removed to Oregon in 1872 and settled near Woodburn. At that place the father's death occurred in 1900 but the mother is still living in Gervais, at the age of seventy-eight years. At the time of the former's death he was the owner of two hundred and fifteen acres of valuable land, the improvement and cultivation of which was practically dependent upon his own exertion and efforts. To them nine children were born: Joseph B., who is the subject of this sketch; Peter, of Colfax, Washington; Mrs. Kathryn Lentz, who is living in Marion county; Margaret, who is the wife of Alexander Moison, also a resident of Marion county; Martin, who is a priest and missionary in New York; Mrs. Elizabeth Assman of Portland, Oregon; Theodore, of California; Mrs. Lena Vogel, who is living in Alaska; and Therese, deceased.

At the age of twenty-six years Joseph B. Stravens started in life on his own account by farming on the land which he purchased from the home property. He has made this his home ever since and during the last few years has purchased the remainder of his father's farm so that he is now the owner of two hundred and fifty-five acres of highly improved land, one hundred and forty acres of which has been highly productive. Originally this property was covered with heavy timber but through the efforts of its various owners it has been cleared and is now as productive as is the greater part of the soil in this rich agricultural district. Mr. Stravens has carried on farming according to modern and scientific methods and has so arranged his labor that he is receiving the greatest returns.

On the 11th of November, 1879, Mr. Stravens was married to Miss Annie Hagenauer, whose birth occurred in Austria. She came to America with her parents when she was but eighteen years of age. They first settled in Wisconsin, where they remained for five years previous to removing to Oregon in 1874 and locating in Marion county, which was their home until their deaths. To them seven children were born: Wensel, of Newport, Oregon; Mrs. Barbara Gulden, who is residing in Marion county; Frank, of Tacoma, Washington; Mrs. Stravens; Mary, the wife of Joseph Schentz, of California; Peter, a resident of Seattle; and John, who is living in Marion county. To Mr. and Mrs. Stravens eight children have been born, namely: Joseph, whose birth occurred on the 8th of August, 1880, and who is now living on part of the homestead; Matilda, who was born January 19, 1883, and is the wife of Peter Kahut, of Marion county; Marie, a resident of Portland; John, who was born in 1888 and is living at home; Annie, whose birth occurred on the 19th of May, 1889, and who is the wife of Charles Spalding, of Watkins, Minnesota; Frank, whose birth occurred in July, 1891, and who is residing at home; Helen C., who was born on the 22d of November, 1894, and is also living at home; and Albert, who died at the age of two and one-half years. These children have all received a good common-school education, their father realizing that his had been invaluable to him and hence desiring to fit his children as well for their start in life as he had been equipped.

In politics Mr. Stravens gives his support to the democratic party but has never sought office. In religious faith he and his family are members of the Roman Catholic church. His life has been lived in accordance with the high principles which he has always held in regard to moral, social, religious and political activities. He is accounted one of the active workers and progressive farmers of his district and has the unqualified confidence and esteem of the entire community.

EDWARD KELLER is of that class who recognize and utilize opportunities and in so doing contribute to public prosperity as well as to individual success. He has been the chief promoter of various enterprises and interests which featured prominently in the growth and upbuilding of this state and he never falters in the accomplishment of any task to which he sets himself, if success may be gained by persistent endeavor and honorable effort. He lives at New Pine Creek and is the treasurer of the Pine Creek Water Company, also president of the Eureka Mining & Milling Company and a stockholder in several of the banks of this district. He has not always been a resident of the far west, although he has ever resided west of the Mississippi. His birth occurred in Buchanan county, Iowa, January 10, 1858, his parents being Morris and Creensia (Gruman) Keller, both of whom were natives of Germany, born in 1814 and 1816 respectively. They were reared and married in that country and with the desire to enjoy better business opportunities came to the United States in 1840, settling first in Wisconsin. They were afterward pioneers of Iowa, removing thither about the time when the state was admitted to the Union. In 1866 they went to Nebraska and in 1882 became residents of Alameda county, California, where their last days were passed, the mother dying about 1895 and the father in 1899. The latter had long been a farmer and in early life was a cabinet-maker. In his family were nine sons, of whom one died at the age of fifteen years, while eight are now living. He also had two daughters. The living are: B. H., a resident of Columbus, Nebraska; John, of Richland, Nebraska; Christine, the widow of Henry Foster, of Clearwater, Nebraska; J. J., of Newport, Nebraska; H. W., living in David City, Nebraska; Richard, whose home is in Oakland, California; M. J., of Seattle, Washington; Amelia, the wife of C. M. Taylor, of New Pine Creek; Edward, of this review; and Albert, of Alaska.

Edward Keller remained with his parents until 1881. In 1877 the family went to the Black Hills of Dakota and later the parents came to the coast, Mr. Keller joining them the following year. He resided in San Francisco for ten years and then came to New Pine Creek, where he has since made his home. He performed the different services incident to the development of the ranch when at home and after starting out independently in life he worked with cattle for two years. After his arrival on the coast he engaged in clerking in a store in Alameda. Subsequent to coming to New Pine Creek he engaged in merchandising here for three years and in 1893 he entered the flour milling establishment, of which he took personal charge in 1895. This has been his principal activity since and he has developed a large trade, for he manufactures flour according to modern processes and the excellence of his product insures a ready sale. In various other fields, too, his labors have constituted an element for public progress here. In 1905 he became the first president of the California & Oregon Light, Heat & Power Company and has since remained its chief executive officer, giving his entire attention to its interests during the first year of its existence. He was one of five men who put up the first telephone system here, called the Lakeview & New Pine Creek Electric Company, Inc. Mr. Keller was one of the directors but later disposed of his interest in the business. He is the treasurer and was one of the incorporators of the Pine Creek Water Company and since its incorporation has been president of the Eureka Mining & Milling Company. He was one of the original stockholders in the First National Bank of Lakeview and the Lakeview Savings Bank and is still connected with those institutions. His investments in property, too, have been extensive. He has one hundred and twenty acres of timber and three hundred and seventy acres of farm land in Goose lake valley and he raises more grain than any other man in the valley. He also has one of the pleasant homes here, which is situated in the east side of the village, at the foothills of the mountains, near his mill, the power for which is generated by the water from New Pine creek.

In 1892 Mr. Keller was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M. Dick, who was born in Mono county, California, in 1874, a daughter of Morris Dick, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Keller have three children, Richard, Elsie and Theresa, all born in California, near New Pine Creek. The state line runs through this town but Mr. Keller's home is on the Oregon side. It is a beautiful and attractive residence, which he erected in 1906. He owns here seventy-four acres, on which stand his home and his mill. A part of the tract is on the mountain side, while a portion is within the corporation limits of the city. Mr. Keller is a republican but has never held public office, always declining to accept positions of political preferment. He recognizes what is necessary in town building and in his business career has labored to anticipate and meet the needs of the public. At all times he is actuated by a spirit of loyalty to the community at large and yet is not without that laudable ambition which is ever the spur to industry, causing a man to push beyond the point to which he has already attained and reach the heights of success.

E. H. AMSDEN, M. D. The qualities which contribute to success in the practice of medicine and surgery are possessed in large degree by Dr. E. H. Amsden, as is evidenced in his excellent work as a representative of the profession since locating in New Pine Creek, where he makes his home. He was born in Walden, Caledonia county, Vermont, May 4, 1857, a son of Bert B. and Amelia (Walcott) Amsden, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of New York. The father died at Greensboro Bend, Vermont, in 1905, at the age of seventy-nine years, and the mother is still living there at the age of eighty-four. The father was engaged in farming, was in the insurance business, practiced law to some extent and for many years was justice of the peace. In fact, he was a very active man along many lines.

Dr. Amsden was the fifth in order of birth in a family of eight children, of whom three are living. When fifteen years of age he left home after having been graduated from the high school at Hardwick, Vermont. He lived for a short time at Manchester, New Hampshire, and then entered the West Point Military Academy but while there suffered an injury which necessitated his leaving the school. In 1877 he entered the Eclectic Medical College in Maine and was graduated therefrom in 1884. He devoted the year 1887 to the mastery of a post-graduate course in Bellevue College of New York and he then entered upon his professional career in Boston, where he practiced for a year. He next sailed as ship's physician on a whaling vessel, three months being consumed in the voyage and then traveled extensively through South and Central America and British Columbia. Coming to Oregon he remained a resident of Portland for fifteen years. He was identified with the Gold Ridge Mining Company of Portland for a number of years but since 1905 has engaged in practice in New Pine Creek, where his ability has been recognized in a liberal patronage.

In March, 1898, Dr. Amsden was married to Miss Agnes Plumer, a daughter of Fremont Plumer, who was a grandson of Lord Fremont of England. They became parents of two children: Ellis, who was born February 15, 1899; and Carroll, who died at the age of eleven months. The wife and mother passed away February 10, 1906, and on the 7th of March, 1908, Dr. Amsden married Bertha Charlton, the widow of Oliver Charlton. She was a school-teacher for five years in Lake county and by her first marriage had four children.

Dr. Amsden was a member of the Oregon State Militia for five years, being connected with a Portland battery. He is widely known in fraternal organizations, holding membership with the Red Men, the Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen, the Foresters, the Druids and the Masons. His political support is given the republican party but he has no desire for office, preferring always to concentrate his energies upon his professional duties, which have been of an important character and are constantly growing in volume. He never regarded his professional education entire with the completion of his college course but has remained throughout all these years a close and discriminating student of the principles and practice of medicine, and that his knowledge is broad and his judgment sound is evidenced in the excellent results which follow his administrations to the sick.

ENOS S. McDONALD has since the summer of 1876 resided in the Chewaucan valley and has aided largely in reducing its wild lands to a state of fertility and productiveness, his time being given to the improvement of his ranch and to the raising of stock. He was born in Overton county, Tennessee, March 11, 1850, and is a son of James and Salinda (Elder) McDonald, both of whom were natives of Tennessee, in which state the father died when his son Enos was but six years of age. The mother's death occurred in Tennessee after Enos McDonald left that state. The father was a farmer by occupation and in tilling the soil provided for the support of his family, which numbered eleven children.

Enos S. McDonald continued a resident of Tennessee until 1876, when he came to the Willamette valley of Oregon and for a short time was a resident of Linn county. Later in the year, however, he removed to the Chewaucan valley in Lake county, where he has since made his home and throughout the entire period of thirty-six years has been connected with ranching and stock-raising. He is now the owner of one hundred and forty-five acres in his ranch in addition to mountain lands, and in connection with John B. Elder he owns a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which they both reside, this place being pleasantly and conveniently situated about a mile and a half south of Paisley. Mr. McDonald puts up about two hundred tons of hay annually and employs twelve men during the harvest season. He is winning substantial success in his business affairs and his sound judgment and unfaltering industry are evidenced in the prosperity which he has obtained.

W. H. PARKER, one of the well known photographers of Salem, where he has been successfully conducting a gallery for a number of years, was born in Michigan, on the 16th of October, 1877. He is a son of W. D. and Sarah (Heath) Parker, also natives of Michigan, where the father is still living but the mother passed away in 1911. They were the parents of four children, three of whom are still living.

In his life and achievements, W. H. Parker is an excellent example of what it is possible for a man to attain through his own efforts, as he has been entirely dependent upon himself since he was a lad of nine years. Despite the fact that he became self-supporting at an age when the average lad is hardly able to earn his own spending money, he succeeded in obtaining a very good education, completing a high-school course, after which he spent two years in a theological seminary. During his early years he followed such occupations as presented themselves, giving up a position whenever he found anything else that proved more lucrative or offered better advantages. He subsequently learned photography and by the time he had attained his majority he had succeeded in accumulating sufficient capital to engage in business for himself at Plainville, Georgia, but very soon thereafter he had the misfortune to lose his gallery by fire. This necessitated his beginning over, so he once more entered the employ of others, continuing to work on a salary until he had acquired the means to again engage in business. Returning to his native state, he established a gallery at Harbor Springs, Michigan, where he was located for nine years, meeting with success. At the expiration of that time he disposed of his enterprise, came to Salem, and purchased a studio that he has ever since been conducting. Mr. Parker is an artist of unquestioned merit, possessing excellent taste in posing and the arrangement of groups as well as a keen appreciation of the value of light and shade and turns out work that bespeaks skill and careful study. During the period of his residence here he has succeeded in building up a very good patronage and his business is constantly increasing. His studio is tastefully furnished and fully equipped with everything essential to the successful conduct of a first-class gallery, and as he is a man of pleasing personality who accords all visitors gracious and courteous treatment, he has become very popular.

In 1905, Mr. Parker was united in marriage to Miss Pearl E. Ellis, who was born and reared in Michigan, and is a daughter of E. D. and Elizabeth Ellis. The father is a native of Ohio and the mother of England but they located in Michigan many years ago and there they continue to reside. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Parker, a little son, Edward M., whose birth occurred on the 26th of August, 1908.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, being a member of Harbor Springs Lodge, No. 378, A. F. & A. M., of Harbor Springs, Michigan. In his political views he is an independent republican. Mr. Parker is an industrious and capable man of enterprising and progressive spirit, who is constantly striving to bring his work to a higher artistic standard and as a result is meeting with deserved success from both a commercial and artistic point of view.

PAUL JACOB BRATTAIN is a prominent and worthy resident of Paisley, where he maintains his home, while in Lake county he has extensive ranching and stock-raising interests. He was born in Phoenix, Jackson county, Oregon, February 19, 1870, his parents being Thomas Jefferson and Permelia Jane (Gillespie) Brattain. The father is deceased, while the mother resides on a ranch four miles south of Paisley. Their four children are: Maude, the wife of James Small, of Summer Lake; Judge Eldon, of Lakeview; Hazen Adelbert, who is on the ranch with his mother; and Paul Jacob. All three of the sons are graduates of the State University of Oregon, having been provided with liberal educational opportunities, and the eldest is now a practicing attorney.

Paul Jacob Brattain came with his parents to Lake county in his youthful days and has resided here during the greater part of the time since, although he spent seven years away at school, supplementing his early advantages by a course in the State University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1894. He made high rank and was orator of his class. His natural ability in this direction has been well developed and he has made many public speeches, being ever able to hold the attention of his hearers. Since his graduation he has engaged in the cattle business, formerly associated with his father and now in partnership with his brother Hazen. They conduct a very extensive business, having the largest individual stock interests in Lake county, although two corporations in the county have larger interests. They run hundreds of head of stock upon their ranch and the extent and volume of their business has made them most successful men.

In 1899 Mr. Brattain was married to Miss Grace Geneva Mercer, who was born in Portland, March 10, 1879, a daughter of James and Harriet (Warren) Mercer. The father was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1850, and the mother in Winnipeg, Canada, February 22, 1854. He died in Ohio, in 1883, and his wife in Lakeview, Oregon, in April, 1900. Mrs. Mercer went to Portland with her parents in 1854, being about five months old when the family crossed the plains. Mr. Mercer went to that city early in the '70s and they were married in Portland in 1877. He was a newspaper man and died in Ohio when on a trip in the east. In 1886 his widow became the wife of Jesse Waters, of Roseburg, Oregon, who was a native of Virginia and is now deceased. Mrs. Brattain is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Mercer but her mother had two children by her second marriage, who were reared by Mrs. Brattain. The last named was the granddaughter of Charles James and Mary Ann (Bird) Warren, natives of London, England, and Winnipeg, Canada, respectively. The grandfather was a hardware merchant and became a well known business man of Portland, where both he and his wife died. They were the parents of seven children, the two eldest being born in Canada and the others in Oregon. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Brattain have been born five children. Paul Jacob, Hazel, Thomas Jefferson, Ruth and Maud, all born in Paisley and all yet at home. Mr. Brattain holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but concentrates his energies most largely upon his business affairs which are of constantly growing volume and importance. He has worked his way steadily upward until he is now a leader among the stock-raisers of southern Oregon, bringing to the management of his business keen sagacity, sound judgment and unabating energy.

FRANK A. TOPPING, one of the early settlers of Oregon living on the old Powell family homestead, situated near Williams, was born in Illinois, a son of Oscar F. and Elizabeth E. (Powell) Topping, in whose family were five children. J. F. Powell, the father of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Topping, came to Oregon in 1850 and took up a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and to this place his daughter later added forty acres by purchase. On Mr. Powell's death in 1900 he willed his land to his daughter, her combined holdings being then two hundred acres. The place has thus continued to be owned by the family and is the only piece of property on Williams creek which has not passed out of the hands of the original owners or their heirs.

Frank A. Topping was given a good common-school education in the state of Oregon. He accompanied his parents on the trip to that state, the journey being made on the first Central Pacific train to cross the country. The family settled in Josephine county, where was located the donation claim of Mrs. Topping's father, and to the improvement of that property Oscar F. Topping and his son Frank gave their undivided attention for many years. In addition the father homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, which he afterward sold. Frank A. Topping has continued to make the old Powell farm his home. His father passed away about 1902. He engages in diversified farming and makes a specialty of raising hay and grain.

Mr. Topping was married October 12, 1892, to Miss Mary Gill, a native of Oregon, and to them have been born two children, William R. and Josephine, both living at home. Mr. Topping is a member of the Patrons of Husbandmen Lodge, an organization in which he takes considerable interest. He is one of the most respected men of the community, where he has long been an advocate of the temperance cause, being a pronounced prohibitionist. The family are well liked and all of its members are esteemed for their qualities of character and heart.

WILLIAM H. BORING, an honored veteran of the Civil war, is now living retired at Boring, which city was named in his honor. He was born in Greene county, Illinois, February 26, 1841, his parents being Dorsey and Susanna (Melvin) Boring, the father a native of Maryland, and the mother of Tennessee. They were married in Illinois, where the father resided until his death, which occurred in 1852. The mother died in 1884. Throughout his entire life the father followed the occupation of farming. In his family were three children: George, of Clarence, Missouri; one who died in infancy; and William H., of this review.

William H. Boring grew to manhood in his native state and received a common-school education. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age, when he enlisted for service in the Civil war, joining Company D, of the Thirty-third regiment of Illinois Infantry. The line of movement of his regiment during the war was a very interesting one. He was in the following places in engagements: Fredericktown, Missouri; Cash River, Arkansas; Fort Gibson, Mississippi; Jackson, Mississippi; Black River Bridge; the siege of Vicksburg; and the battles of Oppolus Bayou; Fort Esperanza, Texas; and Mobile, Alabama. At the expiration of his term of service, in 1863, he reenlisted in the same regiment with which he served until the close of the war. During his service he was wounded six times and now receives a pension of seventeen dollars per month. At the close of the war Mr. Boring returned to Illinois and operated his father's farm for five years. In June, 1874, he came to Oregon and settled in Clackamas county, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of timber land. He resided on this farm until January, 1911, when he retired from active life. He now resides in a beautiful home in Boring, which town was named in honor of him when it was started in 1901, at the time of the building of the O. W. P. electric line.

In 1867 Mr. Boring wedded Miss Sarah Wilder, the daughter of Samuel and Margaret Jane Wilder, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Kentucky. The parents were married in Illinois, in which state the father was engaged in farming. The mother died November 14, 1868, and the father, June 3, 1893, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they took an active part. In their family were six children, of whom Mrs. Boring is the eldest. The others are: Frances, who now lives in Kansas and is the wife of Bruce Baker; William, who is a Methodist minister and is president of the Lew C. Webb Deaconess College, of Washington, D. C.; Milton, of Baldwin, Kansas; Jennie, who is the wife of S. L. Bay, of Richmond, Missouri; and Oscar, a resident of Bloomington, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Boring have been born two children, but the younger, Elsie, died in infancy. The elder, Orville Wilder, was born in 1879. He is a graduate of the normal course of the Portland University and in 1905 married Miss Lucy Parrott, who was born in Minnesota and came to Oregon with her parents when a child. The father died in 1898 but her mother is now living near Boring. Mr. and Mrs. Orville Boring have two sons: Lester L., born June 12, 1906; and Orville W., born October 31, 1910.

Mr. Boring and his family are active workers in the Methodist Episcopal church. He has ever been an active and progressive man and especially deserves mention in this work as an honored veteran of the Civil war. He stands as an advocate of all that tends to advance the welfare of his community along material, social, political, intellectual and moral lines and is a worthy representative of the highest type of American citizenship.

DR. JAMES M. KEENE has been identified with the business interests of Medford for the past fifteen years and during that time has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative practice. He is a native of Oregon, born in Marion county, on the 26th of October, 1864. His father was the late D. M. Keene, who was born in eastern Tennessee, but came to Oregon in 1847 and was one of the early pioneers of Marion county. Here Mr. Keene met and married Miss Elizabeth Campbell, a native of Kentucky who came to this state as a child in 1843 with her parents. The mother is also deceased. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Keene numbered six children, all of whom are residents of this state with the exception of one son, who makes his home in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

Reared at home, in the acquirement of his preliminary education, James M. Keene attended the public schools. Having decided to become a dentist, after attending school at Forest Grove he went to Philadelphia and pursued his professional studies in the Philadelphia Dental College, graduating from that institution in 1888. Upon his return to Oregon he opened an office in Salem which he maintained for nine years. At the expiration of that time, in 1897, he came to Medford and has since been located here. During the intervening years he has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative practice and is now numbered among the leading representatives of his profession in the state. He possesses unusual mechanical skill and is very efficient and thorough in all of his work. That he is progressive and enterprising is manifested by the modern methods he adopts and his finely equipped office, where are to be found the most recent appliances and devices used in the practice of dentistry. He has always been identified with the various associations of his profession and has held a prominent position among his fellow practitioners in the state. Dr. Keene, having the greatest confidence in the future of his state, has invested extensively in land in this vicinity, and now has some valuable holdings. He is also a stockholder in the Medford National Bank and is one of the directors of this institution.

On the 23d of December, 1901, Dr. Keene was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Barneburg, a native of Jackson county and a daughter of the late Frederick and Elveta Barneburg, both of whom are deceased. The father was one of the early pioneers in this section of the state, having located here in 1852.

The political support of Dr. Keene is accorded to the republican party and he has always taken a very active interest in all governmental matters. He has for many years been a delegate to the state convention, and in 1904 he was a delegate to the national convention at Chicago. During the administration of Governor Lord he was appointed to the state dental board, and represented this body at the National Association of Dental Examiners, at Niagara Falls, in 1899. At that time he was elected the western member of the examining board of the National College committee. He is an enthusiastic member of the Medford Commercial Club and heartily indorses the various movements of this organization. Fraternally he is a charter member of Salem Lodge, No. 333, B. P. O. E. Dr. Keene is very popular in professional and business as well as social circles in Medford and is a most worthy representative of one of the prominent pioneer families. He is a nephew of Granville Keene who was killed by the Indians during the uprising in the Rogue river valley in 1855, on the banks of Keene creek, which was named in his honor.

R. E. BRADBURY. Successfully engaged in ranching in Klamath county not far from Klamath Falls, R. E. Bradbury is a native of the northwest and the spirit of enterprise that has led to the substantial development of this section of the country finds exemplification in his business activity. He was born in Portland, Oregon, July 10, 1880, and is a son of Clement and Flora Irene (Newcomb) Bradbury. The father was born in Columbia county, Oregon. The mother, a native of New York, crossed the plains on one of the first trains which ran into Ogden over the Union Pacific Railroad. From that point her journey was continued with ox teams to Oregon and in Columbia county she made the acquaintance of Clement Bradbury, who sought and won her hand in marriage. She died at Seaside, Oregon, in 1900. Clement Bradbury makes his home at Seaside. He has practically retired from business although he is still giving supervision to his real-estate interests, having made extensive investments at Seaside and in Josephine and Klamath counties. The family numbered seven children: R. E.; Sarah Etta, who lives with her father; Clement J., who lives with his elder brother; Clarissa A., the wife of Perry Gaines, of Klamath county; Helen, who died in Seattle, Washington, in 1909, when twenty years of age; Helen, who lives with her sister, Mrs. Gaines; and Irene, who is attending the Holmes Business College at Portland.

R. E. Bradbury spent the first four years of his life at Oak Point, Oregon, at the end of which time his parents removed to Seaside, where he resided until 1906. He pursued his education in the common schools there and afterward worked in his father's dairy. In 1906 he came to Klamath county but the following year returned to Portland, where he was employed as a millwright in connection with the large mills of that city. He had always worked around machinery in his father's mill and his natural genius and acquired ability in that direction enabled him to command good positions. In May, 1911, Mr. Bradbury returned to Klamath county and became foreman in the building of the United States government dam and also of the Lost river diversion dam. In the spring of 1912 he took charge of his ranch adjoining the government project. This is a tract of two hundred and sixteen acres and he is also looking after his father's property here, comprising four hundred acres. The two interests make large demands upon his time and energies and rank him as one of the representative, active and progressive young business men of the district.

In 1906 Mr. Bradbury was united in marriage to Miss Zara L. Young, a native of Marion county, Oregon, and a daughter of Milton Young. Their children are Aubra, Richard E., Maxine and Lyda Elaine. Mr. Bradbury votes with the democratic party, and his fraternal relations are with the Knights of Pythias at Seaside and with the Elks lodge at Astoria. He is a member of the Klamath Falls Chamber of Commerce and in this connection is greatly interested in all measures and movements put forth for the benefit and upbuilding of the community and the exploitation of its resources and advantages.

FRANK A. SACCHI is one of the enterprising, successful men of Marshfield where he is engaged in the general wholesale and retail milk business. He was born in Switzerland, June 29, 1868, and is a son of Ned and Ellen Sacchi. The father emigrated to America in 1884 settling first in Plumas county, California, where he continued to live for a period of ten years and then returned to Switzerland where he died some time later, the mother having passed away in the early '70s. To Mr. and Mrs. Ned Sacchi five children were born: Frank A., who is the subject of this review; Antone, a resident of Coos county, Oregon; Judis, the wife of Theodore Marcollo, of Richmond, California; Ned, who still resides in Switzerland; and R. J., who makes his home with his brother Frank.

Frank A. Sacchi was reared at home and received his early education in the schools of Switzerland, and later completed a commercial course after settling in this country. At the age of eighteen years he emigrated to America and settled in Humboldt county, California, and was there engaged in the operation of the creamery department of one of the well known dairies located in that county, for nine years. In 1895 he removed to Oregon and settled in Marshfield where he accepted a clerkship in a grocery store and in that occupation he continued for one year. He then established himself in the grocery business to which he added a department devoted to the wholesale and retail milk business. In 1911 he sold his grocery stock, but retained the milk business, which he at once enlarged and more perfectly equipped and has since continued to devote his entire time to its interest. He is the owner of a fine home in Marshfield and also a residence property adjoining his home place.

Mr. Sacchi was united in marriage, in 1900, to Miss Etta Elrod, a native of North Bend, Oregon, and a daughter of William F. and Mary (Madden) Elrod, the former a native of Prince Edward Island and the latter of Nova Scotia. They celebrated their wedding in Marshfield at the Central Hotel, A. P. Owen officiating at the ceremony. The father passed away July 8, 1902, and the mother, who is still living, maintains her residence in Marshfield, where she is engaged in the millinery business. To Mr. and Mrs. Elrod four children were born: Etta and Frances, the former the wife of the subject of this review, and the latter the wife of Mr. McCloud, of Marshfield, Oregon; Mrs. L. F. Denning, who is a resident of Marshfield Oregon; and Iris, who is engaged as a salesman in the woolen mills of Marshfield.

To Mr. and Mrs. Sacchi two children have been born: Francis, who was born May 18, 1904; and Jack L., born June 16, 1906. Mr. Sacchi is affiliated with the republican party, but liberal in the use of his franchise. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, also of the Fraternal Union of America, and he and his wife are members of the Episcopal church.

Mr. Sacchi is one of the enterprising and useful citizens of the city in which he lives. He is a man of strict integrity and always identifies himself with public measures intended to improve the condition of the people in his county and state.

HORACE G. FAIRCLO. On the Merrill road, about ten miles south of Klamath Falls, is the ranch of Horace G. Fairclo, one of Oregon's native sons and representative citizens. He was born near Roseburg, on Deer creek, December 25, 1859, and is a son of Paul and Amanda (Burt) Fairclo. The father, a native of Indiana, was reared in De Kalb county, Illinois, and the mother was born and reared in Wisconsin. They were married, however, at Roseburg, Oregon, the father having crossed the plains in 1850, while the mother came by the same route in the '50s, the Burt family settling on Deer creek. The parents of our subject spent the greater part of their lives in Jackson and Josephine counties, Mr. Fairclo following mining most of the time. He died in Yreka, California, and his wife in Benton county, Oregon. Paul Fairlo had active experience in the Indian war of 1855 and 1856, serving as a volunteer in that struggle for the supremacy of the civilized race. He actively assisted in the development of southern Oregon and at all times and on all occasions proved himself a worthy and valued citizen. His wife was at one time shot by Indians, causing her the loss of the use of her right arm for a year. Their home was burned by Rogue river Indians a number of times when they were living in Jackson and Josephine counties, but notwithstanding all these hardships they continued to make their home on the frontier and aided largely in its development and progress, being now numbered among the honored pioneers to whom the state owes a debt of gratitude for the work which they accomplished in the improvement of the west. They had five children: Clara, the wife of Charles Craft, of Kennett, California; Horace G., of this review; Isabelle, who is the wife of Enoch Powell and resides near Lebanon, Oregon; Eva, the wife of Thurston King, of Spokane, Washington; and Eunice, deceased.

Horace G. Fairlo spent his youthful years in Jackson and Josephine counties and in 1888 came to his present ranch, which comprises one hundred and sixty acres and which he homesteaded. He has been identified with mining in California and Oregon during much of his life and has always been a busy man, occupied with important interests. He received a normal-school education, being graduated in 1885 from the Philomath Normal School of Oregon and for seven years engaged in teaching in Oregon and California. He has since followed mining and farming and has today a good property, which yields substantial returns through the care and labor which he bestows upon it. His ranch presents a neat and attractive appearance and upon it are many good improvements which he has made.

In 1887 Mr. Fairlo was married to Miss Anna Murray, who was born in Illinois and crossed the plains with her parents about 1880. By her marriage she became the mother of three children, James, Bessie and Jay. In 1906 Mr. Fairlo was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who was then about thirty-seven years of age, her birth having occurred in 1869. He is a well known representative of a worthy pioneer family and has for more than a half century witnessed the growth and upbuilding of Oregon. He has seen its wild lands reclaimed and cultivated, its rich mineral resources developed and its waterways utilized. At all times he has rejoiced in what has been accomplished and his work has brought to him substantial returns.

L. D. WARD. An excellent farm of three hundred and twenty acres pays tribute for the care and labor bestowed upon it by L. D. Ward. Waving fields of grain and alfalfa, broad pastures upon which are found high grades of stock, all indicate his progressive methods and show that the work of improvement is being steadily carried forward. Mr. Ward was born in Henderson county, Illinois, March 22, 1860, a son of C. W. and Ellen Elizabeth (Crenshaw) Ward, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Iowa. The parents resided in the middle west until 1864, when they crossed the plains with teams, spending eighteen months in Nevada. They next removed to Yuba county, California, where the father died in 1873, at the comparatively early age of thirty-six years. The mother still lives. In the fall of 1885 she came to Oregon, residing at Klamath Falls until four years ago, since which time she has made her home in San Diego, California. In her family are four children of whom L. D. Ward is the eldest, the others being: Eva, the wife of Charles Graves, of Klamath Falls, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Frank, who is a member of the grocery firm of Ward & Oberchain, of Klamath Falls; and Susie, the wife of H. E. Smith, of San Diego.

L. D. Ward spent the first four years of his life in his native county and was then brought by his parents to the west. He resided in Yuba county, California, from 1866 until 1884, when he came to Klamath county, Oregon, where he has since made his home. For a time he was proprietor of a hardware store in Klamath Falls and in the fall of 1885 went to Linkville, where he became a member of the firm of Graves, Ketchum & Ward, dealers in hardware. In 1888 he sold his interest in that business and afterward speculated in timber and farm lands for three or four years. Subsequently with J. W. Semens he conducted a barber shop and club room for two years in Klamath Falls, and at the end of that time began farming. He owns three hundred and twenty acres in addition to which he rents and improves two hundred and sixty acres of land. He is thus extensively engaged in general farming, and makes a specialty of the production of grain and alfalfa. He has one hundred and forty-five acres of his land under government ditch and has greatly improved his property with modern equipment and buildings. He raises stock to some extent. He has altogether improved four ranches and has thus contributed largely to the work of progress and upbuilding in this part of the state.

In October, 1901, Mr. Ward was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary E. Brantlacht, who was born in Shasta county, California, May 12, 1876, and is a daughter of A. M. and Martha (Walker) Zwely, both of whom were natives of Missouri. The father crossed the plains in 1860 and the mother in 1868. She died on the 3d of March, 1912, at the age of fifty-seven years, and the father is living at Alturas, California. Mrs. Ward was first married to Henry Brantlacht, who died, leaving two children, Jessie and Aletha. To Mr. and Mrs. Ward has been born a son, Levi Z., and a daughter, Mary Ellen. Fraternally Mr. Ward is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He takes comparatively little active part in outside interests, preferring to concentrate his energies upon business affairs which are proving a profitable source of income, owing to his careful direction and able management. His home is pleasantly situated about twelve miles south of Klamath Falls, in the Klamath valley, and he is recognized as one of the representative agriculturists of this community.

JOSEPH FRANKLIN BARROWS. On August 18, 1886, one of the pioneers in the settlement of Oregon died in Coos county. Joseph Franklin Barrows first settled in this state in 1847 and since that time with a few interruptions engaged in important enterprises here until his death. He saw the development of Oregon, and his individual activities were prominent factors in it. The various representative occupations to which he gave his attention repaid his efforts by prosperity and success and his death was felt as a distinct loss to business and agricultural circles of the state. He was born in Lexington, Kentucky, January 1, 1822, a son of Isaac and Matilda (Fry) Barrows. In the family were three children: Joseph F., of this review; Samuel B., deceased; and Susan C., who died in infancy.

Joseph F. Barrows was reared upon his father's farm in Kentucky and received his early education in a little log schoolhouse in his native district. He later took a classical course in a Chicago college. In 1847 he located in Oregon and remained in the state for two years, joining the rush to the California gold fields in 1849. He was successful in his mining operations but later lost the money which he made in this work. In California he married and settled in Alviso where he opened a general merchandise store and a large warehouse which was the only enterprise of its kind in the county. For some years Mr. Barrows conducted this establishment, gaining success by reason of his in-near Astoria, where he purchased a farm on the Lewis and Clarke river and followed general agricultural pursuits for a number of years. He eventually added to his activities boat building in which he was deservedly successful for some time. When he disposed of his property in Astoria he went to Forest Grove, where he remained for two years. In 1865 he went to Idaho and mined in that state for one year, returning to Forest Grove and then to Astoria, where he resided until he came to Coos county. Here he established himself in the contracting and building business and soon became identified with the construction of many important business buildings. He erected a large cannery and warehouse besides numerous smaller structures, branching out gradually into the boat building line in which he became successful and prosperous. In the later years of his life he rented a ranch near Bandon and upon this resided and worked at the carpenter's trade until his death which occurred August 18, 1886. He was numbered among the very earliest settlers in Oregon and his life was an exemplification of the forceful and vital qualities which distinguished the pioneers of the state. He fought in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848, helping to carry the cannon to the fort during the night. He always strove to do his duty in every relation of life and this conscientiousness made his business activities successful and his more personal career honorable and upright.

Mr. Barrows was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Stevenson, a native of Illinois, who died sometime afterward. In 1850 Mr. Barrows was again wedded, his second wife being Miss Diana T. Lightner, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of A. T. and Jemima (Snelling) Lightner. Their marriage occurred in California. Mrs. Barrows is a descendant of one of the oldest American families, her grandfather having fought in the Revolutionary war. She is one of nine children born to her parents, the others being: Isaac, Sarah, Ann, William and Daniel, all of whom have passed away; Mary, the wife of Daniel Wolser, of California; Lovina, who married Walker Rankin, of California; and A. T., who resides in Bakersfield, California. Mr. and Mrs. Barrows became the parents of nine children: William and Alice, deceased; Samuel, a machinist of Bandon; Frank, who has passed away; Carrie, the wife of L. C. Gibson, a building contractor, of Bandon; Abia, who is engaged in the sawmilling business in Prosper; Lee, who resides in Bandon; Cassie, who died in infancy; and Charles, also deceased.

Mr. Barrows gave his allegiance to the democratic party and was a prominent figure in the affairs of the local organization. When a resident of California he served for two years as justice of the peace and in Oregon was for two terms sheriff of Clatsop county and also county commissioner. He was a devout adherent of the Presbyterian church and well known in the Masonic order. During his life he acquired a comfortable fortune which he invested judiciously, mostly in farm and timber lands in Coos county. His widow owns one hundred and sixty acres of valuable property besides important manufacturing sites upon the water front. Twenty-six years have now passed since Joseph Barrows died, but he is well remembered as a useful, upright and representative citizen. The regret which attended his death was a tribute of sorrow for the passing of a pioneer in the settlement of Oregon and was an evidence of the importance of the place which he had attained in the esteem and honor of his friends.

JESSE APPLGATE. Though almost a quarter of a century has passed since the demise of Jesse Applegate, pioneer and state builder, his memory yet remains enshrined in the hearts of many who knew him and his name figures in history as that of one of the most dominant characters in the early pioneer life of Oregon. Jesse Applegate could claim pioneership by the threefold title of inheritance, training and lifelong habit. His father, Daniel Applegate, of English lineage, was reared in New Jersey. He entered the Revolutionary army as a fifer at fifteen, and when the war closed emigrated to the wilderness of Kentucky. There he married Rachel Lindsey, of a distinguished pioneer family, and settled on a farm. Forty years later, in 1823, caught up once more in the restless "westward movement," he was carried over into the new state of Missouri, accompanied now by a large family and settled near the present city of St. Louis. Jesse was the youngest child of Daniel and Rachel Applegate. He was born on the 5th of July, 1811, and was a lad of twelve years when the family moved to Missouri. While Kentucky was no longer strictly a "hunter's paradise," as in the days of Boone and Kenton, pioneer conditions had by no means disappeared when the Applegates took up the line of march to a newer frontier. Yet the boy had acquired in his early home a good elementary education, so that on going to Missouri he was able, within a year or so, to fit himself for the work of a village schoolmaster. But this was a temporary occupation, for he soon found more congenial employment in the city of St. Louis, where he remained until 1831.

Into the environment of St. Louis during this period of her history, presenting a strange jumble of more or less contradictory elements, young Applegate came with a mind dilated to its most divergent influences. No phase of life, rude or refined, was to him indifferent. The profane but original and strenuous observations of the well seasoned "river-man," and the learned disquisitions of St. Louis' greatest lawyer, alike interested him; he sought information from men of classical training and in libraries crowded with the works of great minds, but did not fail to go, also, to the humble and rude fellow who had had some unique experience or could furnish a desired fact. Applegate's strong pioneering bent is shown by the efforts he made, while at St. Louis, to gather information of every sort about the great western region embracing the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific slope. Whatever he could find in print he read, but that was very little; the most important single item was the journal of Lewis and Clark, published in 1814. But better than the written record of their wonderful journey was a personal meeting he had, about 1825, with Captain Clark himself, then a white-haired veteran who inspired him, as he long afterward confessed, with a genuine enthusiasm for pioneering. Three years later, while clerking in the surveyor-general's office, Applegate gained the intimate friendship of Wilson Price Hunt, then postmaster at St. Louis. Mr. Hunt will be remembered by all readers of Irving as Astor's agent in the dramatic commercial enterprise on which he sent the ship Tonquin to the Columbia in 1811. He was the founder of Astoria and, in a certain sense, of the trans-Rocky Mountain trade for which that port was the earliest emporium. Hunt talked freely about these romantic episodes of his younger days, stimulated no doubt by the eager inquisitiveness of his youthful friend. In this manner Applegate secured from the highest living authority a graphic account of the first occupation of the Columbia, and this many years before the publication of Irving's Astoria.

Mr. Applegate boarded at the Old Green Tree Tavern, an unpretentious hostelry which commonly served as the winter rendezvous of the Rocky Mountain Fur Company. There the partners, Jedediah Smith, David Jackson and William L. Sublette would meet, in their leisure time, to settle the season's accounts and plan the operations of the following year. Each of the three had spent many years in the heart of the Rockies. Besides, the vast spaces beyond the Rockies were to them by no means a sealed book. Jedediah Smith had explored for his company an overland route from Salt Lake to southern California; he had traversed the entire length of that then mysterious Mexican province, had forced a way northward to Fort Vancouver on the Columbia, where he spent the winter of 1828-29 as the guest of Dr. John McLoughlin, and had made himself conversant with the fur trade as conducted by the Hudson's Bay Company in Oregon under McLoughlin's skillful supervision. He therefore brought to St. Louis, when he next met his partners at the Green Tree Tavern, the freshest and most complete report obtainable on conditions all along the coast, from San Diego to Vancouver and inland from the Rio Colorado to Coeur d'Alene lake. Little wonder that a high-spirited, adventurous youth like Applegate should improve the opportunity of a fellow guest to ingratiate himself with these men in order to lose no item of their exciting discourse. "I was then handy with the pen," he writes, "and handier still with figures, and volunteered my services to these mountain heroes, my sole reward being to hear them recount their adventures." These veterans of the inland trade, with its glamour of romance and allurements of riches, had almost won in Applegate a convert to their wild, irregular mode of life. But the appeal of his kind, wise master, Colonel McKee, was even stronger than theirs, and our young pioneer was saved for other pioneering labors that should yield nobler fruits to society if smaller gains to himself.

Another man who, during the St. Louis period, exerted a profound influence on Applegate's mind, was the distinguished lawyer Edward Bates, later a member of Lincoln's first cabinet. Bates was always revered by Applegate as benefactor and friend. There is a tradition that he assisted the boy to improve his education, also that he took him into his office for a time as clerk; at all events, the association between them was exceedingly close and left an abiding record in the character of the younger man. This association probably helps to explain Applegate's clear, strong views on government, as he afterward impressed them, through numerous channels, upon the Oregon people; it may have contributed to develop in him the passion for order and the punctilious regard he ever showed for forms and precedents in legislative matters. His militant nationalism and his abhorrence of slavery are explicable on other grounds, but to both traits the great lawyer's influence lent positive support.

The St. Louis period, extending from about 1825 to 1831, or from his fourteenth to his twentieth year, is manifestly the time in which young Applegate was being specially schooled for his later career. It was then that his youthful fancy, rioting in tales of far west adventure, began to form those bold designs of pioneering that foreshadow the distinctive work of his life. And it was during the same period of time that he laid the foundations for a broad and accurate, though general knowledge, of literature, history and science which marked him later as one of the best read men on the Pacific coast. He gained, also, considerable familiarity with Latin, became highly proficient in mathematical subjects, and developed a literary style which was singularly pure and graceful as well as virile and dignified. He acquired in addition at least the fundamentals of both law and engineering, each of which proved of distinct service to the new community he was to help build beyond the mountains.

Mr. Applegate's proficiency as a surveyor obtained for him at the age of about nineteen, a deputyship in the office of surveyor-general. Thereafter much of his time was spent in field work, especially in the southwestern portion of the state. Marrying in the spring of 1831, he settled on a fine tract of land in the Osage valley in St. Clair county, and made his home there as a farmer and stock-raiser for twelve years, but he continued to act as deputy surveyor also during the greater part, if not the whole, of that time. In 1843 he carried his trusty compass to the western shore of the continent and at once resumed its use in a significant service covering almost forty years. He was commissioned to set apart donation claims with the title of surveyor-general of Oregon. He was also commissioned to find and survey a wagon road for military purposes connecting the western slope with the country east of the cascades. This is the military road running out by Diamond peak.

The interest in Oregon had widened and intensified since Applegate first met the mountain traders at the Green Tree Tavern, and sources of information about the country had multiplied. Oregon was no longer, as it had once been, the object of desire to exploiters of furs only but was coming to be regarded as a practicable field of operation for agricultural pioneers. Something had already been done to establish proper relations with the Oregon tribes of Indians through the sending of an Indian sub-agent in 1842. The government, however, was in general too slow for the pioneers. Before congress could pass a law to encourage settlers, before Webster and his successors in office could negotiate a treaty, before the war secretaries could accomplish the design of opening a road, the frontiersmen themselves, under the leaders of their own choosing and hence of their own type, had rendered the contemplated governmental action if not superfluous at least less urgent. They had opened a road all the way to the Columbia, had occupied, in an orderly manner, for agricultural purposes, much of the best land in western Oregon, and without charter, law or other authorization beyond the treaty of joint occupation which merely gave them a right to be in the country, they had organized on the shores of the Pacific a true American government, the first of its kind in that portion of the world. After the Mexican war congress discussed plans to promote the settlement of the country, and the department of state was trying to terminate the Oregon dispute with Great Britain, and the war department moved for the exploration of a road to the Columbia in order to facilitate emigration thither.

In all the momentous activities here outlined, Jesse Applegate was a prime leader. He, like many others of his time and section, had become discouraged at the long duration of the "hard times," which pressed heavily upon those frontier settlers living away from navigable streams, then almost the sole means of transportation for the country west of the Mississippi. Besides, the progress of slavery was rapid in Missouri. Applegate, who would not own negroes, was forced to hire their labor from neighboring owners in order to be able to cultivate his fields. He felt keenly the social as well as the economic evils of the slave system and was constrained to remove his young family beyond its influence. He had kept up with the new information regarding Oregon and was in personal correspondence with a friend who lived there. Applegate had long known, what others were just learning, that western Oregon was a paradise for the stock-raiser. So, after mature deliberation, he decided to transfer his Osage valley herd, which was all but valueless from the prevailing depression, to the virgin meadows of the Willamette, two thousand miles away.

The story of the great immigration to Oregon in 1843 has been frequently told, sometimes with embellishments that sadly mar the truth of history. It should be remembered that the movement was a perfectly natural expression of the pioneering genius of our people and not, as often misrepresented, an outburst of Quixotic patriotism. The emigrating company of nearly one thousand persons was recruited by no one man; it gathered almost spontaneously, in response to feelings and motives that were widespread along the border and that came to fruition in a variety of ways--sometimes through public discussion, oftener in the neighborly chat or the fireside conference. Personal influence was felt in this as in every large human event. Emigrating parties were organized in different localities, and the accession anywhere of an able or a prominent man was the signal for others less independent to give in their names. The decision of Jesse Applegate to go to Oregon probably caused a number of others in St. Clair county, Missouri, to do likewise, among them his two elder brothers, Charles and Lindsey.

The several companies from Missouri and other western states met near Independence, Missouri, in April, 1843, prepared for the long overland march. Applegate's outfit is said to have consisted of about one hundred head of live stock, and four wagons, "loaded . . . with flour, bacon and such fruits and vegetables as were fit for transportation; tools of all kinds; household goods and wearing apparel; a few valuable books, among them the schoolbooks of his children, some historical works, a Worcester's dictionary, a copy of Shakespeare, the Bible he had carried on his surveying trips, his mathematical works. . . ." The emigrants organized for the journey with Peter H. Burnett as captain, intending at first to travel as a single great company. But at the Kansas river trouble arose over the question of caring for the loose stock, those having no cattle objecting with some justice to the performance of guard duty. Burnett now resigned and a reorganization took place, those without the encumbrance of cattle forming the light column, the others the so-called "cow column." Of the latter company Jesse Applegate was chosen captain.

It is a trite but true remark among far west pioneers that no severer test of a man's fitness for leadership was ever devised than the captaincy of an Oregon or California emigrating company; and it is the universal testimony of the 1843 immigrants that Applegate more than met the requirements of this exacting office. By his accurate knowledge of the difficulties to be encountered, his resourcefulness in overcoming them, his tact and courage, his commanding personality, and withal, the kind, helpful spirit he always manifested, he not only held the uniform respect of all these stanch frontiersmen but won their loyal affection. His charming essay, "A Day With the Cow Column," descriptive of the movement of his company across the plains, is a classic in the literature of western adventure. From Fort Hall westward, the region through which a road had yet to be found, Applegate is said to have been in advance, with his compass, to determine at critical points the route to be taken. In this he was greatly aided by Dr. Marcus Whitman, whose general knowledge of the country enabled him to make valuable suggestions. While the company was descending the Columbia with rafts, from Fort Walla Walla, an accident occurred by which three persons were drowned; one of them was Jesse Applegate's eldest son, a bright, studious boy of eleven summers, named, for his friend and patron, Edward Bates.

Mr. Applegate selected a piece of land within the present limits of Polk county, where he remained until the year 1849. He followed farming to some extent, raised a fine herd of cattle, built a small gristmill and worked much at his profession of surveying, laying off the settlers' claims, marking out roads, etc. The legislature of 1844 appointed him surveyor-general of the colony, with the special duty of investigating certain canal projects. He was a man of great activity, industry and skill, accomplishing with apparent ease seemingly difficult undertakings, and with the disposition to multiply interests in such a way as to keep himself more than fully occupied. There was no busier man in the little colony. Applegate often averred that he had in this period no time for politics, the care of a growing and still helpless family absorbing all his energies. But his sense of duty impelled him, in the summer of 1845, to devote not only his time but his best talents to the public service in the hope of improving the political condition of the people. Government in Oregon had thus far been in process of painful evolution. The Hudson's Bay Company's officers had exercised a civil jurisdiction adequate to the needs of an unsettled country harboring a few traders. But when Americans began to collect in numbers around the Methodist mission a demand soon arose for some sort of American government. Inasmuch as the United States was merely a claimant to the country, not its sovereign, congress felt unable to afford relief but left the people of Oregon to create for themselves such political institutions as were deemed necessary. A preliminary step was taken in 1841, when, to meet a sudden emergency, a probate judge was elected by the people. This seemed at the time to be all the "government" needed. The first formal organization, in May, 1843, was probably premature, for practically one-half of the settlers voted it to be unnecessary, and the Hudson's Bay Company were prepared, for national reasons, to place obstacles in the way of its successful working which there was not strength enough in the American portion of the community to overcome. The organization itself was faulty. There was a body of "organic laws," somewhat loosely drawn, which had been adopted by popular vote. It professed to create a provisional government for Oregon until such time as the United States should take the country under its jurisdiction. The frame of government embraced an executive committee of three, a legislative committee of nine, and several justices, constables, a sheriff, recorder, etc. To support this somewhat pretentious system resort was had to the tedious expedient of a popular subscription. The executive committee was as ineffectual as such committees usually are, and the judiciary was peculiarly ill adapted to its work. Moreover, the Methodist mission, whose agents had engineered the provisional government movement, granted to itself an entire township of land giving a like amount to the Catholic mission, a move which many felt was wholly political and which engendered much opposition.

When the great body of new immigrants arrived in the following winter, the effect was to subordinate the missionary party as well as the fur company. In the next election the pioneers secured control of affairs and proceeded at once, by their legislative committee to reorganize the government. The three-headed executive was abolished and a "governor" substituted, a legislature of thirteen members was created and the judiciary was reformed. The committee also struck a blow at their missionary predecessors by restoring to individual entry the two townships of land appropriated by the two missions. Finally they adopted a simple but effective method of raising money by virtual taxation. While the character of this legislation was undeniably wholesome, the committee showed a surprising lack of orderliness and foresight in the mode of its enactment. They practically ignored the existence of a constitution, treating the organic laws adopted by the people the year before as mere statutes, subject to unlimited amendment or to abolition by a body which, though actually deriving its existence from them, assumed thus to stand outside of and above the laws. Nor did the committee submit their acts to the people, who alone had the power to legitimize them, but on their own motion declared them to be in effect throughout that part of Oregon south of the Columbia. Since the organic laws had applied to the whole of Oregon, it could be plausibly charged against the committee that in addition to their other high-handed acts, they had also sought to limit the American territorial claims.

Testimony varies as to the effect of this revolution upon the country. Perhaps the danger of "anarchy and internecine war" was not so eminent as Applegate at a later time supposed it to have been, yet, between the positive and the negative acts of the committee, many thoughtful persons felt that the people had been grievously wronged. The upshot of the agitation was another reorganization which brought order and political prosperity to the distracted colony. In this final readjustment the guiding hand was that of Jesse Applegate. He allowed himself to be chosen, by the people of Yamhill, a member of the legislature of 1845. He entered the session with a complete program of reform which he was able to carry out to the letter. "My intention was," he wrote at a later time, "to reassert the right of the United States to the whole of Oregon, which the legislature of 1844 had limited to the south bank of the Columbia—and to secure the peace of the country by binding the whole white population in a compact to maintain it." His point of departure was the organic laws of 1843. These he revised and improved, producing a document which in form and substance was a true constitution. He then asked the people to choose between the old organic laws and the new, copies of both, written laboriously by hand, being read to them at the polling places. By an overwhelming majority they chose the revision, thereby indicating complete satisfaction with the legislature's work. A new lease of power was also voted to the officers chosen in June.

Mr. Applegate's program having triumphed so signally among the Americans south of the Columbia, he proceeded to the more delicate task of securing for it the indorsement of the British residents north of the river. For this purpose he became the diplomatic agent of the Oregon government to negotiate an arrangement with McLoughlin of the Hudson's Bay Company. McLoughlin at first repelled the idea of British subjects becoming parties to an American government; but Applegate had prepared the way for union so skillfully, he urged his reasons with such convincing force, and was so fair in his treatment of the company's interests, his personality commanded such unlimited respect, that gradually every obstacle was removed. The officers of the company formally gave in their adherence to the provisional government, agreeing to accept its jurisdiction, to pay certain taxes for its support, and in all respects to abide by its laws. This brought to an end the dual jurisdiction which had subsisted for several years and incidentally demonstrated to the world that the much mooted occupation of Oregon by Americans was a fact accomplished. The effect upon the British government may be inferred from the words of one of its special agents, Lieutenant Henry Warre, who had been sent to report on conditions in Oregon and who reached Fort Vancouver a few days after this diplomatic episode was closed. "The Hudson's Bay Company," he wrote, "were so completely overruled by the number of Americans that they were obliged to join in this compact which neutralized their authority in the country"

Mr. Applegate's significant work of reorganization was now completed and the government he put in operation remained in force until March, 1849, when Oregon was proclaimed a territory of the United States. In all that time it commanded universal respect, secured equal justice and promoted the prosperity of the colony. The people had gained full control of affairs, and special interests had to comply with laws passed for the general good. "Both the Methodist mission and the Hudson's Bay Company ceased to be political powers either to be feared or courted in the colony, and to the end of its existence the provisional government of Oregon attained all the ends of good government." The verdict of history on the Oregon provisional government is identical with the judgment expressed by Applegate himself in the words just quoted. Yet, so imperfectly has the work of 1845 been differentiated, in the popular mind, from earlier and tentative essays at political organization, that Applegate's right to be honored as the true founder of Oregon's pioneer government is, by the present generation, commonly ignored.

In the beginning it was not so. Oregonians of that day gladly acknowledged him as the sage and law-giver of the colony, while British visitors to the northwest coast instinctively recognized his leadership. Lieutenant Warre and his associate, Lieutenant Vavasour, paid their respects to this extraordinary American frontiersman; and Lieutenant Peel, son of the then premier of Great Britain, visited him at his farm, enjoyed the simple bounties of his table and discoursed with him concerning the qualities of the men who would cross a continent in order to make homes in the Oregon wilderness. Dr. McLoughlin's letters to the Hudson's Bay Company in London afford a complete proof of Applegate's superior agency in securing the company's adherence to the provisional government.

The record of the sessions of 1845 is preserved, with those of earlier and later proceedings, in the manuscript archives relative to the provisional government. To the student who will scan patiently the documents in that mass of unarranged material—reading over resolutions, laws, memorials to congress, and constitutions—so many of which are in Applegate's handwriting, his legislative pre-eminence in this age of beginnings will stand revealed. Such a study cannot fail to engender a feeling of profound respect for the pioneer statesman who, under the conditions, was able to lay such true foundations for America's first commonwealth on the Pacific coast.

Jesse Applegate's later career was almost wholly that of a private citizen. In 1857 he represented his southern Oregon constituency in the convention which framed the state constitution but, owing to a serious objection to the policies of those who controlled that body, he refused to remain till the convention completed its labors. For this he has been much criticised. The incident seems to illustrate some of his shortcomings as a public man—he lacked that sense of humor which characterizes the "good loser" and he had an almost Jacksonian disinclination to follow another's lead.

After the beginning of the gold rush to California, Mr. Applegate, in 1849, had removed his family to the Umpqua valley and settled at a place which he named Yoncalla on the Oregon-California trail. There, under the shadow of the mountains, he tilled his fields and cared for extensive herds of cattle reared for the California market. There he built his great house, a kind of latter-day Shirley or Westover, where for many years he dispensed a generous and equal hospitality to visitors of all grades of social merit. Today it might be a rude woodsman wanting fodder for his cattle, shelter and food for himself; tomorrow a polished jurist or publicist eager for the sage discourse for which the host was famed. Occasionally he entertained men of national distinction, as in the fall of 1865 when Schuyler Colfax and Samuel Bowles alighted one morning from the California stage to breakfast with him. From his frontier retreat at Yoncalla, Jesse Applegate looked out upon the world of politics with the pathetic interest of one whom nature has designed for leadership and fate condemned to a humdrum existence. Not being in a position to direct public affairs, he scrutinized sharply the conduct of those who were, and always assumed a direct personal responsibility for the doings of those he had helped to place in office. His opinions on public questions, always luminous and finely wrought, if sometimes suggestive of the closet rather than the council, were impressed upon his fellows through hundreds of letters to friends or public men, through political platforms, legislative bills and news-paper articles. The investigator rarely finds in the spontaneous written utterances of public men such vitality of thought or such blended vigor and felicity of expression as are to be met with in the everyday familiar letters of this extraordinary pioneer. They reveal a character not unmarred with idiosyncrasies, not free from peccadillos or even serious faults, yet upright and generous, with broad sympathies and a sensitive regard for social justice. He was an unselfish, sacrificing, public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Applegate was a member of the government commission appointed to settle the treaty claims of the Hudson's Bay Company and the affiliated Puget Sound Agricultural Company. In this connection he prepared a voluminous report which is in the nature of a closely reasoned legal brief. It illustrates his justice to opponents, his scrupulous regard for the public welfare and his extraordinary grasp of the principles of equity which the case involved. He always flattered himself that through this report he had saved the American government a large sum of money. In 1865 Applegate wrote at the request of Schuyler Colfax a series of letters on the then paramount problem of reconstruction. They were printed in the Oregon State Journal, published at Eugene, and also sent to Mr. Colfax. These letters, constituting a treatise, are cast in a pleasing literary mold, and, although somewhat disappointing from their impracticable recommendations and their innocence of research, they will not fail to charm the reader who appreciates original thinking on political questions or a unique restatement of time-worn principles. His views on the race question, on negro enfranchisement, and the general diffusion of political power are highly suggestive. His theory that the right of suffrage should be regulated by the nation on a uniform basis was logically consistent but it was destined to make little impression upon the reconstruction committee of congress. Samuel Bowles, who possibly as an eastern man was unprepared for such a phenomenon, marvelled to find a political sage in the Umpqua forests and wrote it as his opinion that the people of Oregon ought to send Jesse Applegate to the United States senate. Applegate, however, had none of the politician's arts and his frontier individualism was of that militant cast which rather repelled than encouraged the assistance of friends who sought his elevation to high office. Once, it is said, he could have had a senatorship at the behest of the reigning "boss" and in declining to receive it on such terms he honored his manhood more than any office could honor it.

In 1831 Jesse Applegate was married to Cynthia Ann Parker, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of Captain Jeremiah Parker. Their marriage was celebrated in St. Louis, Missouri, and to this union thirteen children were born, nine of whom married and had families. The record is as follows: Roselle, who became the wife of Charles Putnam and both are now deceased; Edward Bates, who was drowned in the Columbia river; William Milburn, who passed away in Missouri; Alexander McClellan, deceased; Robert Shortess, who has also passed away; Gertrude, the wife of James D. Fay, deceased; William Henry Harrison, a resident of Jackson county, Oregon; Daniel Webster, who has departed this life; Sally, the wife of J. J. Long, of Douglas county, this state; Peter Skeen Ogden, living in Salem, Oregon; Alenia, who is the widow of M. L. McCall and now resides in Idaho; Flora, the wife of H. C. Long, of Grant county, Oregon; and one who died in infancy. The father of this family died in 1888. He lies buried under a lone fir tree on a gentle slope of Mount Yoncalla, a plain slab of native sandstone marking the grave. The lusty commonwealth nurtured to vigor by his fostering hand would honor itself and win the blessing of reverence well bestowed by erecting on that spot or elsewhere a suitable memorial to this prince among Oregon pioneers.

WILLIAM ARTHUR HALL is the proprietor of one of the leading business interests of the enterprising town of Clatskanie, there conducting a drug store which is well appointed and is accorded a liberal patronage. Other business interests, too, profit by his cooperation and capable management, and Columbia county classes him with its progressive and representative men. He was born in Pennsylvania, October 5, 1875, a son of William H. and Elizabeth (Shields) Hall, both of whom were natives of the Keystone state, where the father has spent his entire life. For many years the father was actively engaged in farming but is now living retired in Brookville, Pennsylvania. His first wife died in 1903, since which time he married Mrs. Rettie Stahlman of Pennsylvania. By his first marriage ten children were born, of whom nine are yet living: E. O., a resident of Hood River, Oregon; Eleanor Craft, the wife of W. A. Craft, of Sheridan, Oregon; William A., of this review; Walter C., of Summerville, Pennsylvania; H. S., who is living in Brookville, Pennsylvania; Charles and Joseph E., who are residents of Hood River; Jennie M., also living at Hood River; and Fred who lives on the old homestead in Pennsylvania. A daughter, Minnie, who was the eldest, died at the age of eight years.

In the public schools William A. Hall pursued his education to the age of twenty years, after which he attended the Grove City College of Grove City, Pennsylvania. He, however, had taught school for several terms prior to entering college, which he attended for one year. When twenty-three years of age he made his way westward to the Pacific coast and for three years thereafter was engaged in teaching in Clatskanie. He then went to Forest Grove, where he attended the Pacific University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1905. On returning to Clatskanie he established a drug store which he is still conducting, building up a large and gratifying business. He has not confined his efforts entirely to one line, however, being interested financially in the Cooperative Creamery Company of Clatskanie and also owning a half interest in the Clatskanie Telephone Company, of which he is the general manager. He is likewise part owner of a fruit ranch at Sheridan, Oregon, and his real-estate holdings include both business and residence property.

In 1905 Mr Hall was married to Miss Gertrude Marsh, who was born at Forest Grove, Oregon, April 27, 1883, and is a daughter of Joseph W. and Mary (Knowlton) Marsh. Her father was born in Vermont and her mother in Canada and they were married in the east but soon afterward came to Oregon, settling in this state among its pioneer residents. In their family were the following children: James R., living in Aurora, Oregon; Mrs. Laura Cadwell, deceased; William, of Boston, Massachusetts; Sidney, who died at the age of twenty years; Fred, a dentist practicing at Woodburn, Oregon; David, of Forest Grove, this state; Gertrude; and four who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Hall have been born a son and a daughter: Elizabeth S., whose birth occurred April 15, 1909; and Walter Knowlton, born January 10, 1911.

William Arthur Hall votes with the republican party and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, have called him to public office. He has served as a member of the city council and the school board. In 1912 he was nominated by the republican party as candidate for representative from Columbia county to the state legislature. He was appointed mayor of Clatskanie in June, 1912, by the city council. He has been president of the Commercial Club of Clatskanie. Mr. Hall holds membership with the Modern Woodmen camp and both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Personal worth has gained them high regard and they have a host of friends in Columbia county that is almost coextensive with the number of their acquaintances.

WALTER VIRGIL SCHROEDER lives three miles up the river on the north side of North Fork, Oregon, and gives general supervision to his farming, dairying and stock-raising interests. He owns eighty-four acres of productive land in Coos county which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and which is improved with modern equipment. He is well known in this district as an enterprising and representative agriculturist. He is a native of Oregon, his birth having occurred in Coos county, November 26, 1874, and a son of John H. and Emily (Perry) Schroeder, the former a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and the latter of Clatsop county, Oregon. John H. Schroeder removed at an early date to Coos county and was numbered among its enterprising and successful agriculturists for many years. He and his two brothers married three Perry sisters who were natives of Oregon. The Perry family has been in that state since the early days of its pioneer settlement. The parents of Mrs. Schroeder were in the emigrant train drawn by ox teams which crossed the plains under the guardianship of the famous Kit Carson. The father of our subject engaged in agriculture on Coos bay and was prominent and successful as a farmer. He was the first man in the state of Oregon to own a wagon which was constructed in Empire. He also had the distinction of being the first dairyman in Coos county, bringing a Jersey cow to Coos bay at an early date. He established and organized the first creamery in this section of the country and upon his death on May 30, 1906, was regarded as an eminent and conspicuously successful agriculturist and business man. His wife is still living at Argo, Oregon, on the old homestead.

Walter V. Schroeder is one of eleven children born to his parents: Dora A., the wife of Pierce Hanley, of Lampas, Oregon; Mary, now Mrs. Harry S. Cribbs, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; William H., a jeweler in Coquille, Oregon, and the father of three sons; Ella, who married George Loingor of Myrtle Point; George, in the hotel business in Florence, Oregon, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work; Alice, the wife of A. O. Hite of Coquille, Oregon; Walter V., the subject of this sketch; Clarence E., operating the old home farm in Argo; and Ralph, Gustave and Henry, all of whom are residents of Argo.

Walter Schroeder remained at home and assisted his father in the work of the farm until he was twenty-one years of age. He then followed the timber business for three years, and worked in the shipyards at North Bend in the employ of A. M. Simpson for a year and a half. At the end of that time he married and immediately began working on a dairy ranch at a monthly salary. In this way he gained personal knowledge of the details connected with dairying, and his intelligent and alert mind made him an apt scholar. He worked for his cousin for one year and subsequently joined with his brother Clarence in the renting of the old home farm comprising three hundred and twenty acres of the finest Coos county land. He was active in its operation and for three years developed and expanded it along modern and progressive lines. Eventually he purchased eighty-four acres of land on the north fork of the Coquille river eleven miles from Myrtle Point and three miles from Gravel Ford, and began its cultivation and improvement. He does general farming and has brought his land to a high state of cultivation. He has prospered as the years have gone by and his success is indicated by the excellent appearance of his farm. In connection with the general work of tilling and cultivating the soil he makes a specialty of dairying and milks twenty jersey cows. This branch of his activity is rapidly growing in importance and is a substantial source of his income. The profit which he gains from each cow averages one hundred dollars a year. He engages to some extent in stock-raising, having been directed into this line of activity by raising his own cows.

On the 22d of November, 1899, Mr. Schroeder was united in marriage to Miss Dorlisea Clinton, a native of Oregon and a daughter of John W. and Eliza (Russell) Clinton. Mrs. Schroeder's mother was born in Ohio and her father's birth occurred in Missouri. Her parents came to Oregon and settled in Coos county in 1874 where the father bought a farm. He had previously engaged in agriculture in Missouri, giving some of his time to blacksmithing, but since his settlement in Oregon has entirely discontinued the latter line of occupation. For some years he engaged in the timber business in the northern woods where he was noted for the large amount of work he could accomplish in one day. He has engaged in farming during the latter years of his life and is now living with his wife on the old homestead in Norway, Oregon, where some of his children still reside. Mrs. Schroeder is one of twelve children born to her parents: James D., who is now farming near Norway, Oregon, where he resides with his wife and five children; Marion T., who resides in Argo, and is the mother of two children; Jessie, who lives upon the old homestead in Norway; Mary, the wife of William Schroeder of Coquille, Oregon; George of California; Albert R., who operates a sawmill in Coquille; Dorlisea, the wife of our subject; Edward, engaged in general merchandising in Parkersburg, Oregon; Samuel, who resides in the same city; Clarence, who maintains his home in Coquille; Roy, a resident of Norway; and Annie, the deceased wife of Charles Fox. To Mr. and Mrs. Walter Schroeder have been born three children: Adrian, born July 20, 1904, who is attending the public schools of Coos county and is making a brilliant record; Thelma, born January 12, 1906, who is also pursuing her studies; and Velda, born August 24, 1907.

In his political affiliations Mr. Schroeder is a democrat, always voting his party ticket on national issues although he reserves independence of judgment on local questions. He has never sought office but has served as clerk of the school board for four years. He deserves great credit for what he has accomplished in agricultural pursuits by reason of his intelligent activities and his honorable and upright life.

ISAAC WRIGHT, JR., is a well known and popular liveryman of Woodville, where he owns and operates a fine livery barn. He has two residence properties in this city and is a prominent business man in the town of his adoption. He was born in Ohio, June 22, 1835, a son of Isaac and Nancy (Hartness) Wright, both natives of the state of New York, who removed to Ohio at an early date, where they lived for several years. In 1842 the family removed to Wisconsin and there resided until the death of the parents. In their family were nine children of whom seven are still living.

Isaac Wright, Jr., remained at home until after attaining majority and received a good common-school education, assisting his father with the duties of the farm. At the age of twenty-one years he began farming on his own account in Wisconsin, a vocation which he followed in that state until 1890, when he removed to Oregon. After coming to this state he went into the saloon business, in which he continued for seventeen years, but in 1910 he settled in Woodville, where he built a fine livery barn and has since conducted the same. His business has been successful and he is now the owner of two residence properties in Woodville.

Mr. Wright was married in early manhood to Miss Aulema Lamb and to them were born six children, of whom Duncan is a resident of Wisconsin. Dora married Charles Wasson, also of Wisconsin. Samuel makes his home in the Badger state. Chester resides in South Dakota. The wife and mother passed away in Wisconsin in 1887, having been a faithful helpmate to her husband during her lifetime. Mr. Wright is independent in his political views, preferring to support for public office such men as in his opinion are best fitted for the office to which they aspire. He has long been recognized as one of the leading and most valuable men of his town. He gives strict attention to his business, serving his customers with promptness and affording them such accommodations as give entire satisfaction. He is active in civic as well as business life and does what is in his power to promote the interests of the business welfare as well as the social conditions of the town in which he lives.

CHARLES SNEDDON is one of the highly respected citizens of Marshfield, having lived a retired life in that city for many years. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, February, 1841, and is the son of Robert and Jeannette (Nesbit) Sneddon. To his parents ten children were born: Robert, Richard, John, Jeannette and Agnes, all of whom are deceased; Margaret, who is the wife of William Nesbit, of Glasgow, Scotland; Charles, of this review; Andrew, of Glasgow, Scotland; and Thomas and Betsy, both of whom are deceased.

Charles Sneddon was reared in his father's home and received a limited education in the public schools of his native city. At the early age of ten he started in life for himself, securing his first employment in the mines, at which work he continued to be engaged for a period of ten years. In the year 1865 he emigrated to America, making his first stop in the new world in Pennsylvania. He, however, remained but a very short time in that state, after which he removed to West Virginia, where he continued to reside for two years. During his residence in Virginia he sent for his betrothed wife, who at that time was still living in Scotland and who reached the American shores in the month of November and immediately thereafter occurred her marriage to Mr. Sneddon. Shortly after the date of their wedding Mr. and Mrs. Sneddon removed to Boone county, Iowa. He had previously been engaged for a short time in the mining business in Maryland. Mr. Sneddon established his home in the month of September in Iowa and in that state was engaged in the mining industry until April of the following spring, at which time he and his wife removed to Coos Bay, reaching that place on May 10, 1871. He at once filed upon a preemption claim in this state, upon which he lived until he purchased a residence property in Marshfield, where he has since lived a retired life. He is the owner of a beautiful farm of two hundred and five acres and his home is one among the finest residences in Marshfield, located at No. 995 Seventh street, south.

On November, 23, 1865, Mr. Sneddon was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Blakeley, a daughter of John and Hannah (Sherry) Blakeley, both of whom were natives of Scotland. To Mr. and Mrs. Blakeley eleven children were born: Rosan, who is the widow of John McDougal and resides in Scotland; Hugh, Jane and John, all of whom are deceased; John, the second of that name, who has also passed away; Mrs. Ellen Sneddon; Agnes, who is deceased; Agnes, the second of that name, who is the wife of Robert Mitchell, of Scotland; and Mary, James and Hannah, all of whom have passed away. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sneddon nine children have been born: Robert, deceased; Hannah, the wife of David Reese, of Marshfield, by whom she has two children, Helen and Edna; John B., of Marshfield, who is married and has one child, Mabel; Charles, who is a resident of Marshfield; Hugh, likewise of Marshfield, who is married and has two children, Walter and Louise; Walter, of Roslyn, Washington, who is married and has one child, Ruth; William, who resides in Marshfield; Ellen, deceased; and Jeannette, of California.

Mr. Sneddon is a loyal and enthusiastic member of the republican party. He has, however, never sought political office of any kind. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with which fraternal society he has been identified for thirty years. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Charles Sneddon is one of the best known men in Coos county. He is in every respect entitled to be numbered among the early pioneers of this portion of the state and throughout his long life of activity and citizenship in his adopted state he has been known as a man of high ideals of honor in social and business life. He is always vitally interested in every public measure seeking to improve the condition of the people in the state and county in which he resides.

J. B. RIDDLE. Emerson ranks the quality of proficiency as highest in the influences which make for success. He says that if a man can do any one thing well, be it preach a sermon or make a mouse trap, "though he build his house in the wilderness, the world will make a beaten path to his door." J. B. Riddle has done even better than this. He has built a town; and with what success, the thriving and prosperous city of Riddle is ample evidence. He is today one of the foremost men in the city which bears his name and actively interested in all lines of commercial development. He is a native of Sangamon county, Illinois, where his birth occurred November 9, 1844. His parents were William and Maxamilla Riddle, both natives of Ohio, who settled in Illinois soon after their marriage and in 1851 crossed the plains with ox teams. The journey took about six months to accomplish and after many hardships they located in Cow creek valley, Oregon, where the father took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres and lived upon his land until his death. The mother died in 1868.

J. B. Riddle was only seven years of age when his parents left Illinois for Oregon. His father had the distinction of being the first white man to settle in Cow creek valley and here his son was reared among the Indians. The schooling facilities of the district were extremely inadequate and J. B. Riddle's only instruction was that gained in a little log cabin schoolhouse with a dirt floor and slab benches. When he was nineteen years old he bought a farm in the region where he lived from J. C. Vandenbauch, who had come into the valley shortly after the Riddle family settled there. J. B. Riddle and his brother Abner became owners at this time of a half section of the valley farm lands and on this location the town of Riddle now stands. When the railroad was built through, J. B. Riddle followed the line of construction, conducting small eating houses along the way. When he reached Medford he opened the Nash hotel, the first institution of this kind in the city. This he conducted for three years and then returned to Riddle, where he built the first hotel in that city. He remained in active operation of this enterprise for twenty years but recently leased it to his son-in-law, D. W. Crosby, who is now its proprietor.

There is no line of activity in the city of Riddle in which our subject has not been active at some period of his career. He was one of the organizers of the Riddle State Bank and was elected president at the time it was founded in 1910. He has erected many of its finest buildings and has had a share in the organization of most of its business enterprises. He has seen its development from a wholly unimproved section of land to a rapidly growing and prosperous city. He owns today a large quantity of valuable real estate in the business and residence sections of Riddle and is always keenly alive to the needs and advancement of his home town.

J. B. Riddle has been twice married. His first union occurred when he was nineteen years of age. At this time he was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Feathers, a daughter of William Feathers, a Baptist minister who came to Cow creek valley from California in 1863. She was drowned while fording the Umpqua river in 1865 and her nine months old child met death at the same time. Two years later, in 1867, John Riddle was again married. His second wife was Miss Mary Frances Catching, who was the first white child born in this section of the state of Oregon. Her birth occurred in Cow creek valley in 1852, her father, John Catching, having come to Oregon from Missouri in 1845. He was one of the earliest settlers in northwestern America. He first located on the Tnalitin plains in Washington county but joined the California gold seekers in 1849. He later returned and located in the Cow creek valley, where his daughter was born. To Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Riddle have been born seven children, five of whom are still living; Jennie, who married D. W. Crosby, of Riddle, Oregon; Millie, the wife of Charles Stauffer, of the same city; Frances, now Mrs. George Frater, who resides in Riddle; Ira B., who is a court reporter at Roseburg, Oregon; and Edward, now in business in Riddle. Our subject and his family are now living in one of the most beautiful private homes in Douglas county. This residence was built by J. B. Riddle when he gave up his active management of the Riddle Hotel. The house stands in the midst of one hundred and sixty acres of beautifully kept land adjoining the city. Here Mr. Riddle is giving most of his time and attention to overseeing and operating his extensive fruit ranch.

J. B. Riddle has always been a republican in his political views and served for several years as mayor of his city. He devotes a great deal of his time to the commercial development of the town which he founded, and takes an intelligent interest in national and local politics. Fraternally he is member of Riddle Lodge, F. & A. M., and of the Umpqua Chapter, No. 11, R. A. M., of Roseburg. He is a Knight of Pythias and is a prominent member of the Roseburg lodge of that organization and active in the affairs of Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E., of which he is a charter member. J. B. Riddle is the foremost man in his city today. He has promoted its industries, spread its business, erected many of its buildings and has developed and improved its municipal life. He has done his work well and the pathway to his door is beaten and trampled by the eager footsteps of his many friends.

WARREN D. MEE is the fortunate owner of a most attractive and valuable ranch property, containing two hundred and forty acres, located on Thompson creek in Jackson county, this state. His birth occurred June 15, 1868, and he is a native son of Oregon, his parents being Thomas and Drusilla (Woodridge) Mee, both of whom were early pioneers to this state. The father emigrated to Oregon in 1852 and the mother crossed the plains with her parents in 1853. After their marriage they settled on Thompson creek in Jackson county, where Thomas Mee engaged in farming, being one of the first settlers in that part of the county. Here he established his home and spent the remaining years of his life. He was very successful in business and highly esteemed by all who knew him as a man of upright character, generous impulses and fidelity to the highest ideals of moral life. He has long since passed to his reward but is survived by his wife, who still resides in their old home.

Warren D. Mee was reared in his father's home and obtained his early education in the public schools. At the age of twenty he left the parental roof and accepted a position as superintendent of a sawmill, which he operated for a box factory during several years. Later he removed to California, in that state becoming the owner and proprietor of a box factory, which he operated very successfully for a number of years. After selling this property he returned to his boyhood home for the purpose of looking after his father's estate, which consisted of two hundred and forty acres on Thompson creek. This he operated for a number of years and later, by purchase, came into possession of the property, which he still owns.

In 1896 Mr. Mee was united in marriage to Miss Effie B. Hesslegrave, a native of Iowa, by whom he has six children, namely: Charlie, Helen, Thomas, Gertrude, Eugene and Ruth. All are living and reside at home with their parents. Mr. Mee is a republican in politics and a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security. He is a worthy successor of his honored father. By inheritance he bears a name that stands for the highest ideals in business and social life and his influence is always to be counted upon in the promotion of any issue looking to the improvement of the community in which he lives.

JOHN W. PERNOLL is the well known and popular postmaster of Applegate, Jackson county, this state, and is a native son of Oregon and the county and city in which he lives. He was born April 30, 1877, his parents being William and Nancy (Miller) Pernoll. The father was a native of Germany and the mother of Rogue river valley in Jackson county. The father of Mrs. Pernoll, John S. Miller, came to Oregon in 1846 from Missouri, crossing the plains with ox teams, stopping for a short time in the northern part of the state, thence continuing his journey to Jackson county where he effected his permanent settlement and established his home. He and Burrell B. Griffin, the great-grandfather of him whose name introduces this review, were veterans of the Indian wars from which this section of the state suffered during the early years of their pioneer life.

William Pernoll in his early life was a seafaring man, roving the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, making all merchantable ports of the world. His vessel on touching port on the Pacific coast afforded him an opportunity to obtain a glimpse of the undeveloped resources of the Pacific seaboard, which proved to be so attractive that he deserted his ship and joined the great body of men in their rush to the rich diggings in the gold fields. In 1853 he removed to Oregon and located at Jacksonville in Jackson county, where he continued his occupation of miner for some two or three years. Later he changed his place of residence to Old Williamsburg where he took up a homestead and engaged in diversified farming and stock-raising to which he also added the occupation of a butcher. Some years later he filed upon a government homestead on Applegate river, two miles northwest of the present site of Applegate postoffice. He removed to this homestead, upon which he lived for many years, but in later life came to Applegate where he maintained his residence until the time of his death which occurred in June, 1900. For some years before his death he was engaged in the mercantile business which he conducted first on his ranch and later removed to Applegate.

John W. Pernoll was reared in his father's home while he acquired his education in the public schools. From his childhood he has never left the parental roof and during all these years has been engaged in the mercantile business, identified with the growing interests of his father's farm and merchandising enterprise. Immediately following the death of his father he succeeded to the management of the farm to which he has since continued to give his attention. On December 1, 1901, he received the appointment of postmaster of Applegate and in this office he has faithfully and conscientiously served the government and the people. He is a member of Warren Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M., of Jacksonville; Jacksonville Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F.; and Grants Pass Camp, No. 5007, M. W. A. He is independent in his political affiliations, giving his ballot to the candidates and the issues which he believes will render most faithful and effective service to the cause of the people. He is still a single man but, nevertheless, is identified with all the healthy social growth of his county and community. He is always to be relied upon to lend his influence to the furtherance of any enterprise seeking the educational, social, industrial or moral development of his county and state.

F. E. WALL, who is a resident of Jefferson, was born in Kings Lynn, England, December 31, 1853, his parents, Edward and Eliza (Mathews) Wall, being lifelong residents of England. The father was an agriculturist and engaged in that pursuit throughout his life. He died at the age of fifty-six years and Mrs. Wall passed away in 1906, at the age of ninety years. They were the parents of nine children, namely: Harriet, who resides in England and is the widow of John Patterson; Charles, a resident of England; Frances, who is also residing in England and is the widow of Thomas Rackham; Alice, deceased; F. E.; Emily and William, both deceased; Nellie, who is the wife of Ed Morton and resides in England; and Edward, who is residing in England.

F. E. Wall received his early education at Framlingham College in England and in August, 1868, when nearly fifteen years of age he went to Scotland, where he remained for three years as an agricultural student. After this he left for Canada and engaged in agricultural pursuits for nineteen years, at the end of that time coming to Jefferson, where he has since resided and engaged in the carpenter's trade.

In 1897 Mr. Wall was married to Evelyn Gulvin, whose birth occurred in Wisconsin in 1865 and who is the daughter of Henry and Mary (Marybe) Gulvin, the former a native of England and the latter of the state of New York. To Mr. and Mrs. Wall five children have been born, namely: Henry Milton, whose birth occurred September 14, 1898; Roland Arthur, who was born March 6, 1900; Kenneth Bentley, born June 29, 1902; Donald W., born October 29, 1904; and Margaret Evelyn, born February 25, 1906.

In politics Mr. Wall is a staunch republican and he has been elected to several civic of-fees, among those being that of city recorder and city marshal. He is also a member of the Masons, having been secretary of the lodge and of the Eastern Star for fourteen years; of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has filled all of the chairs and is now acting as secretary; and of the Royal Arch Masons. In his various pursuits Mr. Wall has always displayed ability and abundant energy and in his political and fraternal relations he has been honorable and loyal, thus making for himself a name which stands for the best there is in manhood and citizenship.

D. W. KNUTZEN is one of the representative farmers of Jackson county, owning a highly improved ranch of one hundred and sixty acres located on Thompson creek. His birth occurred in California on the 19th of October, 1859, his parents being John W. and Angelica Knutzen, both of whom were born near Hamburg, Germany. They were united in marriage in San Francisco, California, to which state John W. Knutzen had emigrated during the early gold excitement in 1849. He was engaged in the business of mining for a period of twelve or fifteen years, and later became interested in farming and stock-raising. In 1873 he removed to Oregon, locating on Thompson creek, where he continued to live until the time of his death, which occurred in 1906. His wife was called to her final rest in July, 1910.

D. W. Knutzen was reared at home and educated in the common schools. At the age of seventeen he became an employe on a neighboring ranch, where he remained for some time and then became interested in mining, with which occupation he was connected for a considerable period. Later he purchased his present home ranch, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres on Thompson Creek, where he has since resided.

In the year 1885 Mr. Knutzen was married to Miss Laura Mee, a daughter of Thomas Mee, one of the early settlers on Thompson creek. To this home two children have been born, Jessie and Frank. Mr. Knutzen is a loyal member of the republican party and belongs to Rogue River Camp, No. 55, W. O. W., of Grants Pass, Oregon. He is one of the solid, representative citizens of his county and a successful farmer and is always keenly alive to the best interests of the people of his state. He is highly respected wherever known for the integrity of his character and his sound methods of business practice.

T. F. HAYES, who is living retired in Woodburn, Oregon, was born in Indiana on the 11th of August, 1844, his parents being Henry and S. E. (Guerin) Hayes, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of New Jersey. The parents were married in Indiana, where they resided until 1848, the year in which they removed to Iowa, where they were among the pioneer settlers of their section of the state. After residing there for four years they crossed the plains with ox teams and arrived in Oregon in 1852. During this trip the father's death occurred when they were at the Boise river. Upon arriving in Oregon the mother and her family located in Marion county but they soon took up a donation claim one mile east of Mount Angel, Marion county. This was the mother's home until her retirement in 1888 from an active life of at least thirty years. In that year she sold the property and made her home until her death in 1906, son, T. F. Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hayes were the parents of five children: John C., at the age of eighty-three years, with her whose death occurred at Silverton, Oregon, when he was forty-eight years of age; T. F., who is the subject of this review; Mrs. Eliza J. McCulloch, a resident of Baker City, Oregon; Henry T., who is living in Marion county; and William Albert, who died at Baker City, at the age of thirty-three years.

T. F. Hayes was but eight years of age when his parents started across the plains and because of the death of his father it was necessary that he begin earning his own livelihood while he was still young. At the age of fourteen he began working out during the greater part of the year, devoting but three months in the winter to school. By this means he was able to assist his mother in the support of the family. Three years later, in 1862 he went to the Florence gold mines in Idaho, where he remained for seven months before going home for a short time. He soon returned to Idaho, locating in Boise, where he worked in the mines for two years. In 1868, however, he again returned to Oregon and engaged in agricultural pursuits. During the following summer he again worked in the mines but before winter returned to Oregon and purchased his mother's donation land claim, where he resided until 1888 when he sold this place and bought another farm in the vicinity. Until 1900 he resided upon this property and was engaged in its cultivation, a pursuit which he found both agreeable and remunerative. Because of his varied experience in several states he found himself well equipped to undertake the development of the soil along careful and scientific lines and because of his thrift and industry he succeeded in earning a competence sufficient to allow him in later years to enjoy the comforts and pleasures of a retired life. In 1900 he rented his property and moved into Woodburn, where he is still residing. Nine years later he disposed of the property and is now interested in real estate in Woodburn only, where he owns his own substantial dwelling and several other properties. In addition to his real estate investments he is also interested as a stockholder in a general mercantile store in Woodburn.

In 1869 Mr. Hayes was married to Miss Mary J. Brown, whose birth occurred in Iowa. Her parents both died when she was very young and she was reared by Josiah Beaman, who came across the plains to Oregon in 1864. To Mr. and Mrs. Hayes four children have been born: Henry M., whose birth occurred in 1871 and who is now married and residing in Linn county; Mrs. Cynthia A. Robbins, whose birth occurred in 1873 and who is a resident of Hood River; Mrs. Leona G. Hendricks, born in 1875 and living in Portland; and Mrs. Addie L. Doud, who is living in Woodburn. They all received common-school educations and subsequently were given the advantage of courses in business training.

In politics Mr. Hayes gives his support to the democratic party but is liberal in his views, and while as a general rule he believes in the broad and expansive policies of democracy, he is not bound at any election by the dictates of his party. For fifteen years he has served as justice of the peace and has executed the duties of this office with skill and discernment. In religious faith the family are Presbyterians, holding membership in the Woodburn church. Mr. Hayes has spent a useful and well ordered life and his services, not only to his mother and his family, but also to the community in which he resides are beyond estimation. His geniality and social nature have won him a circle of friends almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances.

MRS. CATHARINE S. DAVIS. Volumes have been written concerning the part which men have played in the development of various sections of the country during pioneer times, but comparatively little has been written concerning what has been done by pioneer women, whose work, on the whole, has been of a quieter and therefore less conspicuous character but is none the less important. Enshrined in the hearts of all who knew her is the memory of the life of Mrs. Catharine S. Davis—a life fraught with good deeds and kind words. The spirit of helpfulness seemed to find its embodiment in her, and no task seemed too difficult when it would alleviate the suffering or add to the happiness of those who, like herself, lived in the Willamette valley in pioneer days.

Mrs. Davis was born of Dutch parentage, in the state of New York, January 23, 1811. Her father, William K. Shuyter, belonged to the old Kniekerbocker stock of New York. Unto him and his wife were born eleven sons and two daughters, Catharine and Elizabeth, and the mother and daughters, in addition to doing the cooking and caring for the house, carded, spun and wove all the wool and flax used in making clothing for the entire family. Catharine S. Shuyter was but nine years of age when the family removed to Pennsylvania and was a maiden of eighteen when they went to Ohio. There, three years later, she gave her hand in marriage to Benjamin Davis. They were both strict Quakers and were married on the 26th of October, 1831, according to the Quaker rite, which requires the announcement of the intended marriage read in meeting a certain number of times, and then at the appointed hour for the marriage the couple "stand up in meeting" together and marry themselves. They lived in Ohio for about seven years and in 1838 removed to Indiana, settling near the present site of Plymouth. In the spring of 1847, with their six children, they joined the train of Captain Peek, preparing to cross the plains to Oregon. The journey was without startling incident during its earlier stages with the exception of some annoyance from the Pawnee Indians and the exaction of toll by them. The train divided at Fort Hall, the Davis family traveling with that section which made its way over the southern or Applegate route across the desert, through the Modoc country and the Rogue river valley. They had hardly left the old track when they experienced great trouble with the Indians, especially in the Modoc country, the red men harassing them on every hand. When they reached the Rogue river valley complete annihilation seemed almost certain, for two hundred warriors surrounded their camp, in which were not more than eighteen men capable of bearing arms. Had the attack been made the result, to say the least, would have been doubtful. By a bit of strategy, however, Mr. Davis prevented the attack. In the back part of his wagon was a cook stove with a drum and from this the smoke was issuing through a pipe that extended through the top of the wagon cover. Mr. Davis made signs that this was a cannon or some sort of explosive machine which at his word would destroy them. Fancying its resemblance to artillery, of which they had some knowledge, and not daring to approach near its gaping mouth, the Indians gradually withdrew and allowed the train to pass. Some years later, at a council of these Indians and the whites, the chief recalled this incident and said they had planned to destroy the whole train and would have done so but for the big gun in the wagon. Hardly had the train reached the Indian country before Mrs. Davis became seriously ill with a fever which continued to grow worse until one morning her condition was such that her husband decided that he would stop in camp until she became better, as it appeared that it would surely be fatal to her to proceed. The captain and the balance of the train, however, determined to continue on their way, as they were in a hostile Indian country, far from their destination. Mr. Davis adhered to his resolution to remain, fearing that it would prove fatal to his wife to journey farther. The remainder of their party started on their way except the wife of one prominent member of the train, who was ministering to Mrs. Davis. When her husband called to her to join the others, she replied: "Father, you can go on if you want to, but my duty is with Catharine and these little children, and I will stay with them." The husband therefore turned his wagons to rejoin his wife; the next wagons, seeing this, also turned, and soon the whole train was in corral again, where they stayed until the fever had abated and Mrs. Davis was able to resume the journey.

The party proceeded on their way until the beauty and fertility of the land in the vicinity of Eugene led Mr. Davis and his wife to secure a claim there. But seventy-five cents remained at the end of their journey and they were compelled to trade off a portion of their cattle for flour and seed wheat, which could only be obtained sixty miles away. A cow brought them twelve bushels of wheat and a yoke of oxen was traded for a thousand pounds of flour, which it seemed would be sufficient for the family until springtime, but their liberal hospitality to the immigrants who came straggling through the mountains exhausted their supply until the family were compelled to live on boiled wheat. In the spring an abundance of milk and delicious wild strawberries, without sugar, constituted a part of their diet until William Dodson, an earlier settler of the upper Willamette, discovered their lack of money and insisted on loaning Mr. Davis an amount sufficient to purchase provisions at Vancouver, one hundred and forty miles away.

Mrs. Davis not only shared in all the hardships which the family experienced but was ever ready to aid her neighbors who were in need of medical experience or the care of a nurse. She had read medicine and nursed under a brother-in-law, Dr. Peter Crumb, of Plymouth, Indiana, and again and again her services were sought by families from Marys river to the Calapooya mountains.

In 1857 Mr. Davis, having prospered on the farm and owning a number of horses, cattle and sheep, to make use of his horses took a contract to carry the mail from Corvallis to Winchester. He made his headquarters in Eugene, which was equidistant from the terminal points of his route, and there he purchased property and built a livery stable on the southeast corner of Ninth and Pearl streets and a residence on the northeast corner of the same streets; but after a short illness he passed away on the 6th of April, 1858. After coming to Oregon, remembering the trials and vicissitudes of his own journey across the plains, he twice traveled eastward with supplies and provisions to the assistance of incoming immigrants. In 1849 he went over the old trail as far as Fort Hall, and in 1852 aided in rescuing the lost train coming down the middle fork of the Willamette over the present route of the Oregon Eastern railroad. These immigrants were almost famished when aid reached them. He always bore his part in the work of pioneer development until death claimed him. His widow was left with the care of the three younger children. In the family were seven children, one son having been born after their arrival in Oregon. Mrs. Davis continued at the old home until 1874, when, the last of her children having married and moved away, she broke up housekeeping and thereafter lived with her children as she felt inclined until her own demise on the 24th of January, 1898. Never will her memory cease to be revered and honored by those who knew her. She was indeed a ministering angel to the isolated families of pioneer times, scattered for perhaps a hundred miles through Lane county and adjacent territory. She was skilled in the methods of medical practice of that day, using herbs and the simpler remedies, which, however, proved effective in checking many an illness. Never was she known to fail or to refuse to go on her errands of mercy when the call came. Seldom did she ever receive any remuneration for her services. It was at a time when all good neighbors "helped out" and it is probable that those who sought her services had no money with which to pay; but with the spirit of the Good Samaritan, she never remembered those things and was always prompt in the role of the ministering angel of mercy. No matter how dark or stormy the night, how long the distance or from whom the summons came, her horse was quickly saddled, the saddlebags put on and she was gone. The midnight journey might be across the paths of wild beasts, along treacherous trails into the foothills of the middle fork or the McKenzie or over to Lake creek; but never was this fearless, stout-hearted woman known to ask or expect escort. Often, late at night, the family would hear the clatter of a hard-pressed horse's hoofs on the "big road." They knew it was a messenger after the mother, and even before the rider had reached the door one of the boys was saddling up the horse that Mrs. Davis rode for many years. This horse was a mixture of Indian cayuse with some high-grade animal, and she could easily outdistance anything in the country. It is vouched for that her pony would pace away from the fastest mount known to the early settlers of Oregon. She would return at dawn if her mission was ended, but at times such a call required days or perhaps weeks of faithful nursing of the sick and frequently she would also have to act as cook, housekeeper and caretaker. She continued in her work and her errands of mercy until the limitations of age caused her to desist. In an account of her life published in the Oregon Journal is found the following: "The Davis home was for almost a lifetime an attractive white house of the L type, surmounting the crest of a slightly knoll set back a short quarter of a mile from the main highway. Once a mere Indian trail, this avenue became the 'big road'; now it is the 'river road.' Here, where the Calapooya Indians made friends with these settlers, and deer swarmed, the Davis family remained and the world with all its wonders have come along the 'big road' to their yard gates. As one turns in at the big gate the vista of the old homestead is framed between two giant fir trees that mark either side of the drive to the house. They are the only reminders of the thick grove of firs that once marked this spot. In her lifetime Mrs. Davis conceived a great natural affection for these splendid specimens of the primeval forest. When the time came the old farm was sold, she stipulated that the buyers should not cut down or otherwise destroy or mar those trees as long as she lived. It is pleasant to note that, although Mrs. Davis passed away about fourteen years ago, her wishes have been respected and in all probability sentiment will decree that the trees shall remain as a memorial to her as long as they survive. At a recent gathering of Lane county pioneers, the incalculable services of this grand pioneer woman were discussed appreciatively and it has since been suggested by Colonel

W. G. D. Mercer that, with the consent of the present owners, the pioneer society might well distinguish its existence and express a well deserved tribute by erecting a memorial tablet on the big tree nearest the highway in commemoration of this woman's faithful service to her countrymen." How much more splendid it is to trace one's ancestry to a woman of this character, a woman whose life was filled with deeds of kindness and mercy, than to the most eminent of the crowned heads of Europe!

JOHN A. LEWMAN. For fifty-three years John A. Lewman has been a continuous resident in the vicinity of Applegate creek in Jackson county, this state. He is numbered among Oregon's early pioneers, his arrival in the state dating from 1852, when he was a young man of eighteen, his birth having occurred in Plymouthburg, Kentucky, on August 15, 1834. He is the son of Amos and Rebecca (Bramble) Lewman, both of whom were natives of England and who with their respective families emigrated to this country when they were small children.

John A. Lewman left his Kentucky home in 1851, making his first business venture in the state of Iowa and in the following year he crossed the plains with ox teams, arriving in Portland, November 22, 1852, after having endured a perilous journey of nine continuous months. He remained in Portland until May, 1853, after which he journeyed to the Puget Sound country, spending one year in that locality and then removing to Jacksonville, Oregon, where he became interested in various mining ventures in and about Jackson county. He shortly after removed to Yreka, California. Here he was engaged in the saloon business until the spring of 1859, when he removed to Fraserville, British Columbia, going there on a mining venture which proved to be an unfortunate investment. Two months afterward he returned to Jacksonville and soon after established himself in the saloon business in Williamsburg, where he remained for the following eighteen months. This business establishment he later sold and again became interested in mining in Whiskey Gulch, where he continued to live and engage in mining for a period of eight years. Eventually retiring from the life and occupation of the miner, he purchased a ranch in the Applegate valley adjoining his present ranch and there established his home, later selling a portion of his original holdings, retaining, however, for his personal use forty acres of choice, rich agricultural land.

In the year 1853 Mr. Lewman was united in marriage to Miss Celia Smith, who came to Oregon from Michigan in 1852. To them four children were born, as follows: William, now a resident of Grants Pass, this state; Charles, living at Chico, California; George, of Trinity county, California; and Anna, the wife of George Glass, of Oakland, California. The mother of this family passed away in 1860. In 1875 Mr. Lewman was again married, his second union being with Miss Isabelle Meek, a daughter of George Meek and a cousin of Joe Meek. To them were born eight children, as follows: Richard, who makes his home at Roseburg; John, deceased; Thomas, still living at home; Everett, a prosperous ranchman in the Applegate valley; Margaret, now the wife of William Ash, also a ranchman in the Applegate valley; Alice, the wife of Charles Hardman, of Wenatchee, Washington; Ora, the wife of Roy Powers, residing at Wilderville, Washington; and Edith, who has passed away. The mother of this family died on December 30, 1897.

Mr. Lewman is affiliated with the democratic party and served for a number of years as postmaster of Applegate in the early days. He is one of the well known early pioneers of Jackson county and during his active business career he has been successful in his ventures and, all his natural powers being still unimpaired, he is actively engaged in his business affairs, to which he devotes his undivided attention. He is universally respected by his associates and always identified with the interests relating directly to the advancement of the people in the valley and throughout the county and to the industrial development of the country.

DR. WARREN L. CAMERON is one of the well known and highly educated physicians of Jackson county, his home at present being maintained in the Applegate valley and located on Big Applegate creek. He was born in Jackson county, in the house in which he now resides, on March 7, 1879, his parents being Robert J. and Esther J. (LeFever) Cameron, who were natives of New York and Virginia respectively. They were married in Iowa, to which state they had removed with their respective parents when they were children. Robert J. Cameron emigrated to Oregon in 1852, making the long journey by water by way of Cape Horn. Ten years later he returned to Iowa, at which time he was married and immediately thereafter crossed the plains with ox teams and on reaching this state located the family home on Applegate creek. He afterward largely increased his holdings by the purchase of adjoining lands until at the time of his death, which occurred May 6, 1910, his estate in real property consisted of five hundred acres of excellent farm and range land. His wife, still surviving him, has her residence in the city of Medford. The first hydraulic mining undertaken in this state was done on the home ranch of Mr. Cameron by a Chinese company which had purchased from him forty acres of suitable placer ground.

Warren L. Cameron was reared in his father's home and acquired his early education in the public schools of Medford, being graduated from the high school of that place with the class of 1896. He then entered the University of Illinois for a short preliminary course of study and in the fall of 1896 became a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Chicago, being graduated from that institution with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1901. He later pursued a post-graduate course in the Bellevue Hospital of New York during the years 1905 and 1906. After obtaining his degree he spent a few months in the city of Chicago and then made his first location in Leeds, North Dakota. Here he remained for one year, after which he returned for a brief visit to his home in Medford. Subsequently, going to Pomona, California, he pursued a post-graduate course for one year and then again returned to Medford. In 1910 he took up the study of a special course in medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Chicago and in the year 1911 returned to his home ranch on Big Applegate creek for rest and recuperation.

In Chicago, on the 25th of April, 1901, Dr. Cameron was united in marriage to Miss Katherine Vail of that city, by whom he has one child, Lloyd V. Fraternally he is identified with the following organizations: Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E.; Medford Lodge, No. 103, A. F. & A. M.; and the Royal Arch Masons, of Jacksonville. Dr. Cameron has very materially contributed to the well-being of Jackson county, bringing into service in the practice of his profession a mind thoroughly skilled in the delicate scientific field of surgery and general medicine and devoting his entire time exclusively to the service of the people in the practice of his profession. To him belongs the credit of having established the first hospital in the city of Medford, to which institution he devoted his energies and skill, assuring its complete success, until failing health compelled rest and retirement from active practice. He is universally respected throughout his county and regarded in every sense as a public benefactor in the community in which he was born and where he still maintains his home.

LOUIS W. GIBSON has for many years been one of the enterprising agriculturists of Josephine county, where he is engaged in the cultivation of his farm of forty acres located near Merlin. He was born in Lane county, this state, June 23, 1861, and is a son of L. D. and Sarah (Crow) Gibson, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Wisconsin. The father emigrated to Oregon in 1849 and settled in Lane county, where he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Crow. To them fifteen children were born, thirteen of whom are living. The father continued to reside in Lane county until the time of his death, which occurred in June, 1911. The mother is still living and resides upon the old homestead.

Louis W. Gibson was reared in his parents' home and educated in the public schools in the district in which he lived. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-three years of age and at that time he moved to Josephine county, where he purchased a ranch of forty acres, upon which he has since continued to reside. He is the owner of ten choice and valuable residence lots in Merlin.

Mr. Gibson was united in marriage in 1889 to Mrs. Ellen (Houser) Bland, who is the widow of John Bland and a native of Michigan. To Mr. and Mrs. Gibson four children, all of whom live at home, have been born: Barak D.; Alean; and Dow and Bee, twins. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are loyal and active members of the Baptist church of Merlin. Mr. Gibson is possessed of integrity, is highly respected for his upright character and well known because of his progressive activities in business.

HUNDLEY SEVIER MALONEY who is serving for the second term as county recorder of Yamhill county, making his home in McMinnville, was born in Tennessee, February 28, 1849. His father, W. C. Maloney, was also a native of that state. He died January 3, 1882, when about sixty-nine years of age, his birth having occurred in 1813. He had devoted his life to farming and surveying. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Louisa C. Cureton, was born in Tennessee, and has also passed away. H. S. Maloney is the only survivor of their family of ten children, although eight reached maturity. Of these H. D. Maloney who served four years during the Civil war under the confederate General Wheeler, died in Tennessee, leaving five children. Sallie became the wife of J. P. Johnson, and died leaving a son in Tennessee. Thomas, who served two years as color bearer of the Eleventh Tennessee Union Cavalry, is survived by a daughter living in Ogden, Utah. Nannie became the wife of J. H. Herring, and at her death left a son who is now county surveyor of Yamhill county. John A. died leaving three children, two of whom are in Tennessee, while one is in Portland, Oregon.

Hundley Sevier Maloney pursued his education in the common schools of his native state, and on leaving home joined the United States army, becoming a member of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry, and thus aided in the defense of the Union during the dark days of the Civil war. In his first engagement, when but fifteen years of age, he was on the picket line when attacked by the command to which his Confederate brother belonged. He started with Sherman on his famous march to the sea but with his command was sent back to his native state to take part in the border warfare there. He served for nineteen months and was then honorably discharged, but for three years was on active duty for the government commanding a company of United States Regulars during the reconstruction period in the south. When mustered out of the army he was holding the rank of lieutenant, his valor and loyalty during the war having won him promotion. He still maintains pleasant relations with his old army comrades through his membership in Custer Post, No. 9, of McMinnville. His title as captain comes to him as captain of a cavalry company of the Oregon State Militia.

After three years of service in the regular army Mr. Maloney continued his education, for he was but a boy when he entered the service. He attended school for a time at Greenville, Tennessee, becoming a student in Tusculum College, and in 1873 he removed to the northwest, settling first in Linn county, Oregon. He afterward went to eastern Oregon, where he devoted three years to farming and also to teaching. He then returned to Linn county where he taught school for a time, and in 1877 removed to Yamhill county where he engaged in farming and surveying. In 1880 he was elected county surveyor and continued to follow that profession, either as county surveyor, or as deputy, until elected to the office of county recorder in 1908. During the session of 1892-93 he represented Yamhill county in the Oregon legislature. In 1910 he was reelected county recorder and is still filling that position, making an excellent record as county official.

Mr. Maloney was married in Tennessee to Miss Laura F. Hale, June 12, 1870, but his wife died near Newmarket, Alabama, November 2, 1872, before his removal to Oregon. After coming to this state in 1873, he wedded Miss Mollie F. Metzgar, who is now deceased. They were parents of seven children: Lillie Scott; Louise, the wife of H. M. Hoskins, postmaster of McMinnville; Hugh, John T., Carl M. and H. Ray, all at home; and Nannie, the wife of Charles P. Nelson, of Portland. The mother died in 1893 and in 1896 Mr. Maloney married Miss Lucy Scruggs. The children of this marriage are Flora, Emma, Frank, Lee, Alice and Dorothy A.

Mr. Maloney has held membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, since March, 1873, and is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic, and has many friends in those organizations. His acquaintance in Yamhill county is a wide one and wherever he is known he is held in high regard.

DR. W. C. HAWK, M. D., a prominent and successful medical practitioner of Bay City, has erected and conducts a hospital and is also engaged in the drug business as a member of the firm of Hawk & Miller. His birth occurred near Cumberland Gap, Virginia, on the 29th of November, 1853, his parents being A. M. and Harrietta (Smith) Hawk, who were natives of Virginia and Ohio respectively. The father, whose natal year was 1814, was a carpenter by trade, came to Oregon in 1857 and passed away three years later. The mother, who was born in the year 1820, still survives and makes her home in Kansas. Unto them were born ten children, four of whom are yet living, as follows: Jennie, the wife of W. B. Richardson, of Kingman, Kansas; W. C., of this review; Elizabeth, the wife of Mack Henderson, of Morrisonville, Illinois; and A. Frank Hawk, who is a resident of Longbeach, California.

Dr. W. C. Hawk obtained his early education in the common schools of Indianapolis, Indiana, and was graduated from the high school with the class of 1874. Having determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Keokuk, Iowa, and was graduated therefrom in 1881. The year 1884 witnessed his graduation from Rush Medical College of Chicago. He had virtually begun practicing the profession, however, when but nineteen years of age and has been continuously engaged in the practice of medicine and also in the drug business since his youth. For one term, in 1886, he attended the St. Louis Medical College. He first practiced at Morrisonville, Illinois, and later continued his professional labors at Fair Weather, Illinois, there attending lectures while practicing and being known as the "boy doctor." In 1886 he came west to Aberdeen, Washington, and the same year made his way to Portland. Thence he removed to Jefferson, Oregon, where he opened an office and practiced his profession for twenty years. In 1907 he took up his abode at Bay City, Oregon, where he has remained to the present time. He has built and is conducting a hospital and also owns and operates a drug establishment under the firm name of Hawk & Miller. His labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success and his practice has steadily grown in volume and importance as he has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems which continually confront the physician in his efforts to restore health and prolong life. He has a fourth interest in the Rockaway Beach Company and likewise owns three hundred and sixty acres of land in the Sumpter valley of Oregon.

In 1876, at Berry, Illinois, Dr. Hawk was united in marriage to Miss Emma D. McClain, a daughter of J. G. and Eliza (Hinch) McClain. The father, who was a merchant, is now deceased. Dr. and Mrs. Hawk have one daughter, Edith B., who is the wife of B. H. Miller, an editor.

In his political views Dr. Hawk is a staunch republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. He has served as coroner of Tillamook county for a number of years and is also a member of the port commission of Bay City. In religious faith he is a Presbyterian, while fraternally he is identified with the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Prompted in all that he does by laudable ambition and broad humanitarian principles, as a member of the medical fraternity he has attained high rank among those whose skill is uniformly acknowledged, while his prosperity is recognized as the merited reward of his labor.

W. F. KLECKER, a leading merchant of Stayton, was born in Pierce county, Wisconsin, November 18, 1873, the son of Bernard and Justina (Armbruster) Klecker. The father, a native of Austria, came to the United States at the age of twenty-one, locating in Wisconsin, where he remained until 1897, when he came to Oregon, settling at Sublimity, and in 1907 removing to Stayton, where he still resides. In early life he was a mason by trade but followed the occupation of farming while in Wisconsin and Oregon. He deserves to be called a self-made man for when he reached the United States he was penniless, and by energy and perseverance he has worked his way along until he now owns two hundred and five acres of excellent land and is able to live retired, surrounded by plenty. The mother is a native of Pennsylvania, was married in Wisconsin and is still living. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom W. F., of this review, is the eldest. The others are: Celia, the wife of Joseph Zuber, residing near Stayton; Theresa, the wife of John Kemmerer, of Wisconsin; Anna, of Portland; Elizabeth, of Los Angeles, California; Josephine, the wife of Ben Kortzen, of Portland, Oregon; Benjamin, a resident of Sublimity, Oregon; Frank, who resides with his brother, Benjamin in Sublimity; Joseph, of Stayton; Justina, the wife of Martin Berg, of Stayton; Edmund, deceased; and Leo, at home.

W. F. Klecker was educated in the common schools of Wisconsin and remained at home until he was twenty-three years of age, after which he traveled for some time, in the meantime working in Portland for a half-year. Subsequently he engaged in the mercantile business in Stayton under the firm name of Kerber & Klecker but after three and one-half years he bought the Kerber stock and now has developed the business until he owns a well arranged, completely stocked store, covering a floor space of over five thousand square feet, and it is by far the largest department store in Stayton. He also owns a store building on Third street.

On the 18th of November, 1902, Mr. Klecker was united in marriage to Miss Mary Susbauer, a native of Oregon, and they have become the parents of two children, Edmond and Alice, both at home. In his political views Mr. Klecker is an earnest democrat and for two years has served as a member of the town council. Fraternally he is identified with the Elks at Albany and both he and his wife are members of the Catholic church. He is an energetic and conscientious business man whose prosperity has been well merited.

R. C. DEMENT. One of the leading and representative agriculturists of Coos county is R. C. Dement, who is engaged in the operation of three thousand, nine hundred and eighty acres of land near Myrtle Point, on which he is engaged in stock-raising and general agriculture. His early life was intimately connected with the pioneer settlement of Oregon, his father having been one of the earliest agriculturists in that state. He early became acquainted with the various economic phases of activity in that state as they were molded by the peculiar conditions of life. Mr. Dement was born in Ohio in 1847, and is a son of S. M. and Caroline (Spencer) Dement. Both of his parents were born in Ohio and educated and reared in that state. They came to Oregon in 1852 and did not make a permanent settlement for some time. S. M. Dement was a blacksmith by trade and followed his occupation for one winter in Corvallis. He then moved to Jackson county and served as a home guard during the Indian war which broke out at that time. His residence in Coos county began in 1853 in which year he moved to Empire city and was active in various phases of town life for one year. He then determined to engage in agriculture, being firmly convinced that the future of the state of Oregon lay along this line of activity. He took up a donation claim on the south fork of the Coquille river and established his family on three hundred and twenty acres of land. He moved upon his holdings in 1855 but the Indians were at that time in a state of insurrection and their many depredations caused the isolated farm life to be extremely dangerous and the family was compelled to move back into Empire city for a year, in which time the Indians were removed to the reservation. Mr. Dement and his family then returned to the donation claim and here the father operated the land and cultivated the soil until his death. He was one of the valued and representative citizens of Coos county during his life and his services were one of the great individual forces in its development. He was one of its earliest pioneers, and in the days of his first settlement when he was traveling about the state looking for the most suitable place to establish his residence he was often obliged to pack upon his back provisions for a forty-mile journey. There were no roads in the district and in his travels he was compelled to employ either horses or oxen. When he established his stock farm he bought his first cows two hundred and twenty miles from home and drove them back himself over the unimproved Oregon country. At the time of his death he had made his farm a model and highly improved property and his activities are still remembered in Coos county. He died in 1886 at the age of sixty-three years. He was twice married. His first union was with Miss Caroline Spencer by whom he had three children of whom R. C. Dement, the subject of this sketch, is the only one now living. Of the other two children born to his first union one died in infancy and the other passed away at the age of eleven years. S. M. Dement's second marriage occurred in 1866 when he wedded Miss Louisa Lovett of Ohio. They became the parents of six children: one child who died in infancy; W. T., who now resides upon his father's original donation claim; George, who passed away at the age of eleven years; Clay, now farming in Douglas county; Max, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; and Caroline B., who married J. C. Moomaw of Hubbard, Oregon.

R. C. Dement, although not a native son of Oregon has been a resident of this state since he was five years of age. He came with his parents in 1852 and has passed practically all the active years of his life in stock farming. He was educated in the public schools of Coos county but his studies were limited and pursued at irregular intervals. He definitely laid aside his books at the age of twenty-one and entered the employ of his father, working by the month at the various labors incident to the operation of a large and constantly developing farm. Shortly after attaining his majority he took up a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres. He subsequently acquired one hundred and sixty acres by a homestead grant and after his marriage in 1874 he settled upon this farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits for eight years. At the expiration of that period he moved to the south fork of the Coquille river where he carried on farming on a more extensive scale for seven years. He bought land near Norway, Coos county, known as the Saunders donation claim and was successful in its operation for seven years. He always regarded farming and stock-raising however, as a life work and never had any definite idea of entirely severing his connection with this occupation. In 1898 he bought seventy-eight acres of land near Myrtle Point, Oregon, which he now owns and operates. This land lies partly within the limits of Myrtle Point. His original purchase of land in this section was seventy-eight acres. He has been constantly adding to his holdings as opportunity offered. He is a discriminating judge of land values and the three thousand, nine hundred and eighty acres of which he is now the proprietor represents some of the most fertile and productive soil in the state of Oregon. His stock farming has been practical and has, therefore, been rewarded with success. He carries on his agriculture along general lines but specializes to some extent in dairying. He owns two dairy ranches equipped with modern and sanitary facilities. Mr. Dement is a staunch believer in the future agricultural greatness of the state of Oregon. Wherever he can buy farm property he invests his money and is now the owner of several fertile ranches throughout the state. Mr. Dement's extensive holdings are near Myrtle Point and upon the Coquille river and his agriculture has brought him a gratifying degree of success.

In 1874 Mr. Dement was united in marriage to Miss Lucy A. Norris, whose birth occurred in the Willamette valley, Oregon. Her mother was a direct descendant of the great frontiersman, Daniel Boone, and with her husband was one of the pioneer settlers in Oregon. Mrs. Dement's parents crossed the plains in 1846 and spent the remainder of their lives in Oregon. They died in Coos county and are buried side by side near Fairview. To Mr. and Mrs. Dement have been born nine children, eight of whom are living: Nellie, a graduate of the Normal school of Ashland, Oregon, and now a teacher at Klamath Falls; Eunice, the wife of L. A. Braden of Hubbard, Oregon; Ray B., who operates a stock ranch of his father's in Coos and Curry counties; Winifred, the wife of Dr. White, a practicing physician of Klamath Falls, Oregon; Lester T. and Ellis S., twins, the former married and a resident of Myrtle Point, and the latter in the stock business with his brother in Coos county; Clara, who lives at home; Harry, now attending school in Coos county; and one child, Lorain, who passed away at the age of eight years.

Politically Mr. Dement gives his allegiance to the republican party and has served his county and city in various capacities. He has never sought office but is always willing to do his duty when elected in a public capacity. He brings to his pursuits an intelligent, open and liberal mind and a keen interest in modern scientific developments. In the final analysis the farm is the basis of prosperity in America. It is the very beginning of the intricate operations which furnish men with food. Mr. Dement's agricultural success has been obtained by judicious and intelligent labor among the familiar conditions and his career has influenced the resources of his section and has developed the science of agriculture.

JAMES WILLIAM JORY, a prominent and successful farmer and stockman of Klamath county, is an extensive landowner, his holdings embracing nine hundred and twenty acres. His birth occurred near Springfield, Illinois, on the 18th of March, 1858, his parents being Henry and Martha Jane (Van Pelt) Jory, the former a native of Cornwall, England, and the latter of this country. In the fall of 1863 the family left Illinois and crossed the plains with teams to Marysville, California, where Henry Jory passed away in 1886, having for several years survived his wife. He was a wagon-maker by trade but devoted his attention to farming in this part of the country and also conducted a store at Marysville for a number of years. Our subject was the fourth in order of birth in a family of nine children, seven of whom still survive.

James William Jory, who was a little lad of five years when he accompanied his parents on their journey to the far west, lived in the vicinity of Marysville until he came to Oregon in the spring of 1886. In the fall of the following year he located permanently in Klamath county, having in 1886, preempted a quarter section of land and homesteaded a tract of similar size. By purchase he has augmented his holdings until at the present time he owns nine hundred and twenty acres of land. He has two hundred and seventy-three acres under irrigation and devotes his attention to the pursuits of general farming and stock-raising, in which he has met with gratifying and well merited success. He was the second man to bring a herd of cattle into Klamath county. In 1908 and 1911 he was awarded contracts by the United States government for irrigation work and during the years 1911 and 1912 worked on the Lost river diversion channel. From Ager, California, he hauled the first load of freight that went into the plant of the Electric Light & Power Company at Klamath Falls, Oregon. He has been a freighter and has also cleared considerable land for others as well as for himself. His efforts have contributed in substantial measure to the work of development and improvement here and he is well entitled to a foremost place among the prosperous agriculturists and representative citizens of the Sunset state.

In politics Mr. Jory is a democrat, believing firmly in the principles of that party. The cause of education has ever found in him a staunch champion and, with the exception of two or three terms, he served continuously as school clerk of district No. 25, from 1888 until 1902. During one season he acted in the capacity of road overseer. He is an enterprising and public-spirited man whose record as a public official, as a business man and a private citizen has been so honorable that he has gained the confidence and goodwill of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

H. H. McINTOSH is one of the enterprising and highly respected citizens of Golden, Oregon, where he is engaged in the operation of a general merchandising store. He was born in Josephine county, September 3, 1889, and is a son of H. C. and Myra McIntosh. The parents were natives of Missouri and removed to Oregon in the early '80s, settling at Golden, in Josephine county, where they still maintain their residence. In their family were fourteen children, of whom nine are living.

H. H. McIntosh was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years of age and at that time he established himself in the general merchandising business at Golden. He has met with well deserved success in his undertaking and his store is one of the most popular and best known establishments of its kind in this part of Josephine county.

On April 1, 1911, Mr. McIntosh was united in marriage to Miss Bethel Ruble, a native of Josephine county, this state, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Ruble, residents of Lane county. Mr. McIntosh is affiliated with the democratic party but has never sought political preferment. He is known among his acquaintances as a man of strict integrity in all his transactions and is highly esteemed for his uprightness of character. He is always to be relied upon to assist in the promotion of any measure of public interest.

THOMAS HANCOCK. Everything stirring, forceful, powerful and vitally efficient contained in the word pioneer finds its exemplification in the life and career of Thomas Hancock. He has been a power in constructive development and evolution. He has been an efficient factor in its upbuilding, is an influence in its present greatness and is today one of the most powerful individual forces in the agricultural expansion of Oregon. He was born in Australia, December 16, 1842, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Dixon) Hancock, both natives of Lancashire, England, where they were reared and married. Immediately after their marriage the parents went to Australia and resided in that country for nine years. Early in 1850 they sailed for the United States, landing in San Francisco on July 4. Here the father worked at various occupations until the following fall, at which time he came north to Oregon, making the journey by schooner to Scottsburg, where he landed on December 16, 1850. From Scottsburg he came by river to Elkton and located a donation claim two miles east of the town which he and his wife filed upon and where they settled. His holdings comprised six hundred and forty acres of unimproved land and the cultivation of the soil ranks him among the developing forces in the state. His wife was the third white woman to settle on the Umpqua river. In 1880 William Hancock removed to San Diego, California, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1900, within one week of his eightieth birthday. His wife survived him for three years and died in March, 1903.

Thomas Hancock was reared at home and did not have one day's schooling in his whole life. He learned agriculture through personal experience and hard work and remained upon his father's farm until 1861. In that year he offered his services to the Federal government but was refused on account of age. In 1865, however, upon the president's call for six hundred thousand men, he responded immediately and was mustered into Company K, First Oregon Volunteer Infantry, and served for fourteen months and twelve days, his regiment doing service on the plains in suppressing Indian uprisings. They were held for a year after the close of the war on account of the hostile attitude of the Indians and Mr. Hancock received an honorable discharge June 25, 1866. While in the service one of his comrades, a Frenchman, gave him his first lessons in reading and writing. These were, however, in the French language and upon the death of his companion Mr. Hancock's schooling stopped. He later picked up reading and writing in his own tongue but beyond this had no education whatever. Mr. Hancock has been identified with agricultural pursuits since he was old enough to hold a plow or drive an ox team. When the war was over he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres five miles east of Elkton on the Drain road where he resided, engaged in tilling the soil and developing the land, until 1908, when he removed to Elkton where he is now living retired. His agricultural work has been a force in state expansion. He dates his residence in Oregon from the earliest days of its settlement and is prominent among the oldest pioneers. He keeps abreast of the times and as agriculture progressed as a science he advanced with it. His place was at the time of his retirement highly improved and cultivated and was one of the most attractive properties in Douglas county. He has been an aggressive and persistent hunter during his active life and it is said that he has killed more panthers and bears than any other man in the state of Oregon.

On June 13, 1886, Mr. Hancock was united in marriage to Mrs. Kiersta (Pearson) Johnson, a native of Sweden, and a daughter of Peter and Nettie Pearson, both natives of Sweden, in which country they died. Mrs. Hancock came to the United States in 1882 when she was thirty-five years of age and settled in Gardiner, Oregon. She was the widow of John Johnson and had two children by her former marriage: Christian, who is a ranchman on his stepfather's farm; and Eda, the wife of A. L. Hancock, who is farming in Douglas county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hancock have been born two children: Oscar, who is engaged in agriculture in Douglas county; and Clara, the wife of James Riley, of Elkton. Mr. Hancock is a republican in his political views. He is a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 63, A. F. & A. M., and was one of the members of the Drain Post, G. A. R., until that organization disbanded. He has wrested his prosperity from unfriendly fortune and has constructed his own success, working in a direct and simple way with the tools at hand and evolving a structure of life which in its simplicity and greatness is worthy of the hands of a master builder.

JOHN THOMAS WILLIAMS resides on a farm of twenty-six acres a mile east of Beaverton but leases the property and is living retired, having accumulated a handsome competence during the years of an active business career. He is well known in financial circles as the vice president of the Bank of Beaverton and also has other interests. His birth occurred in North Andover, Massachusetts, on the 28th of November, 1842, his parents being George H. and Mary (Rogers) Williams, who came of Welsh and English ancestry respectively. The father was born in New Hampshire, while the mother was a native of Massachusetts. Ebenezer Choate, the maternal great-grandfather of our subject, was a sea captain in the East India mercantile service. While on a trip from Africa he became ill and was left at Guadalupe, Spain, where he died and was buried. William Rogers, the maternal grandfather of John T. Williams, was a descendant of Thomas Rogers, who came to this country on the Mayflower. He was a native of Newburyport, Massachusetts, and always maintained his home there. He was part owner and captain of a ship and engaged in bringing sugar and molasses from New Orleans to Liverpool, England. As he was never heard from after embarking on his last sea voyage, it is supposed that he was drowned.

The parents of Mr. Williams of this review were married in Massachusetts in 1836 and there continued to reside throughout the remainder of their lives, the mother passing away at Amesbury in 1848 and the father in 1871. George H. Williams was a wool buyer for a Massachusetts mill, purchasing wool all over the United States. He was twice married and by his first wife had the following children: Georgiana B., the widow of E. Thompson, who passed away in Rhode Island in 1881; Annie, the wife of Elisha Jordan, of Washington county, Oregon; John Thomas, of this review; George Henry, living in Portland, Oregon; and William R., who is a resident of Massachusetts. In October, 1882, the eldest of these children, Mrs. Georgiana Thompson, came to Oregon, making her home in Portland until 1905, since which time she has lived in Washington county. For his second wife George H. Williams chose Miss Mary Locke, by whom he had two children, namely: Samuel Grant, who is a resident of Skamokawa, Washington; and Frank T., deceased.

John Thomas Williams began earning his own livelihood when a youth of twelve, operating a carding machine in a woolen mill at Danielsville, Connecticut, for one year. During the following four years he remained at home and subsequently spent two years in the Pacific Calico Mills. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted for three months' service with the celebrated Sixth Massachusetts Infantry, which was the first regiment out of the state and was commanded by E. F. Jones. After the battle of Bull Run he was honorably discharged in August, 1861, and on the 6th of September following again enlisted, joining the command of A. B. Farr and serving as corporal of Company F, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Infantry, under Captain Thomas A. Anable. Afterward he became veteranized at New Iberia, Louisiana, on the 4th of January, 1864, by reason of reenlistment for three years' service, becoming a member of Company A, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Infantry, on the 24th of January, 1864, and serving under Captain A. Troy until discharged at Savannah, Georgia, on the 26th of August, 1865.

Returning home with a creditable military record, Mr. Williams again entered the calico mill of Lawrence Brothers in Massachusetts, being employed therein for one year, while subsequently he spent three years in a shoe manufacturing establishment of Clarke & Company at Methuen, Massachusetts. On the expiration of that period he came to Oregon, locating at Seio, Linn county, where he worked on his brother-in-law's ranch for six months. Then he began teaming in eastern Oregon, hauling supplies to the mines for one year. At the end of that time he went to Baker City, there conducting a cobbler's shop for six months. He next started for Portland on horseback, reaching that city at the end of three weeks and securing employment in a shoe shop, wherein he remained for ten years. With the assistance of George Himes & Walling, printers, he then embarked in the billposting business, being thus engaged until 1905. Disposing of his interests in that connection, he purchased a farm of twenty-six acres near Beaverton, Washington county, and has since occupied the same, the property being finely improved and under a high state of cultivation. He leases the land, however, and is now living retired in the enjoyment of well earned rest. Mr. Williams is a factor in financial circles as the vice president of the Bank of Beaverton and is likewise one of the stockholders of the Beaverton Brick & Clay Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Williams has been married twice. In 1863, in Massachusetts, he wedded Miss Josephine Houston, by whom he had one daughter, Mary Ella, who is the widow of Allen E. Riley and resides in Washington county, Oregon. On the 25th of December, 1881, Mr. Williams was again married, his second union being with Mrs. Mary J. Minehan, the widow of John Minehan, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brack, both of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Minehan had one daughter, Estella, who obtained a high-school education in Kansas City, Missouri, and is now a resident of Los Angeles, California. Mrs. Mary J. Williams was called to her final rest in 1886, leaving two other daughters, Hazel Anna, who was born on the 20th of December, 1882, is a high-school graduate and also pursued a course of study in the Annie Wright Seminary of Tacoma, Washington. She likewise has an excellent musical education and is now the wife of John F. Malarkey, of Portland, Oregon. Alfreda, born May 21, 1884, was educated at St. Mary's Academy and is the wife of James M. Allen, of Beaverton, Oregon.

In his political views Mr. Williams is a republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of the party which was the defense of the Union during the dark days of the Civil war. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Unitarian Society of Portland. He is spending the evening of life in honorable retirement, happy in the friendship and esteem of all who know him.

J. W. SMITH, who since the winter of 1907 has resided in Klamath county, Oregon, is now the owner of one hundred and twenty acres five miles south of Klamath Falls. He was born at Chatham, Ontario, Canada, December 8, 1836, and is a son of Sol and Elizabeth (Wood) Smith, the former a native of Ontario and the latter of New York. In 1844 the father went to the lead mines of Galena, Illinois, and the mother arrived there the following year. They spent six years in that locality and later went to Denver, Colorado. The father died in 1861, at the age of sixty years, and the mother passed away at Fort Scott, Kansas, about 1882, at the age of eighty-two years. In their family were ten children, five sons and five daughters.

J. W. Smith spent his youthful days in his parents' home and developed habits of industry and enterprise which have proven of value to him in the conduct of his business affairs in later years. In April, 1861, he enlisted for service in the Civil war at the first call for seventy-five thousand troops, joining Company K of the First Iowa Infantry at Mount Vernon, Iowa. He served for five months and reenlisted in October, 1863, as a member of Company A, Thirtieth Iowa Infantry, with which he served until August, 1865. He was with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign and on the march to the sea, and he afterward participated in the grand review where the victorious army marched through the streets of Washington and under the banner that, hanging across Pennsylvania avenue, was emblazoned with the words: "The only debt which the country owes that she cannot pay is the debt that she owes to her soldiers." Mr. Smith was one of the twenty of his company that placed the colors on the state house of South Carolina at the surrender of Raleigh. Throughout his connection with the army he was with his company on active duty and made a most creditable military record.

When the war was over he went to Kansas, where he resided until 1893, engaged in farming and carpentering. He next located in Oklahoma and in the rush there secured a town lot at Pawnee and helped build that city. In 1900 he went from Oklahoma to Colorado, where he worked as a laborer and as a contractor for the construction of electric light and telephone lines. In the winter of 1907 he came to Klamath county, Oregon, and purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land five miles south of Klamath Falls. He is devoting his energies to the development of his place and has already set out an orchard of five hundred trees.

Mr. Smith was married in Iowa, in the fall of 1861, to Miss Malinda Aramith, who was born in that state and passed away in Adams, Colorado, in 1901. Unto this union were born seven children but two passed away in infancy. Another, Libby, died at the age of six years, while the surviving members are: Sherman, a resident of Strawberry valley, Utah; Lilly, the wife of E. S. Barnes, of Merrill, Klamath county; B. H., living in Calida, Colorado; and John C., whose home is near Mexico City, Mexico. Mr. Smith has been a lifelong republican. He voted twice for Lincoln for the presidency but has never sought office for himself. He was, however, street commissioner at Fort Scott, Kansas. Fraternally he is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In the former connection he keeps in close touch with his old army comrades and throughout his life in matters of citizenship he manifests the same loyalty to his country that he displayed when he followed the old flag on southern battlefields.

DR. HENRY O. WILLIAMS, who retired from the active practice of his profession in 1899, when he removed to his seven hundred and fifty acre ranch in Josephine county, was for many years a successful physician of Washington, where he lived from 1879 to 1899. He was born in Kentucky, February 23, 1851, a son of Isador and Velina A. (Stearns) Williams, the father a native of Ohio and the mother of Vermont. The parents crossed the plains in 1853 with ox teams to Oregon and settled in Jackson county, where the father took up a donation claim, residing upon it until 1859. He then removed to East Portland and later settled in Idaho. After remaining in that state for a time he returned to Oregon where both parents passed away. In their family were five children, two of whom survive.

Dr. Henry O. Williams started out in active life at the age of seventeen years, first being employed at riding the range. He had acquired, however, a good academic education and during his spare time studied, with the result that in early manhood he was competent to act as a public instructor, and, taking up teaching, continued in that profession for about eight years. He then took a course in the medical department of Willamette University and in 1879 commenced practicing his profession, remaining thus employed for twenty years. In 1889 he purchased the ranch upon which he is living and in 1899 took up his residence there, having since made it his home. It is a splendid agricultural property of seven hundred and fifty acres, a large portion of which is under cultivation. He engages successfully in general farming.

Dr. Williams was married in 1888 to Miss Elizabeth Major, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Joseph A. and Sarah J. (Cooper) Major, both natives of that state, where they passed their entire lives. To Dr. and Mrs. Williams have been born five children, Percy A., Inez A., Jacques O., Jean E. and Nina. Dr. Williams is a republican and, being prominent is serving as a central committeeman of his precinct. Mrs. Williams is an active member of the Presbyterian church, giving material aid to that organization and also assisting by her influence to make it effective for good in the community. Dr. Williams is one of the well known, highly respected and valuable men of his section of the state, where he has led an active life for many years.

PETER W. CARIS, born in France, left his native land with his parents when a small boy and emigrated to the new world, landing in New York. He went to Ohio, taught school for some years, and settled in Jackson county, Oregon, in 1865. He located near Murphy where he bought a farm which he has improved and has since lived upon, being now a well known and respected citizen of the community where he has lived for nearly fifty years. He was born in France, January 6, 1842, a son of Peter and Mary (Styard) Caris, both natives of that country. The family becoming convinced that the new world offered superior advantages to those held out by the old country, embarked for America when the subject of this review was a small boy. Landing in New York they went to Ohio and lived in that state until their deaths.

Receiving a good common-school education and later supplementing that with a course in the Vermilion Institute in Ohio, Peter W. Caris began teaching school after attaining his twenty-first year which was subsequent to the death of his parents. His first work as an educator was in Ohio, where he taught for a considerable period, and later he followed that profession in Oregon, whither he came in 1865. At an early date he bought a farm comprising one hundred and sixty acres, near Murphy which is the home farm and eighty acres in Josephine county. He made some necessary improvements, cultivated it and has made it his home since. Peter W. Caris enlisted for service in the Civil war and for two years followed the Union flag with Company G, Twenty-first Ohio Infantry Regiment.

Mr. Caris was married in 1868 to Miss Applegate and to their union were born five children, of whom three are living, Alice, Rolston and Eugene. Olive passed away in 1869, and Fanny in 1870. Mr. Caris is a republican and although not active in politics gives commendable attention to public questions. Having lived in Oregon for nearly half a century he has witnessed the marvelous development of this state, has seen it wrested from the grasp of the wilderness and made to blossom as the rose of Sharon. Being by inclination a literary man he has not followed the strenuous farm life to the same extent which has characterized so many westerners but he has developed a valuable piece of agricultural property. He is widely known in his community where he is held in high esteem by his large number of friends and acquaintances and is greatly respected by all who know him.

CHARLES A. METLIN is one of the energetic and enterprising business men of Marshfield where he is engaged in the successful conduct of one of Marshfield's well appointed hotels. He was born in Summit county Ohio, in 1858, and he is a son of James A. and Julia (Wise) Metlin, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. As young people they emigrated to Ohio and in that state celebrated their wedding, and there the mother passed away in 1860, when the subject of this review was a child of two years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. James A. Metlin eight children were born, of whom two only are living: Thomas F. of Tallmadge, Ohio, and Charles A., the subject of this review. Four members of the family died in Ohio, and one sister in Kansas and another in Coquille, Oregon. In 1874 the father emigrated to California and there settled on one hundred and sixty acres of land in Butte county where he continued to live for five years. He then disposed of that property and moved to Oregon, settling in Polk county where he was engaged in farming for five years after which he removed to Coos county and settled on a rented farm near Fairview. He later filed upon a homestead of timber land and some time later removed to Cunningham creek near Coquille where he continued to live until the time of his death which occurred in 1897. He was twice married, his second wife passing to her reward in 1907.

Charles A. Metlin was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Ohio. In 1874 he emigrated with his father to California and later settled in Polk county near Salem, at which place he was jointly engaged with his father in agricultural pursuits for five years. He then moved to Coos county, settling near Fairview on a rented farm and while engaged in the operation of that property he took up a homestead and also a timber claim upon which at different times he was engaged in the development of his homestead for a number of years and in 1887 he secured a contract from the government for four years to deliver the United States mail in the district in which he lived. At the end of the four years above cited he removed to Coos bay and there for three years was engaged in the livery business, after which time he established an express business in Marshfield to which he gave his attention for one year and then sold out his interest there and moved to Empire city where he opened a livery business, securing at the same time a contract from the government for the delivery of United States mail in that portion of the county. He continued in that business for seven years after which he returned to Marshfield and there was engaged in mining in the Graham Coal Mine, of which he was the outside superintendent for two and one-half years. He then accepted a position in the Marshfield Water Company to which he devoted himself for one year. At the expiration of that time he was engaged in various business enterprises for a number of years. In 1910 he purchased the Coos Hotel of Marshfield, and as proprietor of this hotel has since given his attention to its operation. He is the owner of a very fine home in Marshfield and also owns property near North Bend, Oregon. He also is the owner of valuable property in Richmond, California. He has some time since disposed of his timber land.

Mr. Metlin was united in marriage in 1891, to Miss Margaret McKnight, a native of Douglas county, Oregon, where her birth occurred in 1864. She is the daughter of William and Mary (Wright) McKnight, of whom a more extended review is given in another part of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Metlin two children have been born: Elton C., born April 11, 1892, who has completed his education and resides at home; and Mary M., who was born in 1900 and is a pupil in the public school. Mr. Metlin is a loyal adherent of the democratic party, but has never been a candidate for public office. He and his children are members of the Christian church and Mrs. Metlin is a member of the Episcopal church.

Charles A. Metlin is one of the highly respected and useful citizens of Coos county. His integrity of character is one of the moral forces which is always exerted to advance and improve the condition of the people in his county and state.

JAMES C. HERVEY, the owner of an excellent ranch comprising one hundred and fifty-six acres in Coos county, has been extensively engaged in dairying since 1906 and prior to that time devoted his attention principally to the raising of grain. His birth occurred in Greene county, Tennessee, on the 12th of January, 1847, his parents being Thomas and Catherine (Wems) Hervey, who were natives of South Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. The father, an agriculturist by occupation, removed from the Big Bend state to Missouri and in 1864 crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, locating first near Albany, where he lived on rented land for one year. On the expiration of that period he took up his abode in Douglas county, where his wife passed away and the family circle was broken, the sons starting out in life for themselves. Thomas Hervey operated a rented farm in Douglas county for one year. His demise occurred at the home of his son, Thomas W., when he had attained the age of eighty-four years. Unto him and his wife were born nine children, as follows: James C., of this review; two who died in infancy; William and John R., both of whom are deceased; Thomas W., who is a farmer residing near Roseburg, Douglas county, Oregon; Abraham, an agriculturist of Josephine county, this state; Temperance, the widow of John B. Morgan, and a resident of the state of Washington; and Mary, who is the widow of Gottlieb Mehl and makes her home at Coquille, Oregon.

James C. Hervey assisted his father in the operation of the home farm until twenty-two years of age, when his mother died and he left the parental roof, taking charge of a large ranch on a salary. He worked for different people at various occupations for several years. In 1872 he came to Coos county and took up a preemption and homestead claim at what is now Bridge, Oregon, residing there for twelve years, during which time he was married and his children were born. In 1886 he removed to Coquille, Oregon, but at the end of a year came to his present homestead of one hundred and fifty-six acres. Though the land was practically covered with timber at the time it came into his possession, sixty acres thereof are now under cultivation. Mr. Hervey and his sons dug out the stumps and cleared the land, and the ranch is now one of the finest in the locality, the improvements thereon including a commodious and attractive residence and substantial barns. The place was devoted principally to the raising of grain until 1906, when Mr. Hervey and his sons turned their attention to dairying and have since been engaged in this business on an extensive scale. He formerly raised hogs and cattle for the market and for three years was engaged in the logging business, having purchased one hundred and sixty acres of timber land, of which he still owns eighty acres. His undertakings have been attended with success and he has long been numbered among the substantial and representative citizens of his county.

On the 20th of December, 1876, at Rural, Oregon, Mr. Hervey was united in marriage to Miss Martha Hayes, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of John and Susan (Wagner) Hayes. The former passed away on the 10th of June, 1905, but the latter still survives and makes her home at Rural, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes were the parents of fifteen children, of whom ten survive. The family record is as follows: James, Henry, Joseph M., John, Jacob and Thomas, all residing in Coos county; Peter W., who owns one hundred and sixty acres of land near Rural, Oregon, his mother living with him; Martha, the deceased wife of our subject; Dolly, the deceased wife of Calvin Gant, of Rural; Julia, the wife of Benjamin Gant, of Gravel Ford, Oregon; Lura, the wife of Calvin Gant; Mary, the wife of Leonard Hartly, of Coos county; Eva, deceased; one who died in infancy; and Margaret, who passed away in Tennessee.

Mr. and Mrs. Hervey became the parents of three children. Lafayette, who was born on the 10th of September, 1877, obtained his early education in the district schools of Coos county and was later graduated from a business college in San Francisco. He is now living near Doyle, California, where he has taken up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. William H., whose birth occurred on the 20th of May, 1881, acquired his education in the district schools of Coos county and in the high school at Gravel Ford, Oregon. He wedded Miss Mary Hall, a native of Coos county, Oregon, and a daughter of William S. Hall, of Gravel Ford, this state. Mrs. Mary Hervey is one of seven children, the others being as follows: Annie, the wife of Riley Matheny, of Willamette Valley, Oregon; Bertha, who is the wife of F. L. Minard, of Arago, this state; James, of Gravel Ford, Oregon; Lula, the wife of George Morehouse, of Gravel Ford; Thomas, who is still at home with his parents; and Amanda, the wife of Thomas Weekly, of Gravel Ford. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hervey have two children, Ovid and Byron. James H. Hervey, whose birth occurred on the 16th of October, 1882, was educated in the district schools, Gravel Ford Academy and the Coquille high school. He is still single and lives with his father. The wife and mother passed away on the 30th of August, 1911, and is buried in the cemetery at Norway, Oregon, by the side of her father, John Hayes.

In his political views James C. Hervey is liberal, supporting men and measures rather than party and ever placing patriotism above partisanship. The honors and emoluments of office have never had any attraction for him, as his time has been fully occupied in the conduct of his private business interests. His Christianity is not restricted by sect or creed and in his daily life he endeavors to heed the admonition of the Golden Rule. He was formerly identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and at present is identified with the Farmers Union. The period of his residence in the Sunset state covers almost a half century and he is therefore largely familiar with its annals from pioneer times down to the present.

WILLIAM T. MILLER, who at the time of his retirement from active life had attained an enviable position in agricultural circles of Coos county, Oregon, by reason of his long continued and intelligent activity is the owner of a large and efficiently managed farm, was born in Cole county, Missouri, on June 8, 1839. He is a son of Madison and Mary (Hunter) Miller, natives of Tennessee. The parents were married in Missouri and resided in that state for a number of years. In 1852 the father went to California and never returned. The mother remained in Missouri until 1872, when she came to Oregon, landing in Jackson county in October of that year. She married her second husband in this state and subsequently went to Kentucky for a visit and died while there. Her husband returned to Eugene, Oregon, where some time afterward his death occurred. William T. Miller is the eldest of four children born to his parents, the others being: Joseph, who died while he was serving in the army; F. M., of Fishtrap Creek, Oregon; and Eliza, who is deceased.

William T. Miller received his education in the public schools of Missouri but his advantages in this respect were extremely limited, owing to the inadequate school conditions. He remained at home until 1862, in which year he enlisted in Company E, Fifth Missouri Cavalry, under Colonel Albert Sigel, and remained as a member of this regiment until the end of the war. He received his discharge on April 6, 1865. He was present at various important engagements and was never wounded but his health was entirely broken down when he returned home. Following his discharge he engaged in carpentering and contracting and also did general farming in Missouri until 1871, when he came to Oregon and settled in Jackson county. In 1873 he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land six miles above Coquille on Fishtrap creek, in Coos county, and for thirty-seven years developed and improved his property. He carried on agriculture along the most modern and progressive lines, constantly adding to his holdings until at the time of his retirement he was the owner of four hundred and forty acres of fertile and productive land. His activity in this regard entitled him to be numbered among the citizens whose careers have influenced the development of the county and state. Mr. Miller is now living in Bandon, Oregon, where he has become extensively interested in real estate. He has abandoned farming and gives his entire attention to the management of the business connected with his seventeen town lots. He owns a beautiful and comfortable home in Bandon and has many friends in this city.

In September, 1871, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Orvilla Robison, who was born in Missouri, August 10, 1841, a daughter of S. L. and Lucina (Lamp-on) Robison, more extended mention of whom is made on another page of this work. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been born five children: Wirt, who passed away at the age of twenty-seven years; Mary, who was the wife of Clarence Edmunds and who died at the age of thirty-two years, leaving two sons, Arthur and Rollin; George G., who lives in Curry county and who married Miss Cora Ransier, by whom he has three children, William Loren, Harley and Arvilla; Orvis Nile, who resides on Fishtrap creek and who is married to Effie Hammock and has two sons, Wallace Tyrrell and Orvis; and Martha, the wife of Albert Paull, of Bandon, by whom she has two children, Alden A. and Lyle. Mrs. Miller passed away on March 2, 1901, and is buried in the family lot in the cemetery at Fishtrap. Mr. Miller affiliates with the Brethren church and is well known in Bandon as a man of exemplary character. During his career as an agriculturist he was numbered among the farmers who influenced to a large extent the growth of the state of Oregon by cultivating the soil with an intelligent efficiency which is the basis of success. He is highly esteemed by his fellow citizens and enjoys the respect of his many friends for his well deserved success, so honorably attained.

CHARLES D. SEXTON. There are many valued natives of Oregon for whom the natural advantages of this state have such charm that although they have reached mature age their homes have always been here. As an example Charles D. Sexton, who resides on a finely improved farm of four hundred acres in the Rogue river valley, near Hugo.

WILLIAM T. MILLER AND FAMILY

Josephine county, may be cited. He was born on the farm on which he resides, September 27, 1859, a son of David H. and Caroline (Stumbo) Niday Sexton, natives of New York and Iowa respectively. The father crossed the plains in 1847, with ox teams, and settled in Portland when there was but one log house on the present site of that populous city. In the spring of 1850 he removed to California and after remaining there one year returned to Oregon and settled in Josephine county, where until 1853 he followed mining. He took part in the Indian wars in 1853, 1855 and 1856 as a volunteer. He was married in 1856 to Mrs. Caroline Niday, the widow of Hiram Niday, who was then residing on the old donation claim taken up by Mr. Niday in 1854, a property which comprises three hundred and twenty-seven acres and is now owned by the subject of this review. On this farm, David H. Sexton passed away on the 2d of February, 1906, at the age of eighty years, the mother surviving him until May 20, 1910, when she had reached the age of eighty-five years.

Charles D. Sexton, an only child, remained with his parents until their death, receiving a good common-school education, and a college course. He has since made his home on the old homestead and now owns four hundred acres of fine land situated in the lower Rogue river valley.

Mr. Sexton was married in 1884 to Miss Mary Adams, of Salem, Oregon, and to them were born two children: Frank H., born December 16, 1885, on the homestead; and Ada T., born March 2, 1890, who is the wife of J. D. Everton, of Grants Pass. Mrs. Sexton died in 1892 and in 1897 Mr. Sexton was again married, his second union being with Miss Tarris Drayer, a native of Nevada. To this union two children were born: Diadama T., whose birth occurred August 15, 1898; and Fred Fay, born May 4, 1900. Mr. Sexton is a democrat and has served as school director and road supervisor. He is at present master of the Grange in his locality, an organization in which he takes an active interest. He is one of the public-spirited citizens of Josephine county, taking a lively interest in public affairs, and lending his aid and influence to the furtherance of those projects which in his opinion are likely to prove of benefit to the community. He is a capable business man, honorable in all his dealings, and has the respect and esteem of a large number of people in the county and elsewhere with whom he is acquainted.

W. B. CURTIS is the popular postmaster of Marshfield, this state. His birth occurred at Searsport, Maine, on the 19th of August, 1853, his parents being Samuel and Eliza Jane (Griffin) Curtis, the former a native of Leeds, Maine, and the latter of Stockton, that state. Samuel Curtis was a sailor by occupation and for many years before his retirement was a licensed sea captain. They were the parents of ten children, as follows: Mrs. Ella Nickels of Maine; Henry G., who is likewise a resident of that state; W. B., of this review; Everett B., of Myrtle Point, Oregon;

Clifton, a sea captain who resides at San Francisco; Lida J., of Maine; and Benjamin F., Lizzie, Samuel, first of the name, and Samuel second, all of whom are deceased. Samuel Curtis, the father of this family, passed away at the age of fifty-six years, while the mother lived to attain the age of seventy-four.

W. B. Curtis was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Maine, later completing his education at Bucksport Seminary, after which he was engaged in teaching for one year and then at the age of eighteen he shipped as ordinary seaman and followed the life of a sailor for four years, retiring from that occupation at the end of that period holding the position of first mate in the service. In 1875 he removed to California and settled in Solano county, where for one year he was engaged in farming. He then removed to this state and located on the Siuslaw river at a point near the present site of Florence. Here he remained for two years and then removed to Coos bay, where he was engaged in work on a ranch located on the Coos river. He then obtained the position of clerk in the Hotel Blanco at Marshfield, in which occupation he continued for seventeen years. In 1898 he received the appointment as postmaster of Marshfield and to that office has since continued to devote his attention. He is the owner of a beautiful residence property in Marshfield in which he resides.

In 1886 Mr. Curtis was united in marriage to Miss Rosetta Hirst, a native of Oregon and a daughter of William and Mary Ann Hirst, who were pioneers of Oregon and are now both deceased. Mrs. Curtis is one of the six living members of her father's family, the others being: Mrs. Emma Nasburg, of Marshfield, Oregon; Mrs. Mary Cody, of San Francisco, California; John W., who is a resident of Sunnyvale, California; Mrs. Alice Richardson, of Fresno, California; and J. B. Davis, a half-brother of Mrs. Curtis, who resides at Marshfield, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Curtis four children were born: Edward N., who passed away in childhood; William B., Jr., who was born in 1890, was educated in the public schools of this state, later completed a college education and is at home; Alice E., who was born in 1891, is a graduate of the high school who resides with her parents; and Frank, born in 1896, a pupil of the public school.

Mr. Curtis is a member of the republican party and has served as councilman in the city of Marshfield. He and his family are affiliated with the Episcopal church. Externally he is identified with the Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, all of Marshfield, and in the local organizations of the three last named orders has filled all of the chairs. W. B. Curtis is recognized as one of the foremost and useful citizens of Marshfield, where he has for many years served as the efficient and popular postmaster. He is a man of recognized integrity in all business transactions and his influence for good in the social and religious life of the community is one of his marked characteristics. He is well known throughout Coos county as one of the most influential men in this section of the state of Oregon.

D. W. VANDERBURG is one of the successful farmers of Lane county, this state. His birth occurred in Dubuque county, Iowa in 1859, his parents being John K. and Emily (Culver) Vanderburg, the former a native of Canada and the latter of Ohio. They were united in marriage in the state of Iowa, where they maintained their residence until the year 1864, at which time Mr. Vanderburg with his family crossed the plains to Oregon and settled at Marshfield, Coos county, where he purchased a body of land on which he settled with his family and continued to reside until 1880. He then moved to the Siuslaw river country in Lane county and filed upon a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he lived for a number of years, after which he sold the property and lived a retired life until the time of his death. His demise occurred in 1888, while his wife was called to her final rest in 1906. Unto them were born ten children, five of whom are still living, as follows: Winfield, who is a resident of San Francisco, California; Mrs. J. J. Clinkenbeard, of Coos county; D. W., of this review; Charles, a resident of Lane county; and Mrs. Charlotte Hawley, who resides in Crook county, this state.

D. W. Vanderburg at the age of five years, in company with his parents, crossed the plains at the time of their emigration to this state. He was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of the district in which he lived. He remained under the parental roof until twenty-two years of age when he engaged at various occupations until 1885. He filed upon a government homestead of one hundred and sixty acres and in due time, by proof of occupancy, received his title from the government to the property, after which he purchased an additional forty acres and after a period of some years he disposed of his entire holdings and later purchased three hundred and thirty-seven acres five miles from Florence on the Siuslaw river, upon which he established his home and is now engaged in dairy farming.

In 1891 Mr. Vanderburg was married to Miss Emma Karnowsky, who is a native of Germany and emigrated to America with her parents in 1882, the family home being established on the Siuslaw river in the year 1885. She was reared at home and educated in the public schools of this state and remained under the parental roof until the time of her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Karnowsky the following children were born, namely: Albert, of Lane county, Oregon; Arnold, who now resides on the old homestead in Lane county; Mrs. Emma Vanderburg; and Mrs. Amelia Morris, of Chicago. Both parents of this family have passed away. To Mr. and Mrs. Vanderburg five children have been born: Raymond, at home, born October 20, 1891; Ralph, also at home, born May 23, 1893; Leona, born May 3, 1895; Alice, born April 23, 1898; and Warren, born July 30, 1906. Leona and Alice are attending public school. The mother of this family is an accomplished linguist, having a thorough knowledge of both the English and German languages.

Mr. Vanderburg is affiliated with the socialist party and has for many years been a member of the school board of his district. D. W. Vanderburg is one of the substantial and useful citizens of Lane county. He is devoted to the interests of his family and engaged in giving his entire attention to the development and cultivation of his farm. He is known throughout Lane county as a man ready to give the benefit of his influence to any public measure having for its object the welfare of the people throughout the county and the community in which he lives.

W. W. S. ADAMS erected the first store and dwelling in the town of Malin and established The Pioneer Grocery Store but also handles a general line of merchandise. He was born in Redwood City, California, March 16, 1862, and is a son of George and Sarah Ellen Adams, of whom mention is made in connection with the sketch of J. Frank Adams on another page of this work. He is the youngest of three children and was reared by his parents in Sacramento until twenty years of age. He was for twenty years altogether in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, working for sixteen years in the rolling mill and for four years in the foundry. On coming to Klamath county, Oregon, he worked with his brother J. Frank Adams on his irrigation project and after that was sold to the United States government, W. W. S. Adams continued with them for about two years. On the 1st of July, 1910, he came to Malin and erected his present store and dwelling, which was the first building in the town. Here he opened a stock of groceries and a general line of merchandise and has since carried on the business successfully. He was also appointed the first postmaster of the town on the 21st of September, 1910, and on the 24th of June, of the same year, was appointed the first notary. When he came here he lived in a tent, which was pitched in the midst of the sagebrush, until he could erect a dwelling. He brought his wife and baby with him and they were the first settlers on the town site. Now four-fifths of the surrounding country is cleared of sagebrush and under cultivation. A Bohemian colony has settled here, the families just taking up their abode in this district at the time of the arrival of Mr. Adams. In addition to his other interests he owns a ranch two miles west of Merrill and his labors are contributing largely to the upbuilding of this district.

On the 14th of April, 1908, Mr. Adams was married to Miss Gladys Ellen Chamberlin, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of Mrs. May E. Barton. Her father died before her birth and her mother afterward married again. Mr. and Mrs. Adams now have one child, Frances Ellen, and they also lost a son, George Chamberlin, who was the first boy born in this settlement but died at the age of one month.

Mr. Adams gives his political allegiance to the republican party and is now serving as justice of the peace. He was reared in the Episcopal church and while residing in Sacramento he was active in fraternal affairs but is now concentrating his energies upon his business interests and the upbuilding of his district, his labors proving an effective force here in promoting the progress of the town.

MRS. MARY J. TYLER. Among the prominent residents of the Rogue river valley may be mentioned Mrs. Mary J. Tyler, a woman who for years has given her services to the alleviation of human suffering and to those who require the aid of skilled and soothing hands to carry them through the crisis when sickness overcomes them. Mrs. Tyler resides in Merlin, Josephine county, where she owns several pieces of property, having sold her homestead of one hundred and fifty acres which she settled upon and obtained a patent for, many years ago. She was born in Knox county, Illinois, a daughter of Hiram and Katherine Simpkins, both natives of Pennsylvania. The family removed to Ohio at an early date and later settled in Knox county, Illinois. The father fought in the Black Hawk war, rendering valuable service to the state in that connection. The family removed to Josephine county, Oregon, in 1872 and there the father passed away at the age of eighty-seven years, while the mother's death occurred when she was ninety-one years of age. They were the parents of nine children, three of whom survive.

Mrs. Mary J. Tyler received a common-school education and when the family had become established in Oregon, took up a homestead on the Rogue river, upon which she resided until she obtained a patent for her land from the government. Comparatively early in life she took up the profession of nursing and in years past journeyed on horseback all over Josephine county on her missions of mercy, frequently riding as far as sixty miles on horseback to attend a sick person. Some time ago she disposed of her homestead of one hundred and fifty acres and in 1909 removed to Merlin, where she owns several pieces of property.

Mrs. Tyler has four children: Henry and Hiram, residents of California; Catherine, the wife of Milt Mason; and A. E., at home. Mrs. Tyler is well known and favorably regarded in Josephine county and her services as a skilled nurse are in great demand. She is highly esteemed by a large number of personal friends and is regarded as one of the valuable residents of the community.

GEORGE W. HEDRICK is prominently identified with farming in its modern and progressive aspects and in his operation of a fine farm of five hundred acres in Douglas county, Oregon, which he owns in partnership with his brother-in-law, is doing effective work in scientific agriculture. He is a native son of Oregon and was born in Drain, Douglas county, on January 12, 1859. His parents were John and Louisa (Jackson) Hedrick, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Iowa. The father went to the latter state as a young man and his marriage occurred there. In 1852 he crossed the plains to Oregon, making the journey as a member of a wagon train belonging to Charles Drain. He spent the first winter in Oregon City and in the following year came to Douglas county, where he took up a donation claim upon the site where the town of Drain now stands. The Central Oregon Normal School building occupies a portion of his original holdings. He was successful from the beginning and subsequently added to his activities by farming three hundred and twenty acres of land which he bought as a settler's donation claim. About 1864 he traded this land for a three hundred and twenty acre tract in Linn county, near Lebanon, and to this he removed and became active in its operation and successful as a general agriculturist for three years. He spent one summer in Jackson county and at the expiration of that time returned to Douglas county, where he bought a ranch in the Hard Scrabble district, where he spent the remainder of his life. He died about 1904 and was survived by his wife until 1909.

George W. Hedrick was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Douglas county. Upon reaching manhood he began farming for himself. He owns about five hundred acres of fertile and productive soil in Douglas county conjointly with his brother-in-law, Horace Putnam. It constituted the original home of Mr. Hedrick's father-in-law, Charles F. Putnam, and is one of the finest tracts of land in Oregon.

In 1888 Mr. Hedrick was united in marriage to Miss Susan Putnam, a native of Douglas County, where she was born upon the farm on which she now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Hedrick have three children, Maud, Joseph and Harry, all of whom live at home. In his political views Mr. Hedrick is a consistent republican and always votes the party ticket. He is a member of Drain Camp, No. 59, W. O. W., and is also identified with the Oregon State Grange. His wife is a devout adherent of the Christian church. Mr. Hedrick possesses a keen intelligence which has directed all his labors and as a result he has met with unqualified success. He is distinctively a representative citizen of Douglas county and a native son whose record is a credit to his community.

AUGUST A. LISKEY cultivates a ranch and also conducts a livery barn at Midland. He is yet a young man, who is meeting with success in his undertakings. He was born in Berlin, Germany, August 2, 1880, and is a son of John and Caroline (Banks) Liskey, who were natives of the fatherland. In 1881 they crossed the Atlantic and made their way to Westfall, Nebraska. For three years they there resided, after which they came to Swan Lake, Klamath county, Oregon and still live there. The father is the owner of a large stock ranch and runs an extensive number of horses and cattle over the range. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Liskey have been born eight children: Charles, a resident of Hornbrook, California; Mrs. Mary Thompson, of Reno, Nevada; August A.; Fred, living in Merrill, Oregon; John, Daniel and David, all of Swan Lake; and Emma, the wife of Riley Wood, of Bonanza.

August A. Liskey was brought by his parents to the northwest and was reared here upon the frontier. He resided at home until twenty-seven years of age, when he sold his interest in the old home property to his brothers and for a year thereafter engaged in buying cattle. He has since dealt in cattle and horses. Coming to Midland, he leased three hundred and thirty acres from Abel Ady, and also leased a livery barn. He now conducts both branches of his business, buying and selling horses quite extensively and also handling other stock. He has learned to quickly recognize the good points of a horse and has thus been able to make judicious purchases and profitable sales.

Mr. Liskey is a republican, interested in the success of his party but without aspiration for office. He holds membership in the Baptist church of Bonanza and is well known among his circle of friends who hold him in high regard for an active, useful and well spent life. Whatever success he has achieved is well merited because it has been honorably earned and his industry gives good promise for the future.

JOHN HENRY. One of the well known residents of Beaverton was the late John Henry, who for many years was engaged in the cultivation of a fine tract of land, a portion of which lay just within the city limits. He was born in Quebec, Canada, in 1832, and there he resided until he was thirteen years of age. In 1845 he came to the United States, locating in Oregon, where for fifteen years he engaged in gold-mining and prospecting. During that period he acquired sufficient capital to enable him to purchase a fine tract of land containing fifty-three acres, adjoining Beaverton and partly within the city limits. It was mostly beaver dam land, very fertile and most productive, and Mr. Henry met with excellent success in its cultivation. During the long period of his occupancy he wrought many and extensive improvements on his property, bringing the land under high cultivation, continuing its operation until his death, in March, 1908. He was one of the progressive and capable agriculturists of the county and introduced into this section of Oregon the horseradish industry, which proved to be a very lucrative undertaking, and he was awarded many premiums at the state fairs on his product.

Mr. Henry was married, in 1877, to Miss Rose Filbert, whose birth occurred in Canada, on the 29th of April, 1860, her parents being Charles and Delia Filbert. She was left an orphan at the age of five years and thereafter made her home with strangers, and during the succeeding twelve years lived in various portions of the United States. Her first place of residence in this country was in Buffalo, New York, and from there she was taken to Chicago, where she was living at the time of the great fire. Her next removal brought her to San Francisco, of which city she was a resident during one of the severe earthquakes in the early days. In 1875 she came to Oregon, locating in Portland, which at that time gave very little promise of its wonderful development and present position of importance among the cities of the United States. There she was married thirteen months later to John Henry and has ever since made her home in this state. She was one of five children born unto her parents, but has never seen or heard from the other members of her family since she was taken from home at the age of five. Mr. and Mrs. Henry were the parents of two children: Cora A., who was born on April 17, 1881, now the wife of J. B. Wetherill, of Sumpter, Oregon; and Alice, whose birth occurred on the 29th of April, 1883, and who died on the 25th of March, 1901.

On the 26th of October, 1909, Mrs. Henry was married to George Newman, who was born in London, England, in 1855, a son of John and Annie (Leet) Newman, also natives of England. They came to the United States in 1860, first locating in Summit county, Ohio, where the father bought a small tract of land that he operated for ten years. Disposing of his farm at the end of that time he removed with his family to Polk county, Iowa, where he bought a place that he operated until his retirement. He and his wife then went to Des Moines, where he passed away in 1898. The mother survived until 1907, her demise occurring in the old home in Des Moines at the venerable age of eighty-six years. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Newman, the second in order of birth being the son George, above mentioned. The others are as follows: Jane, who is living in Des Moines; Lillie, who died in England at the age of two years; John, whose birth occurred in Lockport, New York, now living in Des Moines; Edward, who was born in Ohio, a resident of Kansas City, Missouri; Hannah, also born in Ohio, living in Des Moines; Minnie, whose birth occurred in Ohio, now living in Des Moines; and Arthur and Ollie, both of whom were natives of Polk county, now deceased.

George Newman, who as a young lad accompanied his parents when they emigrated to the United States, began his independent career at the age of twenty years, when he married Miss Elizabeth Ellen Porter. She was a native of Polk county and a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Stewart) Porter, the mother a Kentuckian and the father a native of Illinois. Their marriage occurred in Indiana, however, and there they began their domestic life, but subsequently removed to Polk county, Iowa, where the father acquired some government land. He proved up on his homestead and there he and his wife continued to live until their death. All of the hardships and privations that devolved upon Iowa's first pioneers were endured by them. Mr. Porter broke the land on his homestead with a wooden plow and a team of oxen, while all of the implements with which he worked during those early days were equally crude. Their family numbered seven, as follows: Edward and Sarah Ann, both of whom are deceased; Mary, who is living in Seattle, Washington; John, who is a resident of Polk county, Iowa; Malinda, of Dallas county, Iowa; William, also of Polk county, and Ellen Elizabeth, the first wife of George Newman. To Mr. and Mrs. Newman there were born six children: John, who died at the age of six years; Ida, the wife of Benjamin McCall, of Idaho; Mary, who died in Seattle at the age of fourteen years; Dora, whose death occurred at Portland when she was fifteen; William, who is married and living in Idaho; and Lillie, the wife of John Chattison, of Beaverton, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Newman are residing on the farm, which has been her home for so many years, and both are well known and highly regarded in Beaverton. She is a member of the Congregational church and he is of the Christian denomination, and both take an earnest interest in all the work of the various departments of their respective churches.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE is one of the enterprising merchants of Hugo, where he is engaged in the operation of a general merchandising establishment and owns a valuable orchard of eighteen and one-half acres. He is a native of Scotland, where he was born August 4, 1875, and is a son of William and Ellen Mackenzie, both of whom were natives of that country and continued to live there until the time of their death. They were the parents of eight children, seven of whom are living.

William Mackenzie was reared in his father's home and received his early education in the public schools of the district in which he lived and later completed a college course. He remained under the parental roof until sixteen years of age and at that time started in life for himself, his first occupation being that of a common sailor. In that vocation he continued for a period of three years and at the end of that time he returned to his home in Scotland, where he remained for three years. He later emigrated to America and settled in Washington, where he continued to reside for six years and then removed to old Mexico, where he was engaged in mining for six years, after which he removed to Josephine county, this state, and purchased near Hugo a ranch of one hundred and thirty acres, upon which he located and established his home. He later sold a large portion of that property in small tracts which have since been developed by their owners into commercial orchards. He still owns eighteen and one-half acres of the ranch, on which he has in bearing a fine apple orchard. On May 1, 1911, he opened a general store at Hugo and is meeting with well deserved success in that business. He is president of the Hugo Telephone Company.

William Mackenzie votes with the republican party. He is one of the progressive citizens of Josephine county and among his associates and acquaintances is highly respected for his integrity. He takes a deep interest in the affairs of the community in which he lives and is a member of the Hugo Development League.

JULIAN WELLS PERKINS was born October 27, 1870, in the manufacturing town of Meriden, Connecticut. His parents were William Henry Perkins, born August 6, 1843, in Glastonbury, Connecticut, and Julia Ellen (Atkins) Perkins, born April 5, 1847, in Bristol, Connecticut, and both parents were of direct English descent. His father, William H. Perkins, at the outbreak of the Civil war, enlisted in the First Connecticut Volunteers, Heavy Artillery, and served the entire term of four years. At the termination of the war he received his honorable discharge as sergeant, and located in Meriden, Connecticut, and was married to Julia Ellen Atkins. William H. Perkins died December 19, 1897. Julia Ellen Perkins still survives at the time of this writing, residing in Portland, Oregon. Two children were born to this union, William G. Perkins, on August 6, 1867, now residing in Portland, Oregon, and Julian Wells Perkins.

Julian Wells Perkins lived in Connecticut with his parents until the age of fourteen, attending the public schools of that state. In the fall of 1884, the entire family moved to Indianapolis, Indiana, in which city his father, William H. Perkins, assumed general management, at the solicitation of his wife's uncle, E. C. Atkins, of the saw manufacturing establishment incorporated as E. C. Atkins & Company. J. W. Perkins completed his education in Indianapolis, and was offered by his father the choice between a profession, with the necessary preparatory education, and a practical life at the factory, including learning the trade as sawmaker, and advancement as merit justified, and he chose the latter. Graduating from the Indianapolis high school in 1888, he immediately entered the factory serving in the various departments, in the office, and on the road as traveling salesman, until his father's death in 1897, at which time he was elected assistant secretary of E. C. Atkins & Company, and also a director, which position he resigned in 1900 to become general manager of the Portland branch of E. C. Atkins & Company, which branch he established and handled successfully until 1903, when on account of failing health he was obliged to leave office work, and he purchased a ranch in Medford, Jackson county, Oregon, for the purpose of recuperation.

He remained in Medford for four years, from 1904 to 1908, and was active in starting the boom which made Medford famous as a fruit-producing center. For three years his orchard, now celebrated and known as Hillcrest, carried the world's record for fruit sold at auction in New York city, obtained on a fancy grade of pears known as Comice. Leaving Medford, in 1908, after selling out his property in that section, he went to Roseburg, Douglas county, Oregon, and his first work was the organization and promotion of what is known as the Sutherlin project, being a large irrigated orchard proposition, and including a town-site proposition, the present town of Sutherlin. This project was promoted successfully, and after selling out to advantage he centered his interests in Roseburg, where he is now promoting a large bituminous coal property, which will be by far the most extensive of any of his enterprises. Mr. Perkins erected the Perkins building in Roseburg, completed in 1912, being exclusively an office building of the highest grade of construction, and the finest building of its kind in the state of Oregon, outside of the city of Portland.

On January 21, 1902, Mr. Perkins was united in marriage to Miss Ethel McKay Sherman, of Portland, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Sherman.

The political affiliations of Mr. Perkins have always been republican, although he leans to the progressive branch of that party and has been firm in the support of its principles. He was elected on the republican ticket in 1907 to the Oregon state legislature from Jackson county. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Knight Templar Mason, and a noble of the Mystic Shrine. He is also prominent in the order of Elks.

CORNELIUS BUCHANAN is one of the large and successful farmers of Lane county. His highly developed ranch is located eight miles above Florence on the Siuslaw river. He was born in North Carolina in the month of April, 1868, and is a son of Joseph D. and Salinda (Harris) Buchanan, both of whom were natives of North Carolina and in that state they were married and established their family home. There Mrs. Buchanan now resides at the age of seventy-one, her husband having died May 10, 1911. To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Buchanan six children were born, four of whom are still living, namely: Marcellus, Mrs. Gertrude Gray and Mrs. Bessie Geisler, all of whom are residents of North Carolina; and Cornelius, of this review.

The last named was reared in his parents' home and educated in the public schools, completing his studies as a graduate of the high school. He remained under the parental roof until the age of nineteen, at which time he began life for himself as an employe of a general merchandising establishment in North Carolina. He continued this relation for one year only, after which he removed to Texas and was engaged for one year on his uncle's ranch in that state and then returned to North Carolina, where he spent two years as deputy United States marshal, after which he was employed as express messenger for the Southern Express Company. In the service of that company he remained for three years and then established himself in a general merchandising business in company with his brother at Sylva, North Carolina. He continued in the merchandising business for a period of two years, after which he became deputy county sheriff and served in that office for two years, after which he was employed as brandy gauger for the brandy distilleries of Jackson county for one year. At the end of that time he again started in the mercantile business, with his brother, Marcellus. To this business he gave his undivided attention for a period of two years, after which he was employed for three years as manager by the Buchanan-Grindstaff Mica Mining Company of Haywood county, this company being the owners and operators of the largest mica mining plant in the United States. Their mines were in Haywood, Jackson and Macon counties, North Carolina and their equipment and supplies at Sylva, Jackson county, North Carolina. He also owned the mercantile business that supplied the company's men and the company. Immediately after completing his contract period with the Mica Company he purchased a farm near Sylva, North Carolina, upon which he moved and continued to reside and devote his attention to its operation for a period of three years. In connection with his agricultural interests he also at this time successfully operated a custom sawmill. In 1909 Mr. Buchanan sold a portion of his interests in North Carolina and removed to Lane county, Oregon. He arrived in this state on the 16th of March and on the 21st of that month he purchased one hundred and thirty-five acres of land on the north fork of the Siuslaw river, eight miles above the city of Florence. To his original purchase in this state he has since added forty-two acres of merchantable timber land. He still owns real estate in North Carolina and is also the owner of valuable town properties in that state. He resides upon his farm located on the Siuslaw river, where he specializes in dairy cattle and dairy products.

On the 28th of May, 1891, Mr. Buchanan was united in marriage to Miss Katie Keen, whose birth occurred in North Carolina on the 23d of January, 1870, her parents being John R. and Ann (Hannah) Keen, who were born, reared and married in Virginia. During the Civil war they maintained their residence in the state of Georgia and at the close of that conflict they removed to North Carolina, where Mr. Keen passed away on October 21, 1910, after which Mrs. Keen removed to Columbia, South Carolina, of which city she is now a resident, being in her seventy-fifth year. To Mr. and Mrs. Keen nine children were born, four of whom are still living: Mrs. Scott Brown, of Columbia, South Carolina; William H., of Pine Bluff, Arkansas; Charles B., a resident of South Carolina; and Mrs. Katie (Keen) Buchanan. John, Mamie, Frank, Carrie and Bessie are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan ten children have been born: Nimmo, whose natal day was September 11, 1892; Mamie, born January 13, 1894; Walter R., whose birth occurred on the 31st of August, 1895; Katie K., who was born February 10, 1898, and has passed away; Elizabeth D., born May 20, 1899; Cornelius, Jr., born April 1, 1901; Hilliard E., who died at the age of two years; Nannie B., whose birth occurred on the 26th of June, 1904; and Ray and Fay, who died in infancy. All of the children are pupils of the public school and two of their number are also students of music.

Cornelius Buchanan is affiliated with the democratic party and follows the standard of that political organization in all its national and state campaigns. He is a member of the Masonic lodge of Sylva, North Carolina, in which he held several official positions. He is likewise identified with the Woodmen of the World at Florence. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Cornelius Buchanan, since nineteen years of age, has been constantly engaged in business enterprises in which he has been uniformly successful. He is a man of great activity and studies carefully the details of his various business propositions. He has long since been known among his friends and associates as a man who intelligently operates and directs his business interests. His beautiful farm, located above Florence on the Siuslaw river, is of itself an evidence of the wisdom and painstaking methods of its owner, and his success in the dairy business has become a source of public inquiry and education to his surrounding agricultural associates. He is a man of the strictest integrity and his moral influence is a constant benediction to the community in which he lives.

LOUIS HESSIG. A spirit of enterprise and progress has actuated Louis Hessig throughout the entire period of his connection with business affairs, bringing him to a point where he ranks with the leading merchants of Fort Klamath, where he began business in 1900. He was born at Galena, Illinois, on the 27th of June, 1843, a son of Jacob Hessig, a native of Switzerland, who became a resident of Illinois in pioneer times and was one of the first miners at Galena. He also worked in copper mines in the Mississippi valley until 1849, when he crossed the plains with ox teams. It was a strenuous trip and twelve of the party were killed by Indians. Being one of the early settlers of California, Jacob Hessig took an active part in the work of laying the foundation upon which has been built California's growth and greatness. He followed the carpenter's trade at various mining districts and erected a quartz mill at French Gulch. He was connected with many of the leading camps of the state and continued his operations in mining to the time of his death, which occurred in 1862 in Shasta county, California. His funeral services were conducted by the Royal Arch Masons, for he was a worthy member of the chapter. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Rosa Versell, is a native of Switzerland. After his death she married a Mr. Francis and is now living at Edgewood, Shasta county, California, at the age of ninety-two years. She had a brother, Joseph Versell, who lived to be nearly one hundred years of age. He was a pioneer of Rock Island county, Illinois, and was prominent in his community, serving as assessor of his county for about twenty-two years. Louis Hessig is the eldest of three children. His brother, John Hessig, was slain by the Indians in 1864 while mining at Hayfork, Trinity county, California, being then but nineteen years of age. Mary, the only daughter, was the wife of Dave Gibson, who went to California in 1849 and was the first man in Humboldt county, that state. He arrived there about 1850 and remained until his death in 1885. He was there when the Laura Virginia came into port—the first ship to enter Humboldt bay. Mr. Gibson also conducted the first pack train into that part of the country and at length he was shot by the Indians, a ball entering his body while an arrow pierced the groin. After being thus injured he staggered back to camp and being mistaken for an Indian by his friends they shot him with a charge of buckshot. He survived all these injuries, however, and lived until 1885.

Louis Hessig came to the Pacific coast by way of the isthmus route in 1854, arriving in San Francisco on the 2d of April. He immediately went to French Gulch to join his father but afterward attended school at Weaverville. Subsequently he engaged in packing in Humboldt county, spending a number of years in that vocation mostly in Humboldt and Trinity counties of California. He afterward engaged in general merchandising with his brother-in-law, Dave Gibson, for fourteen years and subsequently removed to Siskiyou county, where he took up stock-raising. During all these years Mr. Hessig was well acquainted with pioneer life and experiences, being out in the camps, in the snows and storms and enduring all kinds of hardships while performing the arduous labor of a packer. On June 16, 1884, he came to Klamath county and located at Klamath Hot Springs, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising, although he gave the principal part of his time and attention to the latter. In 1898 he came to Fort Klamath, where he has since 1900 engaged in general merchandising. He has disposed of all of his ranching interests but still has his commercial holdings, although during the past three years he has not been personally active in the management of his business affairs.

On the 1st of May, 1872, Mr. Hessig was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Keer, a native of Denmark, who died seventeen years later. They were the parents of four children: Harry Herbert, who is now the owner of his father's old ranch at Shovel Creek, Siskiyou county, California; John Humboldt, who is secretary and manager of the Klamath Telephone & Telegraph Company at Fort Klamath and is also notary public and justice of the peace; Joseph, who spends the summer months at Fort Klamath but makes his home throughout the remainder of the year in San Francisco, California; and Mrs. Saloma Josephine Farewell, of San Francisco. The two youngest children are graduates of Hoad's Business College of San Francisco. After losing his first wife Mr. Hessig was again married in 1895, his second union being with Mrs. Mary Bridget Frances Butler, a daughter of Patrick and Elizabeth (McCormick) Sullivan, who were natives of Ireland and in 1844 came to the United States settling in Vermont, where Mrs. Hessig was born. Later they removed to Burnham, Maine, where they now reside.

Whatever success has come to Louis Hessig is the direct result of his own labors. He began packing as soon as he was old enough to drive and soon owned an outfit of his own. When he retired from that business he was the owner of forty mules that had long been thus used and were most trustworthy, so that over the rough mountain trails there was little danger for the burdens that they carried. Mr. Hessig has gone through all the experiences and privations which are incident to such a life and lives to tell many an interesting tale of the early days before this part of the country became thickly settled.

J. H. HESSIG, who since 1904 has been identified with the Klamath Telephone & Telegraph Company, was born in Hydesville, California, June 16, 1880, a son of Louis and Charlotte Hessig, the father a resident of Fort Klamath, while the mother is now deceased. He was one in a family of four children. In 1884 the family removed to Klamath Hot Springs and there J. H. Hessig resided until 1898, when he came to Fort Klamath. He homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land four miles north of Fort Klamath and became identified with agricultural interests in this section but since 1904 has been identified with the Klamath Telephone & Telegraph Company as its secretary and general manager, in which connection he is rendering valuable service to the public through the efficient service which the company gives to its patrons.

In 1910 Mr. Hessig was married to Miss Augusta Melhase, who was born at Fort Klamath, February 27, 1893, and is a daughter of Richard Melhase. They now have one son, Richard Louis. In politics Mr. Hessig is a democrat and has served as justice of the peace, in which connection he has rendered decisions that are strictly fair and impartial and proved his fidelity in office. His fraternal relations are with the Masons and the organization finds in him a worthy representative.

CARL KIMMEL. When death overtook Carl Kimmel at the early age of thirty-five years it cut off one of the most active citizens of Canyonville, Oregon, in the full tide of a promising career. He was a native of Germany, born October 27, 1861. His death occurred March 22, 1897. His parents were Godfred and Elizabeth (Kaylor) Kimmel, who lived and died in their native country.

The son received his education in the public schools of his native country and remained at home until he was twenty-five years old. In 1887 he crossed the Atlantic to America and landed in New York. From there he came directly to Canyonville, Oregon, and bought a ranch in Douglas county near this city, which he operated for one year. He had learned the trade of wagon-making in his native country and after this period of farm life he entered upon this as an occupation and worked in his wagon-making shop until his death. His sturdy German qualities of unlagging industry and intelligent thrift made him extremely successful in this line of work. He saved his money and acquired a moderate fortune, which he invested judiciously in farm lands of the section in which he lived.

Mr. Kimmel was married in Germany, in 1887, to Miss Fredericka Sharr and they became the parents of four children: Annie, who died January 21, 1900; Max; Clara; and Elsa. During his life Mr. Kimmel was a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church and in this faith he died in 1897 and was buried at Canyonville, Oregon. His wife still survives him and is well known in this district as a capable and efficient business woman. She is sole owner of the most important hotel in Canyonville and is personally active in its operation. She is the proprietor of seventy-one acres of improved and cultivated farm land in Douglas county and is extensively interested in town property in Canyonville. She is also a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star, the Degree of Honor and the Rebekahs. Mr. Kimmel was a member of the Masonic order, Douglas Lodge I. O. O. F., and of the Workmen. His success during his short span of life might well be envied by a much older man. His career exemplified the rewards which come to a man who carries on his work actively and intelligently, and his early death will long be regarded by his many friends as a distinct loss to his community.

GEORGE SMITH is the owner of a fine ranch of two hundred and four acres located three and a half miles northeast of Eugene, where he engages in general farming and dairying. He is one of Oregon's native sons, having been born at Fairmount in the vicinity of Eugene, on the 7th of August, 1852. He is a son of William and Nancy Adeline (Luckey) Smith, the father a native of England and the mother of Indiana. William Smith emigrated to the United States in 1836, locating in Cincinnati, Ohio. He resided at various places in that section of the country, and subsequently removed to Indiana. In 1847, he made his first trip across the plains to Oregon, being a member of the same party as Eugene Skinner, for whom the town of Eugene was named. The mother of our subject came to Oregon with her parents in 1850 and located in Lane county where she married Mr. Smith in 1851. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith were as follows: Hulda, the wife of E. J. McClanahan of Eugene, and the mother of two children; George, our subject; Colonel F., a resident of Prineville, Oregon, who is married and has one child; and W. H., of Portland.

George Smith was given the advantages of such educational facilities as were afforded in the rural districts of this state at that period, and after mastering the common branches he assisted his father, who owned and operated a dairy ranch, until he was twenty-one. He then left the parental roof and went to the eastern part of the state where he and his brother engaged in the cattle business for four years. At the expiration of that period he withdrew from this and went to Idaho. There he followed various pursuits but he subsequently returned to Lane county and after his marriage rented and operated the old home ranch for seven years. In 1891, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of improved land, that formed the nucleus of his present homestead. Here he has ever since engaged in general and dairy farming, meeting with a goodly degree of success. He has extended the boundaries of his ranch by the purchase of another forty-four acres, and his holdings now aggregate two hundred and four acres, sixty-one of which are under high cultivation. Mr. Smith continued to occupy the residence that was standing on the place at the time he bought it until the summer of 1911, when he erected a large two-story house that is entirely modern in all of its appointments. As his circumstances have warranted he has made various other improvements thus adding greatly to the appearance and value of his property, and now owns one of the most attractive and best equipped ranches in this vicinity.

For his wife Mr. Smith chose Miss Josephine D. Graves, one of the five children born of the marriage of H. C. and Diana (Bellus) Graves, the father a native of Ohio and the mother of New York. Mrs. Smith is the third in order of birth, the other members of the family being as follows: O. M., a resident of Washington, who is married and has three children; H. D., a merchant at Roseburg; T. L., who is unmarried, living at home with his mother; and Merta, the wife of F. M. Mehl, of Bandon, Oregon. The father passed away on the 1st of March, 1895. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Smith numbers three: Hazel, who was born in June, 1887, and educated in the district school, living at home with her parents; Mabel Adelaide, whose natal year was 1889, a high-school graduate; and Fidelia, whose birth occurred in 1893, the wife of R. E. Corum, of Lane county.

Mr. Smith has been a member of the Masonic fraternity for twenty-three years and he also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In politics he is a republican, but he has never held any offices save those of road supervisor and school clerk, never having aspired to public honors. Practically his entire life has been passed in this section of the state, toward the development and progress of which he and his family have substantially contributed. Mr. Smith remembers when there was no timber in this region save in the lowlands, the Indians having burned it off in order to drive the game to the lowlands, so they would not be compelled to cover such large tracts in hunting. He is one of the widely known residents of the county and a worthy representative of a highly respected pioneer family.

HORACE PUTNAM. An enterprising farmer of Douglas county, Oregon, and a man who is representative of modern methods of agriculture, is Horace Putnam, who is half owner of one of the richest and most productive farms in this section. He is a native son of Oregon, having been born in Douglas county, at Yoncalla, on the 26th of April, 1852. His parents were Charles F. and Rose L. (Applegate) Putnam, the former a native of Lexington, Kentucky, where he was born in 1824, and the latter of Missouri. The Putnam family has been founded in America for many generations and the direct line can be traced back to Revolutionary times. The father of our subject was a son of Joseph and Susan (Hull) Putnam, who were both representatives of old colonial stock. Nathan Putnam, the great-grandfather of our subject, served under General Washington in the Revolutionary war. Charles F. Putnam was reared in Kentucky and as a young man crossed the plains to Oregon, locating in this state in 1846. His parents followed him a few years later, coming to the northwest by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1853. They located in what is now Sunnysdale, Douglas county, where the grandfather of our subject, Joseph Putnam, took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, a half of which Horace Putnam now owns. Joseph Putnam was prominent in business circles when he was a resident of Kentucky but lost his fortune in that state. On coming to Oregon he was dissatisfied with agricultural conditions and soon abandoned this in favor of the hotel business. He operated enterprises of this kind in the towns of Wilbur, Roseburg and Scottsburg and soon recovered the money which he had lost. In 1864 or 1865 he returned to the Sunnysdale district and made his home with his son, the father of our subject, where he died in 1866. His wife survived him for many years and made her home with her children until her death.

Charles F. Putnam was a printer by trade and when he came to Oregon found employment in this line of occupation in Oregon City as a member of the staff of the Oregon Spectator. While a resident of this district he set the type for a speller written by Mr. Griffen, which had the distinction of being the first book published in Oregon. In 1849 he went to California where he was engaged in mining until 1850. In that year he returned to Oregon and located in Douglas county, taking up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres on section 39, township 22, south range 6, west, which is the property which his son is now operating and improving. Charles Putnam remained upon this farm until his death, which occurred in 1903. He had long survived his wife, who passed away in 1861. He was one of the largest land owners in Oregon at the time of his death and was constantly adding to his property and at one time was the proprietor of seventeen hundred acres of the most fertile and productive land in Douglas county. He was a prominent and influential citizen and agriculturist and one of the earliest settlers of his district.

Horace Putnam was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools of Douglas county. He lived for a number of years in his childhood with his grandfather, in 1861 removed to Grosse Ile, Wayne county, Michigan. In 1869 he went with his family to Monroe county, Michigan, where both he and his wife died, the former on the 22d of April, 1872, and the latter on the 30th of the same month. Mr. McGarvie was a farmer by occupation and in early life he also owned a boat on the Erie canal. His father, John W. McGarvie, was a native of Pennsylvania and a soldier of the Revolutionary war, participating in the battle of Brandywine under General Wayne. His father was a native of the north of Ireland and became the founder of the family in the new world.

In 1878 Mr. Putnam was united in marriage to Miss Aurilla Hedrick, a daughter of John Hedrick, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Putnam have been born three children: Chester Hull, who lives at home; Ethel, the wife of Wilfred Brown, of Camas valley, Douglas county; and Louise Rosella, who married F. P. Cunningham, of Sunnydale, Douglas county. In his political views Mr. Putnam is a consistent republican but has never sought public office. His wife affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal church. He now has a half interest in five hundred acres of land constituting one of the valuable and well improved farms in Douglas county, equipped with all modern improvements and conveniences. He has made extensive changes and has installed modern machinery, being aided in this work of development by his partner, G. W. Hedrick. Mr. Putnam represents agriculture in its newest and most progressive aspects. He has won success by industry, ability and common sense and these qualities unite to make him an upright man and useful citizen.

RODERICK W. MCGARVIE. There was a period in the history of the world when real-estate transactions amounted to little more than the purchase of property if the individual could find what he desired, or the sale of buildings or land if one could find an available purchaser. But with the growth and improvement in other lines there has come development and progress in real-estate operations, and a carefully organized and systematized business is that of the real-estate dealer, whether handling improved or unimproved property. The upbuilding of a town depends largely upon the men who handle real estate and the character of the city is determined in great measure by their labors and the spirit that actuates them. Roderick W. McGarvie was one of the promoters and is one of the partners in the Home Building and Realty Company, at Klamath Falls, and in this connection is contributing in no small measure toward the improvement of the city in which his operations are conducted. He was born in Williamson, Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, May 24, 1861, and is a son of John Wesley and Charlotte (Skinner) McGarvie, the former a native of Williamson and the latter of Painesville, Ohio, in which district she was reared. The father largely spent his youthful days near Pittsburg and

Roderick W. McGarvie was the eldest of a family of three sons. His brother, H. F. McGarvie, of New York city, was director general of the special exploitation at the World's Fair in St. Louis in 1904, and is now manager of the Auto Photo Company, of New York. The youngest brother, O. P. McGarvie, died in Los Angeles, California, in August, 1902. After their parents' death R. W. McGarvie and his brothers went to reside with their grandparents at Newport, Michigan. The subject of this review was then not quite eleven years of age. He there remained until 1875 and pursued his education in the public schools until fourteen years of age, when he began the battle of life for himself. He learned telegraphy and railroad-ing, which he followed until 1882, when he went to St. Ignace, Michigan, and began the publication of the St. Ignace Semi-Weekly News, the first semi-weekly paper published in the northern peninsula of Michigan. He continued in the field of journalism until the lumber panic of 1883, when he returned to railroad-ing, entering the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad, in Colorado, where he continued for a year. He then made his way to California and opened the railroad station at Barstow for the Southern California Railroad Company on the 15th of November, 1885. In March, 1886, he was transferred to San Diego as ticket agent and in August of the same year entered upon real-estate transactions. He was very successful in his dealings in property in that district but because of the wide-spread panic of 1888 lost heavily. On the 22d of April, 1889, he made the run into Oklahoma City and was the first real-estate agent to put out a sign there. He spent one year in Utah in the real-estate business and then returned to San Diego, California, where he was appointed deputy county clerk under W. M. Gassoway. He then resigned and became general organizer for the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, in which capacity he continued for five years, traveling all over the west in the organization of local societies. In 1896 he entered the building and loan business at San Francisco with Frank H. True and there operated until 1904, when he went to Goldfield, Nevada, where he engaged in the brokerage business. However, he returned to San Francisco, where he continued in the real-estate business until the earthquake. In 1906 he went to New York city, where for three years he was a representative of the New York Life Insurance Company. He then returned to San Francisco and soon afterward became general agent for the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, at Oakland, California. In February, 1912, he came to Klamath Falls and in connection with Frank H. True organized the Home Building and Realty Company, of which he is now a representative. This was capitalized for two hundred thousand dollars and is fast becoming a valued factor in the upbuilding of the city. Its policy enables many to secure homes at reasonable rates or to invest in property. Mr. McGarvie's previous experience as a real-estate dealer is proving of immense value to him in this connection and the Home Building and Realty Company is now upon a substantial and prosperous basis.

On the 2d of May, 1886, Mr. McGarvie was married to Miss Ella L. Allsop, of Huron, Ohio, and they had one child, Ella L., who is the wife of R. H. Hollingsworth, of Los Angeles, California. On the 12th of April, 1907, Mr. McGarvie was again married, his second union being with Miss May Rolls, of Detroit, Michigan, and they now have one child, Beverly. In all of his business career Mr. McGarvie has not found the days equally bright, but with persistency of purpose he has worked on and success has eventually come to him.

JARED SCOTT is the trusted representative and manager of the commission business of R. M. Wade & Company, of Portland, at Acme, this state, where he resides. He was born in Jackson county, Michigan, on the 25th of December, 1849, his parents being Cornelius and Rhumamah (Hurlburt) Scott, who were natives of New Jersey and New York respectively. Both were of Scotch extraction. They were married in Jackson county, Michigan, where they continued to reside until 1854, when they removed to Gratiot county, Michigan, where the death of Mrs. Scott occurred in that year. Cornelius Scott removed to Oregon in 1880 and made his first settlement in this state on the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he continued to live until 1899 and during that year he returned to Michigan and there continued to live during the remaining years of his life. His demise occurred in 1904. To Mr. and Mrs. Scott seven children were born, three of whom died in infancy. The others were as follows: Mrs. Hulda E. Mangus, of Sumner, Michigan; Mrs. Rachel A. Jaquish, of McBrides, Michigan; Jared, of this review; and Mrs. Amanda L. Baker, who passed away in Michigan at the age of thirty-seven years.

Jared Scott was reared in his father's home and educated in the district public schools. At the age of fifteen he started in life for himself, his first occupation being that of riding race horses, in which he continued for two seasons, after which he engaged at labor in the lumber camps of Michigan during the winter and continued so to be employed for nine years, finding employment during the spring seasons as a log driver on the river. He was engaged in rafting the season's timber cut to the booms and mills below. He then became foreman of a brick yard belonging to

A. W. Wright at Alma, Michigan, and continued in the employ of Mr. Wright in that position for four years. He then rented a threshing machine outfit and one year later removed to South Dakota, where he spent one summer and then removed to this state and settled on the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he purchased several tracts of land, totaling six hundred and twenty acres to which he gave his attention for a number of years. He afterward found it greatly to his financial advantage to dispose of his land in small allotments, which he accordingly did, and on March 1, 1911, he disposed of the last unsold portion of his holdings and invested immediately in city property in Acme, this state, where he established his home and is now engaged in the commission business, representing the house of R. M. Wade & Company of Portland, the business of this corporation being that of the sale of electric weld wire fence and agricultural implements. In addition to his duties as representative of R. M. Wade & Company he owns and operates a second-hand store in Acme and is also the owner of three valuable city properties, including a very fine residence in which he resides.

On the 1st of January, 1874, at Evart, Michigan, Mr. Scott was united in marriage to Mrs. Amanda R. Douglas, whose birth occurred in Ohio on the 25th of February, 1847, her parents being Samuel and Mary A. (Kernes) Rash, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Pennsylvania. They were united in marriage in the state of New York and removed immediately to Delaware, where they lived for a period of six years and then removed to Ohio, remaining in that state for seven years, after which they moved to Indiana, where they continued to live for five succeeding years, after which they removed to Allen county, Ohio, where Mr. Rash died in the year 1868, at the age of seventy-five, and his wife passed away at the age of eighty years in 1874. To Mr. and Mrs. Rash thirteen children were born, but Mrs. Jared Scott is the only member of the family who came to Oregon. She was twice married, her first husband being R. L. Douglas and to them two children were born: Mary A. E., the wife of Jack Wallace, of Convoy, Ohio; and Oliver P. M., who resides at Alma, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Scott are the foster parents of Miss Roslee Scott, who was a child of two years of age when adopted. She remained with her foster parents until twenty years of age, at which time she was united in wedlock to John Costello, a native of the state of Washington. To them two children have been born: Mildred, who died in infancy; and Guy Leroy, born July 6, 1909.

Mr. Scott is affiliated with the republican party and has served as supervisor of his township for eight years and has for many years been a member of the school board of Acme. He is one of the active and influential men of Lane county and for many years has been actively identified with the political interests of this state and especially with the public interests of Lane county. In early life he unfortunately was deprived of the benefit of an education in the public schools but being a man of unusual ambition and literary inclinations, he has during the years of his active business career succeeded in acquiring a very liberal education in the English language, as has also his wife. Mrs. Scott is a member of the Evangelical church. Mr. Scott is a man of unquestioned integrity and a natural leader among his fellows. His influence and assistance are to be relied upon in the advancement of any issue of public interest having for its object the advancement of the people among whom he has established his home.

CHRISTOPHER LONG has been a resident of Oregon for almost sixty years and has spent a useful and valuable life in this section. For over a quarter of a century he was engaged in dairying and was afterward active as a general farmer bringing to both of these pursuits an industry and intelligence which made him rapidly successful. His farm is located eight and one half miles from Bandon on the Bear creek road and comprises three hundred and twenty acres of land. Upon this Mr. Long is living retired in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was born in Canada in December, 1837, and came to Oregon with his parents when he was fourteen years of age. He is now numbered among the old settlers of Coos county. His father settled at Port Orford for a short time but later took up a donation claim near Bandon where he cultivated the soil until his death in 1857. He was survived by his wife for several years. They were the parents of three children: Sylvester, who was killed in an Indian war on the Rogue river; Christopher, the subject of this review; and Jane, the widow of John Hamblock of Bullards, Oregon.

Christopher Long began his active career upon the death of his father. He engaged in the stock-raising business for a short time in Coos county and later went to Idaho to work in the mines. He thus engaged three years, returning at the end of that time to Coos county where he located in Dairyville. He established himself in the dairy business and for thirty years was prominently identified in this occupation. Eventually, however, he disposed of his holdings and settled upon three hundred and twenty acres of land on Bear creek in 1894. Upon this property he carried on general farming and stock-raising and his modern and progressive methods and his intelligent activity soon gained him a gratifying success. He improved and developed his land, made needed improvements from time to time and pursued a policy of expansion which soon ranked him among the progressive and enterprising agriculturists in the state. Mr. Long has now retired from active life having earned his rest by sincere and long continued labor. He is living with his daughter May, who is superintending the construction of a beautiful and commodious home upon her father's property.

In 1872 Mr. Long was united in marriage to Miss Alice Cheney, a native of Iowa, and they became the parents of six children. The eldest daughter is May, who married Edward Ohman, who was born in California and is a son of John and Christina (Reed) Ohman, natives of Norway. Edward Ohman began active life for himself when he was fifteen years of age, shipping aboard a vessel sailing from Norway, as a cabin boy. He landed in San Francisco where he worked in a blacksmith shop and later engaged in railroad construction work for one year. At the end of that time he came to Coos county where he took charge of the rock quarries, at the time the jetties were built upon the bay. After his marriage he settled upon his father-in-law's ranch and has resided there since that time. He and his wife are the parents of four children: Cecil, who was born on December 2, 1895, and who is now attending school; Howard, whose birth occurred on the 30th of January, 1908; Mary C., born May 21, 1909; and Sylvia May, born October 28, 1911. The other children born to Mr. and Mrs. Long are: Rose J., who married Walter W. Wood of Myrtle Creek; Amelia, and Georgia, both of whom have passed away; John M. of Parkersburg; and Charles A., of Port Orford.

Mr. Long is a republican in his political beliefs but has never sought public office, his attention having always been absorbed by the duties connected with his agricultural pursuits. He is a member of the Universalist church. The activity of over half a century, during which time he worked sincerely and earnestly, entitles him to the respect he is now enjoying. He has borne his part in the gradual development of this section and has worked honorably and worthily through the years until now in his retirement peace and happiness crown his old age.

J. W. DEPUY, who operates a ranch of three hundred and sixty acres at Midland, Klamath county, is also the owner of what is known as Spring Lake Ranch, comprising one hundred and sixty acres and situated near Midland. His birth occurred in Linn county, Oregon, on the 11th of October, 1867, his parents being James and Martha (Royse) Depuy. The father was born near Auburn, New York, while the mother is a native of the middle west. They came to eastern Oregon at an early date, were there married and subsequently took up their abode in the Willamette valley. James Depuy came to the coast in 1854, locating first in California and afterward in eastern Oregon. He assisted in subduing the Indians during the troublous period of the '70s and at that time was engaged in business as a merchant and liveryman at Red Bluff, California, out of which town he ran pack trains. His demise occurred in Morrow county, Oregon, in August, 1894, when he had attained the age of sixty-three years. The mother of our subject, who married a second time, makes her home at Pomeroy, Washington.

J. W. Depuy, the first born in a family of six children, was but one year of age when taken by his parents to California and was a lad of six or seven when they returned to Linn county, Oregon. In the fall of 1881 he went to Umatilla county, this state, and after spending a number of years there, resided for a short time in eastern Washington. In 1904 he came to Klamath county and has here made his home since. As above stated, he operates a ranch of three hundred and sixty acres at Midland and owns the Spring Lake Ranch, a tract of land comprising one hundred and sixty acres near Midland. Progressive, practical and persevering, he has won success in his undertakings and is widely recognized as a substantial agriculturist and valued citizen of his community.

On the 9th of December, 1889, Mr. Depuy was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary Corbin, who was born in Will county, Illinois, on the 11th of November, 1869, her parents being Oliver G. and Elizabeth (Giest) Corbin. She came to Oregon when eighteen years of age and subsequent to the arrival of her parents, who had crossed the plains to California and had later taken up their abode in this state. Oliver G. Corbin, who served in an Illinois regiment during three years of the Civil war, is deceased. His widow makes her home in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Depuy have the following children: Harvey; Edna, who is the wife of Walter A. Turner, of Klamath Falls; Homer; Jessie; Alfred; Elza; and a baby. With the exception of the second named, all of the above children are still at home. The parents are well known and the hospitality of the best homes of the locality is cordially extended to them.

CHESTER L. WITHERS resides in the Summer lake valley near the old homestead of the Withers family. In addition to the cultivation of sixty acres of fruit land he is now engaged in the operation of a flour mill and he controls water power used in connection with the Chewaucan & Summer Lake Electric Light & Power Company, Incorporated, of which he is the manager. His active connection with various interests constitutes him a leading business man of the district in which he makes his home. Moreover, he is entitled to representation in this volume as one of the native residents of the Summer Lake valley, his birth having here occurred March 9, 1877. He is a son of John A. and Melvina or "Dolly" (Hadley) Withers and a grandson of Peter and Effie Withers. The grandfather was a native of Missouri and a pioneer of the Willamette valley, having crossed the plains with ox teams. He served his country as a soldier in both the Mexican and Civil wars and was receiving from the government a pension at the time of his death, which occurred at Irving, Oregon, where his widow still resides. Their children were: John A.; Peter Clay, living at Irving; Mary, the wife of Charles Hadley, of Eugene, Oregon; and Ada, the wife of Wall Roberts, of Arizona.

John Allen Withers, the father of Chester L. Withers, was born May 1, 1854, in Benton county, Oregon, was reared under the parental roof and became one of the first settlers of the Summer lake valley, arriving here about 1872. He engaged in the live-stock business, raising sheep, cattle and horses during the greater part of his life. He became the owner of about a thousand acres in this valley, securing six hundred acres of school land, receiving three hundred and twenty acres from his father and purchasing still other tracts. He was married May 10, 1875, to Melvina Frances Hadley, a native of Shasta county, California, and a daughter of Samuel B. Hadley, who crossed the plains from Illinois to Oregon in the early '40s and was one of the first settlers upon the present site of the city of Portland. He afterward went to Douglas county, becoming one of its early pioneers and securing there a donation claim. Subsequently he removed to Shasta county, California, but returned to Douglas county and later came to the Summer lake valley, where he was again one of the first to locate. Here he made his home until his death in 1891. In early manhood he married Emily A. Hammond, who accompanied him across the plains and died in Douglas county in 1886. Their children were: Albert H. and Mrs. Margaret L. Hannan, both now deceased; S. G., of Silver Lake; Mrs. John A. Withers; Melville E., a twin brother of Melvina and a resident of Lincoln county, Washington; John T., deceased; Mrs. Kitty E. Currier, of Summer Lake; and Henry M., of Fruitland, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Withers became parents of two children, Chester Lawrence and Charles Wayman, the latter residing on the old homestead on Summer lake. He married Lottie D. Harris. The mother, having lost her first husband, became the wife of John H. Hayes, a prominent sheep-raiser of Heppner, Oregon. They spend most of their time, however, in Portland.

Chester L. Withers was reared in the usual manner of lads who spend their youth upon the ranches of the northwest. He remained at home until 1901, when he went to Paisley, where he embarked in general merchandising, continuing in business there for seven years. He established an enterprise conducted under the name of the Paisley Mercantile Company and when L. S. Ainsworth joined him as a partner the store was carried on under the firm style of Ainsworth & Withers. At length they sold to the Paisley Mercantile Company. Mr. Withers, however, still remaining as a stockholder. The business is now carried on under the style of the Chewaucan Mercantile Company of Paisley and has a paid-up capital of seventy-five thousand dollars. While he still remains a director of the company, he has retired from active management, devoting his energies to other interests. He now gives considerable attention to horticultural pursuits, residing near the old homestead, where he cultivates sixty acres of fruit of almost every variety, producing some of the finest fruits that have been raised in the northwest. In 1908 he built a flour mill, with a capacity of thirty-five barrels. In the operation of the mill he has good water power, which also furnishes power for the Chewaucan & Summer Lake Electric Light & Power Company, Incorporated, of which Mr. Withers is the manager. He is an alert and enterprising business man, watchful of opportunities, and the spirit of progress and improvement actuates him in all that he does.

In 1904 Mr. Withers was married to Miss Melva Lewis, who was born in Chicago in 1888, a daughter of the Rev. M. M. and Emma Lewis. Her father was the builder of the Second Baptist church in Portland and was long active in the work of the ministry in the northwest but is now deceased. Mr. Withers holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a worthy representative of one of the honored pioneer families of this section of the country and the work instituted by his grandfather and carried on by his father is now being continued by him, for he is proving himself a public-spirited citizen who in advancing individual interests through his business connections is also promoting the general welfare and prosperity.

ALBERT BROWNELL is president and manager of the Portland Wholesale Nursery Company, which was organized and incorporated in 1907, since which time he has been the chief executive officer, his enterprise and ability being manifest in the continuous growth and success of this undertaking. New York claims Mr. Brownell as one of her native sons, his birth having occurred in Erie county, April 24, 1854, his parents being Thomas I. and Priscilla (Southwick) Brownell. The father was born in New Bedford, Massachusetts, but when he was quite young his parents removed from New England to western New York, where he was reared as a farm boy. Not desirous of making agricultural pursuits his life work, however, he later turned his attention to merchandising. He died in 1886, at the age of sixty-four years, his birth having occurred in 1822. His wife was a descendant of Cassandra Southwick and was a representative of the Southwick family whose American progenitor came to this country on the ship following the Mayflower and settled in New England. The maternal grandfather of Albert Brownell was Job Southwick, a nurseryman.

In the acquirement of his education Albert Brownell passed through consecutive grades until he eventually became a high-school student in Evans, New York. When a young man he removed to the vicinity of Traer, Iowa, where he engaged in teaching and farming for five years. He afterward spent the succeeding five years in Missouri in the same lines of business and in 1884 came to Oregon, establishing his home near Albany, where he engaged in farming. In 1888 he turned his attention to the nursery business, being one of the pioneers in that line of labor in this state. He continued to reside at Albany until five years ago, when he came to Portland and organized the Portland Wholesale Nursery Company, which was at that time incorporated with Mr. Brownell as its president and manager. They grow their own stock at Woodburn, carrying a general line of nursery stock and nurserymen's supplies, which they sell at wholesale, doing only a mail order business. Their trade covers the territory as far east as Iowa and they have a large sale in eight or ten western states. Three years ago the company purchased The Dalles Nursery, which was established in 1890 by R. H. Weber, and thus extended the scope of their activities.

Mr. Brownell was married in 1878 to Miss Nettie M. Read, a daughter of William C. Read, of Tama county, Iowa, and a representative of one of the old families of New York that received a grant of land from the king. Mr. and Mrs. Brownell are the parents of three children: Joyce P., the wife of J. D. Neiland, of Portland; Clare A., the wife of E. W. Read of Sandy, Oregon; and Dorothy. The parents are members of the Congregational church and Mr. Brownell is a progressive, public-spirited citizen, interested in all that has effect upon the upbuilding and welfare of his city and state. He has the tact which enables him to know how to meet people and, whether in business or social relations, he is ever the same courteous, genial gentleman, whose sterling and admirable traits of character win him high regard. Moreover, he has been the architect of his own fortunes and has builded wisely and well, his life history constituting an example of industry, determination and honorable dealing that others might profitably follow.

WILLIAM LAUGHLIN, JR., manages the farm, three miles east of Yamhill, which his father has owned for many years. It is one of the most valuable properties in this section and is the result of the energy, perseverance and intelligent foresight expended upon it by the Laughlin family. Mr. Laughlin was born February 8, 1871, on the old Hutt donation claim, and is the son of William and Phoebe (Roberts) Laughlin, of whom a more extended review is published on another page of this work.

William Laughlin, Jr., left his native state to make his start in life and, going into Washington, secured a position as teamster, which he held for about two years. He returned home about 1892 and then undertook the management of his father's farm.

On July 13, 1895, William Laughlin was united in marriage, at McMinnville, Oregon, to Addie Pearl Maxwell, a daughter of Albert P. and Sarah (Branstetter) Maxwell. The latter's father was in service on the Union side in the Civil war and was mustered out in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 26th of October, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were both born in the state of Missouri but have been residents of the coast states since 1874, when they first came to Oregon and settled in Polk county. One year later they went to Benton county for a two-year sojourn, but at the end of that time they returned to Polk county, and having purchased a team and rented a farm, engaged in agricultural pursuits for about five years. Their permanent home, however, was to be in Washington, and in 1881 they moved to that state. About this time the father was left with the responsibility of taking up new land and of rearing his family, for the mother passed away in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were the parents of six children: Aca and Arthur F., both deceased; Mrs. Annie O. Roberts, of Yamhill county; Mrs. William Laughlin, Jr.; and Peter P. and Mrs. Susie A. Workie, both of whom reside in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Maxwell has lived in various parts of Washington during the last thirty years but has now come to Yamhill to spend his retired life at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin.

To Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin five children have been born: Marcus Ray, born May 23, 1896; Albert E., who was born September 2, 1897; Mary Ella, born July 19, 1900; Charlie, born March 31, 1903; and Leona, born August 20, 1906. At the present time the four oldest children are attending school and it is the intention of the parents to give to them all the school advantages it will be possible to provide, as Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin both appreciate the value derived in later life from a good school education. With the exception of six months in Alaska Mr. Laughlin has lived continuously on the farm in Yamhill county since his marriage and has been interested and active in this community, striving to raise the educational and social standards and to develop the natural resources of the county. In politics Mr. Laughlin has never sought recognition by seeking office. He is a staunch republican, believing that the principles of his party stand for the best that there is in political and economic welfare.

ROBERT GLENN SMITH is one of the acknowledged leaders of the democratic party of his state and one of the well known and successful attorneys of Grants Pass, Josephine county, Oregon, where he is successfully engaged in the general practice of law. He was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, November 27, 1864, and is a son of Edwin and Minerva V. (Fidler) Smith. The former was a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Iowa. The founder in this country of his family was Robert Smith, a native of Ireland, who emigrated at a very early date to America and settled in New York. The next in line of descent was Daniel Smith, a native of Troy, New York. He purchased an entire township of land in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in general farming for the remaining years of his life, his death having occurred at the age of ninety-nine years. He was deacon in the Presbyterian church for forty years and an officer in the commissary department during the Revolutionary war. The paternal grandfather, Daniel Smith, Jr., was born on the old homestead in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, and on selling his interests there, he removed to Pittsburg where he was engaged in the banking business until 1844, at which time he suffered a complete financial loss, occasioned by the great fire which destroyed a large portion of that city. He afterward engaged in the general contracting business for some time from which he later retired and established his residence at Clairsville, Pennsylvania, where he continued to live until the time of his death. Daniel Smith, Jr., was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Copely. She was a native of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, and passed away in Clairsville, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Smith was the daughter of Josiah Copely, Sr., a native of England, who emigrated to America settling in Indiana county first, and later was engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods at Kittanning, Pennsylvania, where he continued to live until the time of his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Smith, Jr., seven children were born, the youngest being Edwin, who was the father of the subject of this review. He was born in Philadelphia, September 7, 1837, and after his father's failure in business he secured employment as a nail cutter in Pittsburg and later went to Ohio from which state he removed to Newcastle, Pennsylvania, and was there engaged in the same line of employment. In 1850 he was employed as a clerk at Madison, Georgia, until 1853 and in that year he removed to the Pacific coast making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. The boat on which he sailed was wrecked outside the Golden Gate but he succeeded in extricating himself from the wreckage and after swimming an almost incredible distance he finally reached the shore. He settled in Eldorado county, California, and engaged in mining. During the years 1855-6 he was one of the volunteer soldiers in the war with the Pinte Indians and followed his command in that campaign throughout California and Utah and was wounded in the leg during his time of service. In 1856 he went to Placerville and there engaged in the ice business. In 1858 he removed to Portland and followed the occupation of a carpenter until 1861 at which time he settled in Jacksonville and there established himself in the contracting and building business in which he continued for a period of twenty years. He then established his residence at Grants Pass in Josephine county where he has since continued to reside.

Edwin Smith was united in marriage to Miss Minerva V. Fidler, a native of Iowa and the daughter of Dr. George and Jane (Strain) Fidler. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania and in early life removed to Iowa where for some time he was engaged in the practice of his profession. In 1849 he emigrated to Oregon, settling at the site of Coburg, Lane county, and three years later he removed to Jackson county, where he established his home and was continuously engaged in the practice of medicine until the time of his death, which occurred in California, at the age of ninety-two years. To Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Smith eight children were born: Robert Glenn, who is the subject of this review; Anna C., a clerk in the Portland postoffice; Samuel C., publisher of the Hayward Review, of Hayward, California; Mary, the wife of a Mr. Martin, of San Francisco; Lincoln, of Montello, Nevada; Myra, the wife of a Mr. Phelps, of Eureka, California; William C., a resident of Portland, Oregon; and Mabel, the wife of Dr. Ralph Fenton, of Portland, Oregon.

Robert Glenn Smith was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. He went to Portland at the age of fifteen and was employed as clerk in the office of the Hon. James C. Tolman, who was United States surveyor-general for Oregon. In that office he continued for a period of eighteen months at which time failing health compelled his resignation and he then engaged in educational work as teacher of the public school at Klamath Falls, Klamath county. In 1884 he settled at Grants Pass where he was employed as clerk in a drug store for a period of three years. He had during the immediate years last past been engaged in the study of law and in 1888, having thoroughly qualified himself for the practice of that profession he was admitted to the bar and has since been continuously engaged in that profession. Previous to his admission to the bar he had, however, served for two years as deputy district attorney under William Colvig.

Mr. Smith was united in marriage in Grants Pass, to Miss Emily Greenstreet, a native of Iowa and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Greenstreet. Her father emigrated to California at an early day and after spending some time in that state he started for the east, but was never heard from afterward, and it is believed that he became one of the unfortunate victims of hostile Indians. Mrs. Emily Smith passed away in December, 1904. In May, 1906, Mr. Smith married Miss Ida V. La Raut and one child, Helen, now five years old has been born to them. Mrs. Smith is a native of Oregon and a daughter of Narcisse La Raut, one of the early pioneers, who came to Oregon in 1849.

Mr. Smith was for many years a loyal adherent of the republican party and was elected a member of the state legislature in 1894 and served in the session of that body in 1895 at which time he was chairman of the committee on railroads and transportation. Later, on account of his strong and conscientious anti-tariff views, he transferred his political affiliations to the democratic party of which he is one of the representative members in his portion of the state. In 1904 he was elected as a democrat to the legislature from his county and in the session of 1905 he introduced and contended for several important measures that, though defeated then, were made laws in the next few years, among them being an anti-pass law, a railroad commission law and a corrupt practices act. In 1908 Mr. Smith received the democratic nomination although not a candidate for representative in congress from the first congressional district. His opponent W. C. Hawley, however, was elected two years before by a plurality of seventeen thousand. Without making any but a perfunctory effort he succeeded in cutting Hawley's majority to six thousand and he has again been nominated for the same office. In December, 1911, he was elected mayor of Grants Pass for one year.

Hon. Robert Glenn Smith is descended from one of the oldest of American families and is a man whose ability as an attorney and enterprising citizen of his state is recognized through the western inter-mountain country. He is one of the popular and distinguished orators of the Pacific coast and a man who readily associates himself with every public enterprise intended to advance and secure the best interests of the people in his state and county.

CHARLES AKEN PETERSON. The death of Charles Aken Peterson on March 19, 1910, removed from Coos county one of its upright, straightforward and progressive citizens, and deprived agricultural and mining interests in that section of a worthy and successful representative. Mr. Peterson was a man who lived a quiet life among his friends and with his family and who counted his most substantial prosperity in their respect, esteem and love. He was born in Scotland in 1832, a son of John and Christina (Aken) Peterson, natives of that country. He was the third in a family of six children, all of whom have passed away. The others were: James, Andrew, Maggie, Christina and Miriam.

Charles Peterson obtained a limited education in the public schools of Scotland and came to America when he was seventeen years of age, making the journey across the Atlantic with his brother Andrew. They settled in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and remained their one year, at the end of which time Mr. Peterson was called to Scotland by the death of his father. He remained there only six months, returning to Pennsylvania at the end of that time where he followed the occupation of a coal miner for a long time. His residence in Oregon dates from 1873 in which year he came to Coos Bay, remaining for one year in that locality. At the end of that time he settled in Riverton where he took up a pre-emption claim of one hundred and sixty acres to which he added one hundred and fifty-three acres by purchase. He subsequently bought more adjoining land and at the time of his death was the owner of a fine tract of four hundred acres, most of which had rich coal deposits. Mr. Peterson did a small amount of coal mining and carried on general farming, being successful in both lines of occupation. He retired from active work several years before his death and sold the homestead, moving to Riverton, where his widow now resides in an attractive and pleasant home. She has invested her comfortable fortune judiciously and loans money out at interest and adds to her income in this way.

On July 21, 1872, Mr. Peterson was united in marriage to Miss Mary L. Gamble, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of John and Susan (Fritz) Gamble, also natives of that state. Mrs. Peterson is one of a family of two children, her brother John having passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson became the parents of four children: Harrison James, born September 5, 1873, who married Miss Mettie Knight, a native of Kansas; Susan, who became the wife of M. W. McCormick of Riverton, by whom she has two children, Charles and Grant; Elson Monroe, born December 9, 1876, who is engaged in business with his mother; and Charles A., whose birth occurred on November 9, 1879, and who married Miss May Price, a native of Iowa, by whom he has three children, Herbert, Charles and Theodore.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES A. PETERSON

Mr. Peterson was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and a devout adherent of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was practical in his religion and his beliefs and standards influenced his every-day life. He took an active part in church affairs and in every way possible aided in the upbuilding and expansion of the religion which he professed. He gave his political allegiance to the republican party but never sought public office preferring to achieve his success in less conspicuous ways. He is a splendid example of a self-made man, having come to America with no money and very little education. He gained prosperity in business and the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. The character of the work which he did during his life and the importance of the place which he attained are evidenced by the deep and widespread regret which followed his death. He won success but he was a man who leaned more upon the friendship and popularity which he gained and quiet domestic happiness than upon business prominence and he was fortunate in the attainment of both ambitions.

JAMES M. HOXIE is one of the early pioneers of Oregon and after many years of hardship as a frontiersman and a veteran of the Indian and Civil wars, to which he later added a less hazardous line of activity, now lives in the enjoyment of a well earned competency at Wilderville in Josephine county, this state. He was born in South Dartmouth, Massachusetts, June 12, 1836, a son of Major Obadiah D. and Eliza A. (Stevens) Hoxie the former a native of Massachusetts and the latter of Newport, Rhode Island.

Major Obadiah D. Hoxie in the early years of his life served for seven years as an apprentice at the watchmaker's trade but afterward decided to abandon that as an occupation for life and shipped as a sailor on board a whaling vessel, continuing in that employment until he became captain of his own ship. In 1849 he sailed around the Horn and made the port of San Francisco with four hundred barrels of sperm oil. He had the misfortune to reach the Golden state at the very time when the whole country was obsessed by an insatiable passion for gold, as that mineral had just been discovered in large quantities in certain portions of the state. On hearing of the possible fabulous fortunes to be obtained in mining, his entire crew deserted ship for the gold fields and in that helpless condition he sent to the owners of the vessel for instructions as to his future course, and the company at once ordered him to sell the oil and anchor the vessel in the harbor of San Francisco. He disposed of his cargo of oil and by exerting himself to the very utmost he succeeded in securing a crew sufficient to man his ship and at once sailed to Sacramento, where the vessel was finally anchored and for years thereafter was put in commission as a prison ship. Having thus disposed of his ship and being without occupation at the time, he purchased a four-mule team and a yoke of oxen and with these crossed the mountains to the head of the Trinity river, where he remained for the ensuing winter. Provisions of all kinds were extremely scarce in that part of the country during that winter and, taking advantage of the pressing necessities of the miners, he butchered his oxen and disposed of the meat at the rare price of one dollar per pound. He then engaged in mining, in which he continued until the fall of 1851, and then removed north to Jackson county, this state, where he located on a ranch one and one-half miles north of where the city of Medford is now situated. He lived on this ranch for the remaining years of his life, which closed in the year 1871, his wife's death occurring in 1876.

James M. Hoxie was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Massachusetts. In 1855, in company with his mother and his youngest brother, Charles H. Hoxie, he removed from his native state to San Francisco, California, making the journey by way of the isthmus. On reaching that city they were met by the husband and father, who at that time was a commissioned major of the Second Battalion of Volunteers enlisted to suppress the Indian uprisings which were then disturbing the inhabitants of the Pacific coast states. Here the family remained for the winter and early in the following spring removed to the northern part of this state, where Major Hoxie had established the family home one and one-half miles north of the present site of Medford. James M. Hoxie on reaching this state, immediately after seeing his mother and the other members of the family comfortably settled, enlisted in the United States service, in which he continued for three years as a soldier in the ranks, engaged in Indian warfare. At the termination of his enlistment he returned to his father's home and became associated with him in the improvement and development of the ranch. On November 26, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, First Regiment of Oregon Cavalry, and continued with this command for the three succeeding years, being mustered out at Vancouver, Washington, on November 26, 1864, and returned to his home in this state, where he continued to reside until 1879. In that year he removed to Bozeman, Montana, at which place he continued to live for two and one-half years, engaged in logging in the lumber woods. He then made an inspection tour through Idaho, Nevada, eastern Oregon and a considerable portion of the Sacramento valley. On reaching Sacramento he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Company, in the service of which he continued for two years. During the latter months of his stay in California his health became impaired and he returned to Oregon and located in Josephine county, where he has since maintained his residence. For some years he was engaged in the blacksmithing business at Wilderville but during his later years has lived a retired life.

Mr. Hoxie is politically an adherent of the republican party giving his support to the progressive wing of that great organization and is interested in the social activities of the community in which he lives. He is a member of General John A. Logan Post, No. 39, G. A. R., at Grants Pass, Oregon, and is one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of his portion of the state. In the early days of his manhood he bravely did his part in the interests of the peace and safety of the frontier settlements of the Pacific coast, serving for many years in the United States service in commands whose duty it was to traverse the entire length of the intermountain coast states and wherever the savage red man was found upon the warpath, there was the place of duty for the command to which he belonged. Later he became a ready volunteer in the defense of the flag during the internecine war between the states, in which he did service in camp and on battlefield for a period of three years, which included the heaviest fighting period of that national struggle. Later he returned to the more peaceful pursuits of life and having passed through all these vicissitudes of hazard and hardship, he now lives a retired life in Wilderville, where he enjoys the universal respect of all his friends and associates.

OSCAR B. TYRER was born in Wisconsin, May 1, 1884, and is a son of Oscar and Marietta (Boring) Tyrer, the former a native of New York state and the latter of Kentucky. They were the parents of nine children. Effie, the eldest member of the family, is the wife of Robert Maxwell, of Milwaukee, and they have two children. Millie married William Douglas, of Milwaukee, and they have become the parents of one child. Cora is the wife of John Holland, of Dodgeville, Wisconsin, and they have three children. Nellie is the wife of Richard Jones, of Dodgeville, and they have three children. Louise married Frank Sanborn, of California, now living in Cooston, Oregon, and they have three children. Lela is the wife of Willett Billington, of Spring Green, Wisconsin, and they have two children. Virginia is the wife of Thomas Crook, of Dodgeville, and they have three children. Oscar B. is the subject of this review. Kate, the fifth in order of birth, is deceased.

Reared at home, Oscar B. Tyrer received his early education in the public schools of Wisconsin. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty years of age and at that time started in life for himself, renting from his father the old homestead of one hundred and twenty acres and there was continuously engaged in mixed farming for a period of four years. He then became an employe in the gas engine shops, where he learned the machinist's trade, and remained in that service for two years. In 1910 he removed to Coos bay, settling at Cooston, where he purchased eighty acres of land, upon which he established his home and has since been continuously engaged in the development and cultivation of his place. At present he is preparing and equipping his farm for specializing in the growing of merchantable fruit.

Mr. Tyrer was united in marriage September 12, 1906, to Miss Beulah M. Rowe, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of James and Bessie (Johnson) Rowe, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Norway. To Mr. and Mrs. Rowe two children were born: Bessie M., the wife of Herbert Gullick, of Granton, Wisconsin; and Beulah M., now Mrs. Oscar B. Tyrer. Mr. and Mrs. Tyrer are the parents of a son, Leland Rowe, who was born September 19, 1909.

Mr. Tyrer is affiliated with the republican party but has never sought political preferment. He is forging rapidly to the front as one of the enterprising and successful farmers of his district and is a man whose integrity of character and industrious habits of life make him one of the desirable citizens of his adopted state.

JONATHAN JOHNSON, for many years, was engaged in educational work, having given the early years of his life almost entirely to teaching in the public schools of Missouri and Washington. Later, he became a successful agriculturist in Washington and in Oregon, in which occupation he continues although he will soon lay out his holdings near Eugene in plats.

He was born in Harrison county, Ohio, January 20, 1846, and is a son of Robert and Sarah Helen (Townsend) Johnson. His paternal grand parent, Jonathan Johnson, was a native of Virginia, and for a period of twenty-six years was a government inspector of tobacco. He was a man of strictest integrity and had very settled convictions regarding the maintenance of slavery. Being of the Quaker faith, he had the strength of will to follow in the path which he believed to be the one of righteousness, and early in his life, he freed the slaves which had come to him by inheritance and moved from the Old Dominion to the then northwestern state of Ohio, where he died in 1863.

Robert Johnson came with his parents to Ohio at an early age and remained in that state until 1866, and then removed with his family to Missouri. In 1877, when his son Jonathan removed to the state of Washington, he came with him and made his home there until the time of his death, which occurred in 1883, at the age of seventy-three years. He was by occupation a farmer, continuing in that occupation during his entire life.

Jonathan Johnson was educated in the public schools, and at the age of twenty he removed with his father to Missouri, where he remained for eleven years, following his chosen vocation of teaching in the counties of Lewis, Macon, and Holt, in that state. In 1877, deciding to change his place of residence and believing that the far west offered better advantages than the middle states, he removed to the state of Washington, intending to make his first location at Spokane. On arriving at that place, he was not favorably impressed with the surroundings and extended his journey to the Palouse country, that state, and there he located a timber culture homestead and preemption claim. The soil of this land was favorable to the growing of wheat. Here he established his home and gave his attention largely to the development of his farm for a period of five years. During this time, however, he followed his vocation as a teacher during the winter months. Having become familiar with the general prospects of this part of Washington and remembering the mistake he had made in failing to make his original location, at the place now occupied by the city of Spokane, he removed to Eugene to educate his children in the University of Oregon, and in search of a possible opportunity which, in some respects, might serve to compensate him for the loss he had sustained in his error of location in Washington. Having arrived at Eugene, at a most opportune time, he was successful in locating a place south of that city, near its boundary and another near the town of Springfield of one hundred and fifty acres.

On June 26, 1887, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Ellen Lewis, a daughter of Jesse H. and Mahala Jane (Dickson) Lewis, of whom mention is made on another page of this work. They were married in the town of Johnson, in what was then the territory of Washington. Mrs. Johnson is descended directly from colonial stock, and is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution. Her paternal grandparent, James Lewis, was a second cousin of Daniel Boone, Kentucky's frontier hero. He was also a son-in-law of Jonathan Couch, famed in American history as one who fought at the side of General Washington.

Four children have been born to bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson: Jonathan Lewis, in the class of 1912 of the University of Oregon; Pearl, a graduate of the University of Oregon, now employed as an assistant principal at the Sheridan school, of Sheridan, this state; Ida, who has graduated from the Eugene high school, and is now teaching; and Thomas, at home with his parents.

Mr. Johnson and his family are members of the Presbyterian church, in which he is one of the officiating elders.

After many years spent in one of the most useful of vocations, that of an educator, Mr. Johnson has retired from the active field of educational work and is devoting his time to the development of his properties. He has been successful in securing a beautiful home body of land in one of the richest territories of western Oregon, and while in the prime of life he is provided with enough wealth to make the remainder of his life comfortable. He is highly respected by all who know him and ever at the service of the public, when issues, material to the advancement of the educational and religious interests of his country and state, are presented to him.

LEWIS THOMAS THOMPSON is a pioneer in the settlement of Coles Valley, Oregon, and has all the force of personality and the initiative and resource which is implied in the meaning of the word. He has been a factor in upbuilding for almost half a century, an extensive landowner and a farmer. He is now living retired in Roseburg, having well earned the substantial success which has come to him. Mr. Thompson was born in Logan county, Illinois, December 14, 1842, and is a son of Lewis and Ann (Ragsdale) Thompson, natives of Tennessee. The parents of our subject were reared and married in that state and in 1832 removed to Logan county, Illinois, where the father died in 1845. Thirteen years afterward the mother with her two sons, Lewis Thomas and William R., came to Oregon via the Isthmus of Panama. They landed in San Francisco on the day when Lewis Thomas was sixteen years of age and from that city took passage on the old steamer Columbia, arriving in Portland about the 20th of December. Their ticket from San Francisco read to Gardiner, Oregon, but on their arrival off the bar, near that city, the ocean was found to be too rough for the vessel to cross the bar and they were carried on to Portland, where the captain compromised with them, giving each ten dollars. With this money they paid a man to haul them by wagon up the Willamette valley and into Douglas county, where they joined two sisters of our subject in Coles Valley. These sisters were Mrs. S. D. Evans and Mrs. John Emmett, who had crossed the plains in 1852 and were among the first families to locate in the valley. After Mrs. Thompson's arrival in Oregon she made her home with her daughters and lived with them until 1867, when she took up her residence with her son. Her demise occurred in 1869.

Lewis Thompson is numbered among the earliest pioneers in Coles Valley. In the early days of his life in this section the country was in its primitive state, the forests abounding in game, especially in panthers. Mr. Thompson holds a record of having killed more of these animals than any other man in Douglas county. He delights in telling a story of an excursion in the brush which he took in the early days of his residence. He jumped off a cliff and found himself in a den of three panthers. Being entirely unarmed, he jerked off his hat and, waving it in all directions, frightened two of the animals up a tree, while the other ran away. He called for help and was joined by other men, who shot the panthers and finally killed the one that ran away. This is an example of the early conditions of life in the Oregon settlement. After his arrival in Douglas county Mr. Thompson obtained employment as a farm hand and for about five years was active in this capacity. In July, 1862, he started for Truckee Meadows, Nevada, with a band of three hundred and sixty head of cattle belonging to S. D. Evans, his brother-in-law. On reaching the Rogue river valley he and his companions learned that there was a party ahead with a band of cattle belonging to Captain Joseph Bailey and others. They had gone through by the Klamath lake country to avoid the high tax that was levied on cattle driven from Oregon to California at that time. Mr. Thompson's party followed the old emigrant trail, forded the Klamath river about six miles below the lakes, went west of Little Klamath lake and there caught up with the Bailey party. They then turned north around the south side of Little Klamath lake, crossed over a ridge into Tule lake valley, crossed Lost river on what was called the natural bridge, went north of Tule lake, crossed another ridge to Clear lake, then in an easterly direction to the south end of Goose lake, whence they turned west down Pitt river. Two days after they reached that river, in the vicinity of Hot Spring valley, they were attacked by about one hundred and fifty Pitt River and Piute Indians, both Bailey and Evans being killed and three others wounded. The party was obliged to retreat or rather go ahead, abandoning all their cattle and leaving their clothes, two wagons and their outfit. They took all of their horses, however. The attack occurred about sundown and they traveled all through the following night. Several times, however, it was necessary to stop in order to rest their wounded men, who had been shot with poisoned arrows. The party traveled all the next day, through the ensuing night and until noon of the third day without food. At Fort Crook, on Fall river, they obtained relief and placed their wounded in the care of the government physician. One of them, Ed Sims, who had received serious injury, died the following day. With thirty-six soldiers and twelve volunteers the party prepared to return to the scene of conflict in order to recover their cattle. At the end of two days' journey they reached the spot, found that their wagons had been burned and saw a number of Indians killing cattle and drying the meat. In the fight which ensued four of the Indians were killed. The lieutenant was wounded, having been struck by two arrows, but soon recovered from his injuries. After burying Bailey and Evans the party took up the trail of the main body of the cattle and followed it to the south fork of Pitt river, where they found more Indians engaged in slaughtering the stock and drying the meat. The red men, however, would not fight and fled to the mountains. Many of the cattle had been killed, only about three hundred remaining of the eight hundred and sixty-three head which the party had when first attacked.

From 1865 to 1867 Mr. Thompson engaged in the buying of sheep, driving his herds to Virginia City, Nevada. He married in 1867 and in the same year purchased six hundred and forty acres of land in Coles valley, on which he located and began his career as an agriculturist. He later purchased adjoining acres and added to his holdings from time to time until he owned fourteen hundred acres of rich and productive land improved and developed according to modern ideas. He was at one time one of the most extensive land-owners in the county but has subsequently sold off some of his farms and is now the proprietor of four hundred and fifty acres. In September, 1908, Mr. Thompson gave the operation of his holdings to the charge of his son Clarence and removed into Roseburg, where he is making his home.

On September 8, 1867, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Missouri Ann Wright, a daughter of John and Emily (Simmons) Wright, who crossed the plains from Linn county, Missouri, to Oregon in 1852.

They located in the French settlement now known as Melrose in Douglas county and were among the early settlers in that section. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have been born fourteen children, eleven of whom are living: Pariale, who is the wife of George Leslie, of Philomath, Oregon; Olive, who married Sherman Fortin, of Coles valley; Leonora, the wife of Horace Chicane, a resident of Idaho county, Idaho; Edwin, who resides in Bakersfield, California; Anna Laura, who married W. F. Hill, of Klamath county, Oregon; Lewis, who is the general superintendent of the Monte Christo Oil Company at Bakersfield, California; Clarence, who is operating the old homestead in Coles valley; Chester, also a resident of Oil Center, California; Mary, the wife of Irvin Pringle, of San Francisco, California; Emma, who married W. F. Dillon, of Santa Rosa, California; and Clifford, who resides in Idaho county, Idaho, and who is pursuing his studies in the Oregon State Agricultural College.

In his political affiliations Mr. Thompson is a socialist and is one of the best known pioneer settlers in the section in which he resides. Many changes have taken place in Douglas county in fifty years. Civilization has come, cities have been built, lands cultivated and business enterprises founded and promoted. Mr. Thompson has not only been a witness of this development but has been active in furthering it and his retirement at the present time is a well earned rest after useful labor.

CAPTAIN OLIVER CROMWELL APPLE-GATE was born in a log cabin in Yamhill district, in what is now Polk county, Oregon territory, June 11, 1845. He was the sixth son and seventh child of the well-known pioneer, Lindsay Applegate, a native of Kentucky, and of his wife, Elizabeth (Miller) Applegate, who was born in Tennessee in 1816. Captain Lindsay Applegate's father, Daniel, and his grandfather, Richard Applegate, were both soldiers of the Revolution, and Lindsay Applegate was himself one of the leaders of the great immigration of 1843 which Americanized Oregon and was prominent also in the early Indian wars, and as an explorer.

When Oliver Applegate was five years of age the family removed to the Yoncolla valley in middle western Oregon, when that favored valley was a wilderness, there being only three or four other families in that region at that time besides the Applegate contingent, which consisted of the brothers, Charles, Lindsay and Jesse, and their families.

The system of common schools was in a rudimentary state in those days, and their continuity could not be depended upon for more than a few weeks or months in each year. The Applegate families were fairly well supplied with books, however, to supplement the otherwise meager opportunities for education, and as a rule the scions of these strong frontiersmen availed themselves of every opportunity offered to inform their minds, as well as to become accomplished horsemen, efficient in the use of the rifle and otherwise prepared for the border wars which were liable to occur at any time with the aboriginal inhabitants of the country.

In 1860 the family removed to the Siskiyou mountains near the California boundary, Lindsay Applegate having become owner of the toll road over the mountains, and in 1862, removed to Ashland, Oregon, which continued to be the family home for many years.

During the winter of 1862, the subject of our sketch attended the district school in Ashland, and the next spring received a certificate and in the ensuing fall became himself the teacher, and for four successive winters, very successfully conducted the Ashland school. In the spring of 1863 he became a member of an independent military company, the only one in southern Oregon, a cavalry company known as the "Mountain Rangers," to which many of the leading citizens of the country belonged. In this company he served as a private the first year, the second year as a sergeant and in the third year was chosen captain, receiving his commissions before he had reached his twentieth year from Addison C. Gibbs, the old war governor of Oregon.

In 1865 his father was appointed United States Indian agent over the Klamaths and Modocs at Fort Klamath. By the treaty of 1864 the Indians were to be gathered on the Klamath reservation. The fort was the only place east of the Cascades where there were any white people. Captain O. C. Applegate was appointed assistant to the agent, and that was the beginning of a service that lasted for several years, under various agency administrations, during which time he gained unusual influence over the tribes of southeastern Oregon, an influence that was used to good advantage later when the Modoc outbreak of 1872 occurred, and probably more than any other agency resulted finally in the conversion of the most turbulent of the Indian tribes into quiet farmers and stockmen.

When but twenty-one years of age Captain Applegate had charge of a unique company of scouts, called the "Ax and Rifle Company," because every man carried an ax as well as a rifle. This company consisted of fifty men, the captain the only white man, while different chiefs of the various tribes ranked as lieutenants and sergeants. They cleared the way through the pine forests for a great wagon train of provisions and beef cattle that came down to the Klamath agency from The Dalles, marking the first step in the commencement of operations under the treaty of 1864 for the benefit of the southeastern tribes of Oregon. This was during the war with the Snake or Paiute Indians.

For some time before the Modoc outbreak of 1872 Captain Applegate had charge of Yainax sub-agency, forty miles west of the headquarters' agency, then under supervision of Agent Laroy S. Dyar. Near Yainax was located the main band of the Modocs, under the famous old Chief Schonchin, and with him were to be domiciled the turbulent bands under the haughty Modoc chieftain, Captain Jack. The story of how Captain Jack and his band refused to come onto the reservation, and the subsequent events, make up the history of the Modoc war. In this brief sketch it can only be stated that Captain Applegate as a captain of a company of volunteers and Indian scouts played a prominent part in the bloody drama, and to follow him through its scenes would be to go over the history of that Indian outbreak, which cannot be done briefly.

In 1876 some of Captain Applegate's friends asked to have him appointed general Indian agent for Oregon, assuming that in such a way his unusual experience in the management of Indian affairs could be used to good purpose in promoting progressive conditions to the several agencies in the state. Ex-Senator Nesmith, who was himself a democrat, was an ardent advocate of the plan and wrote as follows, to Hon. Zach Chandler, Grant's secretary of the interior, with whom he had served in the senate: "Mr. Applegate is a gentleman of culture and ability, and, unlike myself, he is a prominent republican and is as honest as is possible for a man to be possessing his perverted political notions. You will pardon me, I know, for proposing appointments to an administration which I do not indorse, but I do so in order to promote the reforms which you have so happily inaugurated." In 1898 Captain Applegate took charge of the Klamath reservation as United States Indian agent, and served as such for five years. Congress then discontinued the position of agent and he was appointed bonded superintendent of the agency and training school, a position which he resigned after serving two years.

During this period of seven years he did much to advance the Indians in civilization, prosecuted to a successful issue their claim to over half a million of dollars for lands excluded from the reservation by erroneous boundary surveys, and developed comprehensive plans for irrigation and drainage, which will add materially to the wealth of the reservation, an area approximating in size the state of Delaware, when that splendid section shall be freed from reservation restraints.

Captain Applegate is always an enthusiastic boomer of his native state, and especially of the Klamath country, the fine section where he has so long made his home, and he has been a forceful factor in the development of the entire country, in its moral, educational and material aspects.

He has been identified with various enterprises looking to the development of southern Oregon, has had experience in the newspaper business and has a reputation as a writer of both prose and verse.

In 1878, Captain Applegate was married to Miss Ella Anderson, a daughter of Rev. Jesse Marion Anderson, a pioneer Methodist minister, who was widely known in southern Oregon as a man of ability and worth. The bride, like the groom, was a native of Oregon, having been born in the territory in 1855. The union has been a most happy one, and three sons and three daughters have been born to them, all worthy of their honorable parentage and giving promise of usefulness to their community and state. Frank Lindsay, the oldest, was born October 10, 1879; Annie Elizabeth, September 13, 1881; Laroy Gilbert, August 19, 1885; Rachel Emma, November 23, 1887; Jennie Margaret, April 5, 1894; and Oliver C. Jr., July 5, 1896. Captain Applegate now resides at Klamath Falls, Klamath county, Oregon. In politics, though not an unreasonable partisan, he has always been a consistent republican and was a delegate to the national republican convention at Chicago in 1892.

FRANK M. HARRIS is the owner of a ranch of six hundred and fifty acres, of which two hundred and fifty acres is included in his home place on the west side of Summer lake. Iron county, Missouri, numbers him among her native sons, his birth having there occurred January 31, 1864. His parents were Zed and Malissa (Pease) Harris. The father was born in Kentucky in 1825 and the mother in Connecticut in 1827. They were married in Missouri, January 6, 1848, and Zed Harris died in that state in 1880. He had devoted his entire life to farming. The mother, not long after her husband's death, came to Lake county, Oregon, with her children and here passed away in 1900. Three of the children died in Missouri and one remained in that state at the time when four of the sons and three of the daughters accompanied their mother to the west. They located first at Willow ranch in the Goose lake valley of California, there remaining until 1888, when they came to the Summer lake valley, locating on the west bank of the lake. Of the children the eldest is Mrs. Flavia McDowell, while the others who reached adult age are: S. B., who died in Goose lake valley of Modoc county, California; Farnum E., of Lakeview, Oregon; Mrs. Della Fisher, of Ashland, Oregon; Clarence C., living on Summer lake; Martin E., of Chehalis county, Washington; Frank M., of this review; and Mrs. Florence Wakefield, of Elma, Washington.

Frank M. Harris was a youth when he came with his mother and other members of the family to Oregon. He resided with a brother and his mother to the time of his marriage in 1888 to Miss Emma Barnes, a native of California, who died here in 1891. The children of that marriage were: Glenn, who died in infancy; and Reason. In 1898 Mr. Harris was again married, his second union being with Alta Platt, a native of Wisconsin. There are three children of this marriage, Dean, Lewis and Ruth.

For more than three decades Mr. Harris has resided continuously in the Summer lake valley and his time and energies have ever been devoted to the development of his ranch and to the raising of stock. His home place is well improved, constituting one of the attractive farms on the west side of Summer lake, and his holdings, embracing altogether six hundred and fifty acres, give him excellent opportunity to promote the work of agricultural development in this section and to advance his individual interests. This he is doing along progressive lines and his labors are meeting with good returns.

CHARLES A. DAVIS is the owner of a fine ranch of one hundred and thirteen acres located in the vicinity of Pleasant Hill, where he engages in general farming and stock-raising. He is a native of Linn county, his birth having occurred on the 6th of November, 1855, and a son of Caleb and Anna M. (Christman) Davis. The father, who was one of six children, was born in Ohio, but in his early childhood accompanied his parents on their removal to Indiana. There he was reared to manhood and subsequently married, continuing to reside in the vicinity of his boyhood home during the early years of his domestic life. In 1852, with his wife and six children he removed to Missouri, whence he later continued his journey westward, arriving in Oregon in October, 1853. The following spring he filed on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres near Halsey, Oregon, which he cultivated for thirteen years and which was the birthplace of our subject. He disposed of this property about 1867 and invested in four hundred and thirty acres of land located about five miles from Eugene. Six years later he likewise sold that and bought a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres near Pleasant Hill in the cultivation of which he actively engaged until a few years prior to his death. He was living at Salem when he passed away, on the 21st of January, 1890, at the age of sixty-nine years, his birth having occurred September 27, 1820. The mother was born in Virginia on the 25th of March, 1822, and died in the vicinity of Pendleton, this state on February 10, 1865. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Davis numbered eleven, as follows: James, deceased, formerly a farmer, who lived in the vicinity of Harrisburg, Oregon; Barton W., deceased; John C., who lives at Shedd's, this state, where he engages in stock-raising; W. E., a ranchman of Granite Falls, Washington; George C., an agriculturist of Lebanon, Oregon; Oliver M., who is engaged in the hotel business at Portland; Jasper P., who is ranching at Clackamas, this state; Charles A., the subject of this review; Mary C., the wife of J. W. Gross, of Halfway, Oregon; Elizabeth H., deceased; and Leander J., who is ranching at Talent, Oregon.

The entire life of Charles A. Davis has been passed on a ranch. He was educated in the district schools and remained at home until he was eighteen years of age, and then started out to make his own way in the world. For two years he worked by the day, and as he was thrifty and enterprising he managed during that period to save enough out of his earnings to enable him to engage in ranching on his own account. He rented one hundred and seventeen acres of land which he cultivated with such success that at the end of three years he bought seventy acres. This formed the nucleus of his present ranch the boundaries of which have been extended from time to time until he owns one hundred and thirteen acres. Sixty acres of this tract has been brought into a high state of productivity and the remainder is in pasture. In connection with the cultivation of his fields Mr. Davis raises such stock as he needs on his farm and hogs for the market.

Charles A. Davis was married on the 22d of June, 1876, to Miss Nareissa Rutledge, one of nine children born to Blasingim and Sarah Jane (Manley) Rutledge. In order of birth they are as follows: Cynthia A., deceased; Daniel, deceased; Louisa, the widow of J. D. Matlock, formerly of Eugene, Oregon; Evelyn, deceased, who had married J. H. Gilbert, of Goshen, Oregon; Blasingim, deceased; Mrs. Davis, deceased; Sylvester, who is deceased; Ida May, the wife of J. H. Buchanan, of Alberta; and Thomas L., deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have five children: Ada L., the wife of Elmer E. Hall, an undertaker of Spokane, Washington; Oren C., a bookkeeper in the sheriff's office at Eugene; Homer, who is deceased; Lee, who is farming with his father; and LaVelma R., who died at the age of thirteen years.

Charles A. Davis is a member of the Christian church, to which his wife also belonged and in the work of which he takes an active and earnest interest. Mr. Davis' fraternal connections are confined to his membership in Pleasant Hill Camp, No. 271, W. O. W. He has always led a life of intense activity and has through his persistent diligence and capable management become numbered among the substantial citizens of his community, where he is held in high esteem.

THOMAS B. TETHEROW, one of Polk county's well known citizens, now living retired in Independence, was born in Platte county, Missouri, on the 12th of February, 1838. He is a son of Solomon and Ibbey (Baker) Tetherow, both of German extraction, the father a native of Kentucky and the mother of Missouri. Solomon Tetherow was reared in the Blue Grass state but upon reaching mature years he went to Missouri and there met the lady who subsequently became his wife. He was very fond of outdoor life and spent much of his time in the woods, hunting and trapping. He was a first-class shot and in his early manhood he accompanied the soldiers when they crossed the Rockies, and with his gun provided them with fresh meat. He was also a bee hunter. In 1844 he and his family left Platte county and went to Texas, making the journey in a wagon drawn by an ox team. Not liking the climate, however, they did not unload their household effects but retraced their steps, again taking up their residence in Missouri. The following year, in 1845, Mr. Tetherow with his wife and eight children joined a train consisting of forty-four wagons with one hundred and twenty-five passengers, at St. Joe, Missouri, and started for the northwest. Six months and twenty days were spent on route and upon their arrival in Oregon, the Tetherow family first located a half mile north of Dallas. They remained there until 1847, when the father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, practically all prairie land in the Luckiamute valley, in Polk county. Here he erected a cabin and he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives on their claim, his death occurring at the age of seventy-nine, while his wife passed away on the 28th of March, 1868. Mr. Tetherow devoted much of his time to hunting and trapping as well as fishing after coming here. The forests abounded with game of all kinds, there being many buffalo and deer, and in the creeks and rivers were to be found practically every variety of fresh water fish in abundance. He was one of the best known pioneers in this section and had many friends. Both he and his wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and politically he was a Republican. Their family numbered fifteen children, ten of whom lived to maturity. Six of the number are still living, as follows: Evaline, who has attained the venerable age of eighty-two years, and resides south of Luckiamute in Polk county; Lucinda, the wife of William Parker, of Ashland, Oregon; Samuel, who lives in Falls City, this state; Thomas B., our subject; Martha, the widow of David Burns, of Dallas, Oregon; and Anna, the wife of Richard Johnson, of Colfax, Washington.

In common with other pioneer children, Thomas B. Tetherow received but a limited education. In the early days educational advantages were very limited, the settlers being few and scattered, the constant menace of the Indians, and conditions generally making it practically impossible to have regular school sessions or to obtain the services of a good teacher. As he was a lad of seven years when he accompanied his people on their removal to the northwest he began his education in his native state. After coming to Oregon he attended school for a few winters, but as the distance was very great he did not go often or very regularly. He remained at home until he was seventeen, when he started upon an independent venture being employed by others for three years. At the expiration of that period, when he was twenty, he was married and with his bride located on one hundred and sixty acres of land, that he had bought southwest of Independence. He cleared and placed this under cultivation and subsequently added to his holdings an eighty acre tract of timber. His fields were devoted to such cereals as were best adapted to the soil and he also raised stock, meeting with success in both branches. As the years passed and his circumstances permitted he wrought many improvements upon his ranch, making it a comfortable and attractive home, as well as a valuable property, and in due time he was able to retire from business life. When he left the ranch he and his wife resided in Monmouth for two years, but in 1891 he came to Independence and bought an acre of land. Here he erected a comfortable residence and they have ever since made this their home. He has been quite a sportsman and in his earlier years took much pleasure in hunting and fishing.

On the 18th of November, 1858, Mr. Tetherow was united in marriage to Miss Martha A. McLaughlin, a native of Pike county, Illinois, and a daughter of Robert and Mary (Griffith) McLaughlin. The father was born in Kentucky but in his early childhood was sent to Pennsylvania to his grandparents, by whom he was reared. After leaving school he learned the blacksmith's trade, and soon thereafter went to Illinois, locating in Pike county, where he met and married Miss Griffith, who was born and reared there. He followed his trade in Missouri until 1853, when with his wife and family, he crossed the plains to Oregon. They were six months in making the trip and upon their arrival in this state located at Buena Vista, Polk county. Here the father acquired some government land that he cultivated, and at the same time continued to work at blacksmithing. He passed away at the age of seventy-nine years, and the mother was eighty-nine at the time of her death. They were both well known in this section of the state. They held membership in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and the father was a staunch republican. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin: Joseph A., who is living in Umatilla county, this state; Martha A., now Mrs. Tetherow; John, who is a resident of Marion county, Oregon; Harriet E., who lives in Echo, this state; Elizabeth, whose home is in Cottage Grove, Oregon; Mary E., who is living at Prosser, Washington; Catherine, of Alberta, Canada; George, who makes his home in Buena Vista, Oregon; William, of Cottage Grove; and Alfred, who is living on the old home place in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Tetherow have had two children. Joseph A., who married Lilly Sebring, is operating a ranch located three miles southwest of Independence. Minnie E. is the wife of John Hildebrand and lives in Independence.

Mrs. Tetherow is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and Mr. Tetherow in his political views is a republican but he has never been an office seeker. He began his independent career with no capital save his ambition and determination of purpose, but by close application, tireless energy and the intelligent direction of his activities he met with the success whereby he is now able to spend his last days in ease and comfort, being accorded the respect of all who know him by reason of his well spent life.

RALPH G. JENNINGS is one of the prosperous and successful farmers of Jackson county owning one hundred and sixty acres of choice Oregon land located on Big Applegate creek. He was born in that county, April 10, 1881, and is the son of William F. and Eliza (Dews) Jennings. His father was a native of Hawkinsville, California, and his mother of Jackson county, Oregon. When William F. Jennings was but one year old his parents removed to Oregon, locating in this county, where he has continuously maintained his residence. At present he is making his home with his son, the subject of this review.

Ralph G. Jennings was reared in his father's home and acquired his early education in the public schools, while the early years of his business career were spent in the Sterling mines. After a number of years, in 1907, he purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, located on the Little Applegate river and for three years he continued to develop and improve this farm, after which he disposed of it at a handsome profit and in 1910 purchased his present home. This ranch contains one hundred and sixty acres and is located on the Big Applegate river, at one of the most picturesque points in this county.

Mr. Jennings was united in wedlock to Miss Letitia Gilson, a native Oregonian, and the daughter of Thomas Gilson, who was one of the prominent farmers of Jackson county. He passed away many years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Jennings two children have been born: Paul C. and William Louis, both of whom are at home with their parents. Mr. Jennings is a loyal and enthusiastic member of the democratic party, following its standard in all national and state issues. He is a member of Jacksonville Lodge, No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Jennings is one of the up-to-date, energetic and successful farmers of this county. He is recognized throughout this portion of the state as an enterprising citizen, always associated with every measure seeking improvement of the business and educational interests of his community.

JOHN J. MURPHY is a well known and successful agriculturist located on a highly developed ranch of sixteen hundred acres where he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He is a native son of Oregon, his birth having occurred on the farm where he now lives on December 29, 1860, and is a son of John and Mary (Goodwin) Murphy, both of whom are natives of Ireland, the former of County Cork and the latter of County Tyrone. The father emigrated to the United States in 1847 and on reaching the new world located in Orange county, New York, where he continued to live until 1852. He then removed to Lee county, Iowa, and thence in 1853 came to Oregon with the emigrant train of Meyer and Walker. On reaching this state he located in Jackson county and there for a short time engaged in work on the Mountain House. He later located a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres on which he established his home. In 1854 he joined Captain Williams' company and served in the Rogue River Indian war until the close of that campaign in the latter part of that year. In 1858 Mr. Murphy went to San Francisco, California, and there was married to Mrs. Mary (Goodwin) Carr, who was the mother of one child by her former husband. Immediately after their marriage Mr. Murphy returned with his wife to his home in Jackson county, Oregon, making the journey with his wife on muleback over the Siskiyou mountains. He continued in the development and cultivation of his donation claim and later added by purchase to his original holdings until he was the owner of twenty-two hundred acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred February 26, 1898, at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife died November 6, 1904, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was affiliated with the democratic party.

John J. Murphy was reared at home and received his education in the public schools. He made his home with his father and was engaged with him in the cultivation and development of his farm properties. His father suffered much from rheumatism and the son was but twenty-one years of age when he practically took complete charge of the operation of his father's ranch.

Mr. Murphy was united in marriage on June 18, 1884 to Miss Gertrude Neil, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clayborn Neil and a sister of the Hon. R. P. Neil, of Ashland, of whom more extended mention is made in another part of this work. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Murphy were born five children of whom four are living, namely: Carl, residing in Ashland; and Murray, Ray and Clyde, all at home. Mr. Murphy affiliates with the democratic party but has never had any time nor desire to accept political office. He is a member of the Ashland Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is one of the most enterprising farmers of the district in which he lives, being numbered among the highly esteemed and useful men of his county and state.

O. E. ROSE was born in the state of Illinois, December 8, 1849, and sustained an irreparable loss in the untimely death of both his father and his mother at a tender age. He encountered farther down on the journey of life other trials and sorrows, but notwithstanding his misfortunes has risen above all obstacles with a manly fortitude. He has succeeded as the soldier succeeds who fights in the battle's front until victory is won. This is in part the key to the character of Mr. Rose who is today one of the land owners in the great state of Oregon, in which he has four hundred and seven acres of highly improved land in Jackson county, adjacent to Applegate, Oregon.

His parents, Charles and Sarah (Cogle) Rose, were both natives of Illinois and in that state they passed away in the early history of their married life. To this family one son was born, O. E. Rose, who was left orphaned by their death at the tender age of four years. Fortunately, however, he found a welcome at the fireside of his grandparents where he received sympathetic and loving care and enjoyed the privileges and advantages of their home. He was reared in this home and educated in the public schools, remaining with his grandparents until he was twelve years of age at which time he bade adieu to the scenes of his early childhood and in company with his uncle, Harve Benedict, emigrated to Oregon. The journey across the plains and over the mountains was made with ox teams and horses. O. E. Rose made the entire journey on horseback. He remained with his uncle as a member of his family until he attained his majority. On reaching the age of twenty-one he filed upon a government homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in Jackson county. This land he occupied and improved and as the years brought abundant harvests and increased means as compensation for his devoted toil he was enabled to make additional investments in land, until he acquired four hundred and seven acres to which he has given the best years of his life in development and careful systematic attention. He confines his agricultural interests entirely to the raising of cereals and hay and in their production his farm is in no way behind the prize-winning farms in this unusually rich portion of the state of Oregon.

Mr. Rose has been twice married. At the age of twenty-two he wedded Miss Nael, a native of Oregon. Mrs. Rose died in 1879, and is buried in the cemetery on Williams creek. He was later married to Miss Lottie Rogers and to this union a daughter was born, Gladys, who makes her home with her father. The mother died February 22, 1910, and is buried in the cemetery of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Jacksonville, Oregon.

O. E. Rose is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a republican in politics. He is one of the substantial and valuable citizens of his county. His long years of residence in Applegate together with his consistent life ever accentuated by integrity and loyalty to all that is true and best for the commonwealth in which he lives have earned for him the high esteem to which the practice of these virtues justly entitles all men. His hearty cooperation and help in all matters relating to the further advancement of his county and community can always be relied upon to contribute to the benefit of the general public.

WILLIAM P. MILLER, who is living at 317 Miller avenue, Dallas, is successfully engaged in diversified farming in Polk county. He was born at Adel, Iowa, on the 17th of July, 1870, a son of William and Lydia (Leming) Miller. The father was born in Clay county, Illinois, December 28, 1831, his parents being William Wilson and Lucinda (Wilkinson) Miller, the former a native of Kentucky, and a son of John Miller, one of the pioneer settlers of the Blue Grass state. In his early manhood William Wilson Miller removed to Indiana, where he was subsequently married. The first six years of their domestic life he and his wife spent in Indiana, but at the end of that time they went to Clay county, Illinois. They remained there for four years then located in Hancock county, whence they removed, in 1843, to Jefferson county, Iowa. They next located in Dallas county, that state, taking up their residence there in 1846, and were the first white family to settle west of Fort Des Moines. There the mother passed away in 1862, after which the father, with two of his children, Elijah and Jane, started across the plains to Oregon. They located in Dallas and there the father passed away in 1866. William Miller, who had been married in Iowa, in 1857, later started across the country to Oregon to join his father and the other members of his family. He made the journey in three months and eighteen days, which was considered excellent time in those days, as the teams had to walk all of the way. Upon his arrival here he engaged in the sawmill business, but owing to the hardships and privations incident to frontier life he became disgusted with things generally and in 1869 started back to Iowa. There was quite a large party making the journey east and Mr. Miller was made captain of the wagon train. His short residence in the west had unfitted him for the conditions he found in Iowa upon his return, and in 1871, with his wife and family, he again started for Oregon. He again engaged in the sawmill business, but at the end of three years he abandoned milling and leasing some land, at a rental of four hundred dollars cash, took up farming. This proved to be quite a successful venture and after renting land for eight years he purchased a tract of two hundred and fifty-two acres, for which he was compelled to incur a debt of five thousand dollars. He industriously applied himself to the improvement of this place during the remainder of his active career, making it one of the valuable properties of the county. As his children reached maturity he gave them portions of the land and he and his wife removed to Dallas and lived retired. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Miller there were born six children, but they lost three sons in infancy. Those living are as follows: Mrs. Chloe Butts, Mrs. Lucretia Holman and William P. The father of this family passed away January 27, 1912, at the age of eighty years, but the mother still survives and makes her home in Dallas. In his political views Mr. Miller was a prohibitionist and cast his vote in support of the candidates of that party since 1853. He held membership in the Christian church, having united with this organization in 1858.

The birth of William P. Miller occurred during the return trip of his parents to Iowa from Oregon, but as he was less than two years of age when they again located in the northwest, practically his entire life has been spent in this state. In the acquirement of his education he attended the public schools of Dallas and graduated from the academy in 1891. Having been trained in agricultural pursuits from his earliest boyhood, naturally when ready to adopt a vocation he selected the one he felt he was best qualified to successfully follow. He has been very successful in his undertaking and has recently erected the beautiful modern residence now occupied by himself and family. The greater part of his land is devoted to the raising of small fruits and vegetables. On his farm he keeps thoroughbred poultry and engages in dairying, having a fine herd of Jersey cows. His business sagacity and clear judgment as well as his agricultural skill are ably manifested in the annual returns yielded by his ranch, the operation of which is under his personal supervision.

In 1894, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Grace Chapin, a daughter of Rawson H. and Cordelia (King) Chapin. Her birth occurred at Kelleys Island, Ohio, August 1, 1870, but she was taken to Kansas when two years of age, where she lived to her eighteenth year, when she came to Dallas. Rawson Chapin was born in the state of New York and was a son of Luther and Mary (Brewer) Chapin, the mother a distant relative of Chief Justice Brewer. Luther Chapin, who was born and reared in Massachusetts, always engaged in farming, first in his native state and later in New York, while his last years were spent in Michigan. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Luther Chapin there were born the following children: Luther, Wallace, Henry, Rawson, Brewer, Martin, Mary and Webster. When old enough to decide upon a vocation, Rawson Chapin decided to follow the lakes, and being an ambitious and enterprising young man he rose to the position of captain, having had the command of several different sailing vessels. Later he withdrew from this and turned his attention to farming first in Ohio, where he owned a large vineyard, and later in Kansas and Oregon. In 1866 Captain Rawson Chapin was married to Miss Cordelia King, who was born in Michigan, on the 22d of April, 1837. They began their domestic life on a farm in Ohio, whence they later removed to Kansas, locating in Ottawa county, where they filed on a homestead. In 1889 they went to Oregon, settling on a ranch near Dallas, which Mr. Chapin operated until 1899. In the latter year they removed to Ellensburg, Washington, and there the father died in 1902, at the age of sixty-nine, his natal day being December 17, 1833. He was a progressive man in all of his ideas, particularly in his political views, always championing every new party, the principles of which he felt assured better government and a higher standard of citizenship. When first granted the right of franchise upon attaining his majority he voted the republican ticket, but he transferred his allegiance to the greenback party when that was formed, while he later became a populist. He next voted the prohibition ticket and at the time of his death he was a socialist, believing that this party's policy promised the solution, if put into practice, of many of the most complex matters confronting the public today. In religious faith he was a Methodist, as is also his widow, who now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Chapin became the parents of four children: Frank, who is a contractor and builder at Ellensburg, Washington; Mrs. Grace Miller; Luther J., who is state agronomist of the Western Washington Experiment Station; and Alice Mary, who married J. L. Dunn, of Portland, Oregon.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been born nine children, as follows: Harold, who was born August 22, 1895, now in high school; Aileen, who was born April 1, 1897, and died July 8, 1907, as the result of injuries sustained at school; Ruth L., whose birth occurred on the 31st of December, 1898; William Earl, who was born January 27, 1901, and was accidentally shot on the 30th of July, 1910; Marjorie, who was born December 29, 1902, and died on the 21st of February, 1903; Pauline G., who was born December 8, 1903; Paul F., whose birth occurred February 10, 1906; Raymond L., who was born on the 25th of July, 1908; and Claire M., born on June 25, 1909.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Miller are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church and take a helpful interest in the work of the various departments, particularly that of the Sunday school. Mr. Miller having the largest class of boys in Dallas. He is one of the public-spirited men of the town and devotes much of his time and attention to the betterment of local conditions. His political views accord with the principles of the prohibition party, and since 1908 he has been chairman of the central committee, having held this office when the county was voted dry. He is also chairman of the law and enforcement league. Every movement inaugurated for the betterment of conditions affecting the moral welfare of the community receives the indorsement and cooperation of Mr. Miller, who has high standards of the duties of citizenship. He is a man of worth to the locality by reason of his high principles and many substantial personal qualities.

RUDOLPHUS S. KNOWLTON. One of the most prominent and highly respected citizens of Coquille is Rudolphus S. Knowlton, who beside conducting a flourishing drug business in the city is president of the Farmers & Merchants Bank and a stockholder in various other important enterprises. He gives most of his attention, however, to his drug store, which is one of the finest in Coquille and which he has made expand and grow by constantly following progressive and upright methods. Mr. Knowlton was born in Tennessee in 1855 and is a son of Horace C. and Mary Agnes (Stone) Knowlton, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of Tennessee. The father of our subject was of New England ancestry, his people having settled in Massachusetts at an early date. His marriage, however, occurred in Tennessee, and in that state he owned a large plantation which he operated for a number of years. He later followed the blacksmith's trade, which he had learned under his father, and afterward engaged in the sawmilling business. He was left almost bankrupt after the war and engaged in farming until his death. He and his wife had nine children: Mary C., the widow of Dr. M. C. Wells; Horace C.; Rudolphus S., of this review; Charles, deceased; Emerson E.; John D.; William; Bruce, who died at the age of eight; and Lella, the wife of John Cate.

Rudolphus S. Knowlton grew up upon his father's plantation in Tennessee and assisted his father in the work of the fields for a number of years. He was not yet twenty-one years old when the family moved to Arkansas and in that state he took a course in the Searey Academy. He broadened his knowledge by making use of every opportunity and by constant and well selected reading and fitted himself for teaching, following this occupation in the country schools for two years. He afterward studied pharmacy and while he was taking this course worked in a local drug store. After some time he took charge of a similar enterprise in Lonoke, Arkansas, managing the store for its owner, who was a practicing physician. He lived in that city for seven years and then secured a position in a pharmacy in San Francisco. After two years he came to Coos bay, settling at Empire, which was then the county seat, and clerked in a drug store for two years, saving his money until he was able to establish himself in business in Coquille. He took charge of his enterprise in 1890 and two years afterward lost his entire savings in a fire which devastated the town. However, he immediately rebuilt, purchased a new stock and reopened his business, which he has continued since that time. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers & Merchants Bank, which opened its doors on March 10, 1909. He was elected president at that time and has held this office ever since.

On May 2, 1892, Mr. Knowlton was united in marriage to Miss Annie Hayter, a native of Coos county and a daughter of W. L. Hayter, one of the earliest settlers on the Coquille river. He crossed the plains from Missouri at an early date and settled in Polk county, coming in 1865 to Coos county and locating on the Coquille river, where he died in 1908, at the age of eighty-five years. Mrs. Knowlton is one of a family of fifteen children, namely: Richard M.; Melvin; James T.; William R.; Annie; Cora; Ella; Robert; Edith; May; Wilbur O.; Charles A., who was accidentally killed in March, 1909; Andrew J.; and Elizabeth, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Knowlton have three children, Owen H., R. Clay and Naomi.

Mr. Knowlton gives his allegiance to the democratic party but never seeks public office. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His business ability, his belief in the future of his section, his interest in local growth and improvement, all entitle him to his present representative place among the citizens of Coquille.

RUFUS N. PHELPS has resided almost continuously in Lake county since 1873 and during the greater part of the time has been connected with the sheep industry, but in 1912 he opened a livery barn in Paisley. He is also the owner of a blacksmith shop and feed yard. He was born May 13, 1869, in Washington Territory, while his parents were en route from Ohio to Portland, Oregon. His father, Joseph B. Phelps, was born in the Buckeye state in 1822 and was there married to Mary A. Prior, whose birth occurred in Pennsylvania in 1830. Starting westward they drove across the country, stopping at different points for a year or two but ultimately locating in Portland. After a short time they removed to Roseburg and Mr. Phelps was employed on the construction of a railroad in the bridge-building department. In June, 1873, he removed to Drews valley in Lake county, where he remained for ten years, during which period he was engaged in running stock on the range. On the expiration of that decade he removed to Paisley and in 1898 took up his abode at Grants Pass, where he died in 1902. His wife survived him for five years, passing away in 1907. Joseph B. Phelps had followed carpentering and also conducted a hotel in the east, but after coming to the northwest had engaged in the cultivation of ranch property and in stock-raising. To him and his wife were born nine children of whom three died in infancy, the others being: Charles, a resident of Siskiyou county, California; Caroline, the wife of Dan Cameron, of Gold Hill, Oregon; Ida Kate, the wife of J. H. Bull, of San Juan, California; Jennie, the wife of S. P. Cleland, of Arizona; Joseph B., also living in Arizona; and Rufus N.

Rufus N. Phelps was about four years of age when the family came to Lake county, where he has since made his home with the exception of a year spent in Reno, Nevada, and six years in the gold mines at Grants Pass. The sheep industry claimed his attention throughout the greater part of the period of his residence in Lake county but in 1912 he purchased a livery stable in Paisley and erected a barn one hundred by sixty feet. The mows hold one hundred and thirteen tons of hay. He keeps seven teams and two saddle horses and also conducts a feed yard. He is also the owner of a blacksmith shop which, however, he rents out.

On the 17th of April, 1895, Mr. Phelps was united in marriage to Miss Adelaide Ross, who was born in Jackson county, Oregon, in 1867, and is a daughter of General John E. Ross, long a prominent and influential resident of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are the parents of four children, Ross, Marie Ethel, Eva and Carl. The family is well known in Paisley and Lake county and they have many friends here. Mr. Phelps has led a busy and useful life, working persistently for the success which he has attained and giving his attention at all times closely to his work.

JOHN L. POWELL. The state of Oregon lost a pioneer and a man whose life had been closely identified with the settlement, growth and change in the state when John L. Powell died on June 11, 1900, in Bandon. He was eighty-four years at the time of his death and had spent almost forty-five years in Oregon. He saw the evolution of a wild and unsettled country filled with hostile Indians into a productive, fertile region, rich in developed resources and supplied with all the conveniences of modern civilization. The history of his life is interesting and its results have been valuable. He was born at Circleville, Pickaway county, Ohio, July 11, 1816. His parents were of German descent and moved at an early date to Sangamon county, Illinois, tak-

Mr. Powell remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age. He then went with his brother-in-law to Whiteside county, Illinois, where they purchased government land. He remained in this section until 1850, when he was influenced by reports of the rich California gold discoveries to journey westward. His original intention was to remain but a short time and he left his family in Illinois. However, his gold hunting proved unsuccessful. He reached the Pacific coast, leading one worn-out horse, which was all that remained of an extensive outfit. He mined during the following winter without success and at the end of that time determined to try his fortune in southern Oregon. He journeyed by boat to Portland, Oregon, went from there to Jacksonville in Jackson county and mined for a short time in that vicinity and at other points. He still met with no success and his life at this time was filled with the hardships incident to poverty. He took supplies on mules and journeyed to the different mining camps, from Scottsburg to Ellensburg and to Crescent City and at one time engaged in the freighting business, having his headquarters at the latter point. He was with a government surveying party and his companions named Powell creek, a tributary of Williams creek, in his honor. He was, however, still unsuccessful financially and in 1852 determined to make a definite settlement in Oregon and engage in farming. He took up a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres on Williams creek and with several others located his home in that section in 1856. The land was raw and unimproved and the conditions of living primitive. Mr. Powell encountered all of the hardships and some of the dangers of pioneer life and his individual experiences made his character even more forceful and vital. Immediately after he took up his land he set about improving and developing it. He built farm buildings out of logs, erected a residence and divided his fields by rail fences. His success was becoming noticeably greater at the time when the Indians became hostile. Mr. Powell left his property for one season in order to journey to the Willamette valley and during his absence everything which he owned was burned and destroyed together with the barns, outbuildings and homes of the other settlers. The savages spared the lives of the settlers on condition that they would not try to save their property. When he returned to his farm he found it a desolate tract of land but he did not allow himself to become discouraged and immediately set about the work of rebuilding. From that time until his death, which occurred in June, 1900, he was greatly successful, although he met with reverses from time to time. He brought to his vocation an industry and thrift, which were important qualities in his character, and a practical knowledge gained through long and hard experience. His farm yielded him abundant harvests and became ultimately one of the most highly developed and important properties in the section.

JOHN L. POWELL.

In 1837 Mr. Powell was united in marriage to Miss Clarinda Campbell, formerly of Kentucky, and to their union were born five children, two of whom are still living: F. M. Powell, who is now in business in Chicago; and Mrs. E. E. Topping. The latter with her husband and four children came to Oregon in 1869 as a passenger on the first railroad train across the continent. They made their home with the subject of this review upon his donation claim and here George P. Topping was born August 15, 1871. He is now practicing law at Bandon. F. A. Topping, another grandson of our subject, is still farming the original donation claim in partnership with his mother. They have added forty acres to the tract, making it at the present time two hundred acres. Mr. Topping is a practical farmer and his methods have resulted in making the land which he operates more productive every year. The two youngest children born to Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Topping were Mrs. James W. Turvey, who resides with her family on Williams creek; and George P. Topping, mentioned above, who lives at Bandon, Oregon.

Mr. Powell died on June 11, 1900, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. His descendants number twenty-three living, one son and one daughter, three grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren. Three of his sons served in the Civil war and the one who is now living, F. M. Powell, is a veteran of that conflict. The pioneers in Oregon were forceful, sturdy and vital men and the conditions of their living tested these qualities to their utmost and intensified them to a great degree. Mr. Powell had all the characteristics of an able frontiersman. He saw the development of a great section and to the best of his ability assisted in it. His life was, therefore, useful and valuable, as it was at all times straightforward and upright.

HUGH R. GRANT, deceased, was a resident of Polk county for fifty-nine years, during the greater part of which time he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on the 10th of November, 1830, his parents being John and Mary (Rice) Grant, who spent their entire lives in Tennessee. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. John Grant were the following children: a son, who died in infancy; Hugh R., our subject; James, who is living in Davis county, Missouri; Nancy Ann, the deceased wife of Reel Brown; Benton, who died at Pikes Peak, Colorado; Rachel L., who is living in Davis county, Missouri; and John Milton, who lives in Joplin, Missouri. The family always attended the Presbyterian church, of which the mother was a member, and the father accorded his political support to the democratic party.

As he was the eldest of a large family of very limited circumstances, Hugh R. Grant had but meager schooling. He remained at home with his people until he had attained his majority, his energies being enlarged in farm work. When he was twenty-one he was married, and he and his bride located on a farm in Missouri, where they resided until 1852. In that year they started for the northwest with a wagon and two yoke of oxen, the first division of their journey being to Elizabeth, Missouri. They crossed the Platte river at Fort Kearney, where our subject was met by an uncle, Jackson Grant, who told him that they had kept account of the teams going across the plains and sixty thousand had been recorded. It took Mr. and Mrs. Grant six months, with the exception of one day, to cover the distance between their Missouri home and their destination in Polk county. Upon their arrival here they took up their abode with a paternal uncle, David Grant, who was living a mile east of Dallas. They remained with him from October 24th to the 3d of January, 1853, then removed to their own ranch eight miles northwest of Dallas, near Falls City, upon which Mr. Grant had erected a log cabin sixteen feet square, without either floor or windows. They lived for some time thereafter in true pioneer style, their bed being made of boughs and twigs, as they had no furniture save what they brought with them when they crossed the plains. Their ranch contained three hundred and twenty acres of land in the cultivation of which, as well as in the raising of cattle, sheep and goats, Mr. Grant met with such lucrative returns that he was able to extend his holdings at various times until he owned five hundred and five acres of land. Later he engaged successfully in breeding and raising high-grade horses. Through his industry and the intelligent direction of his various undertakings, Mr. Grant acquired a competence sufficient to enable him to retire in 1903. He then went to Falls City, where he resided until 1907, when he came to Dallas, and here he made his home until his death, April 3, 1912, when he had reached the advanced age of eighty-one years.

The 12th of June, 1851, was the wedding day of Hugh R. Grant and Josephine Williams, who was born in Richmond, Wray county, Missouri, on the 6th of November, 1835. Her parents were John A. and Nancy B. (Jamison) Williams, who were born and reared in Kentucky. In their early days they went to Wray county, Missouri, but later located in Davis county, where they resided until 1852, when they came overland to Multnomah county, Oregon. They located on a ranch four miles north of Vancouver, on the Columbia river, where they made their home for thirty years. Owing to the state of the mother's health, at the expiration of that time they removed to Vancouver, and there she subsequently passed away. Later Mr. Williams came to Polk county and married Eliza Gardner, the widow of Samuel Gardner, and they located in the southern part of the county, where Mr. Williams died. Of the marriage of John A. Williams and his first wife there were born eleven children, as follows: Margaret, the wife of John Childs, who died while crossing the plains in 1852; Sarah Jane, the widow of Jackson Grant, who passed away in Polk county; Thomas, who died in childhood; Martha, who married Jeremiah Shockey, both of whom are deceased; Missouri, the deceased wife of John Dodd; Judith Ann, who married Owen Bozar, both of whom are deceased; Mrs. Hugh R. Grant; Elizabeth, who passed away in Oregon; Milton, who died in Vancouver; Wiley, who died in Polk county; and Sanford, who is also deceased. The mother was a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Williams gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He always took a very active interest in all local governmental affairs, and represented his district in the state legislature both while residing in Missouri and Multnomah counties. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Grant there were born the following children: Rachel Ann, the eldest, passed away in Polk county. Mary, deceased, was the wife of Andrew Sheldon, who is living in Union county, Oregon. Nancy became the wife of Isaac Hubbard, but is deceased. John, formerly marshal of Dallas for twenty-five years, is now sheriff of Polk county. He owns several ranches in this county. He married Grace Doty of Monmouth, Oregon. Wickliff married Jessie Steele and engaged in farming but is now deceased. David is a member of the night police force of Dallas, where he was formerly engaged in the meat business. He now owns a store in Falls City. Milton B., a rural mail carrier of Dallas, married Frances Brower. Rosie died at the age of nineteen years.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Grant were lifelong members of the Baptist church, and he voted the democratic ticket and for a time served as school director in his district. He was among the last of the early pioneers of Polk county, where he spent the greater part of his life and had a large circle of friends, who accorded him the respect and esteem that is the just tribute to an honorable old age.

HENDRICK H. GODDARD is one of the prominent ranchmen and public-spirited citizens of the Wagner creek district in Jackson county, residing near Talent. He is a carpenter by trade and occupies nineteen acres of the old homestead. He was born November 30, 1858, in Missouri, the son of Blin C. and Damaris (McClain) Goddard, the former a native of New York and the latter of North Carolina. After their marriage the parents removed to Missouri and made that state their home until 1864, when they crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon, spending their first winter on the old E. K. Anderson place, west of Talent. In the following spring they moved to a farm west of Phoenix, where they spent nearly two years. In the fall of 1867 the father traded that property for a ranch of one hundred and twenty-six acres on Wagner creek, of which nineteen acres is now owned by the subject of this review. In 1880 the father bought a ranch at the head of Elk creek, but after residing for two years upon that property he returned to the old home farm, where he lived until the time of his death, in August, 1893, the mother passing away in March of the same year. The father was a republican of considerable prominence in the community and served for two terms as county assessor of Jackson county. He was by trade a carpenter and during his agricultural pursuits at various times occupied himself with the business of building.

Hendrick H. Goddard was reared in the home of his parents and in the schools of Oregon pursued his education. When a young man he learned the carpenter's trade and during the greater part of his life he was employed in the construction of buildings. His little farm, upon which he makes his home, is cultivated by his son, Ormy.

On October 22, 1882, Mr. Goddard married Miss Maggie A. Sherman, of Phoenix, Oregon, and to them were born three children: Fred R., who is attending the Littlejohn Medical College at Chicago, Illinois; and Adelbert C. and Ormy M., both of whom reside at home. In his political views Mr. Goddard is a republican and although he has never been an office seeker he has served for one term as deputy assessor and also for one term as justice of the peace of the Talent precinct. He also takes an active interest in educational matters and for twenty years was a member of the local school board. Fraternally he is a member of Oregon Camp, No. 438, W. O. W. He is one of the well known and highly respected citizens of his community and is greatly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

HENRY WENDT, JR. New Pine Creek is a thriving and rapidly growing town on the California border and enterprising citizens are here pushing forward the wheels of progress. Among their number is Henry Wendt, Jr., who seems to know that success must be wrested from the hands of fate and, therefore, is with energy and determination meeting every situation and winning constant advancement. He is identified with several business enterprises of the town and is also serving as its postmaster. His birth occurred in Beatrice, Nebraska, October 14, 1874, his parents being Henry and Mary (Cluseman) Wendt, both of whom were natives of Germany. Having come to America in early life, they were married in Nebraska and afterward established their home in Santa Cruz, California. Subsequently they removed northward to Jacksonville, Oregon, where they have resided for many years, the father being a stage contractor and ranchman. He has served as a member of the city council there and was street commissioner at one time. In his family were nine children, of whom four sons and four daughters are living.

Henry Wendt, Jr., the eldest son, remained with his parents until he reached the age of fifteen years and in the meantime had acquired a good public-school education in Jacksonville. He then determined to follow the art of photography and, acquainting himself therewith, he devoted a number of years to the work. Locating at Bieber, California, he there remained for four years, conducting a photograph gallery, a barber shop and a candy manufactory. On the 1st of October, 1907, he came to New Pine Creek, where he established a photographic gallery and candy kitchen, but on the 1st of January, 1912, discontinued the operation of his gallery for his business in the candy line was growing and demanded his undivided attention. On the latter date the Wendt building was completed. In it are the Wendt Opera House, with a seating capacity of four hundred, a candy kitchen and a postoffice. Mr. Wendt erected the building and conducts moving picture shows and also furnishes other attractive entertainments in the opera house. His sale of confectionery is large and the business is constantly increasing in volume. Mr. Wendt learned the trade of candy making while traveling and engaged quite extensively in that line of business for ten years. He began learning the barber's trade at Yreka, California, when but fifteen years of age, and continued to follow it until he came to New Pine Creek. Here he concentrates his energies upon the conduct of the candy kitchen, the moving picture theater and the management of the opera house.

In 1905 Mr. Wendt was married to Mrs. Minnie (Nusbaum) Short, a widow, who had one child, Owena. By her second marriage a son, Chester, has been born, whose death occurred August 29, 1912, at the age of five years and ten months. Politically Mr. Wendt is independent and the only public office he has ever held is that of postmaster of New Pine Creek, to which he was appointed on the 23d of January, 1911. He holds membership with the Modern Woodmen of America and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and those qualities which make him a faithful member of these organizations make him also a loyal citizen.

GEORGE W. EBBERT. Sixty years have elapsed since George W. Ebbert, with his three brothers, arrived in Oregon, and here he has since made his home. His birth occurred in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of August, 1829, his parents being James and Eliza (DeVickman) Ebbert. In 1851 the family residence was established in Van Buren county, Iowa, where the parents passed away. Unto Mr. and Mrs. James Ebbert were born twenty-two children, all of whom are deceased with the exception of four sons and two daughters.

Being a member of a large family of small means, the educational advantages of George W. Ebbert were very limited. At a very early age he assumed his share of the responsibility connected with the maintenance of the family, remaining under the parental roof until he was twenty-three. In 1852, the year after the family located in Iowa, he and three of his brothers, James, who lives in Lane county, Oregon, William, who is a resident of Gilman county, this state, and Harrison, whose home is in Salem, decided to come to the northwest. On the 4th of May of that year they started across the plains to Oregon with a wagon and an ox team. On the 4th of August following they reached their destination, having had an uneventful journey. When he first located here George W. Ebbert worked in the mines, but he later withdrew from this and located in the Willamette valley, where he farmed for a time. From there he went to Portland and worked with one of his brothers for two years, at the expiration of which time he went to Lane county. There he was married in 1856, and he and his bride at once settled on a ranch. They began their domestic life in a shanty made of slabs, with the planed side in, continuing to reside there for three years. They subsequently purchased another place located near by, upon which they erected a log house, and there for thirty years they lived comfortably and happy. General farming and stock-raising engaged the attention of Mr. Ebbert, who met with a most gratifying degree of success in both lines of his business. In the '80s he disposed of this property and invested the proceeds in a ranch adjacent to Monmouth, which he still owns. He and his wife are now living retired in the village of Monmouth, where they occupy a comfortable residence.

Mr. Ebbert chose for his wife Miss Elizabeth Landes, who was born in Jefferson county, Iowa, on the 6th of September, 1840, a daughter of Abraham and Amanda (Levell) Landes. The father was a native of Hardy county, West Virginia, and the mother of Wayne county, Indiana, in which state they were married. They subsequently removed to Iowa, where they resided for sixteen years. In 1854 the parents and nine children started for Oregon with a wagon and ox team. They crossed the Missouri river on the 28th of May, and three months later arrived in Lane county, locating in Eugene, Oregon, on the 2d of September. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Landes numbered thirteen children, two of whom, Nancy Ann and Miranda, passed away in Iowa. The others are as follows: William Henry, deceased; Mrs. Ebbert; Martha Jane, also deceased; Sarah; Mary Ann; Melissa; Winfield S.; Zachariah T.; Catherine; Frances Amanda; and Elmira, deceased. The two last named were born in Oregon. The mother passed away at the family home in Lane county, at the age of fifty-three. The father subsequently married again and went to California, but later returned to Oregon, passing away in the vicinity of Eugene, at the venerable age of ninety-five years. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Ebbert there were born the following children: Harriet; Belle; Dempsey, deceased; Melissa; Adna; Idiss; Henry; Lulu; and Elbie.

Mr. Ebbert's residence in Oregon covers the formative period in the history of the state's development, in the progress of which he has taken a deep interest. He has witnessed the introduction of modern methods and ideas in the promotion of the state's natural resources, as pioneer conditions have receded with the advent of a newer and higher civilization that stamps the nation's progress.

RALPH C. FOSTER is the owner of a ranch of four hundred and eighty-eight acres on the west bank of Summer lake in Lake county and devotes his time to the raising of hay and grain as well as to running cattle. He was born November 7, 1874, a mile south of his present home, his parents being James and Elizabeth (Currier) Foster. The father was an early pioneer of the Summer lake valley. He was born in Coshocton county, Ohio, July 4, 1827, and was a son of Andrew Foster, who was a native of Virginia and a soldier of the War of 1812. Removing westward in 1845, Andrew Foster took up his abode in the Willamette valley, being one of the first to penetrate into the wilderness of that region and reclaim wild land for the purpose of cultivation. He married Elizabeth Smith, a native of Ireland, and they had nine children, of whom James was the last survivor. James Foster made the journey across the plains with ox teams in 1845, the train coming by way of Meek's cut-off, with Mr. Meek as a guide. They continued to the Harney valley and Mr. Foster thence made his way to the present site of Corvallis in Benton county. Previous to this time he had removed with his parents from Ohio to Missouri and it was from the latter state that the start was made across the plains to the northwest. On the 30th of November, 1848, James Foster married Elizabeth Currier, who was born in Vermont, June 18, 1832, and went to Missouri with her parents, who died in that state. Mrs. Foster and her sister, Mrs. A. L. Humphrey, journeyed across the plains to Benton county in 1846 by way of the Goose lake valley and the Rogue river, being the first white women who went through the Cow creek canyon. They crossed the Missouri river on the 10th of May and arrived in Benton county on the 5th of December.

James Foster was engaged in farming and stock-raising in the Willamette valley until the spring of 1871, when he removed to the Summer lake valley, which remained his home until the time of his death. He was recognized as one of the prominent and influential residents of Lake county. There were few settlers here at the time of his arrival and he saw the county develop from a wilderness to its present prosperous condition. He assisted materially in this work. He has always been on the frontier, for Ohio was undeveloped when he lived in that state. Missouri was in a like condition while he was there, and when he became a resident of the Willamette valley, he was a pioneer there, while later he was one of the first settlers of Lake county. He was always engaged in the stock-raising business, was the owner of a large herd of cattle and one hundred and sixty acres of good hay land. On his ranch he erected a commodious twelve-room residence, good stables and other outbuildings for the shelter of grain and stock. He had a four-acre orchard containing peaches, pears, apples, plums, prunes, apricots and cherries, and he also raised berries. At one time he made a specialty of raising race horses and was the owner of the noted Oregon Eclipse, which he ultimately sold for seven thousand dollars. He also owned Hercules, a full brother of Oregon Eclipse. James Foster died on the old homestead December 19, 1909, at the age of eighty-two years, and his widow now resides in Lakeview. In their family were the following children: Lorena and J. Manley, deceased; John A.; James A., who is a resident of Lakeview and is county assessor of Lake county; Angeline, William H. and Annie E., all of whom have passed away; Frederick W.; Marion L., deceased; Mrs. Elizabeth F. Klipple; Leuvia S., deceased; Mrs. Eudora Hartin, who died in December, 1910; Mrs. Aurora A. Walters, living in Portland; Ralph C., whose name introduces this record; and Mrs. Lulu Schminck, of Lakeview.

Ralph C. Foster has always resided on Summer lake and from early boyhood has been actively connected with ranching and stock-raising. The industry and sound judgment which he has manifested along this line have led to his success and he is now the owner of four hundred and eighty-eight and fifty-five hundredths acres of land on the west bank of Summer lake, on which he runs about two hundred head of cattle. He also raises hay and grain extensively and his products find a ready sale on the market, bringing to him a substantial financial return.

On the 17th of November, 1902, Mr. Foster was married to Miss Princess Belt, of Corvallis, Oregon, who was born at Independence, this state, and is a daughter of Thomas and Jennie Belt. The father is deceased but the mother resides in Corvallis with her son George. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have four children: Thomas James, Vivian, Dora and Leona.

Mr. Foster votes with the democratic party, but is not a politician, having no desire for office or to mingle actively in politics. He finds that his business fully occupies his time and attention and he is living a life of industry and thrift whereby success is crowning his efforts, so that he is recognized as one of the prosperous and representative agriculturists of the Summer lake district.

HIRAM BETTYS whose demise occurred on the 16th of March, 1909, was identified with general agricultural pursuits in Coos county for more than a third of a century and enjoyed an enviable reputation as one of its substantial and representative citizens. He was born in Rochester, New York, on the 13th of September, 1835, a son of Gillead Bettys, who was likewise a native of the Empire state. When a youth of sixteen Hiram Bettys removed to Canada with his widowed mother, who purchased land in that country. In 1861 he wedded Miss Catherine Desmond, a native of Canada, and in that country continued to reside until the spring of 1866. At that time he took up his abode near Topeka, Kansas, purchased a large tract of land and devoted his attention to its cultivation for eight years. On the expiration of that period he disposed of the property and came to Coos county in the fall of 1874, settling on the Coos bay wagon road at Fairview, where he purchased a quarter section of land. He made all necessary improvements on the place, erecting a commodious and attractive residence and substantial barns. The operation of that farm claimed his attention throughout the remainder of his life, and the property is still in possession of his widow.

MR. AND MRS. HIRAM BETTYS

To Mr. and Mrs. Bettys were born six children, as follows: William, who acts as postmaster and road supervisor of Fairview, Oregon, and who is married to Emma Laird, a native of California and a daughter of James Laird, of whom more extensive mention is made elsewhere in this work; Harry, who is deceased; Albert E.; Barbara, the wife of R. J. Coke, of North Bend, Oregon; Annie, the wife of J. D. Clinkenbeard, of Sumner, Oregon; and Walter, who has passed away. Albert E. Bettys wedded Miss Pearl Fee, a native of Kansas and a daughter of Dwight and Lillian Fee, residents of Looking Glass, Oregon. Mrs. Pearl Bettys is one of three children born to her parents, the others being as follows: Horace, who is a resident of Illinois; and Harlan, who is still at home. Albert E. Bettys started out in life for himself when twenty-two years of age, securing work in the logging camps and being thus employed for two decades. He now lives with his widowed mother and has charge of the homestead farm and also operates an adjoining tract of eighty acres which he purchased.

Hiram Bettys gave his political allegiance to the republican party, being a strong believer in its principles. He served as road supervisor and election judge and also held minor positions but was not an office seeker in the generally accepted sense of the term. His religious faith was that of the Christian church. A man of exemplary habits, of high principles and of upright conduct, he commanded the good-will and trust of all who knew him.

JOHN F. WEEKS. For thirty-two years John F. Weeks has been engaged in general farming and stock-raising two miles south of Creswell, where he owns a ranch of two hundred and fifty-two acres. Mr. Weeks is a Canadian, his birth having occurred in Prince Edward county, Ontario, in February, 1846. The family is of German and English extraction. The father, Minard Weeks, was the second in order of birth in a family of seven children, the others being as follows: Steven, Solomon, Townsend and John, all of whom followed farming; Rebecca, the wife of Daniel Young, a farmer; and Polly, who married James Drummond, also a farmer. All lived in Prince Edward county. The mother of these children bore the maiden name of Masterson. For his wife Minard Weeks chose Charlotte Aldrich, who was also of German and English descent, and a native of Prince Edward county. She was the youngest in a family of three, the eldest being Rebecca, who married John Deuzen, a farmer of Prince Edward county, while the only son, George, subsequently became a citizen of the United States, locating in Ohio. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Minard Weeks numbered thirteen: Court L., a farmer of Prince Edward county, Ontario; Isaac, who was a farmer of Creswell, but is now deceased; William H., a contractor and builder of Chicago; Sarah Elizabeth, who married Henry Clark, of Prince Edward county, both deceased; George M., who engaged in ranching at San Diego, California, but is also deceased; John F., our subject; Samuel J., deceased, who was a farmer of Prince Edward county; Lydia A., the wife of Horace Took, a contractor of Watertown, New York; Hulda A., deceased, a twin of Lydia A.; Eliza J., a teacher in the public schools of Prince Edward county; and three who died in infancy.

John F. Weeks received but a meager education, for at the age of thirteen years he left home and started out to make his own way in the world. Reared in the country, he was familiar with the duties of the agriculturist and found employment as a farm hand. He continued to follow this occupation for thirteen years thereafter with the exception of one year which he spent in Michigan. On the 8th of April, 1872, he arrived in Santa Clara, California, and for three years worked in the redwood forests of that vicinity. The year after his marriage, in the spring of 1876, he bought twelve acres of land in Santa Cruz county, California, and for two years devoted his attention to grape culture, but in May, 1879, he came to Eugene and for a year followed various occupations. He subsequently rented one hundred and eighty-five acres of land in Lane county and engaged in grain farming. This proved to be so lucrative that in the fall of 1880 he bought his present ranch, only forty-five acres of which was at that time under cultivation. He has since cleared and put another sixty acres under cultivation, now annually planting eighty acres of his tract in grain, while he has one hundred and twenty acres in pasture, the balance being in oak timber and brush. Mr. Weeks has always devoted the greater part of his attention to the raising of goats, hogs and cattle for the market and he also raises his own horses. He has bred his horses up to a high standard and now owns some excellent animals, and has sold some of his four and five year old horses for five hundred dollars a pair. Mr. Weeks has fenced his farm and has made many other improvements on the place, including the erection of two barns and a comfortable residence.

Santa Clara county, California, was the scene of Mr. Weeks' marriage, on the 30th of March, 1875, to Miss Emma Lane, the youngest child of James W. and Adeline (Shephard) Lane, the father a native of Kentucky, and the mother of Virginia. The paternal grandparents were Jacob and Dorothy (Schroder) Lane, while the grandparents on the maternal side were William and Nancy (Anderson) Shephard, and the maternal great-grandmother prior to her marriage was a Miss Mary Williams. Mr. and Mrs. James W. Lane crossed the plains from Illinois to California in 1852, settling at Dutch Flat. In 1860 they removed to Oregon, locating in the vicinity of Eugene, but five years later they returned to California and there passed the remainder of their lives. The father died in the fall of 1888, and the mother passed away April 15, 1906. There were eight children in their family, those besides Mrs. Weeks being as follows: Nancy, who died at the age of four years; Sarah, who died in infancy; William J., who is living retired at Cottage Grove, Oregon; Joseph M., who died in infancy; George R., who passed away at Chico, California, at the age of fifty-eight; Adeline, the wife of Charles Harrington, who operates a lumber mill at Santa Clara, California; and Josephine, who died in childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Weeks have had six children: Etua M., who was born on the 12th of June, 1876, and is living at home; Julia E., who was born February 14, 1880, and is now the wife of Adam Schmitt, a farmer of Creswell; Elsie J., who was a musician, born on the 27th of June, 1885, and died on the 21st of August, 1907; E. Leslie, a farmer, who was born on the 7th of February, 1892; Minard E., born on the 12th of May, 1897, and now attending school; and Ermin N., whose natal day was the 28th of March, 1904, and is also in school.

The family manifest their religious faith through their membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally Mr. Weeks is affiliated with Gilfroy Lodge, No. 169, A. F. & A. M. and he votes the republican ticket. He served as superintendent of roads for seven or eight years and for thirty years he has been a school director and is now clerk of the school board. Mr. Weeks is a capable business man and has directed his interests most successfully. In addition to his ranch he owns four lots and a residence in Creswell, and he is also a stockholder and director of the Creswell Fruit Growers' Bank. He has always led an active, diligent life and the prosperity that has attended his efforts is the well merited and highly deserved reward of earnest effort and unceasing application.

HENRY HILL, deceased, was one of Polk county's successful pioneer agriculturists, and at the time of his death owned nine hundred acres of valuable land, that he had brought under high cultivation. He was born in Jefferson county, New York, on the 20th of January, 1829, and was a son of Ladue and Eliza (Taylor) Hill. The father was a native of Connecticut and the mother of Massachusetts, but they were married in the state of New York, whence they later removed to Ohio. Subsequently they crossed the prairies of Indiana to Illinois, settling in Kane county, in the vicinity of Elgin. They next removed to Lake county, that state, and there passed the remainder of their lives. Farming always engaged the attention of Mr. Hill until he went to Lake county, where he owned and operated a mill. He was a public-spirited man and took an active interest in political affairs. When first granted the right of franchise he cast his ballot for the men and measures of the whig party, but later he became a democrat. In religious faith he and his wife were Methodists. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Hill numbered eleven children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of the youngest, Riley, who lives in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

Henry Hill was reared on his father's farm in Ohio and obtained his education in the common schools. At the age of nineteen together with a sister Mrs. Emily Burbank he started across the plains with a wagon and an ox team for Oregon. Six months elapsed before they reached their destination which was Polk county. They first settled on a ranch two miles north of Independence but later Mr. Hill took a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres south of Independence, that formed the nucleus of the homestead now owned by his widow. When word was received of the discovery of gold in California in 1849, he was lured away from the operation of his ranch and started for the mining regions, and the succeeding two years were spent in prospecting in different parts of the state. In 1850 he went to Yreka, where he prospected for gold for a time, then came back to his ranch. Thereafter his entire time and attention was devoted to the cultivation and improvement of his land. This proved to be a financial success, and he acquired sufficient capital to extend his holdings from time to time until he owned nine hundred acres. The greater part of this was devoted to general farming, although he engaged quite extensively in hop culture and stock-raising. He was a capable man, intelligent and practical in his methods, and became recognized as one of the successful agriculturists of the county.

On the 14th of July, 1851, Mr. Hill was united in marriage to Miss Martha A. Virgin, whose birth occurred in Kentucky in 1834. Her parents were Reason and Clarinda (Wammoek) Virgin, the father a native of Pennsylvania, and the mother of Virginia. When a youth of sixteen years Reason Virgin migrated to Greenup county, Kentucky, with his parents, and there he met the lady who subsequently became his wife. They began their domestic life on a farm in the Blue Grass state, but in 1835 they removed to Boone county, Missouri, residing there until 1846, when they settled in Sheridan county, that state, and there they both passed away. During the entire period of his active career Mr. Virgin devoted his energies to general farming and stock-raising. In matters politic he was first a whig, but when this party was absorbed by the republicans, he gave his unqualified support to that party. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Virgin, but all are now deceased with the exception of Mrs. Hill and one son, Samuel, who lives in Sheridan county, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Hill had nine children, as follows: Rosalthe, who died in 1861, at the age of nine years; Aurelia, who died in 1880, and who was the wife of Samuel Bush and the mother of one son, Ellis, who lives in Denver, Colorado; Ladue, who married Carrie Root, and is now operating a part of the home ranch; Mary Elizabeth, who died on the 8th of November, 1863; Lucy, whose death occurred September 15, 1868; Nellie, who became the wife of Harry Denlinger, of Portland, Oregon, by whom she had one son, Wendell, her death occurring in the spring of 1900; Homer, who married Fannie Martin, and is operating part of the home place; Verd, who lives with his mother and manages the ranch; and Garlin, who married George Cohrs of Spokane, Washington. All of the children were given the advantages of a good education and Mrs. Denlinger and Mrs. Cohrs, both of whom attended the Oregon Agricultural College, at Corvallis, taught before their marriage. Verd, who is a member of the Knights of Pythias fraternity, also completed his education at Corvallis.

Mr. Hill was highly esteemed in Polk county, in which he had resided for fifty-six years, when he passed away on the 17th of October, 1904. He began his career here with little capital save his determination of purpose and tireless energy and through the intelligent and capable direction of his endeavors became one of the substantial citizens of the county. He led a very unobtrusive life, and although he took an active interest in all local affairs, giving his political support to the independent party, he never aspired to official honors, preferring to devote such time as was not absorbed by his business with his family, to whom he was very much devoted.

BARNETT Y. ROE is the owner of eight hundred acres of valuable property, situated six miles northeast of Yamhill, and one hundred acres of this tract which is well cultivated shows that his energy and progressive activity have been rewarded. Mr. Roe was born December 15, 1858, and is a son of Thomas and Mary A. (O'Strander) Roe. The father was born in Auburn, New York, and the mother was a native of Brownsville, Missouri. The former, when seven years of age, accompanied his parents to Huron county, Ohio. His parents were married in 1806 and their family numbered nine children, all of whom are now deceased, namely: Charles, Anna, Barnett, Thomas, William, Joseph, Mary Ann, Thomas and Reuben. Thomas, the eighth child of this union, was early called upon to support himself and take his place in assuming responsibilities, his father having died when he was but twelve years of age. Nine years later he worked in a saw-mill in Michigan and there made some of the first rails used for the construction of the Lake Shore Railroad. The rails were sawed from timber and made two by four inches with strap iron nailed on the top side. The progress made is typified by these wooden rails if considered in contradistinction with the steel ones now used. Leaving Michigan, he joined the great number of people going to California in 1849, a trip which cost him one hundred dollars cash in addition to which sum he was to act as driver of a six-mule team which belonged to the party he accompanied on the journey across the plains. His trip proved to be an unfortunate one for him for he was taken ill with typhoid fever almost immediately upon his arrival in California and was thus delayed in his search for gold. When he was able to pursue his undertaking his physician advised him to go further north where there was less malaria. Arriving in Washington in 1850, he settled on the Cowlitz river and for twenty years developed a donation claim there. Having cleared two acres on his farm, he planted it to potatoes and so successful was this crop that he realized two thousand bushels, which sold for two dollars per bushel. The next year he doubled his planting capacity, but that year potatoes were so plentiful that he was unable to dispose of them, even by offering to give them away. In the autumn of 1870 Mr. Roe left Washington and came to Forest Grove, Oregon, where he lived until his death, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. His entire life had been one of exceptional activity. During his life time he filled many township, county and state offices, among them being those of probate judge, postmaster and member of the legislature.

The Roes are of English-Norman ancestry, having come to England with William, the Norman and one of the Roes, (Thomas), was knighted by William, the Norman.

At Monticello, Washington, Thomas Roe, the father of our subject, was married to Mary A. O'Strander, a daughter of Dr. Nathaniel and Elizabeth Jane (Yantis) O'Strander, who were married April 11, 1838, and became the parents of the following children: Mrs. Charles B. Montague, a resident of Portland; Mrs. Mary Ann Roe; Mrs. Sarah T. Cathie, of Portland, Oregon; Mrs. Margaret O'Connor, of Olympia, Washington; Mrs. Evelyn Maria Work, deceased; Mrs. Elizabeth Eastman, residing in Olympia, Washington; Judge John Y. O'Strander of Alaska; Mrs. Florence Crosby and Mrs. Fannie L. Moore, both residents of Olympia, Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Roe were four in number: Barnett Y., the subject of this sketch, who was born December 15, 1858; Walter, deceased; Charles O'Strander, born in December, 1865, and who now resides at Forest Grove, Oregon; and Mrs. Anna Elizabeth (Roe) Goff, born November 26, 1874, living at Forest Grove, Oregon.

Barnett Y. Roe began his independent career in 1884 as a school teacher. He engaged in farming, later studied law and was admitted to the bar in October, 1886. For five years Mr. Roe continued practicing law and gave evidence of more than ordinary ability. His previous diligent study, which had trained him to think hard and conscientiously, and his natural sense of justice, were of great value to him as an attorney. But physically he was unable to continue upon this career, his eyesight failing him. Naturally he returned to agricultural pursuits on the farm which he now manages with progressive and practical methods. The owner of eight hundred acres, one hundred of which is developed to the greatest possibilities for cattle-raising, grain, hay and dairying, he has one of the largest tracts in Yamhill county.

On December 15, 1886, Mr. Roe was married to Julia A. Brown, a daughter of Reuben W. N. and Melvina B. (Fisher) Brown, who were both born in Floyd county, Indiana. From Indiana they came west and settled in Clarke county, Washington, in April, 1877. Now the success of their earlier years so rewards them that they can live comfortably the life of retired farmers. They became the parents of seven children: Abraham and Jane, both deceased; Noah N., who resides in Washington; Mrs. Barnett Y. Roe; Reuben A. and George W., both residents of Monitor, Washington; and Elinora, deceased. Of Mrs. Roe's ancestors, Abraham Brown and John Steelman were with Washington during the Revolutionary war. They both died at New Albany, Indiana.

To Mr. and Mrs. Roe six children have been born: Edna A., at home; Evelyn, deceased; Kate E., who is attending college; and Thomas Reuben, John C. and Charles Brown, who are both living at home and attending school. It is the well planned intention of Mr. and Mrs. Roe to give their children all the education in school and college which will be possible. Mr. Roe is endowed with a feeling of public spirit and national pride and is ever an advocate of the furthering of these sentiments in others. In politics he is an adherent of the democratic party, and fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order in Forest Grove Chapter, R. A. M. He is also a member of the Congregational church. Any community is fortunate in having as one of its citizens a man as upright and as earnest in his endeavors to further the standard of citizenship as Mr. Roe.

W. N. JACOBSEN. Industry—strong, persistent, indefatigable—has been the basis of the advancement which W. N. Jacobsen has made since starting out in the business world when a lad of twelve years. His attention is now given to farming in Washington county, where he has resided since 1906. His youthful days were spent in the middle west. He was born in La Salle county, Illinois, February 14, 1855, his parents being O. A. and Azubah (Thompson) Jacobsen, both of whom were natives of Ohio, in which state they were married and began their domestic life. Hoping to find better opportunities elsewhere they removed to La Salle county, Illinois, where Mr. Jacobsen operated a farm until 1861. He then removed with his family to Nebraska, where he secured a homestead claim and upon it placed the necessary improvements that gave him a clear title to the property. He continued to reside in that state until his death, which occurred in October, 1902. For seven years he survived his wife, who died in 1895. Of their twelve children six are yet living: W. N.; Mrs. J. B. Fair, of North Plains, Oregon; Mrs. L. B. Fair, living near Banks, this state; George H., a resident of Broken Bow, Nebraska; John M., who is living in McCool, Nebraska; and Mrs. Amy Reed, also of Broken Bow. The six who have passed away are John H., Robert H., Ora E., Ralph, Victoria and one who died unnamed in infancy.

As his parents were in somewhat limited financial circumstances, W. N. Jacobsen early took up the task of providing for his own support, and when twelve years of age secured a position that gave him a living. He continued in the employ of others until 1905, and during that period always contributed to the support of his parents. He early learned to place the correct value upon diligence and persistency of purpose and he knew that those qualities would overcome all difficulties and obstacles. While still a resident of Nebraska he was married, on the 3d of June, 1886, to Miss Elva C. Todd, who was born in Middleport, New York, a daughter of John and Augusta (Cotton) Todd, who were natives of England and New York respectively. They resided for a short time in the Empire state following their marriage, and then removed to Green Bay, Wisconsin, where they made their home until they migrated to York, Nebraska, where both passed away, the father in 1908 and the mother in 1906. In their family were six children: Elmer E.; Mrs. Jacobsen; Mary I.; John and Walter, both deceased; and Otto, who is living in Louisville, Colorado.

Following his marriage Mr. Jacobsen began farming in Nebraska, but after some years removed to Joplin, Missouri, in 1893. For thirteen years he continued at that place and in 1906 came to the Pacific coast, settling in Washington county, Oregon, where his wife purchased eighty acres of land. She has since sold that property and he is now devoting his attention to the improvement of a farm of sixty-four acres owned by his wife, of which he has brought one-half under a high state of cultivation, adding thereto many modern improvements and equipments.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Jacobsen have been born three children: Walter H., born March 19, 1887, and now married and living in Blodgett, Oregon; Clyde L., born October 3, 1891; and Samuel, born November 24, 1900. Mr. Jacobsen holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is appreciative of friendship and enjoys the high regard of his fellowmen. He has not had time to take an active part in public affairs, however, for his business interests have claimed his entire attention and the years have brought him a comfortable living as the outcome of his persistent industry. In politics he is a socialist.

CHARLES E. CAMPBELL is Paisley's first mayor, having been called to the office on the incorporation of the city. He is a public-spirited man, willing at all times to give his aid and influence in matters of general improvement and progress and in his administration of the affairs of the newly created city is proving his devotion to the general good. He was born in Eugene, Oregon, January 12, 1867, and is a son of George and Matilda (Gillespie) Campbell, who were natives of Missouri. The mother made the journey westward, crossing the country with her parents, while the father crossed the plains alone. They were married in Lane county and there spent their remaining days, Mr. Campbell passing away at the age of fifty-two years, while his wife was about forty years of age at the time of her demise. He had followed farming during the greater part of his life although he engaged in mining during the days of early mining excitement in California. After losing his first wife he married Mrs. Bullard. There were five sons and a daughter born by his first marriage and two daughters by the second marriage, one of whom is deceased.

Charles E. Campbell, the second of the children by the first marriage, resided at home with his father until the latter's death about 1882. He went as a youth of seventeen years, to Lake county in 1884 and in early manhood rode the range. He subsequently conducted a blacksmith and wagon-making shop at Paisley for a number of years, after which he became interested in the sheep industry, with which he was connected until 1907, when he went to California, where for four years he followed farming. In 1911 he returned to Paisley and his fellow townsmen, who had previously known him and recognized his many sterling traits, elected him the first mayor of the city which in that year had been incorporated. His business affairs are represented by a five-twelfths interest in the Sherlock ranch of seventeen hundred and fifty acres on Summer lake and also by four hundred and sixty acres which he owns a mile and a half southwest of Paisley. The development of these properties is bringing him substantial and merited success. He is interested in the Chewaucan district mines, gold, silver and lead-bearing properties, and he has a mining interest in the gold fields of Nevada. His long residence in the northwest and his sound judgment have enabled him to immediately recognize the opportunities for good investment and have directed the acquirement of the properties which he now holds.

W. N. JACOBSEN

On the 9th of July, 1898, Mr. Campbell was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Wingfield, who was born in Arkansas, October 3, 1870, and about 1872 was brought to Oregon by her parents, Thomas and Martha (Spradling) Wingfield, who remained residents of this state for a number of years. The father, however, died in San Francisco, California and the mother is now a resident of Reno, Nevada. Mrs. Campbell has spent the greater part of her life in Oregon and for six years was a teacher in Lake county, spending three years of that time in Paisley. Mr. Campbell votes with the republican party and is a stalwart advocate of its principles. He served four terms as deputy sheriff of Lake county and has been school clerk. His duties of citizenship are always discharged in a prompt and capable manner and he is a loyal and exemplary member of the Masonic fraternity and the Woodmen of the World. As Paisley's chief executive officer he is making an excellent record, giving to the newly created city a business-like administration.

BURRES L. HASTINGS, who was a resident of Monmouth before his death, in 1907, was a native of Georgia but the greater part of his life after he crossed the plains in 1852 was spent in Oregon. In 1855 he settled on Soap creek, Polk county, and entered upon his agricultural pursuits on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. For four years he cultivated this tract, after which he located on a ranch of three hundred and seventy-nine acres in Pee Dee valley which is still held by his widow, in addition to a tract of one hundred and sixty acres on the Luckiamute river, which she also holds. During his twenty-nine years' residence on his farm he raised cattle and did general farming.

In 1855 Mr. Hastings was married to Sophia Simpson, who was born in Arkansas, April 5, 1837, and crossed the plains in 1845 with her parents, Rice Wilson and Rebecca (Lasater) Simpson. Mr. Simpson was born in Georgia in 1808 and Mrs. Simpson, in Tennessee, in 1812. After their marriage they lived in Missouri and Arkansas until they came to Oregon in 1845, having made the trip with ox teams in six months. They were especially fortunate on their trip not having any trouble with Indians. Arriving at Columbia river, they remained in the north and farmed there for one year before removing to Polk county, Oregon, and settling on the Luckiamute river, where they made their home until they joined the great army going to California in 1850 in search for gold. They were among the successful ones in the venture and soon returned to locate again upon the Luckiamute river, this time purchasing the land which they farmed. Mr. Simpson died at the age of seventy-four years and Mrs. Simpson was fifty-two years old at the time of her death. They were the parents of twelve children of whom four are living: Sophia, who is the widow of the subject of this sketch; Albert; Jane; and Reuben. Mr. and Mrs. Hastings were the parents of four children, namely: Alice, deceased; Reuben, who resides on the Luckiamute property; Hannah, who is a resident of Albany, Oregon; and Rice, who resides in Cottage Grove, Oregon.

Mr. Hastings accorded his political support to the democratic party and was always a believer in the principles of that party. In his business dealings he was upright and fair and to his fellowmen, cordial and sincere. He belonged to that type of men who have built up the west, the optimistic, hard-laboring, broadly human class.

JOHN A. HARRY. Though almost four decades have passed since John A. Harry was called from this life, he is still remembered by many of the older residents of Coos county as a substantial agriculturist and esteemed citizen. His birth occurred in Indiana on the 15th of November, 1827, his parents being Elijah and Belle Harry, who were likewise natives of the Hoosier state. In 1851, when a young man of twenty-four years, John A. Harry came to Oregon, settled in Coos county and took up a donation land claim near Myrtle Point. He cleared the property and devoted his attention to its cultivation throughout the remainder of his active business career, selling the farm at the time of his retirement. His demise, which occurred in 1874, was the occasion of deep and widespread regret, for he had gained an extensive circle of friends by reason of his upright and honorable life.

In 1857 Mr. Harry was united in marriage to Miss Chloe Cook, a native of Cedar county Iowa, and a daughter of S. M. Cook. In April 1851, she began the journey across the plains in company with her parents, who settled on Long Tom creek in Lane county, where Mr. Cook took up a donation land claim and continued to reside until within twenty years of his demise. He passed away in November, 1905, when ninety-three years of age, having for more than three decades survived his wife, whose demise occurred in 1874. Unto John A. and Chloe (Cook) Harry were born five children. Even N., whose birth occurred on the 1st of September, 1859, resides in Sitkum, Oregon, and has seven children. Grant W., whose natal day was February 2, 1864, is a resident of McCoy, Oregon, and has nine children. Nancy Belle, who was born on the 15th of November, 1865, is the wife of James D. Laird, of Sitkum, Oregon, by whom she has eight children. Eva S., born April 13, 1867, gave her hand in marriage to Thomas Krewson of Drain, Oregon, by whom she has nine children. Osmer C., who was born on the 10th of March, 1869, resides in Sitkum and has four children.

In 1875 Mrs. Chloe Harry wedded James Laird, a native of New York and a son of John and Marion Laird, both of whom were born in Scotland. James Laird began providing for his own support at the early age of eight years, leaving home and going to work for others. He made his way to California in the early days and operated the pony express from Salt Lake City to Denver. In 1874 he came to Coos county and took up a homestead in the Brewster valley, near Sitkum. He also became well known as a stage contractor and his efforts were a potent element in the upbuilding and development of the Coos bay country. His demise occurred on the 8th of May, 1909, when he had attained the age of seventy-seven years and seven days. The period of his residence in Coos county covered more than a third of a century and his memory is honored by all who knew him, for his life was exemplary in all respects and his influence was ever found on the side of right, progress and improvement.

The first wife of James Laird bore the maiden name of Katie Smith, who became the mother of six children, as follows: Eunice, who is the wife of John McDaniel and resides in California; Anice, the wife of Robert Anderson, of Lake county, Oregon; Mrs. Iseo Fariss, who resides in California; Emma, who gave her hand in marriage to William Bettys, of Fairview, Oregon; Fannie, the wife of Albert Alford, of Coquille, Oregon; and James D., of Sitkum, Oregon, who married Miss Nancy Belle Harry, his stepsister. By his second wife, Mrs. Chloe Harry, James Laird had four children. Walter, who was born on the 20th of June, 1876, is the present postmaster of Sitkum, Oregon, and has four children. Joseph L., whose birth occurred on the 28th of January, 1878, is engaged in the livery business at Myrtle Point, Oregon. He is married and has four children. Carl E., who was born on the 9th of September, 1880, passed away in 1887. John Hailey, whose natal day was September 8, 1883 married Miss Verna M. Weekly, a daughter of Jefferson D. Weekly, of Gravel Ford, Oregon. Mrs. Verna Laird was one of a family of four children, the others being as follows: Viola E., who is deceased; Mabel G., the wife of Michael M. Minard, of Gravel

Ford, Oregon; and Anna L., the wife of Bingger Herman Laird, of Roseburg, Oregon.

James Laird gave his political allegiance to the democracy but neither sought nor desired office as a reward for his party fealty. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His widow, who has lived in the Sunset state for more than six decades, can relate many interesting incidents of pioneer times which show what a wonderful transformation has been effected as the work of progress and development has been carried forward in the northwest. She resides on the Coos bay wagon road, three miles west of Sitkum, and has many friends throughout the community.

WILLIAM ANDREW CURRIER. With four miles of frontage along Summer lake and a large acreage included within his ranch, William Andrew Currier is developing one of the finest properties in Lake county. Fruit of every variety, vegetables of every kind, the cereals best adapted to soil and climate, all grow luxuriantly here; but the principal feature of his work is the raising of horses, he being recognized as conducting the most extensive business of that kind in his county. He was born in Corvallis, Benton county, Oregon, October 12, 1851. His father, Jacob Manly Currier, was a native of Irasburg, Vermont, born February 12, 1827. On leaving the Green Mountain state he resided for ten years in Lowell, Massachusetts, and went to New York in 1842. In 1844 he became a resident of Missouri and two years later crossed the plains with his brother-in-law, A. L. Humphrey, and two sisters, Elizabeth B. and Sally Foster. He settled on a donation claim near Corvallis and still resides there. Although he has reached the advanced age of eighty-five years, his mind is clear and he relates many interesting incidents of the early days, including his experiences when he served as a soldier in the Cayuse Indian war. In August, 1850, he married Maria Foster, who was born in Coshocton county, Ohio, April 11, 1834, and was a daughter of Andrew Foster, a soldier of the War of 1812. Maria Foster had crossed the plains with her parents in 1845 and she died when her son, William A., was eight years of age. He was the eldest of four children, the others being: Lorena, the wife of J. W. Belknap, of Hanford, California; M. C., living in Paisley; and Anna Maria, who died when one year old. Mr. Humphrey, who accompanied Jacob M. Currier to the northwest, served as a member of the first Oregon legislature.

William A. Currier, born and reared on the old homestead in Benton county and indebted to its public-school system for the educational advantages which he enjoyed, came to Lake county in 1875, when about twenty-four years of age, and settled on Summer lake, where he still lives. On the 19th of January, 1879, he married Miss Kitty E. Hadley, who was born in Siskiyou county, California, a daughter of a lieutenant of the Rogue River war. Mr. and Mrs. Currier became the parents of three children: Ada F., the wife of Francis Kimes, of Hanford, California; Eva, the wife of John Lutz, of Bellingham, Washington; and William Manley, mentioned elsewhere in this work. There are also four grandchildren, the elder daughter having two children, William Francis and Virgil David, while Mrs. Lutz has one son, Harold Andrew, and William Manley Currier has a son, Manley George.

Throughout the period of his residence in Lake county William Andrew Currier has been numbered among its most prominent and respected citizens and enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him. He and his wife are owners of about twenty-five hundred acres of land, of which a tract of one hundred and five acres is near Hanford, California, while the remainder is in or near the Summer lake valley. He has never specialized to any extent in cattle-raising, never owning more than four hundred head, and he now has only about forty head, but he is the largest owner of horses in Lake county. He branded two hundred and fifty colts in 1910 and he now has about eight hundred horses. He has some very valuable horses, standard-bred, and he owns fifteen jacks, about fifty mules and fifteen stallions.
His great business activity has constituted an important feature in the upbuilding and progress of the district in which he lives and the course which he has pursued has furnished a splendid example to his neighbors, showing what can be accomplished through industry and determination and also proving how productive the district is in cereals, fruits and vegetables. He has developed a fine orchard, containing all kinds of fruit, which he raises for his own use and also for local consumption. His apples, known as Summer Lake Beauties, won the first premium at the county fair at Lakeview in 1907, as did also his cherries. His prune trees, heavily laden with fruit, are a beautiful sight to behold, and in 1911 his orchard produced a late Crawford peach which was eleven inches in circumference. His fruit and vegetables have attained the highest possible degree of perfection and he has one of the best gardens in the county. In addition to his individual efforts along agricultural and horticultural lines and in stock-raising, Mr.
Currier has had other interests. He was at one time owner of the Chewanean hotel at Paisley, which he sold to his son. He is a director of the Chewanean Mercantile Company of Paisley. He is likewise interested in the Chewanean & Summer Lake Electric Light & Power Company. His home is pleasantly and attractively located, with the mountains in the rear and the lake in front, the broad expanse of waters enabling him to see for a distance of fifty miles on a clear day.

Mr. Currier's political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party but he has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking, although for four years he filled the office of county commissioner. He was also postmaster of Paisley for two or three years and has carried the mail for a few months at a time on a number of occasions, making the trip from Paisley to Silver Lake, a distance of sixty miles. His fraternal relations are with Paisley Lodge, No.

177, I. O. O. F. Mr. Currier belongs to that progressive type of men who have been instrumental in the upbuilding and development of southern Oregon. Recognizing and utilizing its opportunities, he has promoted the interests and welfare of the county and at the same time has upbuilt his own fortunes until he is now one of the prosperous residents of the Summer lake valley. He has never infringed upon the rights of others and in all his dealings has been strictly straightforward, so that his business integrity and honor have won for him the highest commendation and regard.

JOHN JAMES WILLIAMS. One of the few surviving settlers of the pioneers in Polk county is John J. Williams, whose residence here covers a period of more than half a century. He has been identified with various enterprises in Dallas, and has several times been called to public office both in the city and county, having served for eight years as sheriff. His birth occurred in Granger county, Tennessee, on the 5th of January, 1830, his parents being James Edward and Martha (Wiher) Williams. In the paternal line he is of Welsh extraction, his forefathers having settled in Tennessee during colonial days.
His father was also born in Granger county, and for many years he lived in Panther Springs, Tennessee, but the mother was a native of Virginia. James Edward Williams was a cabinet-maker by trade, as likewise were four of his brothers, devoting his energies to this occupation and farming during the entire period of his active life. In the spring of 1845 he and his family joined a party and train, consisting of forty-seven wagons, that was coming to Oregon. When they reached Jackson county, Missouri, they were joined by eight hundred soldiers, who escorted them the entire distance, six months being occupied in making the journey. The Williams family located at Portland, and at that time there was standing on Morrison street the remains of an old tree, that measured fourteen feet in circumference, and this provided them with shelter until they could build a house. The father filed on a claim in that vicinity but not liking it there, subsequently removed further south, to Polk county. He located on land eight miles south of Dallas, some of which was covered with timber, while a part was prairie, and there he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives. In connection with the cultivation of his claim Mr. Williams also did some carpentry work and cabinet-making, and manufactured furniture for his neighbors. He was a man of intelligence and good judgment, who always took an active interest in all public questions, and was one of the first legislators. His opinion on all subjects of the day was valued by those who knew him, while his views on questions pertaining to the community welfare had much weight in deciding local matters. In his political views he was a staunch democrat. The family of Mr. and Mrs. James Edward Williams numbered seven children; Jonathan, who died in Salem, Oregon; Orlinia, who became the wife of Isaac Staats, but both are deceased; John J., our subject; Wesley, who is living at Rainier, Oregon; Wayne W., also deceased, who was a commercial salesman and a farmer of Independence, Oregon; Thomas, a resident of Independence, Oregon; and William, living at Airlie, Oregon.

The educational advantages afforded John J. Williams were very limited. After the family located in Oregon he assisted his father in his carpentry work and cabinet-making, and they built the first house in Portland. The first eighteen years of his life were spent under the parental roof, but when word reached their community of the discovery of gold in California, he decided to try his luck as a prospector. In 1848 he joined a party composed of two hundred and forty people and started for the mining district in the vicinity of Sacramento. They made the journey in wagons, forty being required to convey their party and supplies. Upon his arrival in the gold fields he worked at the carpenter's trade and also did some mining. He built the first house in the city of Sacramento and soon thereafter returned to Oregon, but made several subsequent trips to California. Together with several others he crossed the north fork of the American river to Los Angeles, on his first journey to the southern part of the state. Returning to Polk county, Mr. Williams lived on the ranch with his parents with whom he remained until their death. Later he engaged in contracting and building and did much work in that line, not only erecting buildings but also constructing bridges. He is now living retired, having acquired a competence that enables him to spend his last days in comfort.

Mr. Williams has been married twice, his first union having been with Miss Alice Eckersley. Unto them there were born the following children: Otho, who is a tailor in Dallas; Ethel, at home; Ralph E., a banker of Dallas, who is also interested in banks in Falls City and Independence, Oregon; Hattie, who married A. J. Rhodes, of Seattle, Washington; and Walter, a banker, who married Pauline Gainer and lives in Dallas. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Williams was married to Mrs. Annie M. (Larned) Stiles, December 22, 1889. She was born and reared in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, and is a daughter of Theophilus and Elizabeth (Smith) Larned who were natives of the same county, where they spent their entire lives. Upon attaining womanhood she married Samuel C. Stiles, who was a harness-maker, and in 1853 they came to Oregon and here he passed away in 1886. They had one child, Frank Stiles, who is now engaged in farming in Polk county.

Mr. Williams gives his political allegiance to the democratic party. He has always taken an active interest in all public affairs and first entered official life in 1874, when he was elected sheriff of Polk county. He gave most efficient service in this capacity and discharged the duties of the office for eight years. He has since been street commissioner and has also represented his ward in the city council. Fraternally he is a charter member of both the Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges of this city and Mrs. Williams holds membership in the Christian church. It is sixty-six years since Mr. Williams first came to Oregon and the greater part of that time has been spent in Polk county. He has been a resident of Dallas for thirty-seven years, and many are the interesting reminiscences he relates of the early settlers and the pioneer days. The period of his residence in Oregon covers the great formative epoch in the history of the state's development, the progression of which he has observed with the keen pleasure of one who from the first saw its wonderful possibilities, fully realizing and appreciating its great natural resources and advantages.

GROVE GAYLORD SWAN, a representative agriculturist and esteemed citizen of Coos county, is the owner of a tract of land comprising one hundred and forty-eight acres, seventy-five acres of which is in a high state of cultivation. His birth occurred in Ohio on the 10th of December, 1850, his parents being Edward and Pamilla (Fitch) Swan, who were natives of New York and Massachusetts respectively. Their children were four in number, namely: Edward and Lewis, who died in infancy; Emmie Elizabeth, the mother of two children and the wife of Frank Ransom, of Berkeley, California; and Grove Gaylord, of this review.

Grove Gaylord Swan, who was a youth of eighteen when his father died, remained under the parental roof until twenty years of age. At that time he came west, settling on the east fork of the Coquille river in Coos county, Oregon, where he took up an unsurveyed tract of land comprising one hundred and sixty-eight acres. There was not even a trail through the heavily timbered tract, which was inhabited by elks, bears and deer. By resolute and untiring industry Mr. Swan at length cleared the property and has gradually improved the same until it is today one of the most productive and valuable farms of the county. He sold twenty acres of the place but still owns one hundred and forty-eight acres and as an agriculturist has won gratifying success. For the past five years or since its organization he has served as secretary of the Coquille Valley Fruit Association, and he is also the president of the Dora Cemetery Association.

On the 1st of February, 1882, Mr. Swan was married to Miss Mary I. Dysert, a native of Missouri and a daughter of Aaron and Angeline (Woods) Dysert, who crossed the plains to this state with ox teams in 1859 and settled in Douglas county. They were the parents of ten children, five of whom survive, as follows: David, who is a resident of Douglas county, Oregon; Cimara, the wife of George Cassidy, of California; William, who makes his home in Douglas county, this state; Mrs. Mary Swan; and Annie, the wife of David Crockett Krantz, of Arago, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Swan have been born five children, namely: William, deceased; Annie, the wife of Bruno Lang, of Myrtle

MR. AND MRS. GROVE G. SWAN

Point, Oregon, by whom she has one child, Tillie; LeRoy J., at home with his parents; Edith, the wife of John Neer, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; and Itty True, who has completed her education and is at home. All of the children were educated in the district schools of Coos county.

Grove Gaylord Swan is a staunch republican and holds the office of justice of the peace, the duties of which position he has commendably discharged for a number of years. The cause of education has ever found in him a warm friend and for a period of twenty years he served as director and clerk of the school board. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the United Brethren church, in which he serves as general steward. He belongs to the Grange. Mr. Swan has resided on his present farm for more than four decades and is well known and highly esteemed throughout the community.

WILLIAM FOX. Among the native sons of Oregon of English parentage may be mentioned William Fox, who lives on his sixty-one acre ranch on Wagner creek in Jackson county near Talent. He was born on Jackson creek, December 21, 1864, a son of Heaton and Mary A. (Richards) Fox, both natives of Yorkshire, England, being reared and married in the place of their nativity. The father came to the new world as a young man and joined some of his brothers in Wisconsin, where he resided for a time, after which he crossed the plains to Crescent City, California, and there obtained employment on a ranch. He subsequently removed to Oregon and engaged in mining on Jackson creek in Jackson county, where he met with considerable success. A little later he returned to England where he was married, and shortly afterward came back with his bride to Oregon and, being a miller by trade, took up the old Eagle mill in Jackson county and subsequently operated the old Phoenix mill. Later he took up a homestead on Wrights creek, where he made his home and for a time conducted the Ashland mills. Following this he removed to Ashland where he resided for about thirty years. During the time he lived there he operated the Ashland mills for a time, and later was employed in the implement business and ran a blacksmith shop. His death occurred in 1910, long surviving his wife, who had passed away about 1876.

William Fox was reared at home and during his youth acquired a common-school education in Jackson county. After attaining manhood's estate he continued at home for several years, working at various occupations. In 1895 he with another man in partnership bought a transfer business in Ashland, which they conducted for about five years. He next engaged in the livery business, being thus employed for about five years and then removed to his present home, a ranch of about sixty-one acres on Wagner creek where he has since resided.

Mr. Fox was married in 1898 to Miss Anna Belle Briner, a native of this county, and one child, Eula Bay, has been born to them.

In his political affiliations Mr. Fox is a republican. He belongs to Ashland lodge, No. 23, A. F. & A. M. and is a member of Granite Lodge, No. 23, K. P. He also belongs to Granite Tent, No. 4, K. O. T. M. He is one of the extensively known and highly esteemed men of Jackson county, a business man of ability and a popular citizen.

JOHN P. IRVIN, who lives retired in Estacada, Oregon, was born in Jessamine county, Kentucky, February 26, 1836. His parents were John L. and Nancy (Nave) Irvin, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky. They were married in the latter state and there spent the remainder of their lives, the father passing away in 1838. The mother, surviving him for several years, passed away at the age of sixty-seven. In their family were two children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the elder. The younger, Elizabeth, died in infancy. After the father's death the mother married again, her second union being with Owen Minor, of Kentucky. Mr. Minor passed away several years before his wife. By her second union the mother had four children: Joseph E., Macy E., Emily H., and Annie.

John P. Irvin received his education in the common schools, and at the age of sixteen started out in life for himself by learning the blacksmith trade. He worked in the employ of others for six years, and then opened a shop of his own at Independence, Missouri, which he conducted for three years. Subsequently he spent two years in the mines of Colorado, and then resumed work at his trade in Atchison, Kansas, being thus engaged five years. He afterward opened a blacksmith shop in Harlan, Kansas, which he conducted for three years. He then purchased a ranch at Lonejack, Missouri, but after operating it for three years, he sold his interests and moved to Independence, and in partnership with his father-in-law, engaged in the lumber business. He remained there until 1875, when he came to Oregon, settling at Salem, and once more resumed work at the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until 1880. In that year he removed to Clackamas county where he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land, four miles east of Estacada, operating the same until 1909, when he retired and took up his abode in a beautiful home in this city. He still owns forty-four acres of land.

In August, 1862, Mr. Irvin married Miss Mary K. Shortridge, who was born in Independence, Missouri, May 5, 1844, a daughter of John T. and Sallie A. (Phelps) Shortridge. The parents were born near Louisville, Kentucky, but were married in Missouri, and it was in Independence, that state, that the mother passed away. Several years later the father again married and removed to Denver, where he died in 1894. In his family were three children, of whom Mrs. Irvin was the eldest. The others were Lillian M. and John Edgar, both of whom are deceased, the latter passing away in childhood. To Mr. and Mrs. Irvin were born ten children, five of whom are still living. They are: Alice A., who was born in December, 1865, and is now the wife of Frank L. Folsom, of Rice, Stevens county, Washington; John T., who was born December 2, 1867, and is at home; Frank, who was born March 22, 1869, married Ada Rich and now resides in Boring, Oregon; J. A., who was born January 2, 1875, married Miss Mildred A. Davis, and now resides at Garfield; and W. K., who was born February 12, 1877, and is at home. Those deceased are: Anna B., who became the wife of Fred M. Covey and died in 1902; Charles C., who died September 28, 1889; Katie Maud and George S., both of whom died in infancy; and Nannie, who died at the age of fourteen months.

In his political views Mr. Irvin is a democrat, and he and his family are members of the Christian church. He has now resided in Clackamas county for more than thirty-seven years, and he has not only been an interested witness, but has been a helpful factor in the progress and advancement that have here been made. He has led a busy life, and by hard and faithful work has earned the comfortable competence that he is now enjoying.

DAN MATTSON is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits on a well developed ranch, which he owns, located six miles from Marshfield on Catchings inlet, Coos county, Oregon. He was born in Finland, April 17, 1868, and is a son of Matt and Lizzie Mattson. The father died many years ago in Finland but the mother is still living there at the age of sixty-six years. To Mr. and Mrs. Matt Mattson one son was born, Dan, who is the subject of this review.

Dan Mattson emigrated to America in 1888, settling first in Marshfield, Oregon, where for some years he was engaged in the mining and logging business. In 1893 he took up a homestead in township 24, range 10, in Coos county. In 1906 he disposed of that property and purchased a farm of fifty-five acres located six miles from Marshfield off Catchings inlet where he now resides. He is successfully engaged in dairy farming and purposes, it being his intention to plant a large orchard of well selected trees and ultimately devote himself to the fruit-growing business.

Mr. Mattson was united in marriage December 12, 1906, to Mrs. Josephine (Nyman) Holm, the widow of August Holm, who died in May, 1901. To her union with Mr. Holm four children were born: Arthur A., who was born July 28, 1897; Estrid S., born January 28, 1899; Irene A., whose birth occurred in August, 1900; and Earnest Fridolf, born February 8, 1902. Mrs. Mattson is the daughter of Frederick and Sophia Nyman, both of whom were natives of Finland, where her father died at the age of seventy-four years and her mother at the age of seventy-five years. To her parents eleven children were born, of whom five are still living, three being residents of Finland. Those in this country are: Josephine, who is the wife of the subject of this review; and Herman, a resident of Seattle, Washington. Mrs. Mattson emigrated to America in 1893, settling first at Coos bay where she has since continued to reside.

Mr. Mattson is affiliated with the republican party, but has never sought political office of any kind. He has, however, served as a member of the school board for many years. He is a member of Suomi Lodge, No. 1, of Marshfield, and he and his family are members of the Lutheran church. He is one of the enterprising and useful citizens of his county and a man always associated with the advancement of every public measure intended to improve the condition of the people.

PHILLIP E. DRANE has been engaged in the general merchandise business in Coquille for eleven years and during that time has built up a prosperous and rapidly increasing trade which is evidence of his ability and of the straightforward and honorable methods by which his enterprise is conducted. He has been a resident of Oregon since 1873 and has been engaged in various business enterprises in Coos county since that time. He was born in Kentucky in 1854 and is a son of Thomas and Mary Drane, natives of Virginia. His father died when our subject was eleven years of age and his mother made her home with her children for a number of years. She moved from Kentucky to Kansas and then to Texas and finally to Oklahoma where she died at the age of ninety years. Later he was adopted by Mordica Day with whom he lived until he was sixteen. In that year he went to Kansas and after three years in that state came to Coos county, settling on the Coquille river where he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres near Arago. Upon this he carried on general farming, operating and improving his property for seven years, abandoning agricultural pursuits at the end of that time in order to engage in business. He went to Coquille and operated a hotel, working in a sawmill during the same period. For ten years he conducted a butcher shop in the city and in 1901 erected his present building and established himself in the general merchandise business which he has followed since that time. He has sought success by straightforward and worthy means and has proven capable and reliable, his industry and well directed activity bringing him a gratifying measure of prosperity. He has invested his money judiciously in local enterprises being a stockholder in two sawmills near Coquille and also in a creamery. He owns his store building and other town property and resides in an attractive and pleasant home.

In 1877 Mr. Drane was united in marriage in Coos county to Mrs. Belle Pike the widow of Russell Pike of New Hampshire and a daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Shambrook) Smith, natives of England. Her parents died in Douglas county. Mr. and Mrs. Drane became the parents of two children, Mary, who was born in February, 1878, is the wife of B. F. Lawrence, of Indianapolis, Indiana. He is editor of the Indianapolis Star, the Terre Haute Star, and also of the Muncie Star papers. Julia, whose birth occurred in October, 1880, became the wife of E. E. Johnson of Coquille. He is manager of the Randolph Lumber Company on the Coquille river, and is also interested in the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille and is president of the Bandon Water Company. The family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

Mr. Drane gives his allegiance generally to the democratic party but often reserves independence of judgment in regard to political issues. He has never sought public office, being a practical business man interested in the growth of his enterprise and capable of promoting it. He has been quick to perceive opportunities for advancement and in this way has made his business prosperous. The straightforward and upright qualities which are the foundation of his commercial prosperity are elements in his character and have made him successful in business and important in citizenship.

WILLIAM A. COLLVER for many years past was one of the successful farmers of Coos county. He has for some years lived on his highly cultivated ranch located on Catching inlet, six miles up the inlet from Marshfield. He was born in Douglas county, Oregon, May 14, 1855, and is a son of Alfred B. and Ruth (Rice) Collver, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Illinois. The parents were married in Iowa where the father had preempted a homestead upon which he established his home immediately after his marriage and there continued to live for a number of years. In 1852 he emigrated to Oregon, crossing the great plains and stopping for one winter on his journey in Salt Lake City, Utah. In the spring he continued his westward course and on reaching Oregon settled in Douglas county and took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres near the town of Oakland. Upon that property he continued to live until 1857, at which time he sold his claim and settled on Coos river in Coos county, at which place he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land and later added additional land which he obtained by purchase until he owned a farm consisting in all of two hundred and forty acres. Some time afterward he purchased one hundred and sixty acres located at a point on the bay where Cooston now stands. On that farm he did not reside, but afterward he moved to Culvert Point and there homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land and devoted himself to its improvement and cultivation until the time of his death which occurred at the age of eighty-two years, the mother passing away shortly afterward. To them eleven children were born: Henrietta, who resides at Catching's inlet; Ansel, of Forest Grove; Mrs. Adelia Powell, of Tie valley, Wasco county, Oregon; Orace G., of Culver, Crook county; William A., of this review; John T., of North Bend; Sarah D., who became the wife of W. H. Church and is now deceased; Andrew F., of Newport, Oregon; Arthur Howard, of Coquille, Coos county; Tillo M., who resides near Catching inlet, in Coos county; and Philura, who died at the age of two years.

William A. Collver was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of Marshfield, later attending high school in Marion county. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-eight years of age after which he became a carpenter. He also took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in Coos county, located near Catching inlet. He later purchased one hundred and twenty acres additional and upon that property established his home and continued to reside for twenty-six years. He later disposed of a portion of that farm and purchased ninety-seven acres, retaining forty acres of his original farm, and upon this land he has been successfully engaged in dairy farming. The farm is now operated by his son-in-law.

On January 1, 1890, Mr. Collver was united in marriage to Miss Naomi Steinmon, who was born in Kansas on August 4, 1872, and is a daughter of Joseph and Josephine (Egnet) Steinmon. The parents settled in Douglas county, Oregon, in 1875, and later removed to Coos county where they filed on a government homestead which was their home for a number of years, after which they sold the property and moved to Catching inlet. In 1906 they took up their abode at Tillamook in Tillamook county, where the mother died in 1910, but the father is still living. They became the parents of fifteen children of whom seven are now living: Mrs. Mary Blake, who resides on the Coos river; Mrs. Sarah Blake, of Marshfield; Isaac, a resident of Tillamook; Naomi, now Mrs. William A. Collver; Daniel, of Allegany, Coos county; Mrs. Esther Barnes, of Woodland, Washington; and Eli, who resides in Tillamook. To Mr. and Mrs. Collver two children have been born. Josephine Ruth, the elder, is the wife of Fred G. Messerle, who is engaged in operating his father-in-law's farm, and to them has been born a son, Everett C., whose natal day was March 31, 1912. Myrtle L. is the wife of James J. Foster, who resides on Coos river, and they are the parents of a daughter, Marie A. N., who was born September 21, 1911.

Politically Mr. Collver is affiliated with the socialist party. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and also of the Woodmen of the World of Marshfield and he and his family are members of the United Brethren church at Marshfield. He is one of the enterprising and valued citizens of Coos county and a man who is deeply interested in every educational and religious movement intended to improve the condition of the people in his county and state.

ROBERT MARSDEN, JR., is one of the enterprising business men of Marshfield, where he is successfully engaged in the operation of a very profitable moving picture business. He was born in Plattbridge, England, November 8, 1882, and is a son of Robert and Rachel (Barnes) Marsden. The parents were married in England and in 1887 the father emigrated to America, settling at Centerville, Iowa, and one year later was joined by his family. They established their home at Centerville, where Mr. Marsden, Sr., was engaged in coal mining for the nine years following. In 1896 he came to Coos county and in 1897 his family came to Oregon and settled at Riverton, Coos county, where he remained for one year and then took up his residence in Marshfield. While residing in Riverton he was engaged in coal mining and for some time after settling at Marshfield he continued to fill the position of foreman of the Riverton Coal Company at Klondike, in this state. He later engaged in business at Marshfield, in which he continued until 1911, when he retired from active business life. At the time of his retirement he was one of the largest real-estate owners of residence and business property at Marshfield. He has, however, recently disposed of fifty thousand dollars worth of his city holdings but still retains approximately fifteen thousand dollars worth of city property and farm lands scattered in various portions of the county. Mrs. Marsden passed away in 1910. At the age of sixty-six years Robert Marsden, Sr., is devoting his time to the care of his personal and real-estate interests at Marshfield. In his family were nine children: Richard, who is engaged in mining at Wilkinson, Washington; Peter, who is assistant manager of the Crane Plumbing Supply Company of Portland; John, a resident of Marshfield; Rachel, the wife of E. M. Smith, of Flagstaff, Coos county; Alice, the wife of Arnold Bradshaw, of Albia, Iowa; Robert, of this review; Samuel, who is the owner of a moving picture theater and resides at Orange, California; James, whose death occurred when he was twenty-six years of age; and Samuel, who passed away when he was a child of eleven months.

Robert Marsden, Jr., was reared at home and received his early education in the schools of Oregon. He started in life for himself at the age of sixteen years, being first engaged in the newspaper business, in which he continued for three years, and later added to his paper business that of a general confectionery store. Subsequently he invested in a gasoline boat which he leased out to various societies and organizations. After successfully operating these lines for a period of eighteen months he disposed of all his interests, as above described, and invested in a pool and billiard hall, with which he was continuously identified for four years, after which he disposed of the property and later, in company with his brother, purchased a moving picture theater at Marshfield and in that business continued in partnership with his brother for some time. He afterward purchased the entire interests of his brother and has since been sole owner of the business which he is operating with great success.

Robert Marsden, Jr., was united in marriage in 1906 to Miss Eulalia F. Cordes, a native of Marshfield and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Cordes. The father was one of the early pioneers of Oregon and has for many years lived a retired life in Marshfield. To Mr. and Mrs. Cordes were born four children, all of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs.

Marsden are the parents of one son, Wallace Franklin, who was born November 11, 1909.

Mr. Marsden is affiliated with the republican party, and both he and his wife are members of the Episcopal church of Marshfield. He is one of the enterprising and popular men of Marshfield and is well known throughout Coos county. His integrity as a business man is above reproach and his influence is always to be counted on to advance in every just and laudable way the welfare of his county and state.

JOSEPH FLOYD HAGA, well known in Coos county as a representative farmer, was born in Grayson county, Virginia, January 23, 1849, a son of Jackson and Polly (Fry) Haga, who were likewise natives of the Old Dominion although the paternal grandparents were natives of Germany. In the family were the following children: Susanna, deceased; Joseph Floyd, of this review; Malinda, the wife of Nicholas Phipps, of Virginia; Polly Jane, who married John Ham, of Eugene, Oregon; Jincy, the wife of Joseph Ham, also residing in Eugene; and Andrew Jackson, living in Virginia.

At the age of fifteen years Joseph Floyd Haga started out to earn his own living. He was about thirteen years of age at the time of his father's death. He had spent his youth upon the home farm and was indebted to the district schools for his education, but his opportunities in that direction were somewhat limited. He was about sixteen years of age when he was married. He possessed industry and determination and, working hard and long, he saved enough money to buy a place upon which he lived for nearly twenty years. On leaving his old home he came direct to Eugene, Oregon, arriving in 1883, with about twenty-five dollars in money. Here he began by renting land, hoping that by coming to a new country he would give his children better advantages. Again the family exercised the strictest economy and unfaltering industry, and finally Mr. Haga was able to purchase a place near Eugene. After a short time he sold that and removed to Coos county, renting a farm on Bear creek, where he lived for several years. He then preempted one hundred and sixty acres near where he now makes his home. In the early days he worked in the logging camps and did everything he could to make a good start. Later he bought three hundred and fifty acres, occupying the farm for a time or until 1904, when he sold that property and purchased the old Pruette place of one hundred and twenty acres, on which he is now living. He is engaged in the dairy business on a large scale, also raises stock for the market and carries on general farming. His life record indicates what may be accomplished when perseverance, diligence and determination lead the way.

In September, 1865, Mr. Haga was united in marriage to Miss Malinda Dickson, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of Wesley and Charlotte (Phipps) Dickson, who were also natives of the same state and in whose family were six children: Jane, now deceased; Sarah, the wife of Jerome Anderson, of Virginia; Mahala, who has also passed away; Joseph Wiley, of Virginia; Marion, of Kentucky; and Mrs. Haga. The last named by her marriage has become the mother of eleven children: Sarah I., the wife of J. R. Cox, of Parkersburg, Oregon; George Columbus, who is married and has one child, and who lives with his father; Wesley J., of Parkersburg, Oregon, who is mentioned on another page of this work; Docia, who married Frank Flam, of Parkersburg; Frances, the wife of John McAdams, of Coquille; David, who died in infancy; John W., who lives in Parkersburg; Polly, the wife of E. M. Randleman, of Parkersburg; Gussie, who wedded Elmer Doyle, of Parkersburg; Elizabeth, the wife of Frank Van Leuven, of Parkersburg; and Joseph M., who lives with his parents and has charge of the ranch. Since 1911, when the father retired from active farming, the sons have cultivated the fields and now have the management of the old home property which is pleasantly and conveniently located four and a half miles from Bandou, on the Bear creek road. In politics Mr. Haga is a republican and has served as road supervisor. He does not seek nor desire office, however, but manifests a public-spirited interest in all that pertains to the general good. For four terms he has served as school director and the cause of education finds in him a stalwart champion. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and to the State Grange, and is interested in various elements, movements and projects which tend to advance the intellectual, material, political and moral progress of the community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Haga are members of the Baptist church.

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH E. HAGG

G. M. ALLEN is engaged in the cultivation of a tract of land comprising three hundred and thirty-nine acres located two miles south of Amity that has been in the possession of the family for sixty-four years. He was born in Buchanan county, Missouri, on December 17, 1844, and is a son of Solomon and Nancy (Powell) Allen. The father was a native of Hancock county, Missouri, and the mother of North Carolina, and they were married in the former state. With his wife and family Mr. Allen began the long trip across the plains to Oregon in the spring of 1847, arriving at Portland on the 14th of October. On his way he had traded a sack of flour to some Indians for a pony, and this same pony together with a silver watch and three hundred dollars procured for him a section of land, more than half of which is now being operated by his son, G. M., our subject. Here the family located, the parents continuing to make this property their home during the remainder of their lives. With such assistance as his elder sons could render Mr. Allen engaged in improving and cultivating his place during the balance of his active career, meeting with good success in his agricultural pursuits. In the family were seven children, of whom our subject is the youngest, and the others according to birth are as follows: William P., deceased; John W., an Indian war veteran, residing in Montana; Smith, deceased; Emeline and Elizabeth, also deceased; and Levi, a resident of southern Oregon.

As he was only three years of age when he accompanied his parents on their removal from Missouri to Oregon, G. M. Allen had only the advantages of such education as could be obtained in the common schools in his locality. While mastering the elementary branches of learning in common with other pioneer farmer boys he assisted with the work of the homestead, remaining with his parents until their death. He subsequently took charge of the farm and now owns three hundred and thirty-nine acres of the original six hundred and forty. Mr. Allen has proven a very capable agriculturist and has met with most gratifying returns from his undertakings. He has one of the most highly cultivated and valuable properties in the vicinity. He has erected large barns and substantial outbuildings upon his place, and built a thoroughly modern residence, with plumbing and electric lights. A man of progressive ideas he has provided his farm with every facility in the way of modern machinery for the cultivation of the fields and harvesting of the crops. His fields have always been operated under his personal supervision, and as a result the harvests have been abundant and of a superior quality.

On the 14th of October, 1877, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Allen and Miss Ollie V. Beckett and to them have been born four children: Ina Pearl, who is teaching in the high school at Corvallis; and Valine, Lee Roy and Lottie Wave, at home. Lee Roy after completing his education in the common schools took a business course at Eugene and also studied electrical engineering at the Scranton School. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Encampment and the Rebekahs. Mrs. Allen is a daughter of William and Jane (Thompson) Beckett, both natives of Ohio. They were married in Oregon. The father came to Oregon in 1852 with a brother, Samuel, and settled in Polk county, near Salem, where he continued to reside until his death in August, 1877. His brother Samuel is also deceased. The mother passed away in December, 1906. There were four children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. William Beckett: Pearley J., who has passed away; Mrs. G. M. Allen; Ione, the wife of John Locknane of Seattle, Washington; and Clyde W., of Polk county, living near Salem.

Mr. Allen gives his political support to the republican party and fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and belongs to the Encampment. He is very much attached to his homestead, where he has practically devoted his entire life to its development. It bears little resemblance today with its beautiful modern buildings and tastefully arranged grounds to the home of his boyhood. One of the most dearly prized possessions of Mr. Allen is a puncheon that was in the floor of the first cabin erected by his father, which was for many years the family home. His place commands a beautiful view of a fine grove of firs on the mountain side, which has stood her for more than half a century. During the long period of his residence Mr. Allen has witnessed the marvelous development of the country. The great forests and wild stretches of prairie have been converted into beautiful farms and orchards since that time, making Oregon one of the leading agricultural states of the Union.

W. T. MERCHANT is the proprietor of one of the largest and most successful dry-goods and clothing establishments of Marshfield, Oregon. He was born May 5, 1870, a son of C. H. and M. L. (Gunn) Merchant, the former a native of New York and the latter of New Bedford, Massachusetts. The father emigrated to San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama in 1855, and in that city continued to live until 1858 when he removed to Portland and the year following he established his home at North Bend, Coos county, this state. While in California he was engaged as a clerk in a mercantile establishment and later for one year continued in that occupation, as an employe of John R. Foster, of Portland. On settling in Oregon he was engaged as bookkeeper for the Simpson Lumber Company in which capacity he continued for one year and then accepted the position as general manager for the same company, continuing as such for thirteen years. He then removed to Marshfield where he purchased a sawmill of John Pershbaker, which he successfully operated until 1903, after which he retired on account of failing health, and died in Marshfield, July 26, 1906. He was a man of remarkable independence of character and possessed of a strong and all but unconquerable will. At the age of thirteen years he ran away from home going direct to San Francisco where he arrived without a cent. His penniless condition, however, in no way altered his determination to succeed, and during all his life he persisted in maintaining silence as to his whereabouts, never at any time notifying his parents what had become of their venturesome boy. His career in the state of Oregon was marked with unusual success. His education, such as he had, was obtained by his own unaided efforts, and being a man of great industry, capable and resourceful, he grasped the opportunities presented him in the new country and his many accomplishments entitle him to the distinction of having been the father of Marshfield. At the time of his death he owned thousands of acres of land in Coos county and also a large amount of business property in Marshfield, and in Oakland, California.

Politically Mr. Merchant was a radical, progressive republican, but at no time ever allowed his name to be used as a candidate for political office. His wife, who is still living, at the age of sixty-nine years, maintains her residence at Oakland, California. Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Merchant became the parents of a large family, of whom ten children are still living.

W. T. Merchant was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of this state and later pursued his studies in the University of Oregon and also at the E. B. Hill's Business College of San Francisco. He started in life as a traveling salesman and later established himself in the general mercantile business in Marshfield and has since continued to devote his entire attention to its interest. He is proprietor of the largest dry-goods and clothing establishment at Marshfield, located in the First National Bank building. He is the owner of a beautiful home on one of the principal residence streets of that city and is also heavily interested in real estate.

Mr. Merchant was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Preuss, a native of New York city. She was reared at home and received her education in a seminary of that city and removed to Oregon in 1890. Her father, while on a trip to Europe, died and was buried at sea. The mother removed to Oregon in 1892 and established her home in Marshfield where she now resides at the age of seventy-four. To Mr. and Mrs. Preuss three children were born of whom Mrs. Merchant is one of two now living. To Mr. and Mrs. Merchant three children have been born: C. H., born in 1894, who is a graduate of the high school of San Francisco, California; John W., born in April, 1900, who is a pupil in the public school; and Helen, born in September, 1905.

Mr. Merchant is affiliated with the republican party, but has never sought political preferment. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Marshfield, and he and his wife are members of the Episcopal church.

W. T. Merchant is one of the well known citizens of Coos county and a man whose enviable success in life is entirely due to attention to his business interests. His merchandising establishment is one of the most complete and up-to-date of its kind in this portion of the state. He is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, always to be depended upon to do his part to advance any measure of public interest, intended to improve the educational and civic conditions of his county and state.

DR. P. H. FITZGERALD, a physician and surgeon, in charge of the State Tuberculosis Institute at Salem, was born in Woodburn, Oregon, in March, 1858, a son of Thomas and Mary (O'Laughlin) Fitzgerald, both natives of Ireland. The father, the only child of his parents, came to America at the age of thirteen, settling near Dubuque, Iowa. He crossed the plains in 1847, locating on a donation land claim one mile east of Woodburn, Oregon, where he remained until 1861, having improved the land by clearing it, developing and cultivating the fields, and by erecting good buildings. This claim is still in possession of the family. Thomas Fitzgerald was twice married. His first wife was Miss Permelia Eldridge who became the mother of four children: Honora, who is the widow of John Murphy a former resident of Portland and also of Mount Hood, Oregon; Mary M., deceased, who was the wife of J. J. Murphy, of Portland; Julia, who died at the age of thirteen; and a child who died in infancy.

For his second wife Thomas FitzGerald chose Mary O'Laughlin, who came to Oregon in 1852, where she lived until the time of her death, in 1908. By this union were born four children: Thomas, a judge of the municipal court at Pendleton, Oregon; Edward, deceased; P. H., of this review; and Catherine, the wife of N. S. Scutter, of Woodburn, Oregon. After the death of the father of our subject his second wife was married again, her second husband being Jacob Hershberger, and one child was born of this marriage, Mary E., who lives with Dr. P. H. FitzGerald.

P. H. FitzGerald attended the common schools of Woodburn, Oregon, and began the study of medicine at home. In 1884 he entered the office of Dr. M. A. Flynn, of Portland, where he remained for one year. He then became a student in the Willamette University, from which he was graduated in 1886. In 1888 he went to eastern Oregon and became a physician on an Indian agency, where he remained six months. Then going to Vale, Oregon, he engaged in general practice for one year, after which he continued in general practice at Huntington for another year and at Gervais for sixteen years. On the 1st of April, 1911, he entered upon the duties of the office which he still fills with the State Tuberculosis Institute at Salem.

Dr. FitzGerald has given much time to the study and practice of medicine and of recent years has devoted his attention largely to tuberculosis. His work along this line qualified him for practice in that department and was responsible in a large measure for his selection for the position which he now fills. His opinions concerning tubercular ailments are freely accepted as authoritative. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies and of the State Pharmaceutical Society. He is also a loyal member of the Roman Catholic church.

REUBEN LEE CAVANAUGH is one of the enterprising and respected citizens of Eastside where at present he holds the position of city engineer. He was born in 1879, and is a son of Abraham and Minerva (Buck) Cavanaugh, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Canada. In 1891 the father with his family, moved to Oregon and settled in Coos county where he purchased land, seven miles from Marshfield. There he established his home and continued to be engaged in the cultivation of his farm until the time of his death, which occurred in 1904. The mother maintains her residence at Eastside, this state, at the age of seventy-three. To Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Cavanaugh the following children were born: Mrs. Emma Kittson, a resident of Eastside, Oregon; Herman, who makes his home in California; Milton and Fred, both of whom are residents of Canada; William, a resident of Portland, Oregon; Reuben Lee, the subject of this review; and Wilkinson, a resident of Eastside, Oregon.

Reuben Lee Cavanaugh was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Canada. After passing through the lower grades he was later graduated from the high school of Marshfield. He afterward took a mathematical course in Chillicothe, Missouri, and later pursued a complete course in civil engineering in San Francisco, California. In 1904 he engaged in the occupation of engineering and surveying in California and devoted his attention to that business for three years. In 1907 he returned to Marshfield where he established himself in business as a civil engineer and some time later accepted the position of city engineer for the east side of Marshfield. He owns a beautiful home in that city and also a ten and one-half acre tract of valuable business property in the heart of the Eastside business district.

Mr. Cavanaugh was united in marriage in 1907, to Miss Edith Miller, a native of Kansas, who as a child removed with her mother to Washington. The father died many years ago in the state of Missouri and the mother at Montezuma, Washington. Mrs. Cavanaugh was the only child born to her parents. To Mr. and Mrs. Cavanaugh two children have been born: Muriel E., born January 4, 1909; and Robert Lee, who was born May 22, 1910.

Mr. Cavanaugh is affiliated with the democratic party but has never sought political preferment of any kind. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church of Marshfield. Mr. Cavanaugh is one of the enterprising and useful men of his county and state. His well known ability as a civil engineer has brought him in contact with many of the leading business men of the city in which he lives and the surrounding county. He is ready at all times to give his assistance to the advancement of every enterprise intended to further develop and advance the interests of his part of the state.

HENRY G. KERN is one of the successful business men of North Bend where he is engaged in the foundry and machine business, being the owner of the largest shop of its kind in that city. He was born in Coos county, in 1875, and is a son of Henry and Mary Kern, both of whom were natives of Germany and who emigrated to America where they celebrated their marriage at St. Louis, Missouri. Immediately afterward they established their home in Missouri and later removed to Illinois. In 1873 they came to Oregon, settling in Coos county where they remained until 1902 at which time the father retired from active business and established his residence at Eureka, California, where he now resides.

Henry G. Kern was reared at home and received his education in Coos county. At the age of seventeen years he started in business for himself as a cooper and for one year successfully operated a cooper shop in Marshfield. He later engaged in work in a blacksmith shop where he remained for three years when he enlisted in the Second Oregon Volunteer Infantry and with his command went to Manila where he continued in the army for fifteen months. He then went to Nome, Alaska, and was engaged in mining and also worked at his trade for three years. In 1903 he returned to Coos bay and took up work as a blacksmith for the Simpson Lumber Company with whom he remained for one year. He then established a foundry and machine shop at North Bend and has since been successfully engaged in the operation of the business, his shop being the largest of its kind in North Bend. He is the owner of twelve lots in North Bend and eight lots in Glasco, Oregon. He also has stock in the Millicoma Mining Company, of which he is vice president, the mining property being located at the mouth of the Coos river.

Mr. Kern was united in marriage October 15, 1903, to Miss Winnie Chapman, a native of Salem, Oregon, and a daughter of John and Lucy Chapman, who are among the old pioneers of Salem. Both are living in Washington county, this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Kern two children have been born: Harry H., in September, 1904; and Lucille, whose birth occurred December 28, 1910. Mr. Kern belongs to the republican party and is a member of the city council of North Bend. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World and also a member of the Hoos, a lumbermen's organization.

Henry G. Kern is one of the popular and successful business men of North Bend and a man whose activities have added materially to the upbuilding and improvement of the city in which he has established the well known "Foundry and Iron Works" of which he is the owner.

JOHN WESLEY CLINTON is a man who during the thirty-nine years of his life in Oregon has constantly stood for all that is progressive and scientific in modern agriculture and for all that is honorable and worthy in business activities. He was born in Crawford county, Missouri, November 10, 1848, and is a son of James A. and Perlina (Lamb) Clinton, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Kentucky. The parents had the following children: Catherine, who is deceased; J. DeWitt, who is a rancher of Gravel Ford, Oregon, where he resides with his family; Margaret E., the widow of Elzie Wolverton, of California; John W. and Mary Ann, twins, the former of whom is the subject of this sketch and the latter of whom is deceased; Joseph E., a rancher of Eugene, Oregon; Robert J., who has now retired from active life and is living in Myrtle Point, Oregon, with his family; George W., who is also retired and resides with his wife and children in Myrtle Point; Sarah E., who is the wife of Thomas W. Johnson of North Yakima, Washington; Henry L., James A. and Nancy J., all of whom are deceased; and three children who died in infancy.

John Clinton was reared upon his father's farm in Missouri and received his education in the public schools of that state. When he was nineteen years of age he married and bought one hundred acres of land in his native state where he carried on general farming with gratifying success. In addition to his agricultural pursuits he took contracts for railroad construction and became a prominent figure in this line of activity. His residence in Oregon dates from 1873, in which year he located in Coos county and purchased forty acres of land on the Coquille river near Norway. Retaining his property, he again resumed railroad contracting in which occupation he was successful for two years. He returned to Coos county in order to engage in the logging business and he made this branch of activity his work for twenty-six years. He has the distinction of having, during the period of his connection with the lumber business, sent eighty-nine million feet of timber down the Coquille river and has furnished logs to all the sawmills in Coos county. He was active in all phases of the lumber business, buying and selling cut logs and dealing in uncut timber. All this time he kept the farm which he bought upon his arrival in Oregon but did not cultivate it himself, turning over its management to his son and during the twenty-six years in which he conducted his logging enterprise had almost entirely severed his active connection with agriculture. In 1903 however, he sold out his business equipment including his horse and ox teams and three donkey engines and in 1908 returned to Missouri to visit his boyhood home. He remained in that state a short time and on his return settled upon his forty acres of land on the Coquille river. He has to some extent retired from active life but still operates a dairy on a small scale and does general farming.

On April 8, 1867, Mr. Clinton was married to Miss Eliza Ann Russell, a native of Kenton, Ohio, and a daughter of David and Mary (Martin) Russell. Mrs. Clinton is one of six children born to her parents. The others are: Dorlisea E., the wife of George R. Garry, of Ohio; Clinton and Milford, who are now deceased; Riley, who is a resident of Chicago, Illinois; and Cinderella, the wife of Richard Dick of Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Clinton have been born twelve children: James David, who is a rancher in Norway, Oregon, and the father of five children, Della, Theo, Olla, Elita and Silva; Marion Thomas, of Arago, Oregon, and the father of two children, Lester and Thresa; Jesse DeWitt, of Norway, who is the father of three children, Lilas, Lawrence and Ardice; Mary C., the wife of W. H. Schroeder of Coquille, Oregon, by whom she has three children, Earl, Leslie and Loran; Dorlisea E., who married Walter V. Schroeder of Gravel Ford, Oregon, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work; George H., who is living in California with his wife and one child; Albert R., who is in the lumber business in Coquille, Oregon, and who is married and has one child; Edward O., who is postmaster of Parkersburg, Oregon, and the father of one child; Samuel H., also of Parkersburg, who has two children; Clarence A., of Coquille; John R., who is associated with his father and resides at home; and one who passed away in infancy.

In his political views Mr. Clinton is identified with the republican party and has served as county supervisor, judge of election and central committeeman. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but has never sought office and the positions which he has held have been literally forced upon him. He is a high-minded, clean-cut man of exemplary morals and habits and has never tasted a drink of intoxicating liquor, played a game of cards for money or been involved in a lawsuit. He is upright and honorable in all his relations in life and seeks his greatest success in conquering himself.

CAPTAIN JAMES B. MAGEE for many years has been identified with the shipping interests of the Pacific coast, having for a long period of time been the master of boats which he owned and engaged also in the building and operation of schooners and tugs used on Coos bay and on the navigable streams of Oregon. He was born in Ireland, November 19, 1841, and is a son of Bernard and Mary (Mackan) Magee, both of whom were natives of that country, who emigrated to New York in 1854. In that state they lived for a number of years and then returned to Ireland. In 1858 they settled in Queensland, Australia, and there continued to live until the time of their death. The father died at the age of eighty-eight years and the mother at ninety-four. They were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are still living, namely: James B., of this review; and Bernard, Ellen, Agnes and John, all of whom reside in Queensland.

Captain Magee was reared at home and at the early age of thirteen commenced his career at sea, becoming a member of the crew on the brig Hope, of Dublin, Captain Simon Carvin commanding, which sailed between ports in the British isles. In 1857, while he was on the bark Catherine, of Thomaston, Maine, sailing from Cardiff to New York, with coal, he was cast at sea after a collision between his ship and the bark Malla, of Liverpool. The Catherine sank immediately but the crew succeeded in clearing the bark before she went down. They were taken aboard the bark Malla and after remaining three days aboard her were transferred to different fishing schooners on the banks of Newfoundland and Captain Magee was put aboard the schooner A. Freeman, on which vessel he staid for one year. Leaving this ship, he signed on for the schooner Desoto, which was engaged in fishing for cod on the banks of Newfoundland. In 1859, after sailing on vessels of all rigs, he decided to learn something of their construction and went to New York, where he thoroughly learned the art of shipbuilding. In 1863 he sailed from New York on the ship Webster, bound for Liverpool. Arriving in that city, he left this ship and proceeded to London, where he took passage on the clipper ship Flying Cloud, bound for Australia, and, arriving in that country, was placed as foreman of a gang of men engaged in the building of bridges and the Cleveland jetty at Morton bay. Leaving Australia in 1866, he took passage on the ship Nimrod, bound for San Francisco, and, arriving there, engaged in various employments. In 1867 he was sent to Coos bay to assist in building a sawmill and three vessels, including the tugboat Escort, for John Pushbaker at Marshfield.

On the 8th of May, 1870, he took command of the tugboat Escort, which was employed in bringing vessels over the bar. He was so occupied for a number of years and especially in 1870 and 1871 showed his skill when there was strong opposition between the tug of which he had command, owned by John Pushbaker, and the Fearless and Merrimac, belonging to the Simpson Lumber Company. During the time of the strenuous competition between the three vessels Captain Magee showed himself to be a fearless navigator, always keeping a cool head in time of danger. In 1882 he was transferred to the tug Escort No. 2, of the E. B. Dean Company, and again ran his boat in opposition to the Simpson Lumber Company's tugs Fearless and Sol Thomas. During 1883 he took the tug Escort No. 2 to the Columbia river and Puget sound, towing at both places. In 1885 he resumed command of the tug Escort and remained in command of her until in 1887 she blew up in Coos bay. After the loss of the Escort he entered upon employment with the Simpson Lumber Company as master of the tug Columbia, towing on Coos bay and Umpqua river bars. He was transferred to the tug Hunter in 1889, remaining master until 1894, in which year he left this boat to take command of the steamer Wescott, belonging to the C. P. Doe Company of San Francisco, sailing her successfully between San Francisco and Eel river. In 1896 he left the steamer Wescott and took command of the steamer Czarina, running between San Francisco and Coos bay. In 1897 he gave up this command to take charge of the tug Columbia, towing at San Francisco, going from there to Seattle and towing between Seattle and southeastern Alaska ports. In 1898 he returned with the tug Columbia to Coos bay and staid on her and the tug Astoria for awhile. Both of these vessels belonged to the Simpson Lumber Company. At the present writing he is master of the tug Columbia. During all his career at sea he has been faithful, fearless and cool-headed during the many thrilling experiences he has undergone.

In 1873 Captain Magee was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Gigar, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gigar. The father was a native of Buffalo, New York, and emigrated to Oregon in 1837, settling at Salem, where he took up a donation claim upon which has since been built the city of Salem. On that land he lived for one year and then donated his rights in the property for mission purposes, after which he removed to Honolulu and was there engaged in teaching school for several years. He later returned to California, where he maintained his residence for a number of years and then settled at Forest Grove, Oregon, upon a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres. He filed upon that land in the early '40s and there continued to live during the remaining days of his life. He passed away at Forest Grove in 1902, at the age of eighty-five years, and his wife's death there occurred in 1904. To them nine children were born: William, who resides on the old homestead; Sarah, now Mrs. James B. Magee; Charles, a resident of Forest Grove; Millard, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Lincoln, of Hillsboro; Walcott, of Salem; Ella, the wife of S. B. Huston, of Portland; Mrs. Laura Wells, of Salem; and Hugh, of California. Captain and Mrs. Magee are the parents of five children: Mrs. Edna Jerrett, whose husband is a civil engineer of Eldorado county, California; Charley, who is engaged in carpentering and contracting at Portland; James, who is first mate on one of the boats belonging to the Pacific Steamship Company; William, who is a captain on the steamer Radonda, plying between Coos bay and San Francisco; and May, at home.

Captain Magee reserves independence of judgment on political issues, having no connection with any political party. He has never been an office seeker although he has served as a member of the school board and also as a member of the council of Empire. He is a member of the Catholic church and his wife of the Presbyterian church. He is one of the well known and respected men of Coos county and has been identified with many of its important business enterprises. He is justly entitled to be numbered among the early pioneers of his portion of the state and has always been an enterprising, active and useful citizen of Oregon.

A. E. LINDSEY. The business interests of Gresham find an able representative in the person of A. E. Lindsey, junior partner of the firm of Shattuck & Lindsey, one of the more recent but thriving mercantile enterprises of the town. He is a native of Kansas, his birth having occurred in Kirwin on the 21st of January, 1876, and a son of E. C. and Miranda S. (Drake) Lindsey. The paternal grandparents were Ebenezer and Rebecca Lindsey, and unto them were born six children, of whom their son, E. C., the father of our subject, was the youngest. In order of birth the others are as follows: John, who is a resident of Atchison, Kansas, and the father of five children: Alta, the deceased wife of George Doebler by whom she had two children; Dora, who is also deceased; William, also deceased, who has three children living in Iowa; and Warren, of Boise, Idaho, who has three children, Clyde, Guy and Lola. The mother is also the youngest member in a family of six, as follows: Robert, a resident of Kansas, who passed away leaving two children; Frank; Joe, also living in Kansas; Mattie, the wife of Abraham Drake and the mother of four children, Mand, Jessie, Ernest and Ada; and Jessie. E. C. Lindsey was one of the pioneer business men of Kirwin, Phillips county, Kansas, and there he established the first drug store. He qualified as a pharmacist under the capable direction of his brother, a well known druggist at that period of Pataskala, Ohio, in which state he was first granted a license. In his early manhood he went to Kansas and engaged in business, but he later sold his store and bought a farm in the same county. During the succeeding three years he devoted his entire time and attention to the cultivation of his land, but at the expiration of that time he removed with his wife and family to Ogden, Utah. There he resumed his agricultural pursuits and for two years cultivated rented land. From there he went to Eagle Rock, Idaho, and again went into the drug business. Three years later, in 1888, he went to Portland and became associated in business with his brother, a painting contractor. After following this for two years he turned his attention to general contracting, which he followed for a similar period and then came to Gresham. During the first five years of his residence here Mr. Lindsey was connected with the drug business, but he subsequently withdrew from this and engaged in contracting and building, which line of work he still follows. At Kirwin, Kansas, in 1874, Mr. Lindsey was united in marriage to Miss Miranda S. Drake, and there they passed the first six years of their domestic life. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey, our subject, who is the eldest and only son, and two daughters. Mabel Grace, the older daughter, first married William Metzger, by whom she had one child, Helen. Later she became the wife of John Quick and they are living in Quincy, Oregon. Pearl May, the youngest member of the family, became the wife of Oscar Erickson, of Warren, Oregon, a merchant of that place.

A. E. Lindsey began to earn his own living at the age of twelve years and at the same time continued his studies in the public schools. He was first employed in the capacity of cash boy in the store of Meier & Frank at Portland and later was taken into their wholesale department, where he worked during the summer months. After finishing school, he engaged in the tailor business, following that for four years. Withdrawing from this he went to work in his father's drug store, remaining with him for two years. At the end of that time he once more became identified with the firm of Meier & Frank and for two years thereafter worked in their clothing department. From there he went to the firm of Ben Selling, continuing in their service for two years. As he is a man of more than average ability and industry, Mr. Lindsey proved to be a most efficient employe and commanded a good salary, the greater portion of which he managed to save. By reason of his thrift and enterprise he succeeded in accumulating sufficient money to engage in business for himself. Returning to Gresham in July, 1910, he bought a half interest in the mercantile establishment that is now being operated under the firm name of Shattuck & Lindsey. This is one of the leading concerns of the kind in the town and is favored with a large patronage, which is constantly increasing. They carry a full and well assorted stock of merchandise that they offer at reasonable prices and in the conduct of their business they have adopted a policy that wins the confidence of all with whom they have transactions.

For his wife Mr. Lindsey chose Miss Nellie Slerett whose natal day was the 17th of February, 1878. She is the youngest of eleven children born to George and Barbara (Baumgardner) Slerett, natives of Germany, who crossed the plains in 1861. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey: Albert S., who was born on February 18, 1902, and is now attending school; Donald E., whose birth occurred on the 29th of November, 1906; and Dorothea, whose natal day was the 27th of May, 1911.

The family attend the Christian church in which the parents hold membership and Mr. Lindsey's fraternal relations are confined to his membership in the Woodmen of the World, while his political support is given to the republican party. The achievements of Mr. Lindsey fully entitle him to the commendation of his fellow citizens, as everything he has achieved is the result of his own unaided effort. He has been self-supporting from early childhood, and when other lads were indulging in such sports and amusements as delight the heart of every youth he was industriously applying himself to the mastery of a business, and now has the satisfaction of knowing that he is indebted to no one for such success as has crowned his efforts.

FREDERICK T. SANDERSON. In the death of Frederick T. Sanderson, which occurred at Ashland on the 29th of June, 1912, his family and friends experienced a sudden and sad bereavement and Klamath Falls lost one of its most respected, influential and esteemed citizens. With the history of Klamath Falls and its development his name has been closely associated. He left his impress upon its business and political activities and during his recent term as mayor of the city he instituted many improvements which have taken Klamath Falls out of the rank of an undeveloped, raw western town and placed it with the progressive cities of this great empire of the northwest. He was born in Tehama county, California, July 23, 1863, a son of William and Ellen Clara (Feathers) Sanderson, who were natives of New York and Ohio respectively. The maternal grandfather was one of the first to penetrate into the wilderness of the northwest, going with Lewis and Clark on their expedition into Oregon early in the nineteenth century. The parents were married in the east and in 1859 made their way to California, crossing the plains with ox teams. During the hard winter of 1861-62 William Sanderson lost practically everything that he had and thus empty-handed started in life anew on the Pacific coast. About 1870 he came to Oregon, settling on Myrtle creek, in Douglas county, where he and his wife resided until Mrs. Sanderson was called to her final rest in 1895, when forty-eight years of age. William Sanderson now resides at Roseburg at the age of seventy-seven years. The greater part of his life has been devoted to carpentering and farming. In his family were four children: George, who was drowned when a boy; Frederick T.; Mrs. Nancy Gilmore, who died about 1901; and W. C., living in Ashland.

Until sixteen years of age Frederick T. Sanderson remained under the parental roof and then started out to make his own way in the world, working at anything that yielded him an honest living. On first coming into this district he made his way to Linkville, now Klamath Falls, and spent two years in Lounging Camp, on Pelican bay, where the Harriman resort is now found. The next summer he was at Little Klamath lake, working as a farm hand. He then went to British Columbia, where he was employed by the Lake Shore & Eastern Railroad as a surveyor for more than two years along the International line. He later returned to Whatcome, Washington, and had charge of a gang of carpenters, after which he was engaged in making a clearing for the town site of Seattle, Washington. From Canfield he made his way back to Portland and on to his home. He afterward took up a homestead claim in Douglas county and for about four years engaged in conducting a stock ranch. He then became superintendent of the International nickel mines, of which he had charge for six years, and also during that period he acted as superintendent of the Victor placer and quartz mines for the same people. He next turned his attention to merchandising at Coquille City and when he sold out there began business as a general merchant at Bandon, Coos county, at the mouth of the Coquille river. After conducting his store for four or five years he sold out and began speculating in timber. From 1904 until his demise he resided continuously at Klamath Falls, and for one year was proprietor of the American Hotel but at the end of that time sold out and established a general store which he managed successfully until 1909, when he disposed of his stock. He made heavy investments in real estate, mostly improved property. He built and owned the bath house and sanitarium here, and also owned good business property on Main and Seventh streets and a large number of town dwellings. His home, a fine residence, was erected by him and stands at the corner of Tenth and Pine streets. He had extensive timber interests, also, in this county and made large investments in timber lands in Coos and Curry counties.

In 1892 Mr. Sanderson was united in marriage to Miss Cora Ann Butler, a native of Fairfield, Illinois, who when three years of age came across the plains to Oregon with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Butler. To Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson were born three children: Maysel Ellen; Lawrence, born December 12, 1898, in Douglas county; and Dorothy. Fraternally Frederick T. Sanderson was connected with the Masonic lodge, the Eastern Star, the Woodmen of the World and the Women of Woodcraft. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party, of which he was a staunch advocate, yet he did not hold himself to party ties at local elections involving no issue, and in May, 1908, he was elected mayor of Klamath Falls on a nonpartisan ticket to fill out the unexpired term of John R. Stilts. He served in that capacity for two and a half years having been elected for two consecutive regular terms and during his administration accomplished much for the benefit and upbuilding of the city. When he entered the office there was not a foot of street paving, no sewer system had been established and there were no cement sidewalks in the city. He advocated all of these improvements, and while he was mayor fifty-two thousand feet of sewer were put in on Main street at a cost of seventy-five thousand dollars, and eighty thousand square yards, or about three miles of street pavement were laid and about two miles of cement sidewalk built. Mr. Sanderson always stood for progress and improvement, whether he was in office or out of it, and his administration was businesslike and beneficial. The following is an extract from an editorial published at the time of his death: "During the short two and a half years in which he directed the destinies of the city, more public improvements were made than had been made in many years previously. No part of the city was to him entitled to any more consideration than any other part. He knew no 'end' of town but saw only the whole city of Klamath Falls improved and beautified as he knew it would be before many years had elapsed. . . . Klamath Falls will be a better city because it was permitted that he should spend some of his years here and give some of his labor to the study of our municipal problems." He died on the 29th of June, 1912, in Ashland, to which city he had gone two weeks before to have an operation performed on his knee. When this had been successfully accomplished he was advised by the surgeons attending him to undergo an operation for appendicitis, which resulted in his death. The local press commiserated his loss and lauded the work that he had done both as a private citizen and as a servant of the people. The Northwestern published the well deserved tribute of a close friend, which reads in part as follows: "As a member of the city board of school directors Fred T. Sanderson showed the same progressive spirit that marked his whole business life. . . . He was a kind-hearted man, believed in his neighbors and was true to his friends, of whom he had a host. His untimely death came as a great shock to the people of this city and the great heart of that people today beats in sympathy for the bereaved wife and children of the departed husband and father."

CHRISTIAN FRICKEY. Among the progressive and enterprising pioneers of Marion county, who worked tirelessly to promote the development of Salem must be numbered Christian Frickey, who was born in Hanover, Germany, on the 29th of August, 1820. He was one of five children born to his parents, four of whom came to the United States. One sister, Mrs. S. Nieper was a resident of Indiana and is deceased, while two

Christian Frickey was reared and educated in his native land, and before beginning his life vocation spent the usual term of service in the German army. He subsequently fitted himself for the vocation of a landscape gardener. Feeling assured that better opportunities awaited him in the United States than were to be found in his native land he decided to become an American citizen, so on the 15th of September, 1850, just three days after he was married, he and his bride took passage for this country. They crossed the Atlantic on a sailing vessel named "Fanenil Hall," spending three months en route. They landed at New Orleans about Christmas time, 1850, sailing up the Mississippi from there to Evansville, Indiana, where Mr. Frickey engaged in agricultural pursuits for four years. Subsequently he removed to Minnesota and while residing in the latter state he joined other settlers and fought against the Sioux Indians, leaving his wife and family in St. Peter, where they were then living. She was as unselfish and noble a character as her husband and during that time generously threw open her home to the refugees and wounded who were brought into the settlement, and gave her assistance and aid wherever needed. They found the climate of Minnesota very severe, and after twelve years residence there removed to San Jose, California. While living in the former state, Mr. Frickey had engaged quite extensively in landscape gardening, continuing to follow this vocation during the two years of his residence in San Jose. In 1872, they once more changed their place of residence, this time settling in Salem. Upon his arrival here he purchased two tracts of land, one a portion of the Alvin F. Waller land claim, which at that time was a forest. With the assistance of some men from the state penitentiary this was gradually cleared and platted as a subdivision, and is now one of the most attractive residence portions of the city. During the intervening years it has been rapidly built up and now contains more than one hundred homes. The other tract was formerly included in the I. L. Parrish land claim, northeast of Salem, and this was also made into a subdivision having on it now over a hundred dwellings. Mr. Frickey always championed every progressive movement and enthusiastically cooperated to the extent of his ability in the upbuilding of the city. He substantially assisted in promoting the development of the various public utilities, such as the construction of bridges and the installation of better transportation facilities. The causes of religion and education found in him a strong advocate and enthusiastic supporter. He was one of the main factors in the organization and building of the First German Methodist Episcopal church in the city, and he always generously contributed toward the maintenance of various religious and benevolent institutions. His life was one of unceasing self-denial, voluntary sacrifices and self-imposed hardships, his first thought and consideration always being for others. He not only aided the afflicted and unfortunate who appealed to him for assistance but he sought out and hunted up cases of suffering, apparently finding his keenest pleasure and greatest delight in working to relieve the needy. Despite the fact that during the latter portion of his life he was afflicted with deafness and found great difficulty in listening to the conversation of those about him, he constantly frequented places of worship and religious services and he was passionately fond of music. He was a well known figure on the streets of Salem, where he had hosts of friends, as he looked upon all mankind as his brother and so conducted himself in all of his relations in life as to retain the esteem and respect of all with whom he came in contact.
